START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT
CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

May 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER
NEGATIVE
NUMBER:
BSO-56-035

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks
(Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: [✓ IA] IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

Kodak
IMAGELINK™ HQ
MICROFILM
35 mm x 30.5 m · 100 ft
Sp 425
DEVELOP BEFORE 01/1996
1461-0334-024-07
CAT 840 3594
29-10

REEL 35

Volumes 63-64

Pops, Tanglewood
1938 to
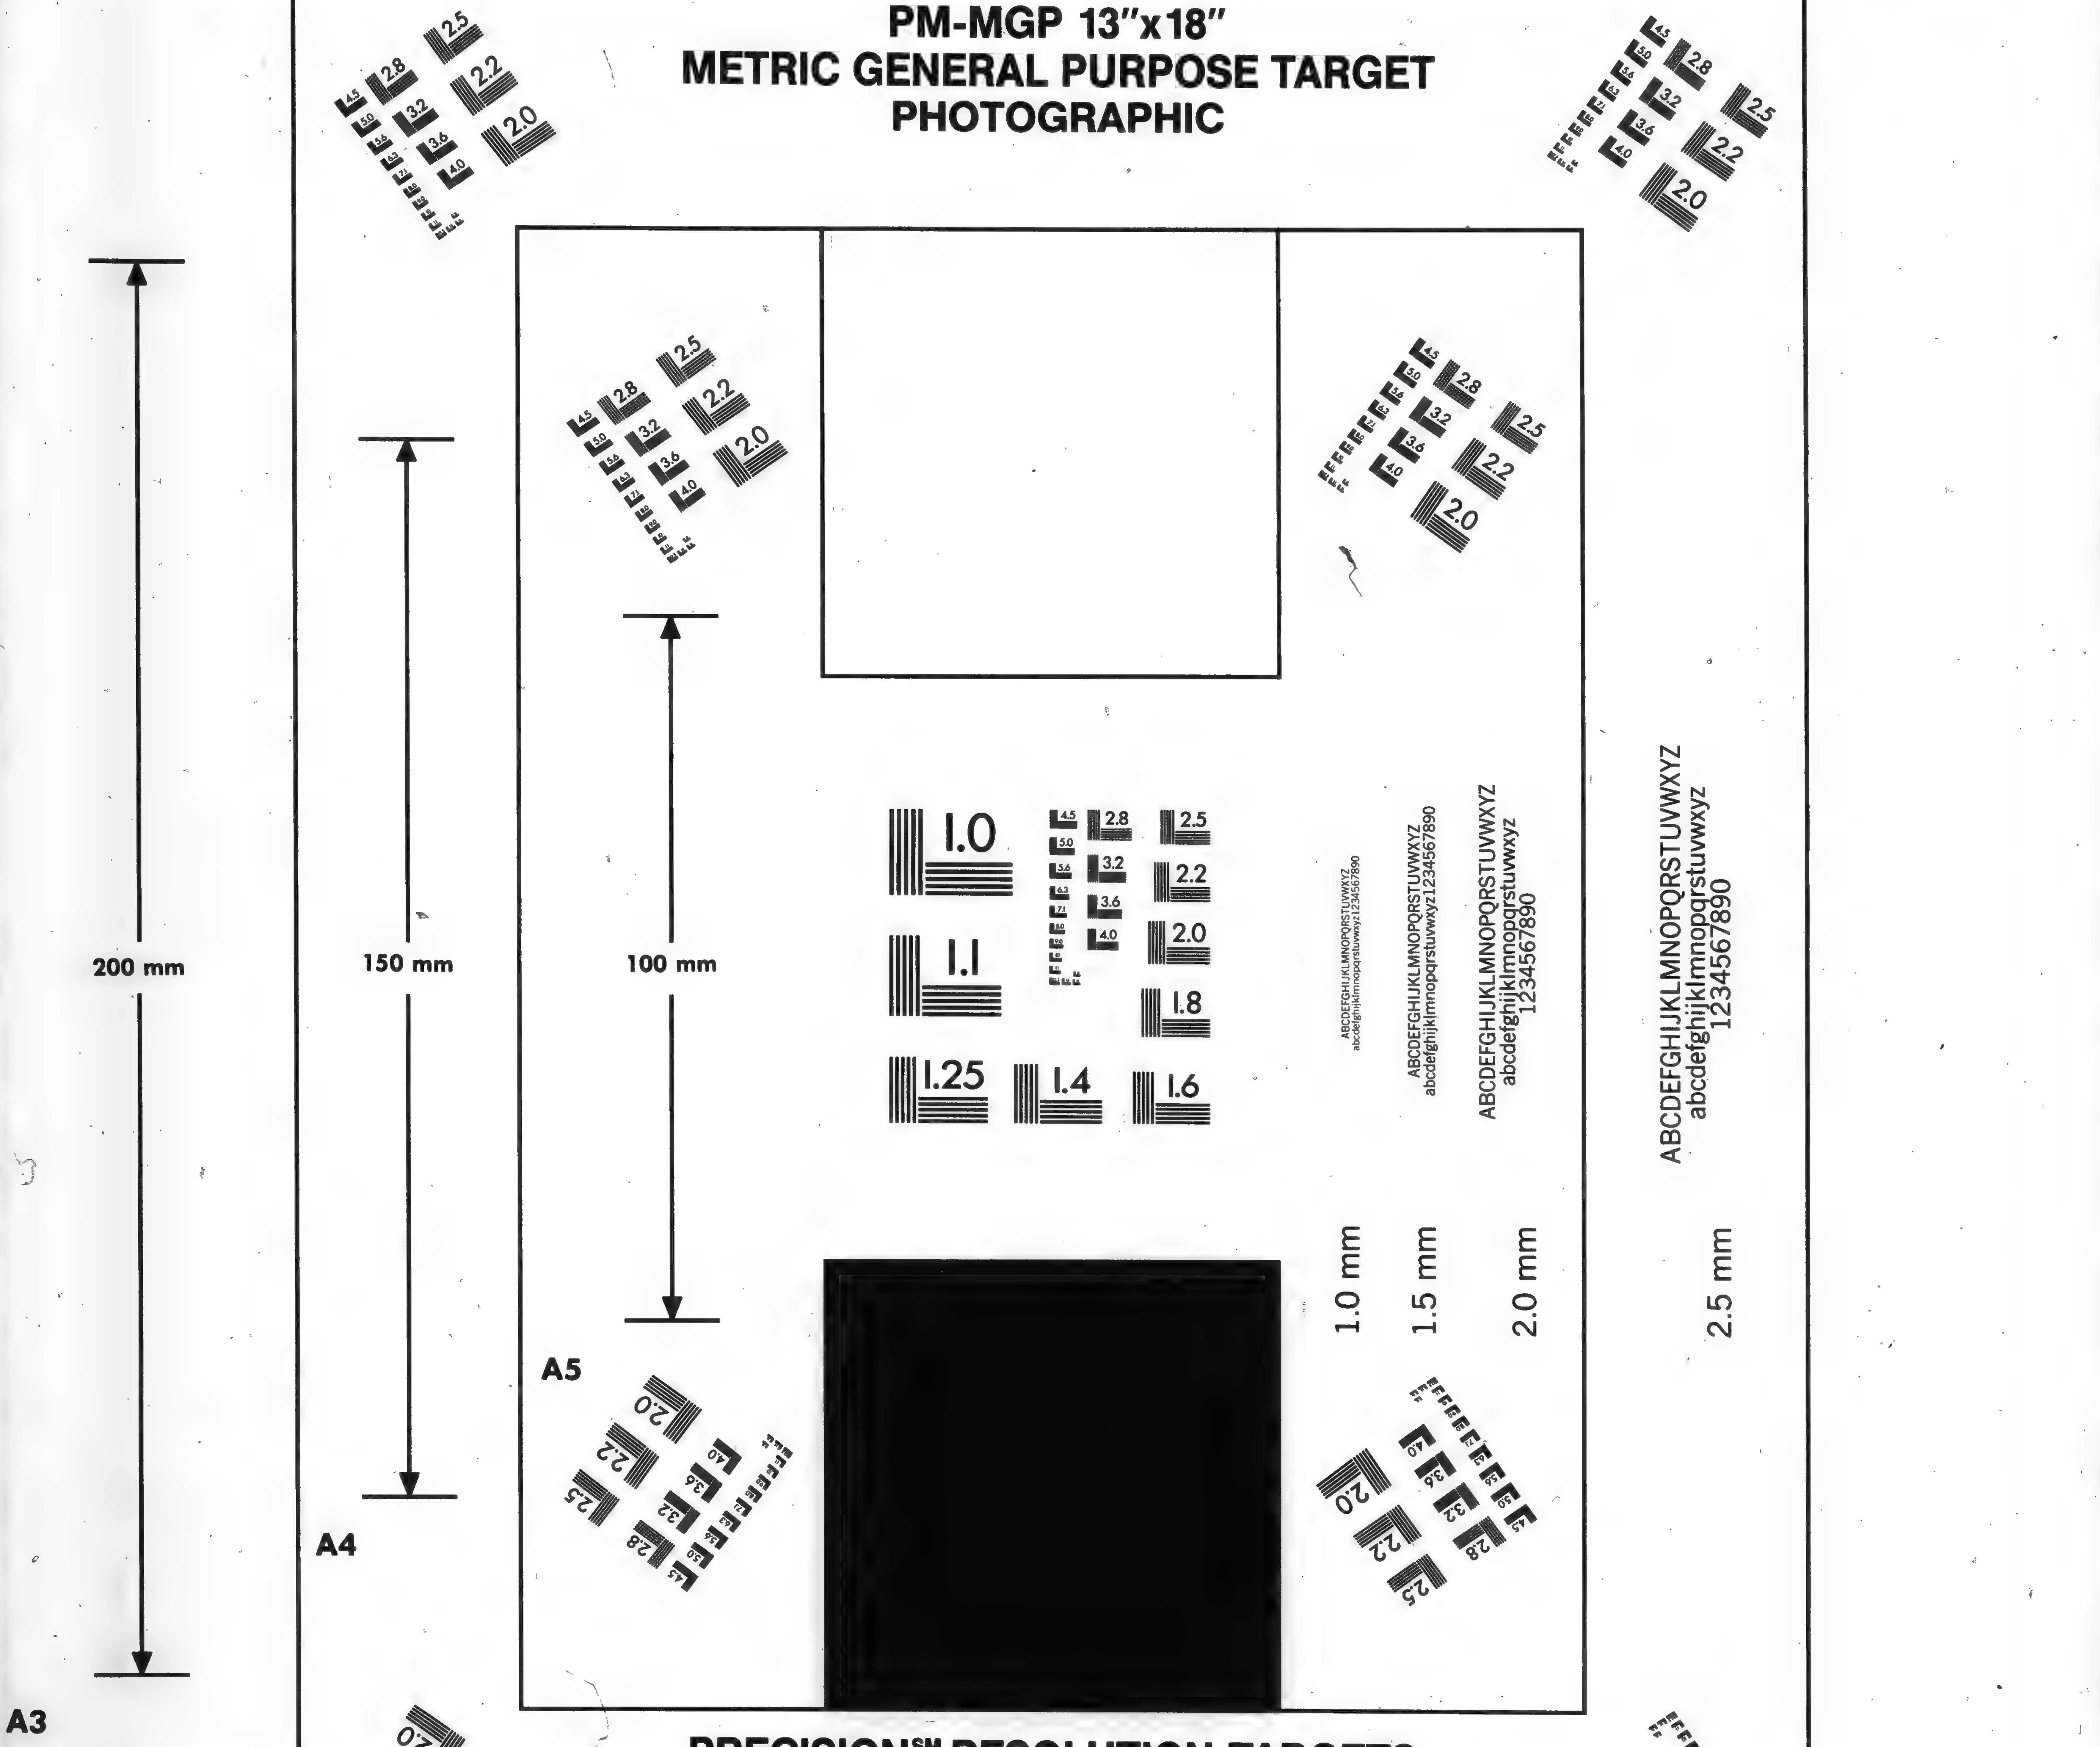
BSO
1938-1939

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
A5
A4
A3
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES
DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS
AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

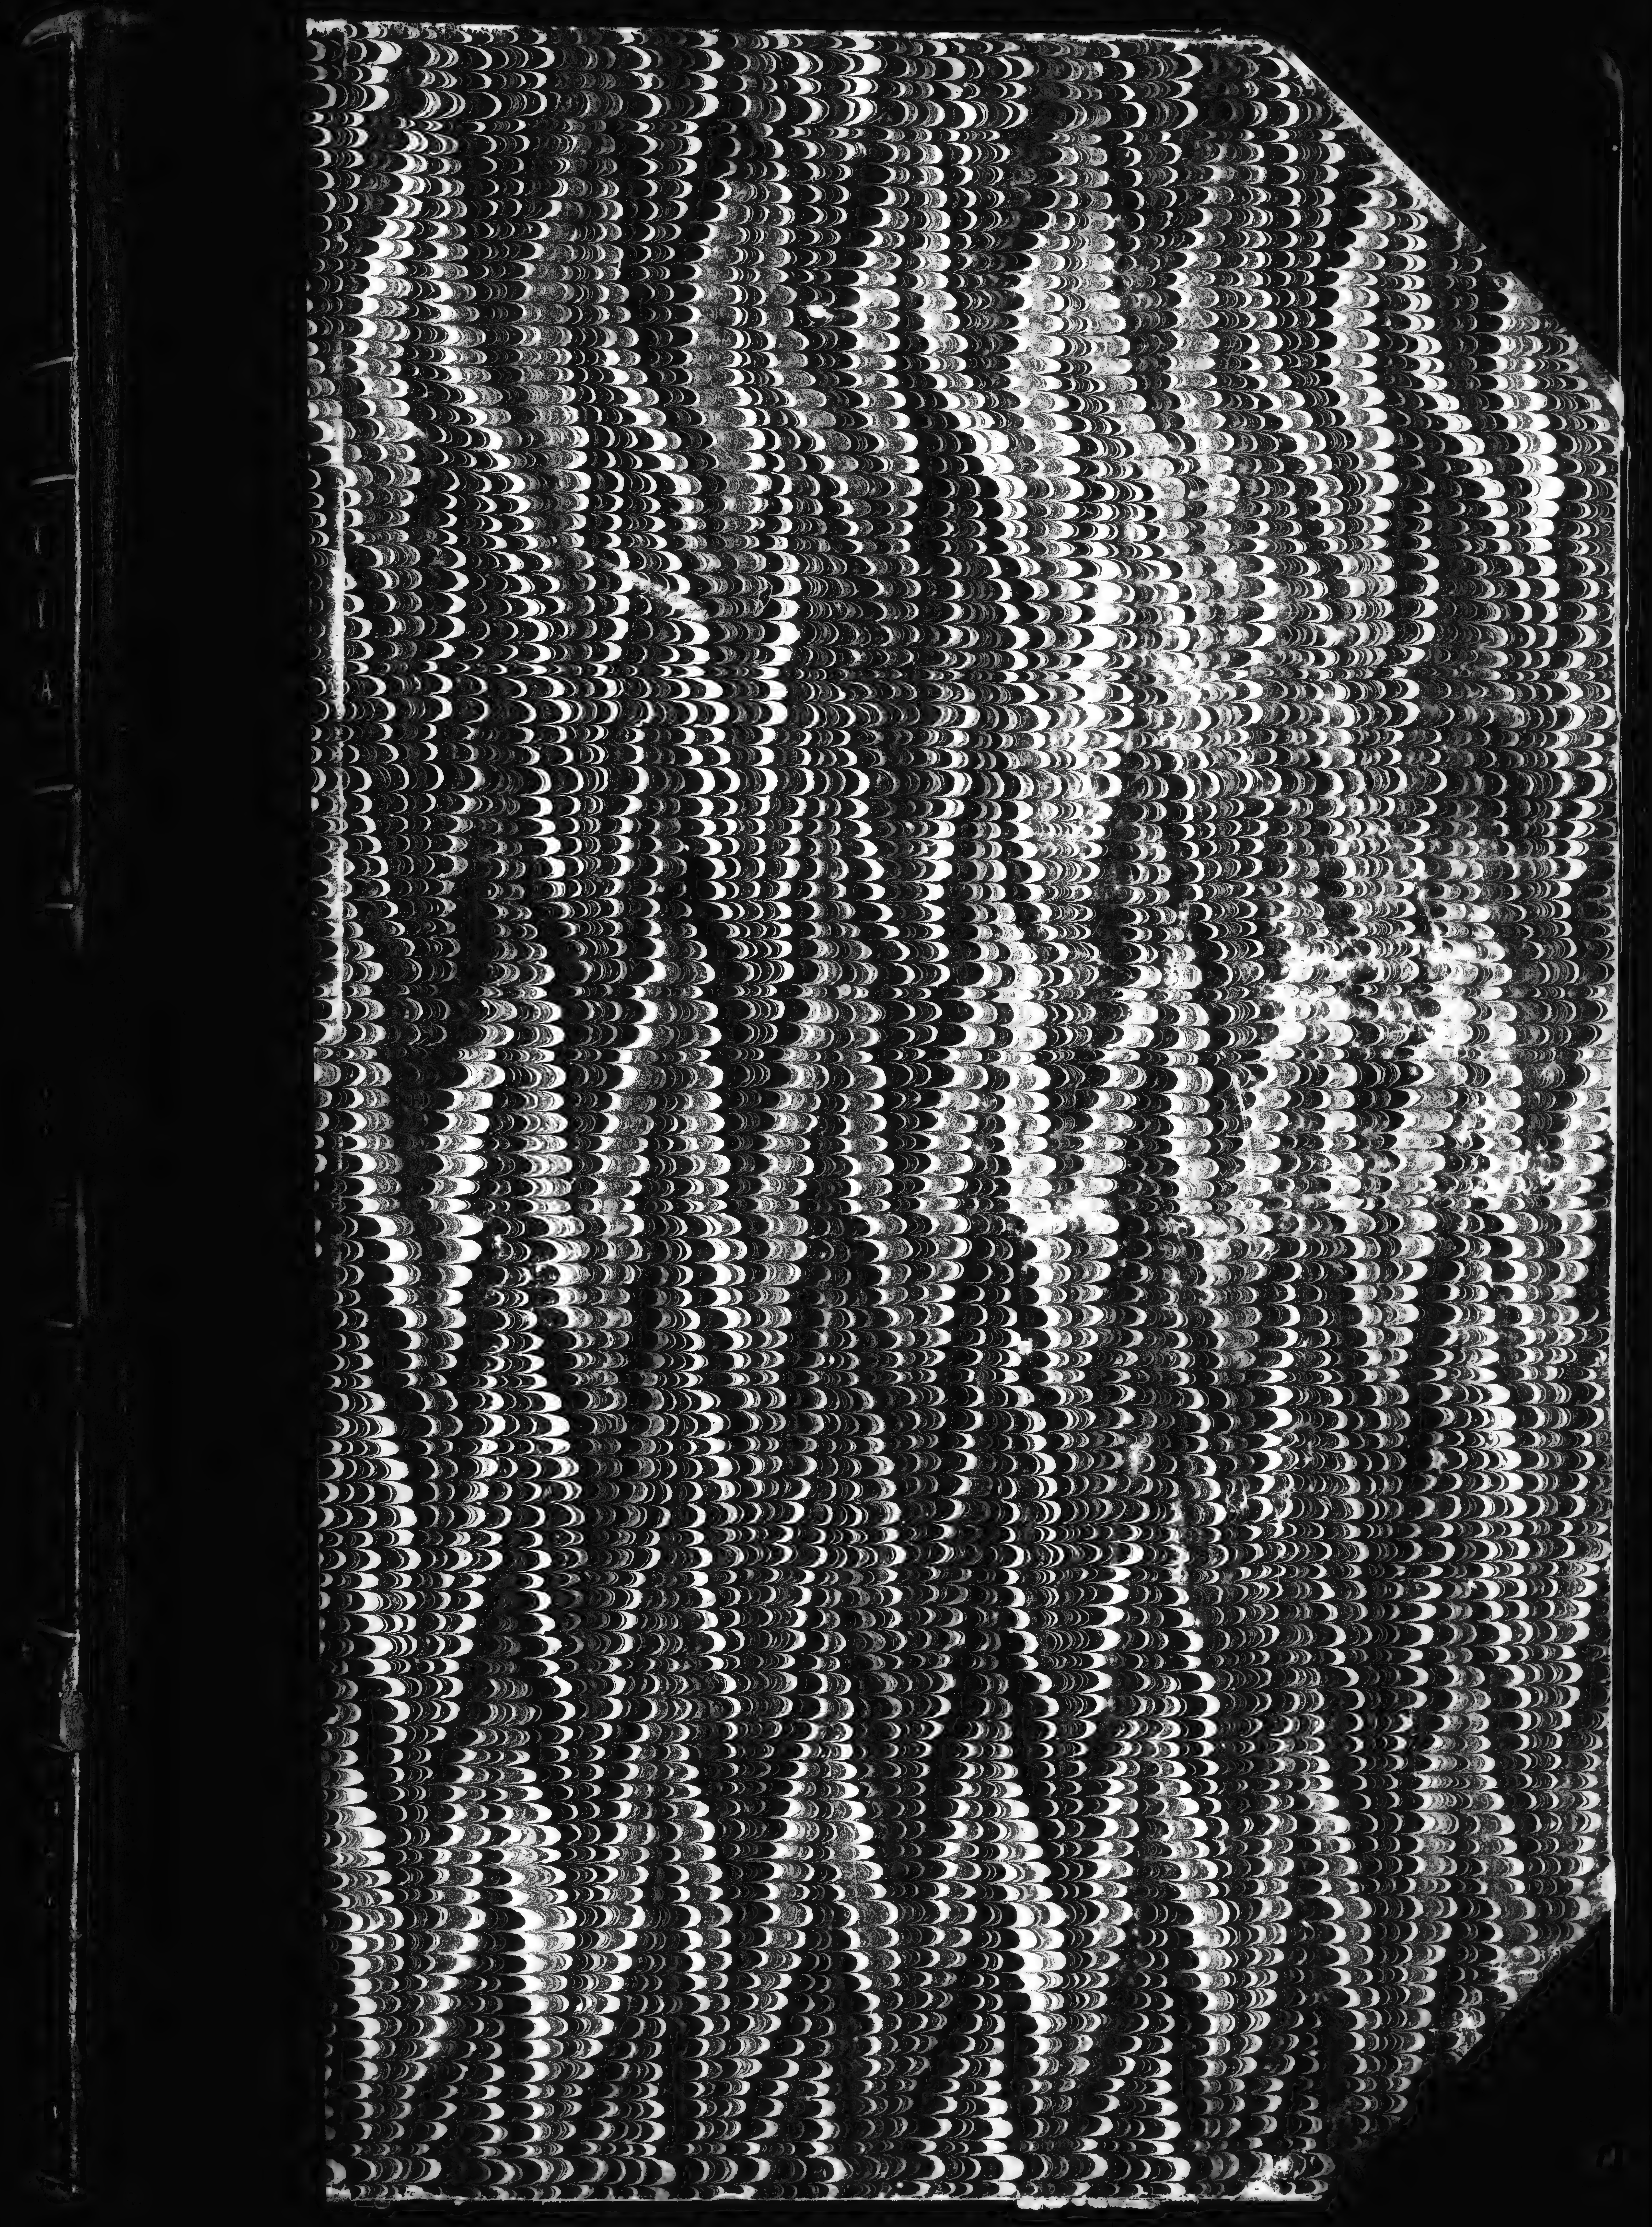
VOLUME 63

Pops
Tanglewood

1938



BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

News Clippings for Season of
1937 + 1938 (continued)

BLANK PAGE

1

[From Final Edition of Yesterday's Times.]

BOSTON ORCHESTRA HEARD IN CONCERT

Koussevitzky Leads Group in Last-Night Performance of New York Season

N. Y. Times

HAYDN SYMPHONY PLAYED

New Music by Prokofieff and a Brahms Composition Also Win Much Applause

April 2/38

By OLIN DOWNES

In a considerable perspective of orchestral concerts this chronicler remembers few if any occasions when a Haydn symphony was applauded as last night after the opening performance of the concert given by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall.

It could be said that the sheer tone quality and the brilliancy of Dr. Koussevitzky's organization would have aroused extravagant plaudits under any circumstances. It could be added that the symphony itself, thrice familiar, is an experience always new and engrossing, granted the adequate interpretation. A further consideration could be attached to the above, as concerning slight differences of individual opinion in details of interpretation, as the slow pace of the theme and the variations, which seemed excessive. The sum of it all was a most brilliant and fascinating reading. Many an imposing finale of a concert receives cooler recognition than that extended the first item of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's final evening program in New York this season.

Prokofieff Music Included

New music by Prokofieff followed, music composed for a ballet designed, apparently with typical Communist license, after Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet." The program book might have vouchsafed us some information concerning Mr. Prokofieff's scenario to which mysterious reference is made in a review of the Russian première, which is quoted. From the information provided the conclusion is reached that Prokofieff composed music to a plot as different from Shakespeare's as the Hamlet to which Shostakovich, years ago, wrote music. It was different from the original conception of the Bard of Avon.

In that plot there was no ghost. The ghost was merely an invention of Hamlet to prey on the superstitions of a populace that he wished to rouse against the murder of his father. We find by the directions for the Prokofieff ballet that "Juliet's grave is a deception, though Romeo is unaware of the fact." The music, somewhat like unto Shostakovitch's, is predominantly satirical in tone. There is the partial suggestion of that which is poignant and tragic, but there is little of the sensuous or emotional, and in the main the music could bear almost any title and still serve for ballet evolutions, and have nothing to do with Romeo and Juliet.

Some of it is banal. Possibly, associated with the movements on the stage, its true meaning would be completed. Probably Tschaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" overture, compared with it, would be subject to the sneers of the sophisticates. There, however, we find something of Shakespeare, while in last night's offering we do not.

Brahms Symphony a Highlight

The Brahms First symphony, which ended the concert, was of highest testimony to Dr. Koussevitzky's mastery, not only as conductor but as one who penetrates to the pith of the great masterpiece. His control of the orchestra was complete and imperious; his results were accomplished with an impressive simplicity and economy of effort. By the same token the interpretation was conspicuous for its intensity, merged in a noble form, and its sustained and accumulating power. The symphony was permitted to appear in its own gigantic lines and to speak for itself as a mountain peak against the sky speaks for itself. For the grand lines of the music were carved as by a master sculptor.

It was a classic conception, but not a pedantic one. Mr. Koussevitzky did not hesitate to fling out the great chorale, when it appears, fully scored; toward the wild ending of the symphony, with a breadth that momentarily held in abeyance the momentum of the music. (And by the way, how superbly the same chorale was played, piano, by the trombones in the introduction!) There was the end of frantic rejoicing, the great cry for liberty that Brahms understood and that Beethoven voiced before him, the cry which at last is always heard, to the defeat of evil and the confusion of tyrants. Perhaps at no time would the great C minor symphony have meant more to an audience. And it is probable that on no previous occasion had Dr. Koussevitzky and his men given a more complete revelation of the composition. On its conclusion there was applause and vociferous cheer-

---

GREENVILLE, N. C.
REFLECTOR

APR 1 - 1938

Philharmonic Orchestra.

The "Little Philharmonic Orchestra," which will appear at the college Monday night, April 4, under the direction of George H. Shapiro, a conductor of 25 years' experience, here and abroad, is made up of 14 artists of high rank and established reputations.

They have been drawn together by Shapiro from many older, well-known orchestras and from many countries—so many, indeed, that the group might well be called a musical "League of Nations."

The concert master is a Polish violinist who was graduated from the Conservatory of Music in Warsaw and played in the Philharmonic Orchestra there under Mlynarski.

Of the other violinists, one was trained in the Ukranian Symphony Orchestra and one in the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Also from the Chicago organization are the cellist and the bass.

The flutist, Charles North, was on tour with Mme. Melba for four seasons as a soloist and spent five years with the Boston and three with the Detroit Symphony Orchestras.

The bassoon is played by a musician who has worked under both Stokowski and Sousa. He was with the famous Barrerre's Little Symphony for several seasons.

The trumpet is played by a man who served in the Budapest Orchestra under Richard Straus.

All members of the group are musicians of high quality.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

APR 3 - 1938

Speaker Will Discuss War At Tabernacle

"War" will be the subject of an address tonight by Dr. A. C. Griffin at the "Know Your Bible Better" tabernacle at 1300 Luttrell avenue

Questions to be answered are: "Is the World About to Be Plunged Into Another World War?" "What Will Happen to Civilization if It Is?" "Has the Battle of Armageddon Been Fought?" "Does the Bible Prophecy Give Any Light on the China and Japan Situation?"

An amateur program of sacred and classical music is conducted daily.

A program of sacred music is conducted each night by Prof. C. A. Wilhelm, who was for 12 years a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra. He is assisted by a uniformed choir and an orchestra.

The lectures and musical programs will continue daily next week except except Monday and Saturday nights.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

APR 3 - 1938

SYMPHONY PROGRAM THIS WEEK

The First Symphony of Beethoven in C major will open the programme of the 21st regular pair of Symphony concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be given in Symphony hall, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Serge Koussevitzky will also present the First Symphony of Sibelius in E minor. A new work of Walter Piston will have its first performance at this pair of concerts. This will be the First Symphony of the American composer, and was completed last autumn. Mr. Piston's orchestral and chamber works have had numerous performances in Boston and other cities in recent seasons. The composer is chairman of the music division at Harvard.

GARY, IND.
POST-TRIBUNE

April 2/38

IN MEMORIAM

As a tribute to the late George Gershwin, many of his friends have got together to compose a memorial volume to him. It is to include the beloved composer's songs, with his brother Ira's lyrics, and it will contain 16 of the late Gershwin's paintings which he executed as a greatly admired amateur. Serge Koussevitsky, DuBose Heyward, Jerome Kern, Olin Downes, Oscar Hammerstein II, Rouben Mamoulian, Walter Damrosch and Paul Whiteman are among the notables who will contribute to it.

BAYONNE, N. J.
TIMES

APR 4 - 1938

IN NEW YORK

By GEORGE ROSS

New York, April 4.—The Broadway plays are thinning out. And as the dramatic season approaches its climax, two rival juries are preparing to huddle in their respective corners, engage in an annual orgy of ballot-casting, profound soul-searching and critical legerdemain . . . all in preparation for the awards in April of the two aristocratic prizes of playdom. These are the Pulitzer Prize and the Drama Critics' Circle Award.

The Pulitzer Prize Committee doesn't know what the Critics' Circle is thinking . . . and the latter doesn't seem to care what is going on in the heads of the opposing team.

When the Drama Critics' Circle sits down on April 18 to pick a winner, a total of eight current plays—the cream of the season—will be considered as probable contestants. An octet including:

Marc Blitzstein's dynamic operetta, "The Cradle Will Rock," which rings the welkin for the proletariat so resoundingly.

Paul Vincent Carroll's superb and searching play of clashing Irish minds, "Shadow and Substance."

Clifford Odets' drama of the boy who wanted to be a great violinist and was forced to become a prizefighter instead, "Golden Boy."

Thornton Wilder's scenery-less but poignant play about the simple hopes and dreams and tragedies of the folk in Grovers Corners, "Our Town."

Maxwell Anderson's "The Star Wagon," an evening's excursion into time and space.

"Of Mice and Men," John S beck's own dramatization o famous short novel.

"On Borrowed Time," Paul born's play-version of the encha ing book by Lawrence Watkin

"All the Living," a last-mi addition to the list. This i drama of Hardie Albright w adapted from the book, "I F 3,000 Lunatics," dramatize difficulties of the medical sta an insane asylum.

* * * *

uality Quartet

rom that card of eight, adway clairvoyants would h narrow down the field to four. hey have examined each critprevious tastes in plays and m this speculative research, m that the hottest contenders the much-coveted award are Town," "Shadow and Subce," "The Cradle Will Rock" "Of Mice and Men."

d it will be an interesting val fight, for the calibre of the drama has been high this year and the boys will have to be rugged hair-splitting controversialists when they air their personal preferences under lock and key.

* * * *

In Memoriam

As a tribute to the late George Gershwin, many of his friends have got together to compose a memorial volume to him. It is to include the beloved composer's songs, with his brother Ira's lyrics, and it will contain 16 of the late Gershwin's paintings which he executed as a greatly admired amateur. Serge Koussevitsky, DuBose Heyward, Jerome Kern, Olin Downes, Oscar Hammerstein II, Rouben Mamoulian, Walter Damrosch and Paul Whiteman are among the notables who will contribute to it.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

APR 6 - 1938

Symphony Closes Season With Exhilarating Program

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conducting, last evening presented as the final concert of this season one of the most completely satisfactory concerts on its long list of successful ones. The Metropolitan Theatre was filled with concertgoers of many years experience, who seemed unanimous in their reluctance to let the orchestra go. Several recalls for the conductor and two bows by the entire orchestra finally ended the concert.

Beethoven and Brahms are a combination hard to excel, and when they are given the delightful interlude of Debussey as ~~only this~~ orchestra can play it, there is ample reason for enthusiasm. Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C major, Opus 21, opened the program. The bland atmosphere of the opening adagio was soon followed by the allegro con brio, which was a model for perfect exposition of themes and delicacy of phrasing. Every voice sang with exquisite tone quality and the balance of tone was admirable. Even the fortissimo passages were definitely dated 1800.

Beethoven's volume lacks the blatant quality so often found in modern compositions, and it is this sense of proportion so highly developed which makes the Boston Symphony's interpretations superlative.

The andante cantabile was most agreeably introduced by the second violins and the melody was passed from choir to choir with pleasing effect. We especially liked the playing of the ingratiating little theme in triplets, done alternately by violins and flute. The bounding rhythm of the menuetto carried this movement through with unbelievable rapidity. The daring syncopation which Beethoven introduced here was no doubt one of the things which caused critics of his day to call this symphony "dangerous music." The finale displays a happy care-free mood and the scale passages for strings were beautifully played. Mr. Bedetti's bow came within our line of vision and to see it, was to visualize every curved line and dot in the phrase marks of the score. When the last fleet scale had scampered off the ends of the bows and the last chord was played, we had the agreeable sensation of having completely understood this music. This comment might be taken to mean that the writer is a hundred years beind the times in the capacity to understand, or it might be construed to imply that Beethoven was that far ahead of his day. We have heard considerable Hindemith and Schonberg too, but we only make a noble effort to understand that music. We are not sure that we do. Our thanks to Mr. Koussevitsky for making us sure of something in these perlous times.

Two nocturnes by Debussy came next, Nuages and Fetes. The first, an impressionistic picture of clouds drifting across the sky, was exquisitely interpreted. The tone of the English horn was delicately enfolded in the mass of string tone. At times the viola and English horn had the melody and then again the flute and harp were given the lead. Debussy wrote music which does not have to be understood. Hearing it stirs the imagination so that the mental image suggested by the title appears in sound. Fetes, with its faint trumpet theme as from a distance, brought the rhythm and color of the carnival mood, at once. This number was exhilarating in its brilliance.

Music of a different texture came in the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Opus. 68. This writing, although the first in symphonic form, by this composer, is the product of a mature mind. The full-toned strings establish the intensity of the mood and as the movement progresses, the completeness of its writing is more and more apparent. The Andante is beautiful music and as it was played last evening its repose approached sublimity. The Allegretto with its gracefully undulating rhythm and the delicacy of the figuration of the strings around the reeds was delightful. In the last movement the well-known horn theme and the much loved chorale theme were delightful to hear.

The work of the Boston Symphony orchestra under its able conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, is easily the finest contribution to our musical season. We are fortunate to be within visiting distance of this famous organization and wise if we realize that hearing them at their state of perfection is a rare privilege. We are looking forward to next season.

R. T.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

APR 4 - 1938

MUSIC

Men's Glee Clubs Sing in Fall River.—Symphony Notes

By G. Y. Loveridge

Boston Symphony Program

Two first symphonies—one by Beethoven and the other by Brahms—will be on the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Metropolitan Theatre tomorrow night. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. It will be the last concert of the season here by the orchestra.

The first performance of the Beethoven symphony was almost exactly 138 years ago—on April 2, 1800. The composer was 30. Brahms did not present his first symphony to the public until he was 43. He appeared in awe of Beethoven and once wrote to a friend, "I shall never compose a symphony! You have no conception of how the likes of us feel when we hear the tramp of a giant like him behind us."

The Beethoven symphony is in C major, and reminds the listener of Haydn and Mozart in various ways. The first movement begins not in C major, but in F major, and goes then to G major. This was not considered proper in Beethoven's time and aroused some adverse declarations from the critics, but to this day's listeners the symphony does not seem startling. It is in the customary four movements.

The Brahms symphony is in C minor. It was played first by the Grand Duke's orchestra in Carlsruhe, on Nov. 4, 1876. Dessoff conducted and Brahms was among the listeners. A few days later, Brahms conducted his symphony at Mannheim.

This symphony did not achieve popularity for a long time, but in the past few years more and more persons have come to enjoy it, as they have the three others by this master. In 1878, when it was heard in Boston for the first time, John S. Dwight wrote in his "Journal of Music" that "it will not be loved like the dear masterpieces of genius." Now it is considered to be one of those masterpieces.

Brahms, by the way, died 41 years ago yesterday, at Vienna.

Two nocturnes, "Fetes" and "Nuages," by Debussy, also will be played tomorrow night. There is a third one, "Sirenes," for which a wordless choir of 16 female voices is It is rarely heard.

SCRANTON, PA.
TRIBUNE

APR 5 - 1938

In Memoriam

As a tribute to the late George Gershwin, many of his friends have got together to compose a memorial volume to him. It is to include the beloved composer's songs, with his brother Ira's lyrics and it will contain 16 of the late Gershwin's paintings which he executed as a greatly admired amateur. Serge Koussevitsky, DuBose Heyward, Jerome Kern, Olin Downes, Oscar Hammerstein II, Rouben Mamoulian, Walter Damrosch and Paul Whiteman are among the notables who will contribute to it.

Reinhardt, Toscanini Would Make America's Film City V

Hollywood Wants To Be Salzburg

By Louella O. Parsons
Motion Picture Editor International News Service
(Copyright, 1938, by International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD, April 2.

SALZBURG'S famous festival, Mecca for music lovers all over the world, looms as a strong Hollywood possibility.

Professor Max Reinhardt, creator of the world-renowned Salzburg operatic and theatrical season in that quaint little town, expects to establish a similar festival to open here the latter part of August.

Italian Conductor Arturo Toscanini has telegraphed Reinhardt, a close personal friend, expressing his interest in the project.

It is more than likely the celebrated conductor, who directed the most important operas in Salzburg last summer, will come here to offer his aid to Reinhardt.

Greatest stars of the operatic world have appeared with Toscanini, and these songbirds will flock here in large numbers, once the Hollywood festival is inaugurated.

Outstanding European artists also have appeared in the dramatic plays. These were trained by Professor Reinhardt, who naturally feels he should have a school to train American talent for their debut in the new festival.

The celebrated Reinhardt School at Schoenbrunn was responsible for developing many great artists. Right here in Hollywood are former Reinhardt pupils who can testify to his help in training them for the stage.

* * *

by launching the Reinhardt school immediately.

"We must have a school," said Professor Reinhardt, "to get ready for the festival, because it is necessary to train our actors.

"We could not depend entirely upon the talent already here, because their motion picture engagements would interfere, and we hope to make the festival a permanent thing."

"Our idea is to put on plays during the year in which student from the school will appear. Angeles has very little th entertainment and usua plays come here, the have the New York

"I would like to Hollywood the gre center in the world Vienna is no lon can pick our world's most women."

•

SEVERAL friends dro there and oness M school told of devel istr up a

---

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

APR 6 - 1938

Wagner in Boston.

In an article on "Trends in Symphonic Music" written for the Boston Transcript by John H. Mueller and Kate Hevner of Indiana university, the authors say that for modern compositions the Boston orchestra is the outstanding leader. They feel that Boston must be given the palm for unflagging and generous devotion to musical progress. And that does not imply that Boston neglects the classics. The statement that "Boston has never given itself over to the Wagner cult," it strikes us, is liable to misinterpretation. It is true that the works of Wagner may appear less frequently on Boston Symphony programs, in the regular series at least, than works by other composers. But that is because they are not strictly symphonic compositions, but designed as music drama. But to suggest that Boston does not cherish Wagner's music is unfortunate. The pension fund concerts of the orchestra have often been devoted to Wagner programs. And great audiences have thronged the hall to hear them. Wagner nights at the Pops are always popular. A Wagner selection at the Esplanade concerts always arouses general enthusiasm. And the Wagner operas were the outstanding attractions at the brief season of grand opera which ended last week. And not wholly, one ventures to say, because of the excellence of the artists who sang in them. In the opinion of this observer, there is and has been for sometime a definite and numerous Wagner cult in Boston.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

APR 7 - 1938

Labor Relations Reported Unsettled

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Job at Issue

Continued unsettled labor relations at the new home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Lenox, where an auditorium is under construction to house the annual concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were indicated yesterday when two representatives of the Pittsfield Building Trades Council visited Central Labor Union Hall in search of assistance.

Construction of the auditorium at "Tanglewood" was impeded a week ago when the labor organization caused 150,000 feet of lumber designed for the job to be held up at the port of Albany in protest against employment of nonunion labor on the job. The lumber was released several days ago when an understanding was thought to have been reached providing for employment of union workers.

Charges that the unions were "sold out" in the supposed agreement were rumored here yesterday but local business agents would not comment on the grounds that it was outside their jurisdiction. An attempt will be made, it is understood, to bring the New England representative of the Carpenters' Union to Lenox to solve the dispute.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

APR 6 - 1938

Boston Programs.

The program selected by Dr. Koussevitzky for the Boston Symphony concerts this week Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will consist of three symphonies, each the first by its respective composer. They will be Beethoven's in C major, Sibelius' in E minor and Walter Piston's in its first performance anywhere.

Last week the orchestra completed its series in New York and according to the critics Koussevitzky and the players were at the peak of their powers in an imaginative and brilliant performance of Debussv's "La Mer." Next week the matinee program will be on Thursday instead of Friday.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

APR 6 - 1938

MUSIC

Demonstrative Audience Hears Decidedly Interesting Program by Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra at Metropolitan Theatre

By G. Y. Loveridge

The Boston Symphony Orchestra said farewell for the season, in Metropolitan Theatre last night. The audience was not as large as for some of the four other concerts, but it was a demonstrative gathering, and loath to let Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his men depart.

The program was decidedly interesting. The first symphony by Beethoven and the first by Brahms were performed and two nocturnes by Debussy. There is not much question whose first symphony is the finer; Beethoven had Haydn and Mozart to lean on — and he did— while Brahms had them and Beethoven also—both an advantage and a handicap.

The Beethoven First, heard about as seldom as the Ninth, is a sprightly and tuneful work that almost anybody would enjoy. It carries its hundred-and-some years easily, and the rhythmic gaiety and melodic charm are as attractive as though they had been conceived but yesterday, though at the last count, there was nobody yesterday who could have conceived them. The antics of the almost boisterous finale were delightfully exploited by Dr. Koussevitzky. Genuine, unabashed heat, as the swing musicians say.

There could hardly be a stranger contrast than the Debussy "Nuages," which came next. The symphony was quite of this world; the nocturne was not. In imagery and utterance it proclaimed a different phase of the tonal art. Beethoven had set the pulses going; Debussy lulled and mystified. The curious fragments of melodies in English horn and viola, the haunting voices of the strings, the sense of lights and shadows were magical. The orchestra was brilliantly obediant to the will of its conductor.

"Fetes," in its own way, was quite as beautiful. The lively accents and the pleasant orchestral chatter kept one interested, and the procession, approaching in 'cellos, harps and trumpets, sweeping by and disappearing, was superb.

After the customary smoke-screen had been laid down by the audience the orchestra attacked the first symphony of Brahms. Here was a reading both poetic and muscular. In large outline and in detail it was, this department thought, one of the best performances of the season. The unhurried certainty of the composer, the serene contemplation that leans to austerity, were here displayed with profound effect. Perhaps one felt that sometimes Brahms approached, or announced, his ideas ponderously, but they are always solid ideas and worth contending with.

Brass and woodwinds were especially brilliant in the last movement, which rose by slow waves to a climax such as only the Boston Symphony can produce. Dr. Koussevitzky and the men were applauded again and again after this masterful performance.

The program:

Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21 ....Beethoven
- I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
- II. Andante contabile con moto
- III. Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace; trio
- IV. Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto e vivace

Two Nocturnes ....Debussy
- Nuages
- Fetes

Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68 ....Brahms
- I. Un poco sostenuto; Allegro
- II. Andante sostenuto
- III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
- IV. Adagio; Allegro non troppo, ma con brio

Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give a recital with Elizabeth Siedhoff, pianist, in Plantations auditorium on Friday night.

Mr. Burgin was born in Warsaw in 1892. He took his first lessons on the violin when he was five, and at eight he became a pupil of Isidore Lotto. He went to Berlin with his father in 1902. There he played for Joachim, and impressed the great violinist so favorably that a scholarship from the Mendelssohn Fund was made available. Burgin studied two years in Berlin under the supervision of Joachim.

He came to this country at 13, and played in Carnegie hall. Then he went to Petrograd to study with Leopold Auer. After several seasons on the continent he returned here as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1920.

Miss Siedhoff, a pupil of Tobias Matthay, has given concerts and lecture recitals here and abroad.

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 6 - 1938

MUSIC

"MUSIC IN MEDICINE"

Festivals in America

Festivals, contests and competitions in every department of music are on the increase in America. European conditions explain some of the more organized.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, is quoted on this subject as follows: "One of the signs of the times is the development of American summer festivals. Some new ones are likely to sprout since the overrunning of Salzburg by politics. There could and there should be American music festivals of an importance equal to the greatest festivals of Europe, and planned in an American way, on fully as great a scale.

"The nearest approach to this, up to the present time,, is the Berkshire Festival given each August by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. Its scope should be extended and would have been if Dr. Koussevitzky's plans had been fully supported. The possibility is now that other places will institute festivals, and that the lead which Stockbridge had in this direction will be lost.

"A Westport, Ct., project has been advanced with enthusiasm in recent weeks. Saratoga Springs has an embryo music festval."

In conclusion, Mr. Downes expresses his belief that "the greatest music festival of all will take place at the New York World's Fair. These various activities and others unmentioned, are protents of change, very momentus for the culture of the United States, and indicative of the new musical balance of power.

Settlement School Music

"There are now more than one hundred and seventy settlements in the principal cities of America which have non-profit making music schools, music departments, or organized social music. Eventually every settlement must have a music department. We in the settlement field look upon music as a part of life experience; we are not primarily searching for exceptional talent."—Mrs. Frances McElwee McFarland.

E. B. F.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER

APR 7 - 1938

Try-Outs For Festival To Be Held Here

Judges to Select Four Soloists for Annual Event at Center.

Outstanding exponents of the voice in the Metropolitan area will hear finalists in try-outs for solo parts of the 14th annual Westchester Music Festival, to be held here next month, according to Mrs. Valentine E. Macy, of Ossining, president of the music Festival Association.

Judges for the final audition, to take place next Thursday morning in the County Center, include Madame Gerster-Gardini, Jeanette Vreeland, and Nicolai Mednikoff, it was announced today by Hugh Ross, festival conductor. It is also possible that Percy Rector Stephens will be among the judges, Mr. Ross stated.

Four, and possibly five soloists will be chosen. These soloists will be heard on the final night of the three-day Festival program, which takes place on the evenings of Friday, May 13, and Friday and Saturday, May 20 and 21. The parts they will sing are contained in the oratorio, "The Ordering of Moses," by Dr. Robert Nathaniel Dett, and in "The Origin of Fire," by Sibelius, included in the final night program.

In "The Ordering of Moses," the part of Moses is that of a tenor, depicting the Hebrew leader as a young shepherd. The soprano voice is for the part of Miriam, whose principle aria is a song of rejoicing after the crossing of the Red Sea, the spirit of the song being that of a "sacrificial dance." The voice of God, speaking from the burning bush, is portrayed by a bass, while the alto is the voice of Israel, personifying the people of the race. Here also a baritone can portray the Word of God, while there is a bass solo in the Sibelius "Origin of Fire," describing the main theme.

Madame Gardini is director of the Gerster Singing School in New York City, which bears the name of her famous mother, Etelka Gerster, one of the best known of the Hungarian singers of another decade. Jeanette Vreeland is one of the best known of American concert artists. She has sung with most of the large orchestras of the country, including the Boston Orchestra under Kousseviski, and others.

Mr. Mednikoff is head of the Westchester Conservatory of Music, having been its director since it was founded in 1929. He has concertized throughout the world, and has appeared in the United States both individually and with such artists as Pablo Casals, Jacques Thibaud, Elizabeth Rethberg and others.

3

PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST - GAZETTE

APR 7 - 1938

Is It Music?

Syncopated Rhythm of Jazz Enjoys Support of Distinguished Defenders

By Robert Barlow

A LOT of water has gone under the bridge since Ernest Newman, dean of British musical critics, wrote that jazz was "the product of musical illiterates and vulgarians and destined to die a sudden and inglorious death."

Although Mr. Newman hasn't yet seen fit to revise his judgment, American popular music has acquired a number of distinguished defenders since the above statement was first published.

Listen, first of all, to Alexander Tcherepnine, distinguished young Russian composer and concert pianist, who has some decisive opinions on the subject.

"The so-called serious composer," he says, "can't afford to patronize or ignore jazz music. As far as I can see, jazz has all the good qualities of modern music and few of its many defects."

"Not only is jazz full of interest from a harmonic and rhythmic point of view, but it's absolutely free from the intellectual snobbery that is the curse of less vital music. No one cares whether a new dance song is by Cole Porter or Irving Berlin. All its audience asks is that it be good."

Mr. Tcherepnine, who was managing the Tiflis Opera when he was only 19 and has had his works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and other major American symphonic organizations, believes that serious modern music has become so complex that it is only of interest to the professional musician.

"Because this is true," he continues, "the best of our contemporary popular music will necessarily lead to the music of tomorrow. I'm not prepared to say what specific jazz compositions will survive, but I personally believe that much of George Gershwin's music will be cherished by future generations. Possibly the same will be true of some of the best Irving Berlin and Cole Porter songs.

* * *

Jazz Dominates American Music

FOR more than 25 years the syncopated rhythms of popular music have dominated the musical diet of the average American, and serious musicians are finding it increasingly difficult to ignore the fact that a dozen or so Broadway tunesmiths have been molding the musical taste of an entire generation.

ALEXANDER TCHEREPNINE SAYS A SERIOUS COMPOSER CAN'T IGNORE JAZZ MUSIC

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI MAINTAINS THAT JAZZ IS REALLY OUR FOLK-LORE

Long a musical outcast, despised and neglected by the highbrows, jazz has suddenly begun to receive a flattering amount of critical attention.

Ten years ago Deems Taylor, himself a composer and critic of distinction, caused considerable commotion in symphonic circles when he coolly announced that the production of Jerome Kern's "Show Boat" was an important event in the history of American music—and proceeded to follow up this remark with a learned essay on Kern's music in an esoteric musical quarterly.

Today Mr. Taylor's shrewd pronouncement would be received as a matter of course by the many composers and conductors who have come to see in jazz a significant contribution to the development of twentieth century music.

* * *

TYPICAL of the new attitude toward popular music is the statement recently made by Leopold Stokowski, world-famous conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a confirmed admirer of Duke Ellington and Irving Berlin.

"Jazz," comments this liberal musician, "is really our folk-lore and our folk music. It has always seemed to me that it is the musical expression of something very necessary in American life.

"The great and inspired compositions of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms speak to the heart and spirit. Jazz has a different and equally valid function. As long as it fulfills that function it will survive as a very real part of our American musical life."

DEEMS TAYLOR SAID THAT PRODUCTION OF SHOW BOAT WAS AN IMPORTANT EVENT IN AMERICAN MUSIC.

Of a similar mind is Percy Grainger, concert pianist and composer, who maintains that the popular music of today is the most sophisticated and refined that the world has ever known.

"Many of our popular songs are trashy and derivative," says Mr. Grainger, "but in some cases they approach so-called 'serious' music so closely as to become competitive. That being true, it seems to me quite apparent that jazz is destined to come into increasing favor with trained musicians. Obviously it will continue to hold its popularity with the American people as a whole.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

APR 8 - 1938

Untenable Claims Being Made About Interest in Music

EARLY in the week we had occasion to refer to the splendid concert performance of Bizet's opera, "Carmen," given in Turn hall last Sunday evening by units of the Federal Music project. There was a fair-sized audience but the value and importance of presenting such a colorful score as "Carmen" should have been sufficient to pack the hall. The ofttimes heard assertion about the increased public interest in the finer type of music and its performars could be easily disproved by last Sunday's meagre turnout.

Whether all communities can be bulked together in a survey of musical tastes and standards is difficult to say, because the larger cities draw patronage from the surrounding area—sometimes to the extent of 100 or more miles. The recent short engagement of the Metropolitan Opera company in Boston drew patronage from many of the outlying cities and towns. Capacity audiences were the rule, with many unable to obtain tickets for some of the performances, particularly for the four Wagner works in which Flagstad was singing. Likewise during the regular 16-weeks' season in New York, on many occasions the house was sold out days in advance. At a "Carmen" performance that we attended early in March, standing room was at a premium. In other words there were more persons standing at that performance than there were sitting down at Turn hall.

It certainly is not our intention to draw anything like a comparison between those two events, but we don't hestitate to say that as far as the chorus singing and that of a few of the principals was concerned, that the federal performance could stand its ground. As for the 75-piece orchestra, its work may have lacked some of the finesse that characterizes the work of older and more seasoned organizations, still its playing last Sunday evening brought back pleasant memories of the local visits of the Boston Symphony a number of years ago. It gave one the feeling of security, that of knowing that here was an orchestra sufficiently numerous and resourceful enough to re-create the finely wrought and highly sensitized Bizet masterpiece in a manner worthy of its place in the art world. Under the crisp, incisive direction of A. Buckingham Simson, the 63-year-old lyric drama classic fell pleasingly on ones ears despite the lack of dramatic action and scenic investure.

But it was not our real intention to go into another rhapsody over the "Carmen" performance, but rather to question the veracity of the claims that symphonic and operatic music are sweeping across the country. In a special feature article in a Boston paper last Sunday, the writer of the article says that young people everywhere are attending concerts, that they are stamping their feet and clamoring for more. Toscanini, Stokowsky, Koussevitzky and other eminent conductors were quoted as saying that there was a great wave of popular interest in the more serious type of music. Wilopolisaying esent-iscovnes in own."
Sym-
n the vill be they only
one orchestra may soon support two or more.

Many music lovers would like to see such a miracle, since there is precious little genuine pleasure attending good performances with rows of vacant seats on all sides. Just because a few of the major organizations can draw large audiences is hardly a sign of an improved musical culture or an extension of its influence in the country at large. Not so many years ago New York had two leading symphony orchestras, but they combined and now there is just one, the Philharmonic-Symphony. Some years ago it had two major opera companies, but now there is one and even that one's seasons have been reduced. Philadelphia, Chicago and Boston had resident opera companies, but they have gone into memory. Many cities, including our own, had concert courses featuring some of the very best instrumental and vocal artists in years that don't seem very remote, but it is pretty generally known to those at all interested in such things, that concert-giving is not what it used to be. A short time ago we attended a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony hall. The distinguished modernistic Russian composer, Serge Prokofieff was the guest conductor in a program featuring his own compositions. Perhaps modern audiences are not wildly interested in modern music as yet, since there were quite a number of vacant seats on that occasion. Yes, there may be a new, lively, widespread interest being shown in the better kinds of music, but Benny Goodman and other purveyors of the popular brands seem to be doing quite well for themselves, also.

—A. L. M.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN

APR 7 - 1938

Hub Violinist to Play for Hadassah Group

A musical with Joseph Leibovici, first violinist in the Boston Symphony orchestra as guest artist, will feature the April meeting of the Hadassah and Sisterhood of the Temple Beth-El. The session will take place on the 12th, at the Hebrew Community Center. Mr. Leibovici will be accompanied by Gladys Troupin of Lawrence.

Mr. Leibovici has had an interesting career. At the age of 11 years, he was admitted to the International conservatory, and has been a pupil of such eminent violinists as Brun, Marsick and Nadaud. He graduated with honors in 1914, following which he studied with Jacques Thibaud. He was then appointed first violinist in the Paris Opera House. He is a member of the Concert Colonne, and the Concert Taucat of Paris, where he served as soloist until 1926, at which time he was encouraged by Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony orchestra to become a member of the staff.

Miss Troupin was born in Lawrence, studied at Simmons college, and has played over the radio and on numerous concert programs. She is the director of an all girl orchestra, and also of the Dana-Sieveling school.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 8 - 1938

Dawley, Slossberg and Girsky, Soloists for Saint-Sains Symphony

Walter Dawley organist, Charles L. Slossberg and Samuel Gorsky, pianists, will be soloists in the Saint-Saens Symphony No. 3 in C minor which will be played by the Hartford Symphony Orchestra in its concert at the Bushnell Sunday at 3 p. m.

This will be the work's first performance by this orchestra, a WPA Federal Music Project unit. The Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky played it in February this year.

Jacques Gordon is to conduct the Sunday concert, which will have Eudice Shapiro as violin soloist in the Conus Concerto in E minor for violin and orchestra. The rest of the program will include Wagner's Prelude to Parsifal and two Debussy Nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fetes."

Tickets are still available at the office of the sponsoring Symphony Society of Connecticut, 15 Lewis St., and at the Bushnell boxoffice.

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD

APR 9 - 1938

Rockland Native's Symphony Is Played By Boston Orchestra

Boston, April 8—(AP)—The first symphony of Prof. Walter Piston, chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University, today received its first performance, at the hands of the expert Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sandwiched in the program between the first-born symphonies of a pair of musical giants—Beethoven and Sibelius—the new work, which was conducted by the composer, proved modern, vigorous, and architecturally sound, if not almost entirely lacking in melody.

Denying any "pictorial, narrative, political or philosophical intent," the author, who is a native of Rockland, Me., has the work begin somewhat irregularly and mysteriously with the main or "germinating" theme expressed by plucked strings of 'cellos and double basses.

At the close of the final movement—there are only three—this motif, which underlies the unfolding of the symphony, recurs in full statement by the brass. The reception was moderate.

Although the composer does not specify a key—"Symphony" being its only title—Prof. Piston explained it could be called a "Symphony in C." He completed it last Autumn at his home in suburban Belmont. Hitherto he has composed mostly music for piano, quartets and trios. He is 44 years old.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's regular conductor, was on the podium for the Beethoven and Sibelius symphonies.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y.
ARGUS

APR 8 - 1938

Arias and Encores

Final Auditions for County Festival Singers Scheduled Thursday Morning at County Center — Theater Workshop to Present Moliere Comedy

By JOHN D. CHEQUER

Europe, Mme. Gardini is devoting her time to teaching. She numbers among her pupils some of the most famous European singers. For several years she was head of the operatic department of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

American Concert Artist

Jeannette Vreeland is one of the best known of American concert artists. She has sung with most of the large orchestras in this country, including the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitski, and others. Coming here from concert work to help in judging the Festival auditions, she will depart on the following day for an engagement with the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, under Rodzinski. She is the wife of Percy Rector Stephens, well-known conductor and voice teacher.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST - GAZETTE
APR 7 - 1938

Is It Music?

Syncopated Rhythm of Jazz Enjoys Support of Distinguished Defenders

By Robert Barlow

A LOT of water has gone under the bridge since Ernest Newman, dean of British musical critics, wrote that jazz was "the product of musical illiterates and vulgarians and destined to die a sudden and inglorious death."

Although Mr. Newman hasn't yet seen fit to revise his judgment, American popular music has acquired a number of distinguished defenders since the above statement was first published.

Listen, first of all, to Alexander Tcherepnine, distinguished young Russian composer and concert pianist, who has some decisive opinions on the subject.

"The so-called serious composer," he says, "can't afford to patronize or ignore jazz music. As far as I can see, jazz has all the good qualities of modern music and few of its many defects."

"Not only is jazz full of interest from a harmonic and rhythmic point of view, but it's absolutely free from the intellectual snobbery that is the curse of less vital music. No one cares whether a new dance song is by Cole Porter or Irving Berlin. All its audience asks is that it be good."

Mr. Tcherepnine, who was managing the Tiflis Opera when he was only 19 and has had his works performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and other major American symphonic organizations, believes that serious modern music has become so complex that it is only of interest to the professional musician.

"Because this is true," he continues, "the best of our contemporary popular music will necessarily lead to the music of tomorrow. I'm not prepared to say what specific jazz compositions will survive, but I personally believe that much of George Gershwin's music will be cherished by future generations. Possibly the same will be true of some of the best Irving Berlin and Cole Porter songs.

* * *

Jazz Dominates American Music

FOR more than 25 years the syncopated rhythms of popular music have dominated the musical diet of the average American, and serious musicians are finding it increasingly difficult to ignore the fact that a dozen or so Broadway tunesmiths have been molding the musical taste of an entire generation.

ALEXANDER TCHEREPNINE SAYS A SERIOUS COMPOSER CAN'T IGNORE JAZZ MUSIC

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI MAINTAINS THAT JAZZ IS REALLY OUR FOLK-LORE

Long a musical outcast, despised and neglected by the highbrows, jazz has suddenly begun to receive a flattering amount of critical attention.

Ten years ago Deems Taylor, himself a composer and critic of distinction, caused considerable commotion in symphonic circles when he coolly announced that the production of Jerome Kern's "Show Boat" was an important event in the history of American music—and proceeded to follow up this remark with a learned essay on Kern's music in an esoteric musical quarterly.

Today Mr. Taylor's shrewd pronouncement would be received as a matter of course by the many composers and conductors who have come to see in jazz a significant contribution to the development of twentieth century music.

* * *

TYPICAL of the new attitude toward popular music is the statement recently made by Leopold Stokowski, world-famous conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a confirmed admirer of Duke Ellington and Irving Berlin.

"Jazz," comments this liberal musician, "is really our folk-lore and our folk music. It has always seemed to me that it is the musical expression of something very necessary in American life.

"The great and inspired compositions of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms speak to the heart and spirit. Jazz has a different and equally valid function. As long as it fulfills that function it will survive as a very real part of our American musical life."

DEEMS TAYLOR SAID THAT PRODUCTION OF "SHOW BOAT" WAS AN IMPORTANT EVENT IN AMERICAN MUSIC

Of a similar mind is Percy Grainger, concert pianist and composer, who maintains that the popular music of today is the most sophisticated and refined that the world has ever known.

"Many of our popular songs are trashy and derivative," says Mr. Grainger, "but in some cases they approach so-called 'serious' music so closely as to become competitive. That being true, it seems to me quite apparent that jazz is destined to come into increasing favor with trained musicians. Obviously it will continue to hold its popularity with the American people

---

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
APR 9 - 1938

Rockland Native's Symphony Is Played By Boston Orchestra

Boston, April 8—(AP)—The first symphony of Prof. Walter Piston, chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University, today received its first performance, at the hands of the expert Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sandwiched in the program between the first-born symphonies of a pair of musical giants—Beethoven and Sibelius—the new work, which was conducted by the composer, proved modern, vigorous, and architecturally sound, if not almost entirely lacking in melody.

Denying any "pictorial, narrative, political or philosophical intent," the author, who is a native of Rockland, Me., has the work begin somewhat irregularly and mysteriously with the main or "germinating" theme expressed by plucked strings of 'cellos and double basses.

At the close of the final movement—there are only three—this motif, which underlies the unfolding of the symphony, recurs in full statement by the brass. The reception was moderate.

Although the composer does not specify a key—"Symphony" being its only title—Prof. Piston explained it could be called a "Symphony in C." He completed it last Autumn at his home in suburban Belmont. Hitherto he has composed mostly music for piano, quartets and trios. He is 44 years old.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's regular conductor, was on the podium for the Beethoven and Sibelius symphonies.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y.
ARGUS
APR 8 - 1938

THE D

Final T

-Berle

YMCA Vars

Europe, Mme. Gardini is devoting her time to teaching. She numbers among her pupils some of the most famous European singers. For several years she was head of the operatic department of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

American Concert Artist

Jeannette Vreeland is one of the best known of American concert artists. She has sung with most of the large orchestras in this country, including the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitski, and others. Coming here from concert work to help in judging the Festival auditions, she will depart on the following day for an engagement with the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, under Rodzinski. She is the wife of Percy Rector Stephens, well-known conductor and voice teacher.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
APR 8 - 1938

Untenable Claims Being Made About Interest in Music

EARLY in the week we had occasion to refer to the splendid concert performance of Bizet's opera, "Carmen," given in Turn hall last Sunday evening by units of the Federal Music project. There was a fair-sized audience but the value and importance of presenting such a colorful score as "Carmen" should have been sufficient to pack the hall. The ofttimes heard assertion about the increased public interest in the finer type of music and its performars could be easily disproved by last Sunday's meagre turnout.

Whether all communities can be bulked together in a survey of musical tastes and standards is difficult to say, because the larger cities draw patronage from the surrounding area—sometimes to the extent of 100 or more miles. The recent short engagement of the Metropolitan Opera company in Boston drew patronage from many of the outlying cities and towns. Capacity audiences were the rule, with many unable to obtain tickets for some of the performances, particularly for the four Wagner works in which Flagstad was singing. Likewise during the regular 16-weeks' season in New York, on many occasions the house was sold out days in advance. At a "Carmen" performance that we attended early in March, standing room was at a premium. In other words there were more persons standing at that performance than there were sitting down at Turn hall.

It certainly is not our intention to draw anything like a comparison between those two events, but we don't hestitate to say that as far as the chorus singing and that of a few of the principals was concerned, that the federal performance could stand its ground. As for the 75-piece orchestra, its work may have lacked some of the finesse that characterizes the work of older and more seasoned organizations, still its playing last Sunday evening brought back pleasant memories of the local visits of the Boston Symphony a number of years ago. It gave one the feeling of security, that of knowing that here was an orchestra sufficiently numerous and resourceful enough to re-create the finely wrought and highly sensitized Bizet masterpiece in a manner worthy of its place in the art world. Under the crisp, incisive direction of A. Buckingham Simson, the 63-year-old lyric drama classic fell pleasingly on ones ears despite the lack of dramatic action and scenic investure.

But it was not our real intention to go into another rhapsody over the "Carmen" performance, but rather to question the veracity of the claims that symphonic and operatic music are sweeping across the country. In a special feature article in a Boston paper last Sunday, the writer of the article says that young people everywhere are attending concerts, that they are stamping their feet and clamoring for more. Toscanini, Stokowsky, Koussevitzky and other eminent conductors were quoted as saying that there was a great wave of popular interest in the more serious type of music. Wilfred Pelletier one of the Metropolitan conductors, is quoted as saying that "when the medium of presenting opera on the screen is discovered, you will have standing lines in every theatre where it is shown." Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony conductor visions that in the near future symphony halls will be two or three times larger than they are now and cities now with only one orchestra may soon support two or more.

Many music lovers would like to see such a miracle, since there is precious little genuine pleasure attending good performances with rows of vacant seats on all sides. Just because a few of the major organizations can draw large audiences is hardly a sign of an improved musical culture or an extension of its influence in the country at large. Not so many years ago New York had two leading symphony orchestras, but they combined and now there is just one the Philharmonic-Symphony. Some years ago it had two major opera companies, but now there is one and even that one's seasons have been reduced. Philadelphia, Chicago and Boston had resident opera companies, but they have gone into memory. Many cities, including our own, had concert courses featuring some of the very best instrumental and vocal artists in years that [illegible] seem very remote, but it is pretty generally known to those at all interested in such things, that concert-giving is not what it used to be. A short time ago we attended a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra in Symphony hall. The distinguished modernistic Russian composer, Serge Prokofieff was the guest conductor in a program featuring his own compositions. Perhaps modern audiences are not wildly interested in modern music as yet, since there were quite a number of vacant seats on that occasion. Yes, there may be a new, lively, widespread interest being shown in the better kinds of music, but Benny Goodman and other purveyors of the popular brands seem to be doing quite well for themselves, also.

—A. L. M.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUN
APR 7 - 1938

Hub Violinist to Play for Hadassah Group

A musical with Joseph Leibovici, first violinist in the Boston Symphony orchestra as guest artist, will feature the April meeting of the Hadassah and Sisterhood of the Temple Beth-El. The session will take place on the 12th, at the Hebrew Community Center. Mr. Leibovici will be accompanied by Gladys Troupin of Lawrence.

Mr. Leibovici has had an interesting career. At the age of 11 years, he was admitted to the International conservatory, and has been a pupil of such eminent violinists as Brun, Marsick and Nadaud. He graduated with honors in 1914, following which he studied with Jacques Thibaud. He was then appointed first violinist in the Paris Opera House. He is a member of the Concert Colonne, and the Concert Taucat of Paris, where he served as soloist until 1926, at which time he was encouraged by Serge Koussevitsky of the Boston Symphony orchestra to become a member of the staff.

Miss Troupin was born in Lawrence, studied at Simmons college, and has played over the radio and on numerous concert programs. She is the director of an all girl orchestra, and also of the Dana-Sieveling school.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 8 - 1938

Dawley, Slossberg and Girsky, Soloists for Saint-Sains Symphony

Walter Dawley organist, Charles L. Slossberg and Samuel Gorsky, pianists, will be soloists in the Saint-Saens Symphony No. 3 in C minor which will be played by the Hartford Symphony Orchestra in its concert at the Bushnell Sunday at 3 p. m.

This will be the work's first performance by this orchestra, a WPA Federal Music Project unit. The Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky played it in February this year.

Jacques Gordon is to conduct the Sunday concert, which will have Eudice Shapiro as violin soloist in the Conus Concerto in E minor for violin and orchestra. The rest of the program will include Wagner's Prelude to Parsifal and two Debussy Nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fetes."

Tickets are still available at the office of the sponsoring Symphony Society of Connecticut, 15 Lewis St., and at the Bushnell boxoffice.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN

APR 8 - 1938

4

Distinguished French Woman Directs Collegiate Chorus

Nadia Boulanger Lectures, Leads Choral Program, at Ohio State

By R. L. F. McCOMBS.

THE Music Department of Ohio State University has been host this week to one of the most eminent and influential musicians of our day, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger of Paris. Last evening she appeared before a large and cordial audience in the University Hall Auditorium in the dual role of speaker and conductor.

She directed a choir of 50 voices in music by Italian, English and German composers of the 16th and 17th century, and in three works by her gifted sister, the late Lili Boulanger. She talked, with delightful informality, not only of musical pedagogy (as she was announced to do) but of the composers she set before us, of contemporary music and of music in relation to modern life.

One felt, even in so brief an encounter, the force of Mlle. Boulanger's commanding intellect. She was as gracious, as approachable, as free of pose and pretense, as only the truly great can be. She has no need for sham herself, and no patience with it in others. Never, for a fleeting instant, was she the woman whom the French government has been pleased to honor, the only woman ever to conduct the London Philharmonic or the Boston Symphony, the advisor and encourager of Stravinsky, Hindemith, and other present day musical celebrities. As she led these student singers, as she talked of music, she made evident her sensitivity and her good sense, her humility and her sincerity, her penetrating humor, her artistic integrity, and (above all) her wide and deep and unshakable knowledge of her subject.

* * *

HER thoughts came disturbingly fast for slower wits, and for the unaccustomed tongue, which however (with stray idiomatic lapses) she spoke clearly. But her ideas were invariably treasurable. Musical education, she said, should be 50 per cent independence of discipline and 50 per cent strict adherence to discipline. Training should begin with young children, not to make professional musicians of them, but to increase their enjoyment of life. To be ignorant of tones is comparable to ignorance of colors. She described the procedure at the Paris Conservatory, with which she has been associated many years, and her father and grandfather before her.

She would illustrate her points by playing the subject of a Bach fugue or humming, to her own piano accompaniment, a snatch of Stravinsky. She deplored the tendency of modern composers to be always in search of the bizarre, the sensational, the original. But she urged sympathy and encouragement for the music of our day. We have our great creative musicians, Mlle. Boulanger thinks, and it is by them that our troublous time will be remembered rather than by the troubles.

In brief space she touched upon many and varied themes, too many to report. But always compellingly present was her intellectual vigor, her keen logic, her sympathetic humanity.

* * *

MLLE. BOULANGER also presented some memorable music. Two churchly works of Palestrina and Lotti, and two examples from the Elizabethan madrigalists, Gibbons and Morley, were sung without accompaniment. A setting of the "Magnificat" by Heinrich Schutz, forerunner, by a hundred years, of Sebastian Bach, was an interesting ancient novelty. From the impressive and powerful compositions of her sister she chose a "Vielle Priere Bouddhique" and the "Psaume XXLV" for chorus, and an affecting "Pie Jesu" for soprano solo and a small group of instruments.

In these things the directress again demonstrated her insight, her vitality and her technical command. No thread of the musical though escaped her, nor did she allow it to escape us.

The young singers were commendably responsive to her will, giving no hint that this must have been rather a strange and exciting experience to them. Their tone quality, their fluency and their accuracy were all admirable. The excellently clear and sensitive soprano soloist was Mary Davis.

Mlle. Boulanger modestly deflected a share of the honors to the choristers to Miss Davis, to Jean Seybold, who was an expert and assured accompanying pianist, and to Professor Louis Diercks, who had prepared the singers for her arrival.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

APR 8 - 1938

Harvard Glee Club Shows High Standard in Concert

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Critic

Under auspices of the Harvard Club of Western Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh was privileged to hear 60 selected singers of the famous 200-voice Harvard Glee Club sing a program of outstanding merit with consummate musicianship last night in Carnegie Music Hall under the inspiring leadership of Conductor Emeritus Dr. Archibald Davison.

Mr. Lewando

The concert was not only one of the red letter events of the local music season but revealed the fact that the high standard of accomplishment of the Crimson organization remains as yet unapproached by any other similar group in the world.

Since Dr. Davison took command of the Glee Club in 1912, serving until 1934 when he retired, it has grown to be a dominant factor not only in the school it represents but also in the musical life of Boston where it has appeared with the Radcliffe Girls' choral group in performances of many important works of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Opening with Harvard's alma mater song, Fair Harvard, these young men proceeded to disclose the excellency of their training and ability in compositions of intrinsic musical values.

Mozart's three choruses for Freemasons, sung in German, proved admirable, and the ensuing Palestrina Motet, Supplicationes, sung a Capella in Latin, was beautifully encompassed.

The modern-idiomed Psaume 121 which Darius Milhaud wrote especially for the Crimsonians further indicated the artistry of the group. This was a superb endeavor. The first half of the program closed with the singing of choruses from Sullivan's The Yoemen of the Guard.

Surpassing piano accompaniments were provided by Irving G. Fine and William W. Austin.

Tenor Soloist Joseph F. Lautner was heard to advantage in incidental solos.

Preceding the concert the Kilties Band of Carnegie Institute of Technology, led by Edward Sullivan, played various school songs in the foyer as a happy gesture of welcome to the cohorts of Harvard.

Dr. Harvey B. Gaul by way of introduction extolled the attainments of Dr. Davison and Harvard's Glee Club activities.

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

APR 9 - 1938

Rockland Man's First Symphony Played in Boston

Boston, April 8—(AP)—The first symphony of Prof. Walter Piston, chairman of the Department of Music at Harvard University, today received its first performance, at the hands of the expert Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sandwiched in the program between the first-born symphonies of a pair of musical giants—Beethoven and Sibelius—the new work, which was conducted by the composer, proved modern, vigorous, and architecturally sound, if not almost entirely lacking in melody.

Denying any "pictorial, narrative, political or philosophical intent," the author, who is a native of Rockland, Me., has the work begin somewhat irregularly and mysteriously with the main or "germinating" theme expressed by plucked strings of 'cellos and double basses.

At the close of the final movement—there are only three—this motif, which underlies the unfolding of the symphony, recurs in full statement by brass. The reception was moderate.

Although the composer does not specify a key—"Symphony" being its only title—Prof. Piston explained it could be called a "Symphony in C". He completed it last Autumn at his home in suburban Belmont. Hitherto he has composed mostly music for piano, quartets and trios. He is 44 years old.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's regular conductor, was on the podium for the Beethoven and Sibelius symphonies.

CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

APR 8 - 1938

Recording the Records

By BILL DVORAK

Taking cognizance of the approaching Easter season, Victor appropriately releases the third and completing section of "The Passion of Our Lord According to St. Matthew," by Bach.

The complete set (nine records, $18) well merits the top shelf in the collector's library. It is one of the recording art's most ambitious efforts.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, is ably assisted by a choral group which provides the background for the soloists.

Prelude to "Parsifal," also by Victor, presents to full advantage the Philadelphia Orchestra, directed by Leopold Stokowski. The set consists of four records, $8.

The immortal voice of Enrico Caruso returns triumphantly in two re-recordings, "Les Rameaux" and "La Procession." The unrivaled tenor died, unfortunately, before the advent of modern recording instruments.

Through an interesting process, the piano background of his early recordings has been removed and there is substituted a symphony orchestra. Caruso's rich voice loses some of its envied volume in the process and is not enhanced by a too powerful background.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD

APR 9 - 1938

December 7 Selected For Columbia Concert of The Philadelphia Symphonic

December 7 has been set as the date for the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra's Columbia concert, it was announced Saturday by James Y. Perry, president of the Columbia Music Festival association.

The exact dates of the two other pre-festival concerts the association will sponsor have not been determined, but Mr. Perry said the opening concert, which will present Mme. Bidu Sayao, lyric soprano of the Metropolitan Opera company, would be held in October, and that the third, with Joseph Szigeti as the artist, will be late in January or early in February.

Interest in symphonic music in Columbia has grown steadily in the last four years as a result of the festival appearances here of the National Symphony orchestra, and the announcement that the Philadelphia orchestra would play here was a most welcome one.

The Philadelphia orchestra is one of three great ones that generally are grouped together as the world's greatest symphonic organizations. The other two are the New York Philharmonic and the Boston symphony. And this year, of course, came the organization of the National Broadcasting orchestra, which is of top caliber. It was organized, you recall, for the Saturday night symphonic broadcasts, with Arturo Toscanini as its chief conductor.

For years the Philadelphia orchestra was conducted by Leopold Stokowski; and Mr. Stokowski continues to conduct some of the orchestra's concerts each year. The regular conductor, however, is the Hungarian, Eugene Ormandy. Mr. Ormandy was brought in when Mr. Stokowski decided to retire as the regular conductor. Ormandy went to his Philadelphia post after conspicuous success as conductor of the Indianapolis symphony.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
APR 9 - 1938

Boston Symphony Plays First Composition of Harvard Man

Boston, April 8.—(AP)—The first symphony of Prof. Walter Piston, chairman of the department of music at Harvard University, today received its first performance, at the hands of the expert Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sandwiched in the program between the first-born symphonies of a pair of musical giants—Beethoven and Sibelius—the new work, which was conducted by the composer, proved modern, vigorous, and architecturally sound, if not almost entirely lacking in melody.

Asserting the work had no "pictorial, narrative, political or philosophical intent," the author, who is a native of Rockland, Me., has the work begin somewhat irregularly and mysteriously with the main or "germinating" theme expressed by plucked strings of 'cellos and double basses.

At the close of the final movement—there are only three—this motif, which underlies the unfolding of the symphony, recurs in full statement by the brass. The reception was moderate.

Although the 44-year-old composer does not specify a key—"Symphony" being its only title—Prof. Piston explained it could be Called "Symphony in C." He completed it last autumn at his home in suburban Belmont. Hitherto, he has composed mostly music for piano, quartets and trios.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's regular conductor, was on the podium for the Beethoven and Sibelius symphones.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
APR 14 1938

Gaston Daniel Bladet

Flutist for Boston Symphony for Fifteen Years Is Dead

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, April 13.—Gaston Daniel Bladet, a member of the flute section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for [illegible] fifteen years, died today at his home, 32 Robinwood Avenue, Jamaica Plain, after a long illness. He was fifty-nine years old. He was born in Bordeaux, France, attained a high reputation as a flutist in Europe and came to Boston in 1932 to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He was also a well-known painter and many of his canvasses have received high praise.

His wife, Mrs. Louise Bladet, and a son, who is also a musician, survive.

DAYTON, O.
HERALD

APR 9 - 1938

Lecture-Recital Set

Special to The Herald—
OXFORD—Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, distinguished French musician, will give a lecture-recital at 8 p. m. Saturday in Peabody hall, Western college. She is the only woman who has conducted the London Philharmonic orchestra and the Boston Symphony orchestra and recently was made Chevalier de la Legion d'honneur by the French government. A reception for her will be held at the college from 4 to 5 p. m.

5

American
Hebrew & Jewish Tribune

APR 8 - 1938 N.Y.C.

Jewish Role in American Music

In the Realm of Conducting, Opera, Concert, Choral Organization, and Composition the Jew Has Contributed More Than His Share

By DAVID EWEN

IN the growth of America's foremost musical organizations, and in the development of America into one of the greatest musical countries in the world, the Jew has played a dramatic and fruitful role.

The history of the American symphony orchestra is, to a great extent, a story of active Jewish participation. In 1842, the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the oldest American symphonic group, was founded—an organization that was destined to become one of the greatest artistic bodies in this country. It was not long before Jewish genius applied its force and inventiveness towards the development of the New York Philharmonic. Dr. Leopold Damrosch (who was to play an heroic part in the awakening of this country's musical consciousness) was the conductor in 1877. There followed a string of Jewish conductors who were principally responsible for bringing the orchestra to its imperial heights—namely, Anton Seidl (1891), Emil Paur (1898-1902), Gustav Mahler (1909), Josef Stransky (1911-1923) and, most recently, Bruno Walter, Issai Dobrowen, Otto Klemperer and Erich Kleiber.

Lilli Lehmann

The world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1881, was likewise developed to a great extent by Jewish genius. Its first conductor was that eminent English musician, Sir George Henschel, a Jew—who, during the first three years of the orchestra's existence, solidified the texture of the orchestra. Pierre Monteux conducted the Boston Symphony between 1920 and 1924 during those perilous years when the orchestra was seriously undermined during its fight against unionization—and it was largely through Monteux's artistry that the orchestra was kept from complete disruption. In 1924, Monteux was succeeded by Serge Koussevitzky, who finally raised the Boston Symphony Orchestra to the standards it knew before the War, and who has remained its conductor until the present day.

Other great American orchestras to have been influenced by Jewish genius include the following: the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1909, and directed for many years by Alfred Hertz, and more recently by Pierre Monteux; the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, which was brought into being in 1920, under the directorial guidance of Nikolai Sokoloff, who was its guiding spirit for more than ten years when he bequeathed his baton to another Jewish conductor, Artur Rodzinski; the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, largely the creation of one of the rarest musical spirits America has known—Ossip Gabrilowitsch, for whom the orchestra was founded and who directed it with unique devotion until his recent death; the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra which, in 1931, was raised to a high artistic position among American orchestras by the directorial brilliance of Eugene Ormandy—who, in 1936, succeeded Leopold Stokowski as the permanent conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra; the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, the joint product, so to speak, of Rudolph Ganz and, more recently, Vladimir Golschmann; and the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1919, and subsequently directed with brilliance first by Artur Rodzinski and then by Otto Klemperer.

IN this resume of American orchestras, and the part that Jews have played, we should not omit three outstanding symphony orchestras which are no longer in existence. The history of the New York Symphony Orchestra, which for a little more than fifty years gave regular concerts, is studded with great Jewish names. Brought into being by Dr.

(Continued on Page 42)

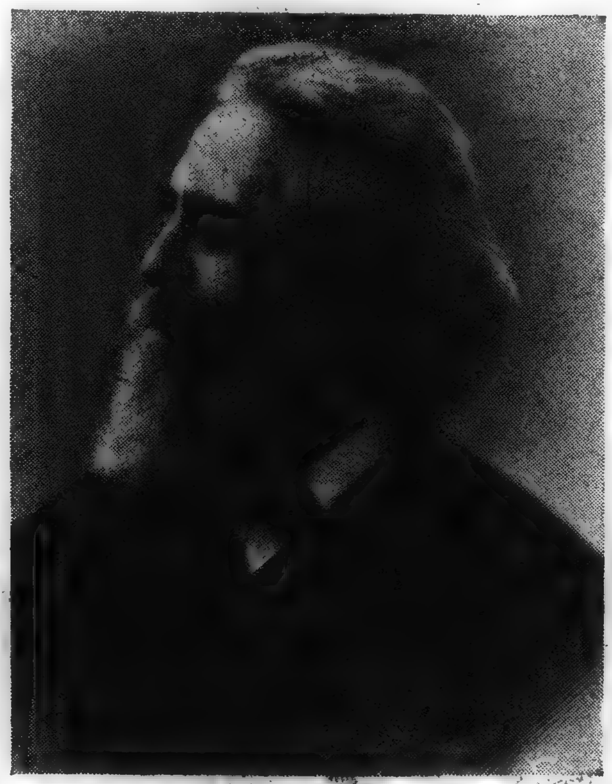
Friedrich Schorr

Artur Bodanzky

43



Dr. Leopold Damrosch

Jewish Role in American Music

P. 42

(Continued from Page 19)

Leopold Damrosch, it was subsequently guided by Walter Damrosch, who was, in later years, assisted by such guests as Bruno Walter, Vladimir Golschmann, Otto Klemperer and Oskar Fried. The Russian Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1904, by that unique Jewish artist, Modest Altschuler, who for fifteen years was responsible for the first performance in New York of many great new Russian works. Finally, mention should be made of the short-lived National Symphony Orchestra, directed by Artur Bodanzky—an orchestra which was later amalgamated with the New York Philharmonic.

Leading American opera - houses have likewise known active Jewish participation.

First consideration must inevitably come to the Metropolitan Opera House of New York, which was founded in 1884. Glancing over the long list of distinguished conductors who have wielded their batons from the pit, we notice that some of the greatest conductors of the Metropolitan have been Jews. In 1884, Dr. Leopold Damrosch inaugurated German opera at the Metropolitan. Upon his sudden death, the German repertory passed on to the hands of his able son, Walter Damrosch. German opera seems to have belonged to Jewish conductors—for there followed such conductors as Anton Seidl, Alfred Hertz, Gustav Mahler and Artur Bodanzky, who have maintained the high artistic level of German opera performances at the Metropolitan.

Among the tenors who have made the halls of the Metropolitan ring with immortal music, several Jewish names stand out in importance. Maurice Renaud was, perhaps, one of the greatest tenors in the history of the Metropolitan. Herman Jadlowker also was one of the bright adornments of the opera-house. Other tenors included James Wolfe, Armand Tokatyan, Mark Windheim, Max Altglass and Arnold Gabor.

In speaking of sopranos, one name comes immediately to the fore—one of the giants of the Metropolitan Opera House—namely, Lilli Lehmann. While Lilli Lehmann was, no doubt, the greatest Jewish soprano to appear on the Metropolitan stage, she was by no means the only one who was idolized by opera audiences. Others, like Sophie Braslau, Alma Gluck, Marie Rappold, Nanette Guilford, Ellen Dalossy and Pearl Besuner, likewise knew triumphs.

Other great Jewish singers who made performances memorable at the Metropolitan are Friedrich Schorr, perhaps the greatest Wagnerian baritone of all time, and Maria Olszewska, a celebrated Wagnerian contralto. Two stage-directors were also Jews—Samuel Thewman, who virtually revolutionized Wagnerian performances in New York, and Wilhelm von Wymetal, who brought about a new era in the staging of Italian opera.

The most formidable rival to the Metropolitan Opera House in New York was the Manhattan Opera House, founded by Oscar Hammerstein in 1906. Its short but brilliant existence numbered, among its Jewish representatives, Max Binder, conductor, and Maurice Renaud and Charles Dalmores, singers. The Chicago Opera Company likewise numbered a few prominent Jewish names—principally, Alexander Kipnis, Giacomo Rimini, Rosa Raisa, and Joseph Schwarz.

THE extraordinary excellence of the American concert-scene is the product of great musical virtuosi, most of whom are Jews. The number is legion, and it is feasible to mention only the most prominent. In 1872-1873 a remarkable American tour was launched by Anton Rubinstein and Henri Wieniawski, considered at the time the world's foremost pianist and violinist respectively. In 1889, Moriz Rosenthal, pianist, first triumphed gloriously in America—and on his programs appeared a young violinist about whom many brilliant things were prophesied, namely, Fritz Kreisler, then in his fourteenth year. In 1900, Sam Franko inaugurated a series of monumental concerts devoted to unknown seventeenth and eighteenth century music. Mischa Elman's historical debut in New York took place in 1908; Zimbalist's introduction was made in 1911.

There followed the phenomenal debuts of Jewish violinists, the equal of which has since not been seen or heard: Jascha Heifetz in 1917, Tosche Seidel in 1918, Mischel Piastro in 1920, Yehudi Menuhin in 1923, Erika Morini in 1925 and Joseph Szigeti also in 1925.

Among great Jewish pianists, the following Jewish artists made the most important impression upon America's musical life: Ferruccio Busoni, who toured America between 1909 and 1911, Gabrilowitsch, who made his debut in 1900, Godowsky (1907), Mischa Levitzki (1916), Josef Lhevinne (1907), Moiseivitch (1919), Ignaz Friedmann (1921), Harold Bauer (1900) and Vladimir Horowitz (1927).

Chamber-music groups have been greatly responsible for the high standard of musical performances in America. Chamber-music groups who number in their body important Jewish representation, and who have made an important impression on American musical life, include: the Musical Art Quartet, Roth String Quartet, the Cherniavsky Trio the Malkin Trio, the Manhattan String Quartet, the Curtis String Quartet, the Hart House String Quartet, the Gordon String Quartet, the Kolisch

Jewish Role in American Music

(Continued from Page 43)

Quartet, the Kreiner String Quartet and the Perole String Quartet.

Musical education has likewise known Jewish influence. In 1905—through the philanthropy of an eminent Jewish patron, James Loeb—the Institute of Musical Art in New York was opened; and its director was Frank Damrosch, who has retained that position with rare distinction ever since. In 1916, David Mannes opened another famous music-school in New York, calling it by his name. Teachers whose influence was far-reaching in American music included such Jews as Alberto Jonas, Joseffy, Rubin Goldmark, Harold Bauer, Leopold Auer and Ernest Bloch.

IMPORTANT choral organizations have always played a prominent part in this country's musical life. In 1873, Dr. Leopold Damrosch founded the Oratorio Society of New York, which for more than fifty years has been the major choral organization in America. Upon his death, Dr. Leopold Damrosch was succeeded by his son, Walter Damrosch. In 1893, Frank Damrosch founded the Choral Musical Art Society, directing it in distinguished concerts for a period extending seventeen years. The Schola Cantorum of New York was founded by Kurt Schindler in 1908, who remained its director for eighteen years. Mention should likewise be made of the Society of Friends of Music, directed by Artur Bodanzky, which for ten years was one of the musical glories of New York.

Creatively—in the mission of producing an important American music which has motivated the work of every important creative artist in America—the Jew has likewise been of importance. The following American-born composers, all of Jewish origin, have enriched the musical idiom of our country: Marion Bauer, Marc Blitzstein, Abram Chasins, Aaron Copland, Arcady Dubensky, George Gershwin, Frederick Jacobi and Harold Morris. There are many Jewish composers who were not born in America but who have made this country their permanent home. In view of this fact, their artistic contribution must be considered as an American product. These composers, who include among them some world-famous figures, number: Joseph Achron, Ernest Bloch, Leopold Godowsky, Louis Gruenberg, Nicholas Nabokoff, Leo Ornstein, Lazare Saminsky and Joseph Schillinger.

THE STAGE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR - - 1938

BACH, JOHANN SEBASTIAN: The Passion According to St. Matthew, Vol. 2, recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, assisted by the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society and soloists (Victor M412—$15). The second volume of this monumental recording carries the music up to the chorale, What Wondrous Punishment, and maintains the high standard of performance and recording set by the first volume. The final volume in this set will be issued next month (Victor M413—$15).

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
APR 9 - 1938

6

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

Boston Symphony Gives Harvard Professor's Work

BOSTON, April 8 (AP)—The first symphony of Prof. Walter Piston, chairman of the department of music at Harvard University, today received its first performance, at the hands of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sandwiched in the program between the first-born symphonies of a pair of musical giants — Beethoven and Sibelius — the new work, which was conducted by the composer, proved modern, vigorous, and architecturally sound, if not almost entirely lacking in melody.

Asserting the work had no "pictorial, narrative, political or philosophical intent," the author, who is a native of Rockland, Me., has the work begin somewhat irregularly and mysteriously with the main or "germinating" theme expressed by plucked strings of 'cellos and double basses.

At the close of the final movement—there are only three—this motif, which underlies the unfolding of the symphony, recurs in full statement by the brass. The reception was moderate.

Although the 44-year-old composer does not specify a key—"Symphony" being its only title—Professor Piston explained it could be called "Symphony in C." He completed it last Autumn at his home in suburban Belmont. Hitherto, he has composed mostly music for piano, quartets and trios.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's regular conductor, was on the podium for the Beethoven and Sibelius symphonies.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM
APR 9 - 1938

Bach's "Matthew Passion" Put in Wax In Twenty-seven Records for Easter

Timed to be released near the Easter season, the Bach "Passion According to St. Matthew" (Victor) is now available in three albums containing twenty-seven records. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the work, which is performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society and the following vocal soloists:—Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Keith Faulkner and Fritz Lechner, basses. Ernst Victor Wolff presides at the harpsichord and Carl Weinrich at the organ. Space does not permit of an itemized listing of the other instrumental soloists.

As may be expected, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's playing is one of the chief attractions of the reading. The amazing tonal beauty this body can produce has never been better exemplified than here. The magnitude of the undertaking is at once apparent in the many and diversified elements entering into the production, and Mr. Koussevitzky's accomplishment gains all the more in his masterly handling of all the forces.

The Weekly Record

Best sellers for the week, according to reports from G. Schirmer, the Gramophone Shop and the Liberty Music Shops are:—

Prelude and "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra (Victor).

Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Arturo Toscanini and the B. B. C. Orchestra (Victor).

Mozart's G Minor Symphony, Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic Orchestra.

Next in excellence to the purely orchestral part of the performance comes the fine singing in general by the combined choral groups. The mathematical precision of their attacks and releases, their finely graded dynamics, their smoothly balanced tone and marvelous adherence to the true pitch testify eminently to the authoritative musicianship of their tutor, G. Wallace Woodworth. Nevertheless there are moments in several of the chorus sequences when the effects achieved are less praiseworthy, but these may be due to the mechanical side of the recording.

The "Passion According to St. Matthew" is sung in English, which is a decision to be disputed, since the version used was made up of several texts. Certainly employing the German version would, at least, have obviated any such makeshift arrangement. And, besides, Bach set his music to a German text, a fact the importance of which has been unnecessarily neglected.

Of the solo singers it may be stated straightway that Kathryn Meisle and John Priebe do the most satisfying jobs. In particular Mme. Meisle's delivery of "O Pardon Me, My God" is distinguished for its emotional depth and expressiveness. The others are sometimes adequate, sometimes not, the difficulties seeming to lie in the lack of complete sympathy with the spirit of the work, as well as in certain vocal insufficiencies.

One drawback of the recording is the irritating way in which some of the discs end, usually in the middle of a section.

R. C. B.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
APR 10 1938

Last Civic Music Concert

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, comes to Worcester once more, to play in the Auditorium, on Tuesday night to end the Civic Music Association course for 1937-38. This is a concert to which many look forward with the keenest anticipation, although they may have Symphony tickets for Friday afternoons or Saturday evenings throughout the season, in Symphony Hall, Boston. For Dr. Koussevitzky and the great organization he has given a national fame are institutions with the music minded public. Some of us have journeyed to the Berkshires for the Fall festival (really in the late Summer) where he conducted last Summer under trying weather conditions. The heat kept none away, however, and one of the artists exhibiting in the contemporary show at the Art Museum this Winter of American Painters of Today has put on canvas one striking scene, a characteristic pose of the great conductor who will come here Tuesday, with those traditional rose-pink programs so familiar to Boston Symphony goers. The man will give a program of symphonic music, nobly played.

April 15, 1938 MUSICAL COURIER

Staid Boston Flocks to Hear Metropolitan Opera Series

Thirteen Works Sung in Ten Days—Triumphs for German and Other Presentations—Prokofieff Work Premiered Under Composer's Baton

CASADESUS AND PROKOFIEFF WITH ORCHESTRA

Robert Casadesus played both the Liszt E flat major concerto and the d'Indy symphony on a French Mountain Song with extraordinary brilliance, style and musicianship at two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 21 and 22. Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, also included on his well-played program A Night on Bald Mountain by Moussorgsky and two excerpts from Coq d'Or.

On March 25 and 26 Serge Prokofieff gave a one-man show with the Boston orchestra, conducting that institution through a program of his own music and playing the piano as well in his first concerto, with Richard Burgin leading the accompanying orchestra. The other numbers at these concerts, well received by Boston audiences, were a suite from the ballet, Chout; Peter and the Wolf, an orchestral fairy tale for children; and the second suite from the ballet, Romeo and Juliet. Peter and the Wolf, with Richard Hale as excellent narrator, proved to be delightful stuff on the occasions of these first American performances. It ought to find its way quickly into the repertoire of American orchestras, for adult concerts but especially for children's.

TOLEDO, O.
NEWS-BEE
APR 9 - 1938

'Blues' Less Emotional Than Classics--Musician

"Young people, today's teachers must keep alive modern composers."

This was the message of Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, French teacher, conductor and composer under whom many influential present-day teachers have studied, who spoke last night at the Museum of Art's lecture hall on "Views on Contemporary Music."

Mlle. Boulanger, who last February made musical history in Boston when she was the first woman ever to conduct the 57-year-old Boston Symphony, said that modern composers create in a "cool, primitive mood."

"Before, compositions were usually like a painting by Rubens—rich red in tone; but now our music is blue, less emotional."

seum's director of music, gave a reception for Mlle. Boulanger at the home of Director and Mrs. Blake-More Godwin after the lecture. The French teacher left Toledo by train early this morning for Cincinnati.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 13 1938

RADIO ORCHESTRA ACCUSED OF 'RAIDING'

N. B. C. Denies Taking Three Philadelphia Musicians

A controversy between officials of the Philadelphia Orchestra and the National Broadcasting Company over three musicians who left the Philadelphia Orchestra to join the NBC ensemble was revealed yesterday with charges from Philadelphia that NBC was attempting to "raid" established orchestras for players.

Replying to the charges in a letter to Thomas F. Gates, president of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, Lenox R. Lohr, president of N. B. C., said that the three men had come to N. B. C. and said they were free to accept contracts.

Mr. Lohr declared that the N. B. C. Orchestra had no intention of "raiding" any other organizations and said he would accept a verdict of the American Federation of Musicians on the right of the three musicians to seek contracts with N. B. C.

Before joining the radio orchestra the three men, Charles Gusikoff, trombonist; Anton Torello, contrabassist, and Jack Berv, horn player, said they had given six weeks' notice to the Philadelphia Orchestra under the terms of their contracts. The Philadelphia organization asserts that the contracts called for six months' notice.

Walter E. Koons, music editor of N. B. C., pointed out that of ninety-four musicians under contract by the radio company not more than five had come directly from the Philadelphia Orchestra and none directly from either the Boston Symphony Orchestra or the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

Dietary Laws Strictly Observed
Accommodations 10 to 1000 Persons

Musical Courier

RECITALS OF THE FORTNIGHT

MARCH 31-1938

Boston Symphony Orchestra Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston symphonic company made evening music at Carnegie Hall that gladdened their following with a program consisting of Haydn's symphony (G major, No. 88); Brahms' first symphony; and a suite (op. 64) from ballet music written by Serge Prokofieff on the subject of Romeo and Juliet.

The annotation notes in the program did not reveal the scenario of the ballet, but from the little information given, one infers that the tale is not at all like Shakespeare's, and has a satirical twist far from the invention of the Bard. Prokofieff's music at any rate creates such an impression, for it is light and inconsequential stuff conveying practically nothing of the poetry, emotion and tragedy of the great drama whose name it borrows.

The two symphonies were read with high effect and full exposition of the best abilities of the players, who received rousing applause especially after the truly delightful performance of the Haydn pages. This concert marked the last seasonal evening appearance of the Bostonians in New York.

MUSICAL AMERICA for April 10, 1938

Orchestral Concerts in New York

overdriven, but the general effect was of good playing well controlled.

T.

Prokofieff Novelty Introduced by Koussevitzky

Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Carnegie Hall, March 31, evening.

Symphony in G Major. No. 88.........Haydn
Second Suite from Ballet, 'Romeo and Juliet'
Prokofieff
(First Time in New York)
Symphony No. 1 in C Minor.........Brahms

The Prokofieff suite made no very profound impression. Neither did it stir any lively desire for further acquaintance with its companion, the first suite (conducted by the composer in Chicago a year ago) or the ballet en toto. When the stage work was performed in Moscow in 1935 it was found to have a happy ending, the death of Juliet turning out to be only a hoax. Obviously, Mr. Prokofieff was not called upon to set Shakespeare and consequently nothing Shakespearean is to be sought or found in his music.

In the second suite are seven sections or numbers, the last of which is styled 'Romeo at Juliet's Grave'—an adagio funebre of not very convincing sorrow.

But then, Romeo only thought Juliet was dead! Something of characterization is essayed in other parts of the suite. The Montagues and Capulets swagger with little of distinction through the opening allegro; Juliet is portrayed in music as naive as herself in the succeeding vivace; Friar Laurence is represented by two themes of an andante, neither of which grants him much of flesh and blood. There are two dances, one of Indian slave girls, and there is a fairly extended movement devoted to the parting of the lovers, lyrical but commonplace. The music is at times mildly dissonant, but is prevailingly traditional in character rather than advanced or adventurous. The writing is clear and the scoring has Prokofieff's usual neatness and precision.

Mr. Koussevitzky and his players met every obligation the music imposed upon them. There was much superb playing also in the Haydn and Brahms symphonies, the performance of the former being on the robust side and that of the latter of a mellowness not always associated with this conductor's Brahms.

O.

Stravinsky, Debussy and Brahms on Final Boston Program

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Carnegie Hall, April 2, afternoon.

Divertimento from 'Le Baiser de la Fée'
Stravinsky
'La Mer'..............................Debussy
Symphony No. 2 in D Major..........Brahms

Mr. Koussevitzky's remarkable delineation of Debussy's sea sketches was the really notable feature of the Boston Symphony's tenth and final concert of the season in Manhattan. In beauty of instrumental detail, in shimmer and iridescence of sound, in the illusory character of each of the pictures, this was a transcendent achievement. The Stravinsky music again suggested a lack of inspiration quite as much as it illustrated the exceptional technical mastery that is taken for granted with Stravinsky. The playing was of a brilliant order.

In the Brahms second symphony, tempi were flexible to the point of instability but there was much that was representative of the Boston ensemble at its most glowing best. The audience gave conductor and players a rousing farewell for the season.

6

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 9 - 1938

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

Boston Symphony Gives Harvard Professor's Work

BOSTON, April 8 (AP)—The first symphony of Prof. Walter Piston, chairman of the department of music at Harvard University, today received its first performance, at the hands of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sandwiched in the program between the first-born symphonies of a pair of musical giants — Beethoven and Sibelius — the new work, which was conducted by the composer, proved modern, vigorous, and architecturally sound, if not almost entirely lacking in melody.

Asserting the work had no "pictorial, narrative, political or philosophical intent," the author, who is a native of Rockland, Me., has the work begin somewhat irregularly and mysteriously with the main or "germinating" theme expressed by plucked strings of 'cellos and double basses.

At the close of the final movement—there are only three—this motif, which underlies the unfolding of the symphony, recurs in full statement by the brass. The reception was moderate.

Although the 44-year-old composer does not specify a key—"Symphony" being its only title—Professor Piston explained it could be called "Symphony in C." He completed it last Autumn at his home in suburban Belmont. Hitherto, he has composed mostly music for piano, quartets and trios.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's regular conductor, was on the podium for the Beethoven and Sibelius symphonies.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

APR 9 - 1938

Bach's "Matthew Passion" Put in Wax In Twenty-seven Records for Easter

Timed to be released near the Easter season, the Bach "Passion According to St. Matthew" (Victor) is now available in three albums containing twenty-seven records. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the work, which is performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society and the following vocal soloists:—Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Keith Faulkner and Fritz Lechner, basses. Ernst Victor Wolff presides at the harpsichord and Carl Weinrich at the organ. Space does not permit of an itemized listing of the other instrumental soloists.

As may be expected, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's playing is one of the chief attractions of the reading. The amazing tonal beauty this body can produce has never been better exemplified than here. The magnitude of the undertaking is at once apparent in the many and diversified elements entering into the production, and Mr. Koussevitzky's accomplishment gains all the more in his masterly handling of all the forces.

Next in excellence to the purely orchestral part of the performance comes the fine singing in general by the combined choral groups. The mathematical precision of their attacks and releases, their finely graded dynamics, their smoothly balanced tone and marvelous adherence to the true pitch testify eminently to the authoritative musicianship of their tutor, G. Wallace Woodworth. Nevertheless there are moments in several of the chorus sequences when the effects achieved are less praiseworthy, but these may be due to the mechanical side of the recording.

The "Passion According to St. Matthew" is sung in English, which is a decision to be disputed, since the version used was made up of several texts. Certainly employing the German version would, at least, have obviated any such makeshift arrangement. And, besides, Bach set his music to a German text, a fact the importance of which has been unnecessarily neglected.

Of the solo singers it may be stated straightway that Kathryn Meisle and John Priebe do the most satisfying jobs. In particular Mme. Meisle's delivery of "O Pardon Me, My God" is distinguished for its emotional depth and expressiveness. The others are sometimes adequate, sometimes not, the difficulties seeming to lie in the lack of complete sympathy with the spirit of the work, as well as in certain vocal insufficiencies.

One drawback of the recording is the irritating way in which some of the discs end, usually in the middle of a section.

R. C. B.

The Weekly Record

Best sellers for the week, according to reports from G. Schirmer, the Gramophone Shop and the Liberty Music Shops are:—

Prelude and "Good Friday Spell" from "Parsifal," Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra (Victor).

Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, Arturo Toscanini and the B. B. C. Orchestra (Victor).

Mozart's G Minor Symphony, Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic Orchestra.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 1 0 1938

Last Civic Music Concert

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting, comes to Worcester once more, to play in the Auditorium, on Tuesday night to end the Civic Music Association course for 1937-38. This is a concert to which many look forward with the keenest anticipation, although they may have Symphony tickets for Friday afternoons or Saturday evenings throughout the season, in Symphony Hall, Boston. For Dr. Koussevitsky and the great organization he has given a national fame are institutions with the music minded public. Some of us have journeyed to the Berkshires for the Fall festival (really in the late Summer) where he conducted last Summer under trying weather conditions. The heat kept none away, however, and one of the artists exhibiting in the contemporary show at the Art Museum this Winter of American Painters of Today has put on canvas one striking scene, a characteristic pose of the great conductor who will come here Tuesday, with those traditional rose-pink programs so familiar to Boston Symphony goers. The men will give a program of symphonic music, nobly played.

April 15, 1938 MUSICAL COURIER

Staid Boston Flocks to Hear Metropolitan Opera Series

Thirteen Works Sung in Ten Days—Triumphs for German and Other Presentations—Prokofieff Work Premiered Under Composer's Baton

Casadesus and Prokofieff with Orchestra

Robert Casadesus played both the Liszt E flat major concerto and the d'Indy symphony on a French Mountain Song with extraordinary brilliance, style and musicianship at two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March 21 and 22. Richard Burgin, assistant conductor, also included on his well-played program A Night on Bald Mountain by Moussorgsky and two excerpts from Coq d'Or.

On March 25 and 26 Serge Prokofieff gave a one-man show with the Boston orchestra, conducting that institution through a program of his own music and playing the piano as well in his first concerto, with Richard Burgin leading the accompanying orchestra. The other numbers at these concerts, well received by Boston audiences, were a suite from the ballet, Chout; Peter and the Wolf, an orchestral fairy tale for children; and the second suite from the ballet, Romeo and Juliet. Peter and the Wolf, with Richard Hale as excellent narrator, proved to be delightful stuff on the occasions of these first American performances. It ought to find its way quickly into the repertoire of American orchestras, for adult concerts but especially for children's.

TOLEDO, O.
NEWS-BEE

APR 9 - 1938

'Blues' Less Emotional Than Classics--Musician

"Young people, today's teachers must keep alive modern composers."

This was the message of Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, French teacher, conductor and composer under whom many influential present-day teachers have studied, who spoke last night at the Museum of Art's lecture hall on "Views on Contemporary Music."

Mlle. Boulanger, who last February made musical history in Boston when she was the first woman ever to conduct the 57-year-old Boston Symphony, said that modern composers create in a "cool, primitive mood."

"Before, compositions were usually like a painting by Rubens—rich red in tone; but now our music is blue, less emotional."

Mlle. Boulanger illustrated her points by playing piano excerpts. Modern composers chiefly discussed were: Francis Paulene, Igor Stravinsky, Maurice Ravel, Claude Debussy, Jean Francois, Paul Hindemith and Igor Markevitch.

Miss Emma Endres, the Museum's director of music, gave a reception for Mlle. Boulanger at the home of Director and Mrs. Blake-More Godwin after the lecture. The French teacher left Toledo by train early this morning for Cincinnati.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 1 3 1938

RADIO ORCHESTRA ACCUSED OF 'RAIDING'

N. B. C. Denies Taking Three Philadelphia Musicians

A controversy between officials of the Philadelphia Orchestra and the National Broadcasting Company over three musicians who left the Philadelphia Orchestra to join the NBC ensemble was revealed yesterday with charges from Philadelphia that NBC was attempting to "raid" established orchestras for players.

Replying to the charges in a letter to Thomas F. Gates, president of the Philadelphia Orchestra Association, Lenox R. Lohr, president of N. B. C., said that the three men had come to N. B. C. and said they were free to accept contracts.

Mr. Lohr declared that the N. B. C. Orchestra had no intention of "raiding" any other organizations and said he would accept a verdict of the American Federation of Musicians on the right of the three musicians to seek contracts with N. B. C.

Before joining the radio orchestra the three men, Charles Gusikoff, trombonist; Anton Torello, contrabassist, and Jack Berv, horn player, said they had given six weeks' notice to the Philadelphia Orchestra under the terms of their contracts. The Philadelphia organization asserts that the contracts called for six months' notice.

Walter E. Koons, music editor of N. B. C., pointed out that of ninety-four musicians under contract by the radio company not more than five had come directly from the Philadelphia Orchestra and none directly from either the Boston Symphony Orchestra or the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

Dietary Laws Strictly Observed
Accommodations 10 to 1000 Persons

Musical Courier

RECITALS OF THE FORTNIGHT

MARCH 31 - 1938

Boston Symphony Orchestra Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston symphonic company made evening music at Carnegie Hall that gladdened their following with a program consisting of Haydn's symphony (G major, No. 88); Brahms' first symphony; and a suite (op. 64) from ballet music written by Serge Prokofieff on the subject of Romeo and Juliet.

The annotation notes in the program did not reveal the scenario of the ballet, but from the little information given, one infers that the tale is not at all like Shakespeare's, and has a satirical twist far from the invention of the Bard. Prokofieff's music at any rate creates such an impression, for it is light and inconsequential stuff conveying practically nothing of the poetry, emotion and tragedy of the great drama whose name it borrows.

The two symphonies were read with high effect and full exposition of the best abilities of the players, who received rousing applause especially after the truly delightful performance of the Haydn pages. This concert marked the last seasonal evening appearance of the Bostonians in New York.

MUSICAL AMERIC

Marian Anderson Closes Town Hall Endowment Series

Marian Anderson, contralto. Kosti Ve- overdriven, but the general effect was of good playing well controlled.

T.

Prokofieff Novelty Introduced by Koussevitzky

Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Carnegie Hall, March 31, evening.

Symphony in G Major. No. 88........Haydn
Second Suite from Ballet, 'Romeo and Juliet' Prokofieff
(First Time in New York)
Symphony No. 1 in C Minor..........Brahms

The Prokofieff suite made no very profound impression. Neither did it stir any lively desire for further acquaintance with its companion, the first suite (conducted by the composer in Chicago a year ago) or the ballet en toto. When the stage work was performed in Moscow in 1935 it was found to have a happy ending, the death of Juliet turning out to be only a hoax. Obviously, Mr. Prokofieff was not called upon to set Shakespeare and consequently nothing Shakespearean is to be sought or found in his music.

In the second suite are seven sections or numbers, the last of which is styled 'Romeo at Juliet's Grave'—an adagio funebre of not very convincing sorrow.

But then, Romeo only thought Juliet was dead! Something of characterization is essayed in other parts of the suite. The Montagues and Capulets swagger with little of distinction through the opening allegro; Juliet is portrayed in music as naive as herself in the succeeding vivace; Friar Laurence is represented by two themes of an andante, neither of which grants him much of flesh and blood. There are two dances, one of Indian slave girls, and there is a fairly extended movement devoted to the parting of the lovers, lyrical but commonplace. The music is at times mildly dissonant, but is prevailingly traditional in character rather than advanced or adventurous. The writing is clear and the scoring has Prokofieff's usual neatness and precision.

Mr. Koussevitzky and his players met every obligation the music imposed upon them. There was much superb playing also in the Haydn and Brahms symphonies, the performance of the former being on the robust side and that of the latter of a mellowness not always associated with this conductor's Brahms.

O.

Stravinsky, Debussy and Brahms on Final Boston Program

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Carnegie Hall, April 2, afternoon.

Divertimento from 'Le Baiser de la Fée' Stravinsky
'La Mer'..............................Debussy
Symphony No. 2 in D Major..........Brahms

Mr. Koussevitzky's remarkable delineation of Debussy's sea sketches was the really notable feature of the Boston Symphony's tenth and final concert of the season in Manhattan. In beauty of instrumental detail, in shimmer and iridescence of sound, in the illusory character of each of the pictures, this was a transcendent achievement. The Stravinsky music again suggested a lack of inspiration quite as much as it illustrated the exceptional technical mastery that is taken for granted with Stravinsky. The playing was of a brilliant order.

In the Brahms second symphony, tempi were flexible to the point of instability but there was much that was representative of the Boston ensemble at its most glowing best. The audience gave conductor and players a rousing farewell for the season.

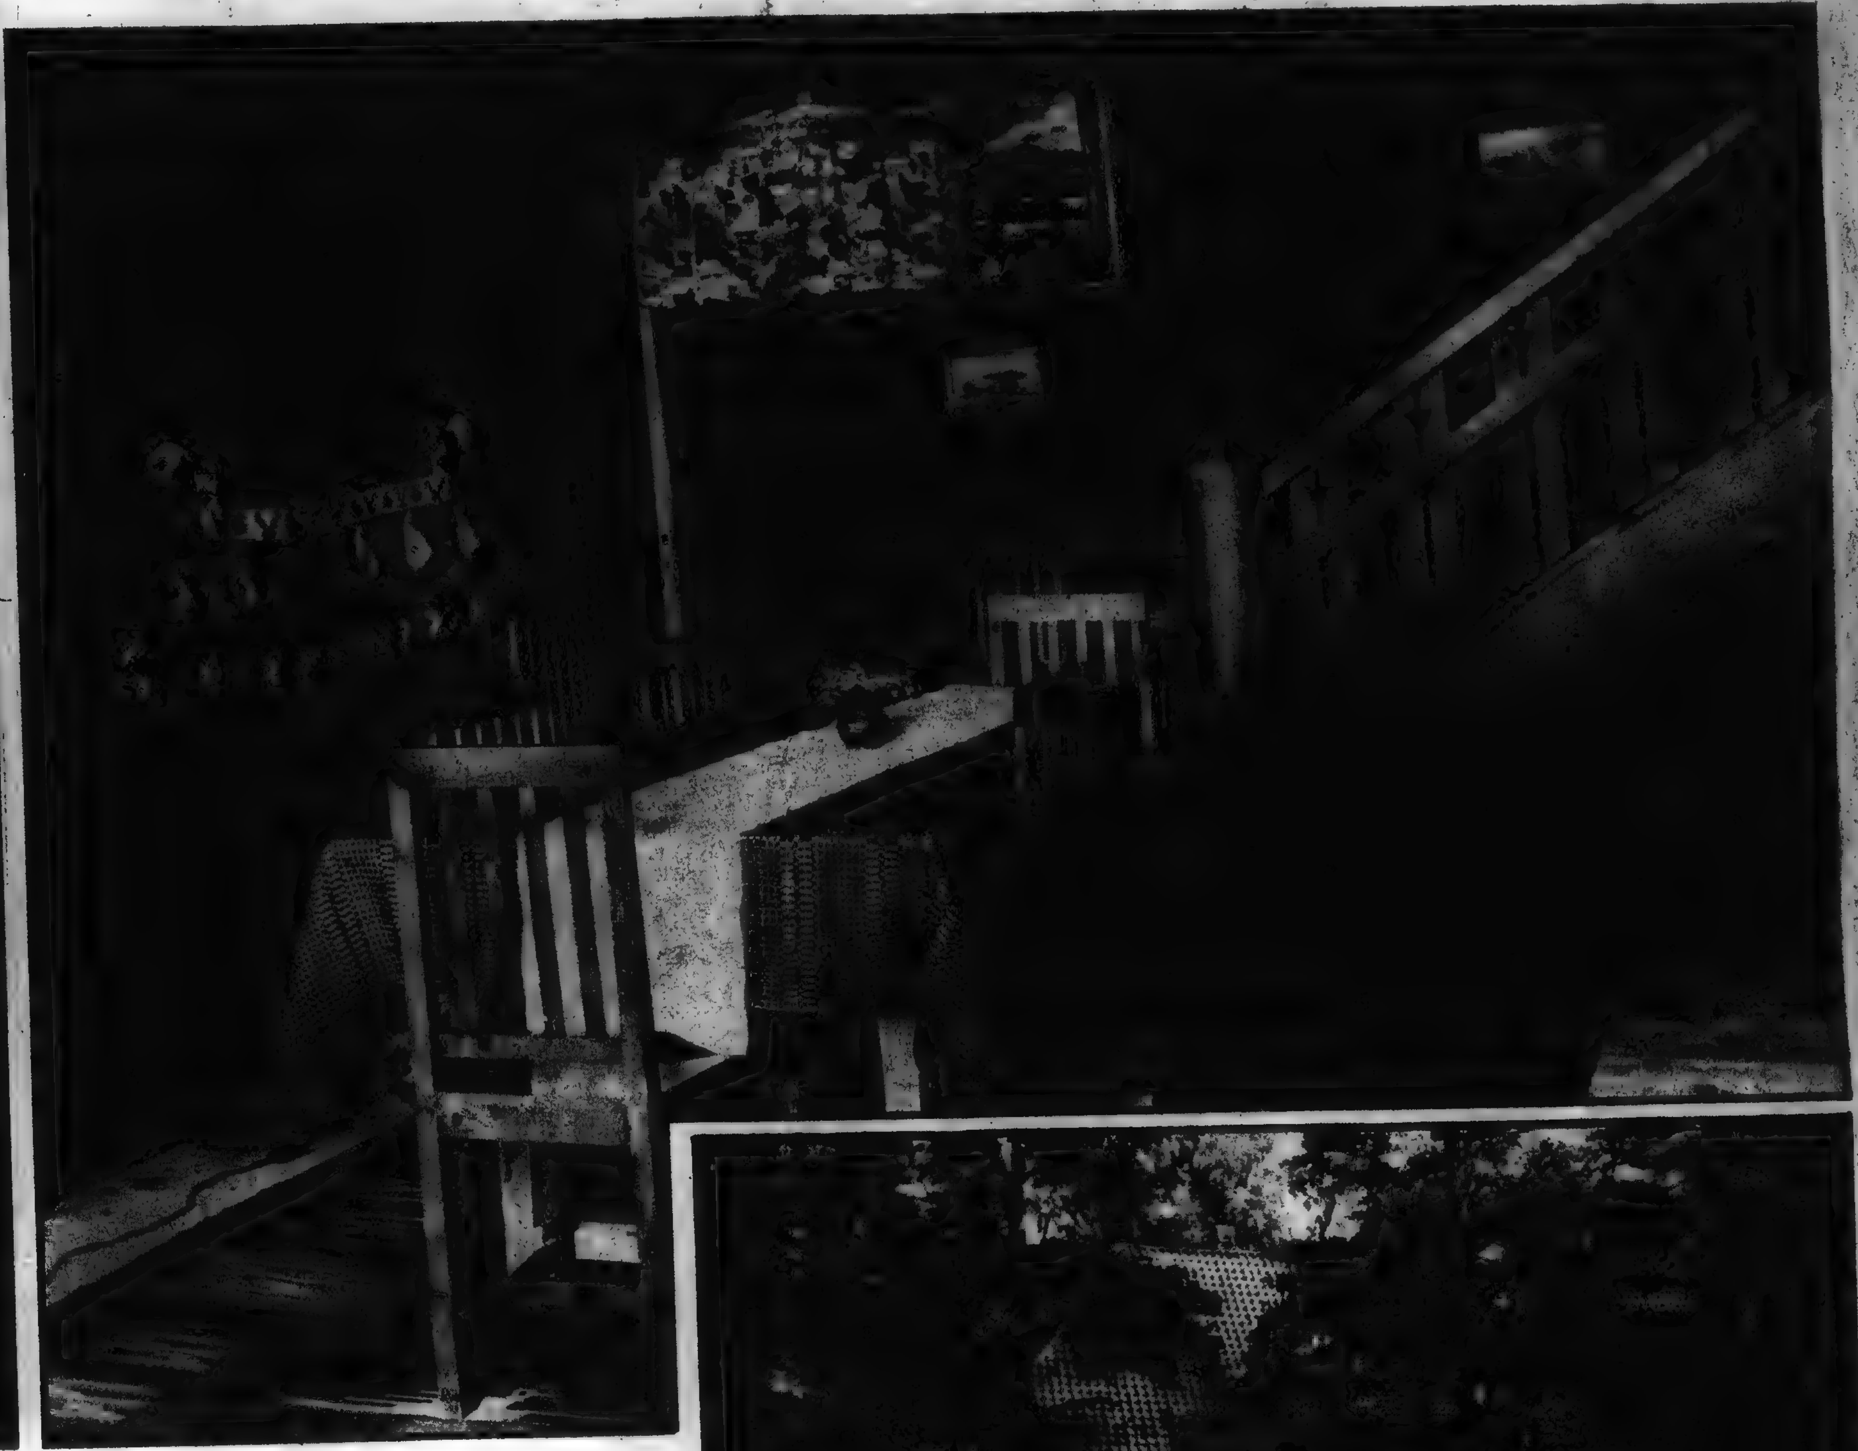
7

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

APR 10 1938

Sibelius, Finland's Musical Genius

MUSIC FOR THE WORLD—Here is Jan Sibelius, Finland's famous composer, at the piano in his home at Helsingfors. Recently turned 72, he advised persons without the means to refrain from being a composer for "it means only tragedy." Sibelius now has a life pension but, orphaned at three, his life has been a struggle to continue his work with piano and violin.



MUSICIAN'S TABLE—Something of the stern nature of Sibelius is perhaps expressed in the furnishings of his rustic home. The dining room (above) has the atmosphere of both comfort and sturdiness.

SYMPHONY FACTORY—Right is the composer's home, a woodland retreat. It is reported that a bird daily visits him through a ventilator. Another story is that Sibelius fires a pistol to summon a maid with his coffee.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 10 1938

FINLAND'S MUSIC MASTER

One of music's great old troopers is Jean Christian Sibelius, shown in a characteristic pose at Helsingfors, broad-brimmed hat and all. The Boston Symphony Orchestra recently gave his "Origin of Fire." (AP Photo).

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

APR 15 1938

FINAL COMMUTERS' MATINEE TUESDAY

Trekking eagerly from Plattsburg, N. Y., Pawtucket, R. I., Castine, Me., Manchester, N. H., Bennington, Vt., Hyannis, Cape Cod, and a hundred communities between, a legion of music-lovers will invade Boston next Tuesday for the sixth and last commuters' matinee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony hall. Because this series of concerts does not begin until 3 o'clock, it has particularly attracted patrons from distant points. The world-famous Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the following program on Tuesday: Beethoven's First Symphony, in C major; Debussy's two nocturnes, "Clouds" and "Festivals;" and Brahms' Second Symphony, in D major.

Those attending the commuters' matinees this season will have heard music covering two centuries of the art of orchestral composition, drawn from the works of the following composers: C. P. E. Bach, Haydn, Boccherini, Mozart, Beethoven, Rossini, Liszt, Moussorgsky, Tchaikowsky, Brahms, Rimsky-Korsakov, d'Indy, Sibelius, Debussy, Ravel, Starakodomsky, Amfitheatrof.

THE MUSIC MASTER—The serious-faced Sibelius is shown here in his characteristic broad-brimmed hat on the grounds of his estate at Helsingfors. He continues to work daily on his compositions. Last December when the manuscript disappeared, the score of his symphony (1902), "Origin of Fire," was transmitted by radio in order that it might be presented as scheduled by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

APR 1 0 1938

Sibelius, Finland's Musical Genius

MUSIC FOR THE WORLD—Here is Jan Sibelius, Finland's famous composer, at the piano in his home at Helsingfors. Recently turned 72, he advised persons without the means to refrain from being a composer for "it means only tragedy." Sibelius now has a life pension but, orphaned at three, his life has been a struggle to continue his work with piano and violin.

MUSICIAN'S TABLE—Something of the stern nature of Sibelius is perhaps expressed in the furnishings of his rustic home. The dining room (above) has the atmosphere of both comfort and sturdiness.

SYMPHONY FACTORY—Right is the composer's home, a woodland retreat. It is reported that a bird daily visits him through a ventilator. Another story is that Sibelius fires a pistol to summon a maid with his coffee.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 1 0 1938

FINLAND'S MUSIC MASTER

One of music's great old troopers is Jean Christian Sibelius, shown in a characteristic pose at Helsingfors, broad-brimmed hat and all. The Boston Symphony Orchestra recently gave his "Origin of Fire." (AP Photo)

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

APR 15 193

FINAL COMMUTERS' MATINEE TUESDAY

Trekking eagerly from Plattsburg, N. Y., Pawtucket, R. I., Castine, Me., Manchester, N. H., Bennington, Vt., Hyannis, Cape Cod, and a hundred communities between, a legion of music-lovers will invade Boston next Tuesday for the sixth and last commuters' matinee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony hall. Because this series of concerts does not begin until 3 o'clock, it has particularly attracted patrons from distant points. The world-famous Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the following program on Tuesday: Beethoven's First Symphony, in C major; Debussy's two nocturnes, "Clouds" and "Festivals;" and Brahms' Second Symphony, in D major.

Those attending the commuters' matinees this season will have heard music covering two centuries of the art of orchestral composition, drawn from the works of the following composers: C. P. E. Bach, Haydn, Boccherini, Mozart, Beethoven, Rossini, Liszt, Moussorgsky, Tchaikowsky, Brahms, Rimsky-Korsakov, d'Indy, Sibelius, Debussy, Ravel, Starakodomsky, Amfitheatrof.

THE MUSIC MASTER—The serious-faced Sibelius is shown here in his characteristic broad-brimmed hat on the grounds of his estate at Helsingfors. He continues to work daily on his compositions. Last December when the manuscript disappeared, the score of his symphony (1902), "Origin of Fire," was transmitted by radio in order that it might be presented as scheduled by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

ENESCO AND PROKOFIEFF LEAD IN BOSTON

Each Lists His Own Works, the Russian Including an Amusing Premiere

BOSTON, April 5.—Two guest conductors in as many weeks established a record for visitors to the conductor's platform of the Boston Symphony. For the nineteenth pair of concerts, Georges Enesco conducted the following program:

Symphony in D, No. 104	Haydn
Symphonic Poem, 'Acteon'	Alessandresco
Suite for Orchestra, No. 2	Enesco
'Roumanian Rhapsody' No. 1, Op. 11	Enesco

It was an oddly contrived program. Possibly Mr. Enesco's patriotism prejudiced his better judgment, and while the Alessandresco opus was politely received it revealed very little that was worthy the talent of Mr. Enesco as conductor or the orchestra as performer. His own Suite, No. 2, and Rhapsody, Op. 11, were much more to the point. Written in five movements, the Suite follows the pattern established by the eighteenth-century dance suites and consists of an Overture, Sarabande, Gigue, Menuetto and an Air and Bourrée combined. The work is well constructed, possesses graceful melodic lines and is colorful in orchestration. Both the Suite and the Rhapsody (already familiar to Bostonians) were given warm applause.

Mr. Enesco's manner with Haydn revealed the conductor's romantic nature rather more than the classical content of the symphony. The audience welcomed the visitor, whom it had already met as a violin soloist some years ago, with the greatest enthusiasm and remained after the concert to applaud him as a conductor.

An All-Prokofieff Program

Although Mr. Enesco confined his own compositions to a pair, Mr. Prokofieff boldly came out with an entire program of his own works one week later.

All-Prokofieff Program
'Chout', Ballet Suite, Op. 21
Piano Concerto, No. 1, Op. 10
(Soloist, Mr. Prokofieff)
'Peter and the Wolf', Op. 67
(First Time in America)
'Romeo and Juliet', Ballet, Second Suite, Op. 64

Boston audiences were already familiar with 'Chout', although at this twentieth pair of concerts, listeners appeared to derive new enjoyment from the entertaining music. The additional novelty of the composer as conductor also lent additional zest to the work, as indeed it did to the remainder of the program which he led, for Mr. Prokofieff is a zestful conductor.

The orchestral fairy tale was easily the piece de resistance of the program. In it the composer gave rein to his fertile imagination and the result was wholly charming. The program notes did not inform us as to whether or not the "book" was also a product of Mr. Prokofieff's inventive genius, but the story revolves about the adventure of one Peter, a very brave lad who "early one morning opened the gate and went out on a big green meadow." The subsequent action of the story is based upon his adventures as he meets the Duck, the Bird, the Cat, the Wolf and the Hunters, not forgetting Grandfather who endeavored unsuccessfully, to instill fear in the heart of the brave Peter. How Peter trapped the Wicked Wolf and led him in a triumphal procession to the Zoo is joyously unfolded by the composer in measures cleverly invented.

The introduction of the characters in a sort of prologue is the occasion also for the introduction of the various orchestral instruments which furnish the musical clues in the story and the solemnity with which Messrs. Laurent (Bird), Gillet (Duck), Polatschek (Cat), Allard (Grandfather), and the three horn players representing the Wolf, rose in their places at the mention of the various characters gave the audience more than one hearty laugh.

And there were more as the performance advanced. In all, a most amusing piece which came at a psychological moment in the season. The only discordant note was that of the affected declamation of Mr. Hale. The composer-conductor and the orchestra (which really worked its passage), were roundly applauded at the conclusion of the piece. For the sake of the record, we may add that this was the first performance outside of Russia, where it was given its premiere in Moscow on May 2, 1936.

One Ballet Lacks Interest

It was unfortunate that two ballets should have occupied Mr. Prokofieff at this concert, since the 'Romeo and Juliet' suite did not present as interesting a tonal sequence as either 'Chout' or 'Peter'. This may have been due in part to the concert arrangement of the material; it also emphasized again, however, the somewhat futile attempt to convey by orchestral means, the color, action and mise en scene of a stage production.

Serge Prokofieff

The piano concerto revealed the pianistic techniqe of Mr. Prokofieff without adding materially to his fame as a composer. Richard Burgin conducted it. It is needless to add that the orchestra was "on its toes" during the entire afternoon.

The fifth program of the Monday-Tuesday supplementary series of concerts by the orchestra was conducted by Richard Burgin, concert-master and assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. The soloist was Robert Casadesus and the program as follows:

'A Night on Bald Mountain'	Mussorgsky
Piano Concerto in E Flat	Liszt
Symphony for Orchestra and Piano, Op. 25	d'Indy
Excerpts from 'Le Coq d'Or'	Rimsky-Korsakoff

Emphasis and speed dominated the performance of the Liszt Concerto, to the exclusion of the more lyric content of the work. This, of course, made for an extraordinarily brilliant performance, but it also brought forward the more insignificant side of the work, which at best, is a show piece. The audience applauded the performance to the echo.

In the d'Indy item, orchestra and soloist were in just accord and the work came to a faithful performance. In the purely orchestral music, Mr. Burgin again displayed the characteristics which have always marked his conducting. He has energy, a firm beat and an evident understanding of the music he undertakes to present.

GRACE MAY STUTSMAN

Lotus Club Honors Barbirolli

At the Speakers Table at the Dinner Tendered to John Barbirolli and Members of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society by the Lotos Club on March 31 Were, Left to Right, Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, Chancellor of New York University and President of the Club Mr. Barbirolli, and Sir Gerald Campbell, British Consul General in New York

THE NEW YORK Philharmonic-Symphony Society and its conductor John Barbirolli as guest of honor, were tendered a dinner by the Lotos Club on March 31 in celebration of Mr. Barbirolli's first season as permanent conductor of the Philharmonic.

Telegrams were read from Governor Herbert H. Lehman and Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, regretting their inability to attend. Speakers at the dinner included Deems Taylor, commentator for the Sunday broadcasts of the orchestra, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Theodore Steinway, Sir Gerald Campbell, British Consul General in New York, and Walter W. Price, a member of the board of directors of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society. Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, chancellor of New York University and head of the club presided. The Philharmonic-Symphony Society String Quartet played.

Tributes to Mr. Barbirolli and the orchestra followed the anticipated order until Sir Gerald spoke. In the course of a commentary on the international situation he read the following parody of Longfellow's 'A Psalm of Life', which he composed the afternoon before the banquet while contemplating the troubled status of the world.

"Tell me not in mournful numbers
  Life is but a Nazi threat,
While the rest of mankind slumbers
  In a cold and troubled sweat.
Are our great men all behind us?
  Have we still no heights to climb?
Telephotographs remind us
  Goosesteps mark the March of Time.
Let us walk with natural gaiting,
  But for God's sake let us walk,
Let our souls keep watchful waiting,
  Free to act, yet free to talk!"

In reply to the expressions of appreciation of his achievements, Mr. Barbirolli told of his "sense of privilege and happiness in being amongst you who are almost the last of the great democracies left in the troubled world of today."

THREE NEW THINGS AT SYMPHONY

B. — Post

Composer, Soloist and Chorus in First Performance

April — 15/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon, if not too rich in musical interest, was not lacking in incident. There was a new composer, a new soloist, a first performance and an assisting chorus, the Cecilia, trained by Arthur Fiedler. There was also noise a-plenty.

CRASHING MUSIC

On a day of vernal loveliness to which only the Good Friday spell from "Parsifal" could have done musical justice, Dr. Koussevitzky—who is not supposed to be a weather prophet—chose to welcome his audience with the blasting winds of Hell, as depicted by Tchaikovsky in his "Francesca da Rimini." Incidentally, the Man from Mars, had he dropped in, would have found little difference between Tchaikovsky's attempt to encompass the infernal and Florent Schmitt's choral and orchestral realization of the beginning and end of the 47 Psalm, that which commences, in the King James version, "O clap your hands, all ye people; Shout unto God with the voice of triumph."

Voices Heard at Times

It may be noted, too, that both Tchaikovsky's Symphonic Fantasia and the Frenchman's Psalm give us fine and moving music sandwiched between as much din and racket as each could contrive and that much was considerable.

With its clanging of cymbals and beating of drums, its snorting trombones, Tchaikovsky's Stygian storm is quite as bad as that in the "William Tell" Overture, and it lasts longer. Here his Fantasia has faded beyond recall, while the unhappy Francesca's narrative, though it might profitably be shortened, still persuades.

Again the extremes of Schmitt's Psalm, previously heard here 10 years ago, seemed now hardly more than a forced and empty clamor. It is fortunate, perhaps, that because of Good Friday the usual matinee was put a day ahead. By tomorrow evening the much goaded chorus will probably have fully recovered its collective voice. When composer and conductor permitted, it sang yesterday with warmth and tonal beauty.

Mr. Tortelier's Playing

To come at length to the soloist and his concerto, the former was Paul Tortelier, youthful Parisian who joined the orchestra's 'cello section last spring; the latter, dedicated to Mr. Tortelier, the work of Thomas de Hartmann, a Russian-born composer in his early 50's who is now a naturalized Frenchman. Even Slonimsky's all-embracing "Music Since 1900" does not mention him. Although a resident of Paris for 16 years, Mr. Hartmann still writes as a Russian who remembers well the music of his great predecessors and that of a few non-Russian composers besides.

Mr. Tortelier, so suddenly thrust into public notice here, was received with well deserved enthusiasm. So well did he play that it would be a pleasure to hear him in more important music than this well-enough contrived and outwardly effective concerto of yesterday. At least one could see that he commands an agreeable tone and a fluent technique.

As was pointed out in these columns last Sunday, the honor of a solo appearance is seldom accorded to players who do not head their respective sections. Mr. Tortelier proved himself worthy of it.

JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN - PATRIOT

APR 14 1938

Library Stores Modern Music

Philadelphia - (U.P.) - Orchestral works of contemporary American composers are being preserved for posterity by the Federal Music copying project here, only one of its kind in the nation according to WPA officials.

Orchestral scores are copied on pure rag paper, double checked with the original, and then filed in specially constructed dust-proof boxes at the Free library of Philadelphia as part of the Edwin A. Fleisher music collection, said to be the largest orchestral collection in the world.

A complete set of orchestral parts, enough for the largest symphony orchestra, are copied from the composer's original score. Many of the works prepared by the project have had premieres by the Philadelphia, the Boston symphony, the New York philharmonic and other symphony orchestras, according to Arthur Cohn, director.

The staff of 52, all trained musicians and expert copyists, are occupied almost entirely with the works of contemporary Americans, many of whom do not have sufficient funds to pay for the copying that is necessary before their compositions may reach the public.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

APR 21 1938

FESTIVAL ~~SHED~~ FINISHED

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted ~~by Serge~~ Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel Company and contractors are now building the roof and walls. The shed, seating more than 5000, is shaped like a half-open fan. It commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Tortelier Soloist With S

Monitor

Apr. 15/38

The Arts in Boston

A new cello concerto, by a composer new to Boston, if not to America, had its first performance at yesterday's Boston Symphony concert, the first of the twenty-second pair of the season. Its author was Thomas de Hartmann, a Russian now resident in Paris. It was performed by Paul Tortelier, a member of the orchestra, to whom it is dedicated.

The performance was a triumph at all events for the soloist. Born in Paris 24 years ago, Mr. Tortelier, after winning many honors at home, came to America last fall to join the Boston orchestra. He sits at the second desk of the cello section. Most of the subscribers probably learned of his presence there for the first time yesterday. His membership is significant of the quality of this orchestra's personnel. For he revealed himself as of full stature as a solo performer. He has a nimble technique, a good, full-bodied tone and a musicianly feeling for line and rhythm.

These qualities could have been employed to greater advantage in another composition. Born in Russia in 1886, Thomas de Hartmann has been living since 1922 in Paris. Apparently he has spent his time there, if we may take this work as indicative, in tender reminiscence of the country of his birth. His themes are nostalgically Russian, and his instrumentation occasionally hints at the native colors, but not much is accomplished in the way of composition and construction. The composer's creative powers have lagged behind his emotions.

That complaint can hardly be made of Florent Schmitt, whose setting of Psalm XLVII for orchestra, organ, chorus and solo voice closed the program. It was interesting to hear this work again. It was produced here ten years ago and had not previously been repeated. The composer knew how to produce a huge volume of tone, and Dr. Koussevitzky and the Cecilia Society chorus did not deny him what he asked. The score has a barbaric power which was fully realized yesterday. It is supposed to have also, in the passages for solo voice and chorus, an atmosphere of Oriental languor. It cannot be said that this atmosphere was achieved by Beal Hober and the Cecilia Society. If it had been, it might have mitigated the feeling that perhaps we were getting a little too much barbaric power, or barbaric noise.

The concert opened with a thrilling performance of Tchaikovsky's orchestral fantasia, "Francesca da Rimini." There is by far too much of it, but there was brilliant playing by Mr. Polatschek and the other solo artists, and by the orchestra.

L. A. S.

8

ENESCO AND PROKOFIEFF LEAD IN BOSTON

Each Lists His Own Works, the Russian Including an Amusing Premiere

BOSTON, April 5.—Two guest conductors in as many weeks established a record for visitors to the conductor's platform of the Boston Symphony. For the nineteenth pair of concerts, Georges Enesco conducted the following program:

Symphony in D, No. 104...............Haydn
Symphonic Poem, 'Acteon'......Alessandresco
Suite for Orchestra, No. 2.............Enesco
'Roumanian Rhapsody' No. 1, Op. 11..Enesco

It was an oddly contrived program. Possibly Mr. Enesco's patriotism prejudiced his better judgment, and while the Alessandresco opus was politely received it revealed very little that was worthy the talent of Mr. Enesco as conductor or the orchestra as performer. His own Suite, No. 2, and Rhapsody, Op. 11, were much more to the point. Written in five movements, the Suite follows the pattern established by the eighteenth-century dance suites and consists of an Overture, Sarabande, Gigue, Menuetto and an Air and Bourrée combined. The work is well constructed, possesses graceful melodic lines and is colorful in orchestration. Both the Suite and the Rhapsody (already familiar to Bostonians) were given warm applause.

Mr. Enesco's manner with Haydn revealed the conductor's romantic nature rather more than the classical content of the symphony. The audience welcomed the visitor, whom it had already met as a violin soloist some years ago, with the greatest enthusiasm and remained after the concert to applaud him as a conductor.

An All-Prokofieff Program

Although Mr. Enesco confined his own compositions to a pair, Mr. Prokofieff boldly came out with an entire program of his own works one week later.

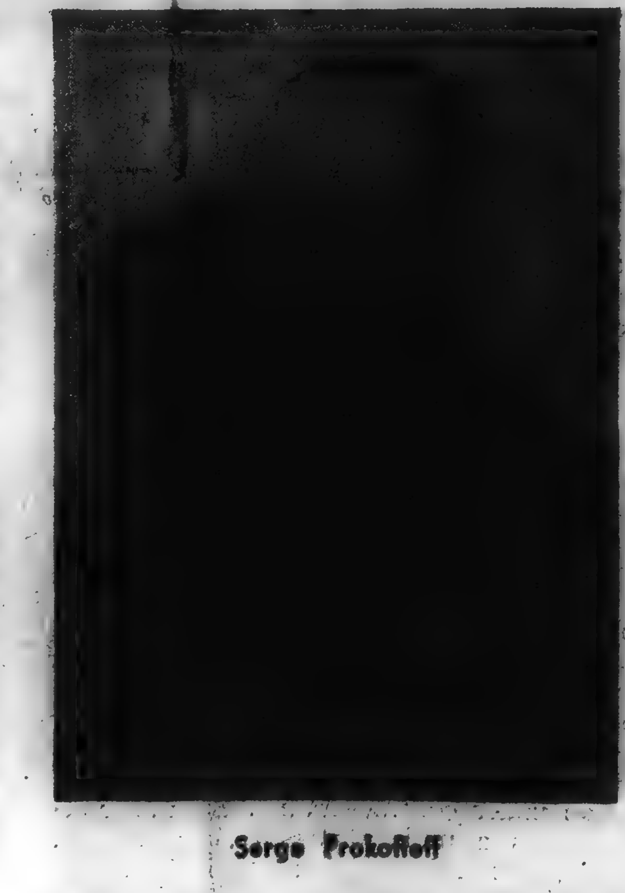
All-Prokofieff Program
'Chout', Ballet Suite, Op. 21
Piano Concerto, No. 1, Op. 10
(Soloist, Mr. Prokofieff)
'Peter and the Wolf', Op. 67
(First Time in America)
'Romeo and Juliet', Ballet, Second Suite, Op. 64

Boston audiences were already familiar with 'Chout', although at this twentieth pair of concerts, listeners appeared to derive new enjoyment from the entertaining music. The additional novelty of the composer as conductor also lent additional zest to the work, as indeed it did to the remainder of the program which he led, for Mr. Prokofieff is a zestful conductor.

The orchestral fairy tale was easily the piece de resistance of the program. In it the composer gave rein to his fertile imagination and the result was wholly charming. The program notes did not inform us as to whether or not the "book" was also a product of Mr. Prokofieff's inventive genius, but the story revolves about the adventure of one Peter, a very brave lad who "early one morning opened the gate and went out on a big green meadow." The subsequent action of the story is based upon his adventures as he meets the Duck, the Bird, the Cat, the Wolf and the Hunters, not forgetting Grandfather who endeavored unsuccessfully, to instill fear in the heart of the brave Peter. How Peter trapped the Wicked Wolf and led him in a triumphal procession to the Zoo is joyously unfolded by the composer in measures cleverly invented.

The introduction of the characters in a sort of prologue is the occasion also for the introduction of the various orchestral instruments which furnish the musical clues in the story and the solemnity with which Messrs. Laurent (Bird), Gillet (Duck), Polatschek (Cat), Allard (Grandfather), and the three horn players representing the Wolf, rose in their places at the mention of the various characters gave the audience more than one hearty laugh.

And there were more as the performance advanced. In all, a most amusing piece which came at a psychological moment in the season. The only discordant note was that of the affected declamation of Mr. Hale. The composer-conductor and the orchestra (which really worked its passage), were roundly applauded at the conclusion of the piece. For the sake of the record, we may add that this was the first performance outside of Russia, where it was given its premiere in Moscow on May 2, 1936.



Serge Prokofieff

One Ballet Lacks Interest

It was unfortunate that two ballets should have occupied Mr. Prokofieff at this concert, since the 'Romeo and Juliet' suite did not present as interesting a tonal sequence as either 'Chout' or 'Peter'. This may have been due in part to the concert arrangement of the material; it also emphasized again, however, the somewhat futile attempt to convey by orchestral means, the color, action and mise en scene of a stage production.

The piano concerto revealed the pianistic techniqe of Mr. Prokofieff without adding materially to his fame as a composer. Richard Burgin conducted it. It is needless to add that the orchestra was "on its toes" during the entire afternoon.

The fifth program of the Monday-Tuesday supplementary series of concerts by the orchestra was conducted by Richard Burgin, concert-master and assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. The soloist was Robert Casadesus and the program as follows:

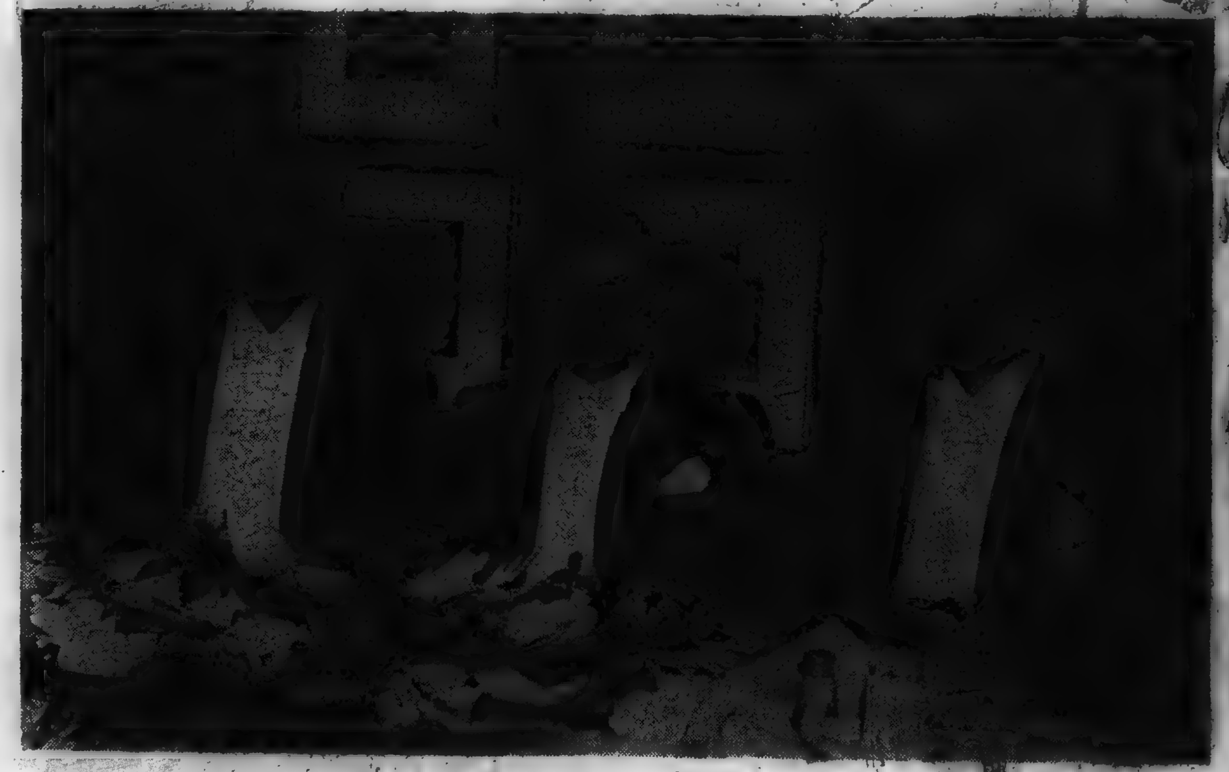
'A Night on Bald Mountain'......Mussorgsky
Piano Concerto in E Flat................Liszt
Symphony for Orchestra and Piano, Op. 25
d'Indy
Excerpts from 'Le Coq d'Or'
Rimsky-Korsakoff

Emphasis and speed dominated the performance of the Liszt Concerto, to the exclusion of the more lyric content of the work. This, of course, made for an extraordinarily brilliant performance, but it also brought forward the more insignificant side of the work, which at best, is a show piece. The audience applauded the performance to the echo.

In the d'Indy item, orchestra and soloist were in just accord and the work came to a faithful performance. In the purely orchestral music, Mr. Burgin again displayed the characteristics which have always marked his conducting. He has energy, a firm beat and an evident understanding of the music he undertakes to present.

GRACE MAY STUTSMAN

Lotus Club Honors Barbirolli



At the Speakers Table at the Dinner Tendered to John Barbirolli and Members of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society by the Lotos Club on March 31 Were, Left to Right, Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, Chancellor of New York University and President of the Club Mr. Barbirolli, and Sir Gerald Campbell, British Consul General in New York

THE NEW YORK Philharmonic-Symphony Society and its conductor John Barbirolli as guest of honor, were tendered a dinner by the Lotos Club on March 31 in celebration of Mr. Barbirolli's first season as permanent conductor of the Philharmonic.

Telegrams were read from Governor Herbert H. Lehman and Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, regretting their inability to attend. Speakers at the dinner included Deems Taylor, commentator for the Sunday broadcasts of the orchestra, Dr. Walter Damrosch, Theodore Steinway, Sir Gerald Campbell, British Consul General in New York, and Walter W. Price, a member of the board of directors of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society. Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, chancellor of New York University and head of the club presided. The Philharmonic-Symphony Society String Quartet played.

Tributes to Mr. Barbirolli and the orchestra followed the anticipated order until Sir Gerald spoke. In the course of a commentary on the international situation he read the following parody of Longfellow's 'A Psalm of Life', which he composed the afternoon before the banquet while contemplating the troubled status of the world.

"Tell me not in mournful numbers
Life is but a Nazi threat,
While the rest of mankind slumbers
In a cold and troubled sweat.
Are our great men all behind us?
Have we still no heights to climb?
Telephotographs remind us
Goosesteps mark the March of Time.
Let us walk with natural gaiting,
But for God's sake let us walk,
Let our souls keep watchful waiting,
Free to act, yet free to talk!"

In reply to the expressions of appreciation of his achievements, Mr. Barbirolli told of his "sense of privilege and happiness in being amongst you who are almost the last of the great democracies left in the troubled world of today."

Tortelier Soloist With S

Monitor
Apr 15/38

The Arts in Boston

A new cello concerto, by a composer new to Boston, if not to America, had its first performance at yesterday's Boston Symphony concert, the last of the twenty-second pair of the season. Its author was Thomas de Hartmann, a Russian now resident in Paris. It was performed by Paul Tortelier, a member of the orchestra, to whom it is dedicated.

The performance was a triumph at all events for the soloist. Born in Paris 24 years ago, Mr. Tortelier, after winning many honors at home, came to America last fall to join the Boston orchestra. He sits at the second desk of the cello section. Most of the subscribers probably learned of his presence there for the first time yesterday. His membership is significant of the quality of this orchestra's personnel. For he revealed himself as of full stature as a solo performer. He has a nimble technique, a good, full-bodied tone and a musicianly feeling for line and rhythm.

These qualities could have been employed to greater advantage in another composition. Born in Russia in 1886, Thomas de Hartmann has been living since 1922 in Paris. Apparently he has spent his time there, if we may take this work as indicative, in tender reminiscence of the country of his birth. His themes are nostalgically Russian, and his instrumentation occasionally hints at the native colors, but not much is accomplished in the way of composition and construction. The composer's creative powers have lagged behind his emotions.

That complaint can hardly be made of Florent Schmitt, whose setting of Psalm XLVII for orchestra, organ, chorus and solo voice closed the program. It was interesting to hear this work again. It was produced here ten years ago and had not previously been repeated. The composer knew how to produce a huge volume of tone, and Dr. Koussevitzky and the Cecilia Society chorus did not deny him what he asked. The score has a barbaric power which was fully realized yesterday. It is supposed to have also, in the passages for solo voice and chorus, an atmosphere of Oriental languor. It cannot be said that this atmosphere was achieved by Beal Hober and the Cecilia Society. If it had been, it might have mitigated the feeling that perhaps we were getting a little too much barbaric power, or barbaric noise.

The concert opened with a thrilling performance of Tchaikovsky's orchestral fantasia, "Francesca da Rimini." There is by far too much of it, but there was brilliant playing by Mr. Polatschek and the other solo artists, and by the orchestra.

L. A. S.

THREE NEW THINGS AT SYMPHONY

B. — Post

Composer, Soloist and Chorus in First Performance

April — 15/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon, if not too rich in musical interest, was not lacking in incident. There was a new composer, a new soloist, a first performance and an assisting chorus, the Cecilia, trained by Arthur Fiedler. There was also noise a-plenty.

CRASHING MUSIC

On a day of vernal loveliness to which only the Good Friday spell from "Parsifal" could have done musical justice, Dr. Koussevitzky—who is not supposed to be a weather prophet—chose to welcome his audience with the blasting winds of Hell, as depicted by Tchaikovsky in his "Francesca da Rimini." Incidentally, the Man from Mars, had he dropped in, would have found little difference between Tchaikovsky's attempt to encompass the infernal and Florent Schmitt's choral and orchestral realization of the beginning and end of the 47 Psalm, that which commences, in the King James version, "O clap your hands, all ye people; Shout unto God with the voice of triumph."

Voices Heard at Times

It may be noted, too, that both Tchaikovsky's Symphonic Fantasia and the Frenchman's Psalm give us fine and moving music sandwiched between as much din and racket as each could contrive and that much was considerable.

With its clanging of cymbals and beating of drums, its snorting trombones, Tchaikovsky's Stygian storm is quite as bad as that in the "William Tell" Overture, and it lasts longer. Here his Fantasia has faded beyond recall, while the unhappy Francesca's narrative, though it might profitably be shortened, still persuades.

Again the extremes of Schmitt's Psalm, previously heard here 10 years ago, seemed now hardly more than a forced and empty clamor. It is fortunate, perhaps, that because of Good Friday the usual matinee was put a day ahead. By tomorrow evening the much goaded chorus will probably have fully recovered its collective voice. When composer and conductor permitted, it sang yesterday with warmth and tonal beauty.

Mr. Tortelier's Playing

To come at length to the soloist and his concerto, the former was Paul Tortelier, youthful Parisian who joined the orchestra's 'cello section last spring; the latter, dedicated to Mr. Tortelier, the work of Thomas de Hartmann, a Russian-born composer in his early 50's who is now a naturalized Frenchman. Even Slonimsky's all-embracing "Music Since 1900" does not mention him. Although a resident of Paris for 15 years, Mr. Hartmann still writes as a Russian who remembers well the music of his great predecessors and that of a few non-Russian composers besides.

Mr. Tortelier, so suddenly thrust into public notice here, was received with well deserved enthusiasm. So well did he play that it would be a pleasure to hear him in more important music than this well-enough contrived and outwardly effective concerto of yesterday. At least one could see that he commands an agreeable tone and a fluent technique.

As was pointed out in these columns last Sunday, the honor of a solo appearance is seldom accorded to players who do not head their respective sections. Mr. Tortelier proved himself worthy of it.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

APR 21 1938

FESTIVAL SHED FINISHED

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel Company and contractors are now building the roof and walls. The shed, seating more than 5000, is shaped like a half-open fan. It commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

JACKSON, MICH.
CITIZEN - PATRIOT

APR 14 1938

Library Stores Modern Music

Philadelphia — (U.P.) — Orchestral works of contemporary American composers are being preserved for posterity by the Federal Music copying project here, only one of its kind in the nation according to WPA officials.

Orchestral scores are copied on pure rag paper, double checked with the original, and then filed in specially constructed dust-proof boxes at the Free library of Philadelphia as part of the Edwin A. Fleisher music collection, said to be the largest orchestral collection in the world.

A complete set of orchestral parts, enough for the largest symphony orchestra, are copied from the composer's original score. Many of the works prepared by the project have had premieres by the Philadelphia, the Boston symphony, the New York philharmonic and other symphony orchestras, according to Arthur Cohn, director.

The staff of 52, all trained musicians and expert copyists, are occupied almost entirely with the works of contemporary Americans, many of whom do not have sufficient funds to pay for the copying that is necessary before their compositions may reach the public.

EASTER STRAWS AT SYMPHONY CONCE

B. Her. April 15/38

MISS NANCY COCHRANE

MRS. FRANCIS P. SEARS JR.

MISS REINETTE PLIMPTON

Yesterday's summer-like sun brought a veritable Easter parade of smart Spring suits to Symphony Hall for this week's "Friday afternoon concert," put ahead a day in observance of Good Friday. From left to right, Miss Nancy Cochrane, daughter of Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman Jr. of Commonwealth av., arrives in a fetching wide-brimmed black straw and slim black suit; Mrs. Francis P. Sears Jr. of Mt. Vernon st. wears a fascinating Parisian straw tied up in a navy veil, rose-red flowers on it to match her red and beige checked suit; Miss Reinette Plimpton of Brookline, a small suave cloche in dark blue to accent her knitted tailleur.

Society Members Attend

9

Dr. Koussevitzky and Orchestra Win Usual Thunderous Applause

Among Those Noted in Audience Are Miss Constance Turner and Her Mother, Mrs. Howard C. Turner, and Miss Caroline Oveson

B. Her. By ALISON ARNOLD April 15/38

Friday afternoons, red letter dates on the calendars of Boston society, are synonymous with Symphony concerts, but because of Good Friday, today's concert took place yesterday. The program opened with Tchaikovsky's stirring orchestral fantasia, "Francesca da Rimini," and Dr. Koussevitzky received his usual thunderous applause. Then came the first performance of Thomas de Hartmann's Concerto for Violincello and Orchestra, with Paul Tortelier, to whom it was dedicated, as soloist. The final number was Florent Schmitt's Psalm XLVII, for Orchestra, Organ, Chorus and Solo Voice, with Beal Hober, the soprano soloist, and Mr. Arthur Fiedler conducting.

The balmy spring sunshine brought out a stunning array of new costumes, and the gay throng strolling about the foyer during the intermission resembled mannequins at a preview of Easter fashions. Navy blue, always a springtime favorite, was much in evidence, often combined with pink. Miss Constance Turner, who attended with her mother, Mrs. Howard C. Turner, was most attractive in navy with touches of shell pink, and Miss Caroline Oveson wore a smart straw sailor of dusty pink with her navy blue ensemble. Mrs. Charles F. Hovey's slim navy coat was belted with pink, and her navy hat was adorned with a cluster of pale pink flowers. In a navy frock sprinkled with pink pin dots was Mrs. Charles P. Howard, and Mrs. Thomas N

Dabney (Betty Soule), who sat with her aunt, Mrs. Charles Goddard Weld, had a fetching pink bow on her navy hat.

Mrs. Ralph Hornblower wore a slate gray suit, and her matching hat had a bow of cherry red. Mrs. Moses Williams, Jr., who is sailing tomorrow for Bermuda, wore with her black coat, an intriguing little printed turban, and Mrs. Henry Prout's straw sailor, that she wore with her navy blue coat, was trimmed with bright field flowers. With her Oxford gray tailleur that had narrow white pencil stripes, Mrs. William B. Long wore a frilled blouse of powder blue and a smart red sailor.

Sitting in the very front row, all in green, with a tiny pill-box hat tied under her chin, was Miss Phyllis Childs. With Mrs. Allan Forbes, who wore a silver fox scarf and a jaunty hat of natural straw with her black frock, was her daughter, Miss Phyllis Forbes, who wore a string of pearls with her simple black frock. Miss Nancy Cochrane, wearing with her black frock a silver fox scarf and a huge cartwheel hat of rough black straw with a single gardenia on the brim and another on the long streamer, attended with her stepfather, Mr. Dudley L. Pickman, Jr.

Chatting together during the intermission were Miss Eleanor Frothingham, wearing a cunning black hat with her gray tailleur, Miss Jenny McKean, in navy with lighter blue accessories, and Miss Marjorie Motley, in gray. Miss Betty Albers was very pretty in a straw poke bonnet and a gay print, and Miss Lucile Swift wore black with a striking cerise turban from which a long scarf trailed and wound about her throat.

Mrs. George Putnam, in a dark print, was discussing the concert with Mrs. Richard Ely Danielson, impeccably tailored in black and white. Mrs. Edward A. Taft wore touches of yellow with her navy blue ensemble, and Mrs. A. L. West Movius had a fluffy gray chrysanthemum on her black toque. Mrs. Guy Warren Walker was in black with white pin dots and Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson was trimly tailored in navy.

Mrs. Galen Stone was one of the early arrivals, wearing a sable scarf with her black costume. Mrs. Barrett Wendell sat down near the front as usual, and nearby was Mrs. Robert H. Morris, whose costume combined navy with Paris tan. Mrs. Hugh Bancroft, who has recently returned from the south, was being greeted by her many friends. Attending with Mrs. Paul Foster Clark was Mrs. Malcolm Jenney, and with Mrs. Frank H. Stewart was her daughter, Mrs. Lawrence Black.

Among the many others present were Mrs. Rufus Hale and her small son, Mrs. Otis Russell, Mrs. Francis MacVeagh, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. Sydney Harwood, Mrs. Willis P. Beal, Mrs. James J. Minot, Jr., Mrs. Francis Hastings, Mrs. Morgan Harris, Mrs. George Megrew and her daughter, Miss Jane Megrew, Mrs. Roland Nickerson, Mrs. Horace H. Soule, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt, Mrs. Morton Prince, Mrs. Robert Cushman, Mrs. Francis W. Palfrey, Miss Elizabeth C. Leland, Mrs. Harry B. Stebbins, Mrs. Harold G. Arnold, Mrs. Charles Gaston Smith, Miss Jeannie Dupee, Miss Reinette Plimpton, Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French, Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Mrs. James J. Phelan and Miss Florence Viaux.

PENSION FUND CONCERT SOLOIST

Jeanette Vreeland, soprano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's "Missa Solennis," which will be presented at Symphony Hall, Tuesday evening, April 26, for the orchestra's pension fund.

B. Her. MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 22nd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Paul Tortelier, 'cellist, was the soloist. In the concluding number the orchestra was assisted by the Cecilia Society chorus, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, and Beal Hober, soprano. The program was as follows:

Tchaikovsky...."Francesca da Rimini," Orchestral Fantasia after Dante, Op. 32
Hartmann..Concerto for 'cello and orchestra Op. 57
Schmitt..Psalm 47 for orchestra, organ, chorus and solo voice, Op. 38

Dr. Koussevitzky brought out some unfamiliar music for this concert, none of it ultra-modern. Thomas de Hartmann is evidently a composer who does not care for the contemporary idiom in any of its manifestations. Of course the 'cello is not an instrument which lends itself to this form of expression. It is too richly emotional when treated sympathetically. An instrument's natural qualities need not stand in a composer's way, since, after all, Chopin wrote his singing melodies for the uncompromising piano.

Mr. de Hartmann, however, did no violence to the 'cello's normal tendencies. His concerto, which was given its first performance yesterday, is a conventional work of the old Russian national school. The influence of Moussorgsky and of Rimsky-Korsakov is not one to be ashamed of, and, without exploring new paths, Mr. de Hartmann has written an effective and an agreeable work for an instrument which has few successful concertos.

The slow movement suggests an ecclesiastical scene by its harmonies, and we gather that outside the church it is winter—this fact conveyed by the discreet introduction of sleigh bells. The whole concerto is well written and is not long-winded, the danger of all works for 'cello. Mr. Tortelier, the soloist and a member of the orchestra, proved himself to be a brilliant performer. His tone is beautiful, his dexterity all that could be required. In addition he has the fire and enthusiasm of youth. In a word, he played superbly.

If the Hartmann Concerto was conventional in many ways, the Tchaikovsky "Francesca da Rimini" seemed thoroughly dated. It is a bombastic and a boring work, relieved for a while by the middle section until that, too, becomes tedious. We cordially approve the revival of a composer's less well known works, especially when that composer is as over-played as are Tchaikovsky's last three symphonies; but we confess that Dr. Koussevitzky would have done well to have left "Francesca da Rimini" on the shelves.

Somerset Maugham's recent autobiography contains an anecdote of a devout, though eccentric, Englishman who conducted religious services in his own house. He carefully excised al lthe passages in the Book of Common Prayer which praised God, because he felt that it was vulgar to praise any one to his face. Florent Schmitt clearly would not have agreed with this attitude, for in setting the 47th Psalm to music he has praised God lustily and with no squeamish misgivings.

This work is considered to be Schmitt's first really individual composition. He has always been fond of massive effects and complex writing. He indulges in both these habits with a vigor that carries us with him. The music suits its subject. It is exciting, and there is a contrasting section of sensuous beauty. It may not have been a work in the mood of preparation for Good Friday, but it will certainly not be amiss on Easter Saturday.

It is no easy task to sing this music. Nevertheless the Cecilia Society, which Mr. Fiedler had trained, sang extremely well. The chorus had, besides the necessary technical skill, the power to bring off the many climaxes which Schmitt demanded. Miss Beal Hober acquitted herself very well in the solo part. The orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky played magnificently.

Monitor April 20/38

The Arts in Boston

Jeannette Vreeland

Soloist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Production of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," at Symphony Hall Next Tuesday Evening, for the Benefit of Its Pension Fund

---

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 14 1938

BOSTON

SYMPHONY PLAYER DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

BOSTON, April 13 (AP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a flutist [illegible] after he had gained fame as a virtuoso in Europe, died today after a long illness.

Painting was Bladet's avocation and his canvases have received high praise. He leaves his widow and a son, also a musician. Bladet was born in Bordeaux, France.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

APR 14 1938

BOSTON, April 13 (AP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a flutist [illegible] he had gained fame as a virtuoso in Europe, died today after [illegible] illness.

B. Globe MUSIC April 15/38

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Since today is Good Friday, the week's afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was played yesterday. The evening concert will, as usual, be given on Saturday. Dr. Koussevitzky had assembled one of the most curious programs within memory, a program boasting not a single masterpiece and containing as nearest approach to Easter music the stentorian setting by Florent Schmitt of the 47th Psalm. The afternoon began with Tchaikovsky's fantasia, "Francesca da Rimini," and continued with a new Cello Concerto by Thomas de Hartmann, which, though it was performed for the first time, will be remembered only because it introduced as soloist the Boston Symphony's new virtuoso, Paul Tortelier.

Mr. Tortelier, a boyish-looking musician of 24, joined the 'cello section of the orchestra at the beginning of this season. As he proved yesterday in a superb exhibition of his technical resources, he is a valuable addition to a choir that already includes such artists as Mr. Bedetti and Mr. Zighera.

Hartmann's Concerto was dedicated to Mr. Tortelier, whose loving performance was more than the weak, imitative music warranted. The work, set conventionally in three movements, echoes the Russian "Five" and other creative talents, displays a fondness for modal harmonies, and although it provides "grateful" passages for the solo instrument, is repetitious and dull. The 'cello literature is not too extensive, and each time a new Concerto bobs over the horizon a good many of us hope anew that it will prove a masterpiece. Alas! We are again left to murmur, with Tristan, "Die alte Weise."

Plays Like Artist Born

Mr. Tortelier commands all the requirements of virtuosity. His bowing is even, his tone smooth in all registers, his chord-playing is like velvet, and his intonation is remarkably accurate. What is more, he plays with the unobtrusive assurance and good taste of a born artist. The only discernible flaw was occasional "scooping" of wide intervals. He was, happily, received by the Friday audience with unusual warmth.

Florent Schmitt's barbarically colored setting of the 47th Psalm must have been electrifying more than 30 years ago, when it was new. Even today, when orchestral and choral brilliance and sustained fortissimo are the small change of composition, many pages of the work are truly powerful. Schmitt had not found his own voice, but he had chosen excellent models: Wagner and the French impressionists. Naturally, in the hands of a talented young composer these materials were put to good use. The music sounds well, if too long and too noisily. The chorus yesterday was the Cecilia Society, trained by Arthur Fiedler, and the soprano soloist Miss Beal Hober. Vigor rather than subtlety were the main points of their performances.

"Francesca" Pale Imitation

"Francesca da Rimini," last played by the Boston Symphony in January, 1932, has much in common with Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet." But where the gifted Russian created a masterpiece around the tale of the Veronese lovers, "Francesco da Rimini" is a pale imitation. The forthright invention and irresistible melody, the adjustment of length to substance, and the miraculous characterization of "Romeo and Juliet" are almost entirely absent in "Francesca." The music of the brawling Capulets and Montagues, for example, is both expressive and good music; Tchaikovsky's orchestral tumult, whereby he wanted to suggest the unabating winds of the second circle in Dante's Inferno, is as naive as a Dore picture—which, indeed, the composer had in mind.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra were at their best throughout the program. If masterly performances could elevate inferior compositions above their own shortcomings, these of yesterday would have done so.

Next week E. Power Biggs will be soloist in the first performances of Leo Sowerby's Organ Concerto; the program will include the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven and the B-flat Symphony by Robert Schumann.

C. W. D.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

APR 14 1938

Gaston D. Bladet.

Boston, April 13.—(AP.)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a flutist in 1923 after he had gained fame as a virtuoso in Europe, died today after a long illness.

Painting was Bladet's avocation and his canvases have received high praise.

EASTER STRAWS AT SYMPHONY CONCERT

B. Her. April 15/38

MISS NANCY COCHRANE

MRS. FRANCIS P. SEARS JR.

MISS REINETTE PLIMPTON

Yesterday's summer-like sun brought a veritable Easter parade of smart Spring suits to Symphony Hall for this week's "Friday afternoon concert," put ahead a day in observance of Good Friday. From left to right, Miss Nancy Cochrane, daughter of Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman Jr. of Commonwealth av., arrives in a fetching wide-brimmed black straw and slim black suit; Mrs. Francis P. Sears Jr. of Mt. Vernon st. wears a fascinating Parisian straw tied up in a navy veil, rose-red flowers on it to match her red and beige checked suit; Miss Reinette Plimpton of Brookline, a small suave cloche in dark blue to accent her knitted tailleur.

PENSION FUND CONCERT SOLOIST

Jeanette Vreeland, soprano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's "Missa Solennis," which will be presented at Symphony Hall, Tuesday evening, April 26, for the orchestra's pension fund.

Monitor April 20/38

The Arts in Boston

Jeannette Vreeland

Soloist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Production of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," at Symphony Hall Next Tuesday Evening, for the Benefit of Its Pension Fund

---

WORCESTER, MASS.

TELEGRAM

APR 14 1938

BOSTON

SYMPHONY PLAYER DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

BOSTON, April 13 (AP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a flutist [illegible] after he had gained fame as a virtuoso in Europe, died today after a long illness.

Painting was Bladet's avocation and his canvases have received high praise. He leaves his widow and a son, also a musician. Bladet was born in Bordeaux, France.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

MORNING UNION

APR 14 1938

BOSTON, April 13 (AP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a flutist [illegible] he had gained fame as a virtuoso in Europe, died today after a long illness.

B. Her. MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 22nd concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Paul Tortelier, 'cellist, was the soloist. In the concluding number the orchestra was assisted by the Cecilia Society chorus, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, and Beal Hober, soprano. The program was as follows:

Tchaikovsky....."Francesca da Rimini," Orchestral Fantasia after Dante, Op. 32
Hartmann..Concerto for 'cello and orchestra Op. 57
Schmitt..Psalm 47 for orchestra, organ, chorus and solo voice, Op. 38

Dr. Koussevitzky brought out some unfamiliar music for this concert, none of it ultra-modern. Thomas de Hartmann is evidently a composer who does not care for the contemporary idiom in any of its manifestations. Of course the 'cello is not an instrument which lends itself to this form of expression. It is too richly emotional when treated sympathetically. An instrument's natural qualities need not stand in a composer's way, since, after all, Chopin wrote his singing melodies for the uncompromising piano.

Mr. de Hartmann, however, did no violence to the 'cello's normal tendencies. His concerto, which was given its first performance yesterday, is a conventional work of the old Russian national school. The influence of Moussorgsky and of Rimsky-Korsakov is not one to be ashamed of, and, without exploring new paths, Mr. de Hartmann has written an effective and an agreeable work for an instrument which has few successful concertos.

The slow movement suggests an ecclesiastical scene by its harmonies, and we gather that outside the church it is winter—this fact conveyed by the discreet introduction of sleigh bells. The whole concerto is well written and is not long-winded, the danger of all works for 'cello. Mr. Tortelier, the soloist and a member of the orchestra, proved himself to be a brilliant performer. His tone is beautiful, his dexterity all that could be required. In addition he has the fire and enthusiasm of youth. In a word, he played superbly.

If the Hartmann Concerto was conventional in many ways, the Tchaikovsky "Francesca da Rimini" seemed thoroughly dated. It is a bombastic and a boring work, relieved for a while by the middle section until that, too, becomes tedious. We cordially approve the revival of a composer's less well known works, especially when that composer is as over-played as are Tchaikovsky's last three symphonies; but we confess that Dr. Koussevitzky would have done well to have left "Francesca da Rimini" on the shelves.

Somerset Maugham's recent autobiography contains an anecdote of a devout, though eccentric, Englishman who conducted religious services in his own house. He carefully excised al lthe passages in the Book of Common Prayer which praised God, because he felt that it was vulgar to praise any one to his face. Florent Schmitt clearly would not have agreed with this attitude, for in setting the 47th Psalm to music he has praised God lustily and with no squeamish misgivings.

This work is considered to be Schmitt's first really individual composition. He has always been fond of massive effects and complex writing. He indulges in both these habits with a vigor that carries us with him. The music suits its subject. It is exciting, and there is a contrasting section of sensuous beauty. It may not have been a work in the mood of preparation for Good Friday, but it will certainly not be amiss on Easter Saturday.

It is no easy task to sing this music. Nevertheless the Cecilia Society, which Mr. Fiedler had trained, sang extremely well. The chorus had, besides the necessary technical skill, the power to bring off the many climaxes which Schmitt demanded. Miss Beal Hober acquitted herself very well in the solo part. The orchestra, under Dr. Koussevitzky played magnificently.

---

ming
w give cour

y Members Attend

9

Dr. Koussevitzky and Orchestra Win Usual Thunderous Applause

Among Those Noted in Audience Are Miss Constance Turner and Her Mother, Mrs. Howard C. Turner, and Miss Caroline Oveson

B. Her. By ALISON ARNOLD April 15/38

Friday afternoons, red letter dates on the calendars of Boston society, are synonymous with Symphony concerts, but because of Good Friday, today's concert took place yesterday. The program opened with Tchaikovsky's stirring orchestral fantasia, "Francesca da Rimini," and Dr. Koussevitzky received his usual thunderous applause. Then came the first performance of Thomas de Hartmann's Concerto for Violincello and Orchestra, with Paul Tortelier, to whom it was dedicated, as soloist. The final number was Florent Schmitt's Psalm XLVII, for Orchestra, Organ, Chorus and Solo Voice, with Beal Hober, the soprano soloist, and Mr. Arthur Fiedler conducting.

The balmy spring sunshine brought out a stunning array of new costumes, and the gay throng strolling about the foyer during the intermission resembled mannequins at a preview of Easter fashions. Navy blue, always a springtime favorite, was much in evidence, often combined with pink. Miss Constance Turner, who attended with her mother, Mrs. Howard C. Turner, was most attractive in navy with touches of shell pink, and Miss Caroline Oveson wore a smart straw sailor of dusty pink with her navy blue ensemble. Mrs. Charles F. Hovey's slim navy coat was belted with pink, and her navy hat was adorned with a cluster of pale pink flowers. In a navy frock sprinkled with pink pin dots was Mrs. Charles P. Howard, and Mrs. Thomas N

Dabney (Betty Soule), who sat with her aunt, Mrs. Charles Goddard Weld, had a fetching pink bow on her navy hat.

Mrs. Ralph Hornblower wore a slate gray suit, and her matching hat had a bow of cherry red. Mrs. Moses Williams, Jr., who is sailing tomorrow for Bermuda, wore with her black coat, an intriguing little printed turban, and Mrs. Henry Prout's straw sailor, that she wore with her navy blue coat, was trimmed with bright field flowers. With her Oxford gray tailleur that had narrow white pencil stripes, Mrs. William B. Long wore a frilled blouse of powder blue and a smart red sailor.

Sitting in the very front row, all in green, with a tiny pill-box hat tied under her chin, was Miss Phyllis Childs. With Mrs. Allan Forbes, who wore a silver fox scarf and a jaunty hat of natural straw with her black frock, was her daughter, Miss Phyllis Forbes, who wore a string of pearls with her simple black frock. Miss Nancy Cochrane, wearing with her black frock a silver fox scarf and a huge cartwheel hat of rough black straw with a single gardenia on the brim and another on the long streamer, attended with her stepfather, Mr. Dudley L. Pickman, Jr.

Chatting together during the intermission were Miss Eleanor Frothingham, wearing a cunning black hat with her gray tailleur, Miss Jenny McKean, in navy with lighter blue accessories, and Miss Marjorie Motley, in gray. Miss Betty Albers was very pretty in a straw poke bonnet and a gay print, and Miss Lucile Swift wore black with a striking cerise turban from which a long scarf trailed and wound about her throat.

Mrs. George Putnam, in a dark print, was discussing the concert with Mrs. Richard Ely Danielson, impeccably tailored in black and white. Mrs. Edward A. Taft wore touches of yellow with her navy blue ensemble, and Mrs. A. L. West Movius had a fluffy gray chrysanthemum on her black toque. Mrs. Guy Warren Walker was in black with white pin dots and Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson was trimly tailored in navy.

Mrs. Galen Stone was one of the early arrivals, wearing a sable scarf with her black costume. Mrs. Barrett Wendell sat down near the front as usual, and nearby was Mrs. Robert H. Morris, whose costume combined navy with Paris tan. Mrs. Hugh Bancroft, who has recently returned from the south, was being greeted by her many friends. Attending with Mrs. Paul Foster Clark was Mrs. Malcolm Jenney, and with Mrs. Frank H. Stewart was her daughter, Mrs. Lawrence Black.

Among the many others present were Mrs. Rufus Hale and her small son, Mrs. Otis Russell, Mrs. Francis MacVeagh, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. Sydney Harwood, Mrs. Willis P. Beal, Mrs. James J. Minot, Jr., Mrs. Francis Hastings, Mrs. Morgan Harris, Mrs. George Megrew and her daughter, Miss Jane Megrew, Mrs. Roland Nickerson, Mrs. Horace H. Soule, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt, Mrs. Morton Prince, Mrs. Robert Cushman, Mrs. Francis W. Palfrey, Miss Elizabeth C. Leland, Mrs. Harry B. Stebbins, Mrs. Harold G. Arnold, Mrs. Charles Gaston Smith, Miss Jeannie Dupee, Miss Reinette Plimpton, Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French, Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Mrs. James J. Phelan and Miss Florence Viaux

---

B. Globe MUSIC April 15/38

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Since today is Good Friday, the week's afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was played yesterday. The evening concert will, as usual, be given on Saturday. Dr. Koussevitzky had assembled one of the most curious programs within memory, a program boasting not a single masterpiece and containing as nearest approach to Easter music the stentorian setting by Florent Schmitt of the 47th Psalm. The afternoon began with Tchaikovsky's fantasia, "Francesca da Rimini," and continued with a new Cello Concerto by Thomas de Hartmann, which, though it was performed for the first time, will be remembered only because it introduced as soloist the Boston Symphony's new virtuoso, Paul Tortelier.

Mr. Tortelier, a boyish-looking musician of 24, joined the 'cello section of the orchestra at the beginning of this season. As he proved yesterday in a superb exhibition of his technical resources, he is a valuable addition to a choir that already includes such artists as Mr. Bedetti and Mr. Zighera.

Hartmann's Concerto was dedicated to Mr. Tortelier, whose loving performance was more than the weak, imitative music warranted. The work, set conventionally in three movements, echoes the Russian "Five" and other creative talents, displays a fondness for modal harmonies, and although it provides "grateful" passages for the solo instrument, is repetitious and dull. The 'cello literature is not too extensive, and each time a new Concerto bobs over the horizon a good many of us hope anew that it will prove a masterpiece. Alas! We are again left to murmur, with Tristan, "Die alte Weise."

Plays Like Artist Born

Mr. Tortelier commands all the requirements of virtuosity. His bowing is even, his tone smooth in all registers, his chord-playing is like velvet, and his intonation is remarkably accurate. What is more, he plays with the unobtrusive assurance and good taste of a born artist. The only discernible flaw was occasional "scooping" of wide intervals. He was, happily, received by the Friday audience with unusual warmth.

Florent Schmitt's barbarically colored setting of the 47th Psalm must have been electrifying more than 30 years ago, when it was new. Even today, when orchestral and choral brilliance and sustained fortissimo are the small change of composition, many pages of the work are truly powerful. Schmitt had not found his own voice, but he had chosen excellent models: Wagner and the French impressionists. Naturally, in the hands of a talented young composer these materials were put to good use. The music sounds well, if too long and too noisily. The chorus yesterday was the Cecilia Society, trained by Arthur Fiedler, and the soprano soloist Miss Beal Hober. Vigor rather than subtlety were the main points of their performances.

"Francesca" Pale Imitation

"Francesca da Rimini," last played by the Boston Symphony in January, 1932, has much in common with Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet." But where the gifted Russian created a masterpiece around the tale of the Veronese lovers, "Francesco da Rimini" is a pale imitation. The forthright invention and irresistible melody, the adjustment of length to substance, and the miraculous characterization of "Romeo and Juliet" are almost entirely absent in "Francesca." The music of the brawling Capulets and Montagues, for example, is both expressive and good music; Tchaikovsky's orchestral tumult, whereby he wanted to suggest the unabating winds of the second circle in Dante's Inferno, is as naive as a Dore picture—which, indeed, the composer had in mind.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra were at their best throughout the program. If masterly performances could elevate inferior compositions above their own shortcomings, those of yesterday would have done so.

Next week E. Power Biggs will be soloist in the first performances of Leo Sowerby's Organ Concerto; the program will include the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven and the B-flat Symphony by Robert Schumann.

C. W. D.

HARTFORD, CONN.

COURANT

APR 14 1938

Gaston D. Bladet.

Boston, April 13.—(AP.)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, who joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a flutist in 1923 after he had gained fame as a virtuoso in Europe, died today after a long illness.

Painting was Bladet's avocation and his canvases have received high praise.

(10)

Symphony Concert

B. Trans. April 15/38

Music by Tchaikovsky, Hartmann and Schmitt, With Paul Tortelier as Brilliant Soloist

By MOSES SMITH

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has a deserved reputation for skilfully made and stimulating programs. Like every artist, though, he has his off days. And one of them was when he constructed the program of this week's concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first of which was played, by exception, yesterday afternoon instead of this afternoon to avoid the coincidence with Good Friday. The evening concert will as customarily be played tomorrow. The program began with Tchaikovsky's "Francesca da Rimini," proceeded to a new 'Cello Concerto by Thomas de Hartmann, a Russian emigre now resident in Paris, and ended with Florent Schmitt's "Psalm XLVII," the magnificent performance of which was some compensation for the prevailing dullness of the first half of the program.

It ought to be explained at once that the musical performance was at all times of the high standard associated with the concerts of the Boston Orchestra. In Tchaikovsky's tone-poem about the ill-starred lovers described by Dante there was much to appeal to the imagination of the conductor and to elicit the splendid tonal colors of the orchestra. The performance was certainly con amore. And there are pages in the score which stir the listener. But they are for the most part obscured or forgotten among many others that are dull, banal and repetitious—pages of music in which the composer attempts to say what he said much better in the Fourth Symphony, or in which he says what he also said in the "1812" Overture, with about the same lack of restraint and taste.

The main reason for playing the Hartmann Concerto apparently was that it was dedicated to the soloist of the occasion, Paul Tortelier, member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since the beginning of the present season. That is scarcely a sufficient reason even if it is reinforced by the prestige of "first performance." The music left the listener with no clear impression because it was itself confused—without a consistent style, a patchwork of reminiscences, which succeeded each other too quickly for the hearer to be able to identify them. What Mr. Burk's program note called the "large" orchestra (though, aside from a considerable and noisy percussion section, it was scarcely of moderate size) is employed to almost as little effect as the accompaniments for a hundred students' concertos, written to "display" the solo instrument.

The composer may take whatever credit there is in the fact that he did here display the solo 'cello. He and we listeners were fortunate yesterday in the soloist of the occasion. Through private sources the word had got about that Mr. Tortelier is a 'cellist of more than ordinary distinction. That was soon apparent yesterday, when he played with consummate virtuosity, great beauty of tone and surprisingly beautiful style. His phrasing had both a breadth and an aristocracy that are uncommon nowadays. The pity was that his qualities did not serve a music intrinsically more attractive.

Florent Schmitt's "Psalm" is remarkable in that through most of the thirty-odd minutes required for its performance both orchestra and chorus are producing tone with full strength, yet the music usually avoids sheer noisiness. This phenomenon is partly due to the fact that the composer was master of both media. In addition he had something to say that was worth musical expression. He was seized by the grandeur and power of the Psalm, and his music communicated his excitement to the listener. One can hardly call his utterance original; yet there is no music quite like it.

Yesterday's performance of the Psalm had the advantage not only of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing with verve and brilliance, but also of Arthur Fiedler's singers of the Cecilia Society, singing with the great resonance and expressiveness required by the music. There was also a fortunate contribution from the solo soprano, Beal Hober, who revealed a beautiful voice more than adequate to the many and severe demands made upon it by the composer.

News of Music

Choral and Operatic Music to Be Performed at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

B. Trans. April 9/38

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, which will be given at Tanglewood on Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, will open with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the chorus to be Arthur Fiedler's Cecilia Society. The Wagnerian program, which will probably open the second week, will consist of the final scene of "Die Walkuere" and the entire third act of "Siegfried." By including a choral and an operatic program in the Festival, hitherto strictly orchestral, the double management is thus progressing in the direction many have hoped for it—a varied repertory such as has characterized the great European festivals. Further than this the management evidently felt it could not go. The realization of a new and permanent structure to house the Festival—"Shed" it is called—is in itself rightly believed to be a huge step forward from the status of last year. Those who like to believe that this year's festival ought somehow to reflect reversely conditions abroad, resulting in some sort of debacle at Salzburg, may take whatever comfort they may find in the observation that the two programs aforementioned were evidently not determined until the last week or two.

The soloists for those programs have not yet been definitely selected. As to the orchestral concerts, the fare will include the Beethoven "Pastoral" Symphony, repeated from last year very likely because it is so consonant with the festival's setting. There will be a Brahms symphony, Tchaikovsky's Sixth and Sibelius's First. Among the shorter works will be the Brahms-Haydn Variations, "Tapiola" by Sibelius, "La mer" by Debussy, "Ma mere l'oye" by Ravel, Rimsky-Korsakov's "Caprice espagnole," Respighi's "Pines of Rome" (probably) and Prokofiev's "Kije" Suite. American composers will be represented trebly: Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theater," Walter Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and a composition of Henry Hadley, to honor the memory of the composer and conductor who originated the Berkshire Festival.

It will be seen that Dr. Koussevitzky is here ignoring neither contemporary music nor the music of American composers. It is a healthy portent for an American festival, which next season, by the present signs, will be at least three weeks long.

The annual competition for a Mason and Hamlin piano will be held at the New England Conservatory of Music in Jordan Hall tomorrow afternoon, beginning at 2.30. There will be five contestants, each playing a number by Bach, a movement from a Beethoven Sonata and a third selection of his own choosing. The judges will be Serge Koussevitzky, Ernest Schelling and Walter Piston. Admission is free to the public.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Report of Progress—Building of Shed Begun—Programs Are Set

B. Trans. April 1938

By OLIN DOWNES

THE music editor of THE TIMES has been mildly taken to task for a remark in a recent article on American music festivals. In that article he said, en passant, that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would have developed even more rapidly than it has if the wishes of Dr. Koussevitzky had been followed. The retort courteous to this observation has been made in the form of some special announcements from the management of this festival given annually at Stockbridge, Mass., by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

First and foremost is the news of the actual erection of the new Music Shed, which seats an audience of 5,000 people in a spacious and comfortable way. This edifice, soon to be completed, covers an acre and a half of ground, is surrounded by an arcade twenty-seven feet wide, and open at the sides to the Summer air. This auditorium, as the plan shows, has excellent sight-lines, and it will be subjected to final tests for acoustics next July 1. The expert engaged for this task is Professor Richard Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

* * *

The construction of the Shed follows the gift made last season to the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Tanglewood, the country estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks. With this gift the Boston Symphony acquired a permanent home for its festival, a place gloriously situated and landscaped and an ideal environment for artistic performance. The Music Shed is designed not only for the practical purposes of an appropriate auditorium, but also as an edifice that will harmonize with its surroundings. Its steel structure is now complete, and its roof going on. It was started last Jan. 1, and it has risen in response to the growth and the pressing needs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

That festival has developed with impressive public support from recent and very modest beginnings. It was inaugurated by the late Henry Hadley in 1934 as a step toward his conception of an American music festival. Three open-air concerts with players from the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra were given. Mr. Hadley gave his utmost to the plan. In 1936 Dr. Koussevitzky and his players assembled, and the public response to their efforts at once established the logic of the undertaking. Three concerts were given in 1936, and six, in two weeks, in 1937. Meanwhile, in those four years, the attendance had doubled, from 2,500 to over 5,000 a concert. It was evident that the public which assembles at Stockbridge for the festival was behind the institution, and was prepared, in large and increasing numbers, to support it. The festival will be extended next year.

Last season Stockbridge experienced a beneficent catastrophe—the cloudburst, which showed the indispensability, for shelter as well as the desirable acoustics, of a great roofed building. The storm made such a clamor that the orchestra could not be heard; much less could the music transmitted by radio. As for the guests, they were marooned under the tent, helpless, till a late hour, to cross shallow, swirling currents of water.

* * *

A music shed had been virtually decided upon, considerably in advance of this event, which, nevertheless, appears to have had an effect of precipitation. The fact that delightful weather had attended the former season's concerts was evidently not a guarantee against a repetition of the catastrophe. Furthermore, despite surprisingly good acoustics secured within the tent last season, it was realized that a more substantial structure would meet this requirement as no canvas structure ever could do; $81,000 of the $100,000 which the structure costs has been raised. A remarkable response to the announcements of the concerts of next August has taken place; 108 of the 160 boxes have already been sold, while patrons of last year and new ones of the season to come have placed their applications for seats. The concerts next August will be given on the 4th, 6th, 7th and 11th, 13th and 14th of that month. The works to be included in the programs are Beethoven's Sixth and Ninth symphonies, Sibelius's First and Tchaikovsky's Sixth symphonies, a Brahms symphony, to be selected; a Wagner program, drawn from the operas "Walkuere" and "Siegfried"; the Brahms-Haydn Variations, Sibelius's "Tapiola," Debussy's "La Mer," Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kitej," Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Rhapsody," Ravel's "Mother Goose," Copland's "Music for the Theatre" and Walter Piston's "Concerto for Orchestra." Other compositions are to be announced.

* * *

Thus Dr. Koussevitzky's plans for a festival to be systematically extended in its scope and character do advance, and promise always more for the future. It is rather appalling to read that in 1937 over 2,400 automobiles from nearly every one of the United States parked near the scene of the concerts; and "all had left within twenty minutes after," and that "more extended facilities are being prepared for this year." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is thus up and coming. It is a membership corporation, none of whose officers receive a salary, while the work of promotion is done by local and State committees.

The festival looks confidently ahead and plans optimistically for the future. It has now an established base. "The trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are working in the closest cooperation and they will broaden the program of the festivals as the public demands. With the New York Fair in 1939 it may be expected that a greater program will be developed." It is eminently fitting that these things should transpire in a time when America is realizing herself anew in her thought and her art.

B. Her. April 19/38

SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The sixth and final concert of this season in the Monday-Tuesday series was given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, last night in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Symphony No. 1 in C major, Opus 21 ..... Beethoven
Nocturnes ..... Debussy
Nuages
Fetes
Symphony No. 2 in D mayor, Opus 73 ..... Brahms

Last night's program of favorite symphonic scores made a good concluding concert for the Monday-Tuesday series, and a large audience gave ample evidence of appreciating both the music and the performance. The Haydn-like first symphony of Beethoven always is delightfully refreshing, and for this concert Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians gave their usual excellent performance. The wind instruments were well balanced with the strings in this convincing reading of the score—a happy result which is not always evident in a performance of this symphony.

The Debussy nocturnes came as a good contrast to the two symphonies on last night's program. In this music, with its subtle impressionism, the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky were at their best. The performance was always in the best of taste, never becoming sentimental or lacking restraint.

For the conclusion of this last program Dr. Koussevitzky presented a superb reading of the Brahms Second Symphony. This genial music always is a pleasure, and such a vital performance as last night's gave added beauty to these pages.

This past season the management inaugurated the idea of repeating the Monday programs for the Tuesday series. The plan was so successful that we wonder why it was not tried before. There is no repetition of patrons of the two series, and this idea gave opportunity for presenting more interesting programs than formerly as well as the obvious advantages to a busy orchestra.

W. J. S.

FINAL MONDAY NIGHT CONCERT

Symphony to Repeat List This Afternoon

B. Post April 19/38

When the Symphony Concert of last evening has been repeated this afternoon that which is now known as the "shorter series" will have come to a close, while but two more pairs of the regular concerts remain. This year for the first time the Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon series were grouped as six pairs of concerts with the same programme, an arrangement so sensible that the wonder is that it was not tried before.

For the most part the concerts thus paired have offered a soloist who did not appear in the regular series, and consequently at least one item on the programme would have distinctive interest. For the most part, however, and there is no reason why this should not be so, these programmes have been culled from those already offered during the season. This was the case last evening. For beginning came the First Symphony of Beethoven receiving the same brilliant performance that was accorded it when Dr. Koussevitzky, on a Friday and Saturday, grouped the First Symphonies of Beethoven, Sibelius and Walter Piston. Not another first symphony this time, but a second, the D major of Brahms with which Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra are dependably eloquent, made the end, and between these extremes came music quite remote in spirit and execution from either, Debussy's Nocturnes, "Clouds" and "Festivals." And yet the fragile "Clouds," not to mention its brilliant companion, seemed more fortunately placed last evening than when not long ago they were preceded and also rather swamped by the First Symphony of Mahler. The orchestral playing last evening was throughout of a high order and the audience was correspondingly enthusiastic.

SOWERBY CONCERTO ON SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Serge Koussevitzky announces the program for the last pair of concerts but one of the present season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concerts will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon, April 22, and Saturday evening, April 23. The opening number will be the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven in B flat major. Dr. Koussevitzky will present for the first time the concerto for organ and orchestra by Leo Sowerby, in which the solo part will be played by E. Power Biggs, the English organist now living in this country, who has just completed a cycle of the organ works of Bach, under the auspices of Harvard College. Leo Sowerby, a native of Grand Rapids, Mich., is well known by the numerous performances of his works. His "Prairie," and his Second Piano Concerto have been performed at Boston Symphony concerts. The closing number will be the First Symphony of Schumann in B flat, known as the "Spring" Symphony.

Boston Symphony Ends Extra Series

B. Trans. April 19/38

The magnificent roster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was in eloquent evidence at the final Monday concert in Symphony Hall last night, when the program, repeated this afternoon, including Beethoven's First Symphony, "Clouds" and "Festivals" by Debussy, and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

Dr. Koussevitzky's fare for the evening has been heard at recent concerts and was reviewed at length in these columns. It suffices to report that in the Debussy Nocturnes there was a shimmering, sensuous tone evoked from the winds as well as from the strings, and that Debussy's warm, supple colors were revealed in all their splendor. The Brahms Symphony had sufficient breadth, even though Dr. Koussevitzky indulged in some aberrations with regard to detail and the brasses often attacked badly. But the playing was rousing and beautiful, and stirring in the fanfare at the end.

The performance of the Beethoven Symphony was slightly heavy-handed, emphasizing detail to the point of suppressing the humor. But the concert, on the whole, reminded one again and again of Dr. Koussevitzky's remarkable sense of orchestral timbre and his flare for making music grandiloquently.

A. W. H.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

April 19/38

Opens at the Wilbur

Composer and Soloist

Leo Sowerby (Left), Whose Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, in C Major, Will Have Its First Performances at This Week's Boston Symphony Concerts, With E. Power Biggs (Right) as the Organist is that there are no men in the cast, and it is Miss Boothe's clever manipulation of this situation which accounts for most of the play's originality.

These are nasty, unhealthy people, however, and a play about them cannot help being the same. While completely in favor of protecting minority rights, we wonder whether Miss Boothe hasn't wasted too much time and wit on this group.

J. D. B.

Monday Symphonies Concluded

The final evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Monday-Tuesday series was given last night in Symphony Hall before the customary large and applausive audience.

Dr. Koussevitzky had chosen for this concluding concert the First Symphony of Beethoven, Debussy's Nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fêtes," and the Second Symphony of Brahms. The mastery of the conductor and the orchestra in these familiar masterpieces is too well known to need emphasis.

It is pleasant to report that this series (which ends this afternoon) has been markedly successful this year. The policy of devoting these programs to outstanding works of the Friday-Saturday series of subscription concerts appears to have met with cordial public approval.

Direct Quotation ✓

B. Trans.

Mar. 28/38

Far from holding any grudge against the Bostonian public, Serge Prokofiev believes his music has been well served here, and he was delighted with his stay, terminating in the second symphony concert over which he presided on Saturday evening.

"Before leaving Boston," he told George Judd, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, "I hope to be understood correctly when I say that perhaps nowhere in the United States has my music received such many-sided representation. For this, for the unexcelled virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for the gratifying interest on the part of the Boston audience may I extend my most cordial thanks."

The statement may well be construed as a close to the "incident," caused by reports in Boston morning newspapers last Wednesday to the effect that Prokofiev was piqued because some of his larger and more serious works had been badly received here or neglected.

Pension Fund
Other Musical Events

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

PROMINENT among the limited but varied assortment of music events which color the spring season is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert.

The concert will take place this year on April 26, when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the choruses of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society in the performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Soloists announced are Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; John Frisbe, tenor; Kathryn Meislé, contralto, and Mack Harrell, bass.

* * *

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY will conduct the last program in the subsidiary series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow evening and Tuesday afternoon.

The program will include Beethoven's First Symphony in C major; Debussy's "Clouds" and "Festivals"; and the Second Symphony of Brahms in D major.

* * *

THE CONCERTO for Organ and Orchestra by the American composer, Leo Sowerby, will be given its first performance under Dr. Koussevitzky at the regular pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts this weekend. E. Power Biggs will be the soloist.

The program will also include the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven in B-flat major and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony—his first.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST - GAZETTE
APR 12 1938

MARTINETS.

Going from the ridiculous to the sublime (just to be different) let us call your attention to the Bach Passion Music (St. Matthew) on WWSW's "Golden Hour" today, tomorrow and Thursday at 4 o'clock and on Friday at 1:45. The music will be played by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky ~~and will~~ be sung by the Harvard Glee Club.

THE BULLETIN OF THE BROOKLYN INSTITUTE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor

FINAL CONCERT OF THE SEASON

Friday Evening 8:30 o'clock April 1

OPERA HOUSE, ACADEMY OF MUSIC

SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS ARE NOW OPEN
FOR THE COMING SEASON, 1938-1939

Friday Evening	November 18
Friday Evening	January 6
Thursday Evening	February 9
Friday Evening	March 10
Friday Evening	March 31

SUBSCRIPTION FOR THE FIVE CONCERTS
$12.50, $10.00, $8.00, $7.00, $6.00, $5.00
BOXES: $15.00, $10.00, $8.00. NO TAX.

MAIL ORDERS WILL BE GIVEN PROMPT ATTENTION. COMMUNICATE WITH THE INSTITUTE BOX OFFICE FOR OPERA HOUSE SEATING PL

Prokofiev, Here for Concerts, Hopeful Over Music Trends

B. Trans. Mar. 24/38

Leading Russian Composer Says He Is Not a Communist but Is Satisfied with the Soviet

Serge Prokofiev, leading composer of Soviet Russia, is not a Communist, by his own word, but he is not dissatisfied with conditions of music and musicians in USR.

In Boston to give a sort of one-man show at the Boston Symphony concets on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening—playing the piano and conducting in a program of his own music—he said he was "too busy" to undertake the heavy demands made on a Communist in the Soviet Union.

He had some uncomplimentary things to say about audiences in general and Boston audiences in particular.

His programs for Friday and Saturday consists of four works which, he says, are not among his "most serious things." Two of the latter were played here in recent years without success—"Four Portraits" and the Fourth Symphony. The latter was commissioned for the fiftieth anniversary season of the Boston Orchestra but was greeted with the sneers accorded an art work written for an occasion. But Prokofiev says he had been working on it more than a year before he had received the commission from Dr. Koussevitzky.

Prokofiev's Third Symphony and "Chant Symphonique," which he regards among his best efforts, have not been given a chance in Boston. The Boston public will have little difficulty, he intimates, with the program of this week, consisting of two earlier works—the First Piano Concerto and Suite from the ballet, "Chout"—and two more recent but light compositions. One is the Second Suite from the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," which makes no attempt to be strictly symphonicc. The other is "Peter and the Wolf," a symphonic fairy tale written for children. The purpose was to acquaint children painlessly with the orchestral instruments. A narrator identifies the several instruments of the orchestra, each of which represents a given character throughout the composition. Richard Hale will be the narrator in Boston, employing an English translation of the original Russian.

Prokofiev speaks informatively and hopefully about contemporary trends in music, particularly in the Soviet Union. The problem there arises, he says, from the great new audiences filling concert halls and opera houses. Instead of giving these audiences simply a diet of the classics or current music written in the style of the classics, Russian composers are writing simple music but "in the idiom of our time." On that foundation the audiences can prepare for the more complicated music of the present day.

The films, Prokofiev said, are not merely an instrument of education; they are to be regarded as a contemporary form of art. The same goes for animated cartoons, which he thinks have a "very great future." The music for films, for the most part, still is unsatisfactory, he thinks, becaue, while Hollywood producers have got to the point of employing serious composers, they insist on music written in old-fashioned style.

"Snow White" he regards as a "marvellous picture, and the music is not very offending!"

B. U. Music Head Backs Boston Audiences

B. Am.

Dean Marshall Says Prokofieff Blast Is Mistake

March 23/38

"If the audience did not like his Fourth Symphony, I should be inclined to blame the symphony—not the audience."

This was the reply today of Dean John P. Marshall, head of the Boston University college of music, to Serge Prokofieff, famous modern Russian composer, who accused Boston music lovers of understanding only "childish" music.

Nettled at the reception given his Fourth Symphony here a few years ago, Prokofieff revealed upon his arrival in Boston that he had arranged a program of "simple music" to the "childish tastes of Boston's symphony-goers." He is scheduled to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

"SIMPLE EXPLANATIONS"

A storm of protest followed the Russian composer's remarks. And the latter added fuel to the fire by saying that Richard Hale, narrator, would explain his compositions at the concerts in words of two syllables.

Dean Marshall declared:

"The Boston Symphony audience, which seems to have provoked Serge Prokofieff to the extent that he feels compelled to seek revenge, is without doubt one of the most intelligent musical audiences in the world."

James A. Ecker, supervisor of music in the Boston schools, took up the cudgels for Boston, saying:

"Such an attitude on the part of the composer, however great, is impertinent and unfounded.

FREEDOM VITAL

"Freedom of taste is as important as freedom of speech, and no one person has a right to try to impose his individual taste upon a discriminating public."

Tribute to Prokofieff's genius was paid by Mrs. A. Lewis Armistead, who has always taken an active interest in musical activities in Boston, and who is herself a talented musician.

"This is very regreattable," she said. "I am a great admirer of Prokofieff, as are many other members of the Boston Symphony audiences.

"It is distressing that he should have been given such a false impression of the musical taste of the Boston Symphony audiences, which are more literate musically than those of any city in America."

—LIFT OPPRESSIVE TAXES—

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

April 19/38

Opens at the Wilbur

Composer and Soloist

Leo Sowerby (Left), Whose Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, in C Major, Will Have Its First Performances at This Week's Boston Symphony Concerts, With E. Power Biggs (Right) as the Organist

is that there are no men in the cast, and it is Miss Boothe's clever manipulation of this situation which accounts for most of the play's originality.

These are nasty, unhealthy people, however, and a play about them cannot help being the same. While completely in favor of protecting minority rights, we wonder whether Miss Boothe hasn't wasted too much time and wit on this group.

J. D. B.

Monday Symphonies Concluded

The final evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Monday-Tuesday series was given last night in Symphony Hall before the customary large and applausive audience.

Dr. Koussevitzky had chosen for this concluding concert the First Symphony of Beethoven, Debussy's Nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fêtes," and the Second Symphony of Brahms. The mastery of the conductor and the orchestra in these familiar masterpieces is too well known to need emphasis.

It is pleasant to report that this series (which ends this afternoon) has been markedly successful this year. The policy of devoting these programs to outstanding works of the Friday-Saturday series of subscription concerts appears to have met with cordial public approval.

Direct Quotation

B. Trans. Apr. 28/38

Far from holding any grudge against the Bostonian public, Serge Prokofiev believes his music has been well served here, and he was delighted with his stay, terminating in the second symphony concert over which he presided on Saturday evening.

"Before leaving Boston," he told George Judd, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, "I hope to be understood correctly when I say that perhaps nowhere in the United States has my music received such many-sided representation. For this, for the unexcelled virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for the gratifying interest on the part of the Boston audience may I extend my most cordial thanks."

St. George's, Bermuda—Barometer, 30.04; temperature, 60; cloudy, with wind from the northwest, velocity, 20 miles.

Almanac for Monday, March 28

Pension Fund Concert; Other Musical Events

By Ruth Marsters

Music Editor

PROMINENT among the limited but varied assortment of music events which color the spring season is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert.

The concert will take place this year on April 26, when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the choruses of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society in the performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Soloists announced are Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; John Frisbe, tenor; Kathryn Mieslé, contralto, and Mack Harrell, bass.

* * *

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY will conduct the last program in the subsidiary series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow evening and Tuesday afternoon.

The program will include Beethoven's First Symphony in C major; Debussy's "Clouds" and "Festivals"; and the Second Symphony of Brahms in D major.

* * *

THE CONCERTO for Organ and Orchestra by the American composer, Leo Sowerby, will be given its first performance under Dr. Koussevitzky at the regular pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts this week-end. E. Power Biggs will be the soloist.

The program will also include the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven in B-flat major and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony—his first.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST - GAZETTE

APR 12 1938

MARTINETS.

Going from the ridiculous to the sublime (just to be different) let us call your attention to the Bach Passion Music (St. Matthew) on WWSW's "Golden Hour" today, tomorrow and Thursday at 4 o'clock and on Friday at 1:45. The music will be played by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky ~~and will~~ be sung by the Harvard Glee Club.

THE BULLETIN OF THE BROOKLYN INSTITUTE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor

FINAL CONCERT OF THE SEASON

Friday Evening 8:30 o'clock April 1

OPERA HOUSE, ACADEMY OF MUSIC

SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS ARE NOW OPEN
FOR THE COMING SEASON, 1938-1939

Friday Evening	November 18
Friday Evening	January 6
Thursday Evening	February 9
Friday Evening	March 10
Friday Evening	March 31

SUBSCRIPTION FOR THE FIVE CONCERTS
$12.50, $10.00, $8.00, $7.00, $6.00, $5.00
BOXES: $15.00, $10.00, $8.00. NO TAX.

MAIL ORDERS WILL BE GIVEN PROMPT ATTENTION. COMMUNICATE WITH THE INSTITUTE BOX OFFICE FOR OPERA HOUSE SEATING PLAN

Prokofiev, Here for Con Hopeful Over Music Tr

tion, and have be having gettin
Nor
in

B. Trans. Mar. 24/38

Leading Russian Composer Says He Is Not a Communist but Is Satisfied with the Soviet

Serge Prokofiev, leading composer of Soviet Russia, is not a Communist, by his own word, but he is not dissatisfied with conditions of music and musicians in USR.

In Boston to give a sort of one-man show at the Boston Symphony concets on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening—playing the piano and conducting in a program of his own music—he said he was "too busy" to undertake the heavy demands made on a Communist in the Soviet Union.

He had some uncomplimentary things to say about audiences in general and Boston audiences in particular.

His programs for Friday and Saturday consists of four works which, he says, are not among his "most serious things." Two of the latter were played here in recent years without success —"Four Portraits" and the Fourth Symphony. The latter was commissioned for the fiftieth anniversary season of the Boston Orchestra but was greeted with the sneers accorded an art work written for an occasion. But Prokofiev says he had been working on it more than a year before he had received the commission from Dr. Koussevitzky.

Prokofiev's Third Symphony and "Chant Symphonique," which he regards among his best efforts, have not been given a chance in Boston. The Boston public will have little difficulty, he intimates, with the program of this week, consisting of two earlier works—the First Piano Concerto and Suite from the ballet, "Chout"—and two more recent but light compositions. One is the Second Suite from the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," which makes no attempt to be strictly symphonicc. The other is "Peter and the Wolf," a symphonic fairy tale written for children. The purpose was to acquaint children painlessly with the orchestral instruments. A narrator identifies the several instruments of the orchestra, each of which represents a given character throughout the composition. Richard Hale will be the narrator in Boston, employing an English translation of the original Russian.

Prokofiev speaks informatively and hopefully about contemporary trends in music, particularly in the Soviet Union. The problem there arises, he says, from the great new audiences filling concert halls and opera houses. Instead of giving these audiences simply a diet of the classics or current music written in the style of the classics, Russian composers are writing simple music but "in the idiom of our time." On that foundation the audiences can prepare for the more complicated music of the present day.

The films, Prokofiev said, are not merely an instrument of education; they are to be regarded as a contemporary form of art. The same goes for animated cartoons, which he thinks have a "very great future." The music for films, for the most part, still is unsatisfactory, he thinks, becaue, while Hollywood producers have got to the point of employing serious composers, they insist on music written in old-fashioned style.

"Snow White" he regards as a "marvellous picture, and the music is not very offending!"

B.U. Music Head Backs Boston Audiences

B. Am.

Dean Marshall Says Prokofieff Blast Is Mistake

March 23/38

"If the audience did not like his Fourth Symphony, I should be inclined to blame the symphony—not the audience."

This was the reply today of Dean John P. Marshall, head of the Boston University college of music, to Serge Prokofieff, famous modern Russian composer, who accused Boston music lovers of understanding only "childish" music.

Nettled at the reception given his Fourth Symphony here a few years ago, Prokofieff revealed upon his arrival in Boston that he had arranged a program of "simple music" to the "childish tastes of Boston's symphony-goers." He is scheduled to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

"SIMPLE EXPLANATIONS"

A storm of protest followed the Russian composer's remarks. And the latter added fuel to the fire by saying that Richard Hale, narrator, would explain his compositions at the concerts in words of two syllables.

Dean Marshall declared:

"The Boston Symphony audience, which seems to have provoked Serge Prokofieff to the extent that he feels compelled to seek revenge, is without doubt one of the most intelligent musical audiences in the world."

James A. Ecker, supervisor of music in the Boston schools, took up the cudgels for Boston, saying:

"Such an attitude on the part of the composer, however great, is impertinent and unfounded.

FREEDOM VITAL

"Freedom of taste is as important as freedom of speech, and no one person has a right to try to impose his individual taste upon a discriminating public."

Tribute to Prokofieff's genius was paid by Mrs. A. Lewis Armistead, who has always taken an active interest in musical activities in Boston, and who is herself a talented musician.

"This is very regreattable," she said. "I am a great admirer of Prokofieff, as are many other members of the Boston Symphony audiences.

"It is distressing that he should have been given such a false impression of the musical taste of the Boston Symphony audiences, which are more literate musically than those of any city in America."

—LIFT OPPRESSIVE TAXES—

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO

April 19/38

Opens at the Wilbur

Composer and Soloist

Leo Sowerby (Left), Whose Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, in C Major, Will Have Its First Performances at This Week's Boston Symphony Concerts, With E. Power Biggs (Right) as the Organist

is that there are no men in the cast, and it is Miss Boothe's clever manipulation of this situation which accounts for most of the play's originality.

These are nasty, unhealthy people, however, and a play about them cannot help being the same. While completely in favor of protecting minority rights, we wonder whether Miss Boothe hasn't wasted too much time and wit on this group.

J. D. B.

Monday Symphonies Concluded

The final evening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Monday-Tuesday series was given last night in Symphony Hall before the customary large and applausive audience.

Dr. Koussevitzky had chosen for this concluding concert the First Symphony of Beethoven, Debussy's Nocturnes, "Nuages" and "Fêtes," and the Second Symphony of Brahms. The mastery of the conductor and the orchestra in these familiar masterpieces is too well known to need emphasis.

It is pleasant to report that this series (which ends this afternoon) has been markedly successful this year. The policy of devoting these programs to outstanding works of the Friday-Saturday series of subscription concerts appears to have met with cordial public approval.

Direct Quotation

B. Trans. Mar. 28/38

Far from holding any grudge against the Bostonian public, Serge Prokofiev believes his music has been well served here, and he was delighted with his stay, terminating in the second symphony concert over which he presided on Saturday evening.

"Before leaving Boston," he told George Judd, manager of the Symphony Orchestra, "I hope to be understood correctly when I say that perhaps nowhere in the United States has my music received such many-sided representation. For this, for the unexcelled virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and for the gratifying interest on the part of the Boston audience may I extend my most cordial thanks."

Almanac for Monday, March 28

St. George's, Bermuda—Barometer 30.04; temperature, 60; cloudy, with wind from the northwest; velocity, 30 miles.

Pension Fund Concert, Other Musical Events

By Ruth Marsters

Music Editor

PROMINENT among the limited but varied assortment of music events which color the spring season is the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert.

The concert will take place this year on April 26, when Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the choruses of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society in the performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Soloists announced are Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; John Frisbe, tenor; Kathryn Mieslé, contralto, and Mack Harrell, bass.

* * *

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY will conduct the last program in the subsidiary series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow evening and Tuesday afternoon.

The program will include Beethoven's First Symphony in C major; Debussy's "Clouds" and "Festivals"; and the Second Symphony of Brahms in D major.

* * *

THE CONCERTO for Organ and Orchestra by the American composer, Leo Sowerby, will be given its first performance under Dr. Koussevitzky at the regular pair of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts this weekend. E. Power Biggs will be the soloist.

The program will also include the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven in B-flat major and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony—his

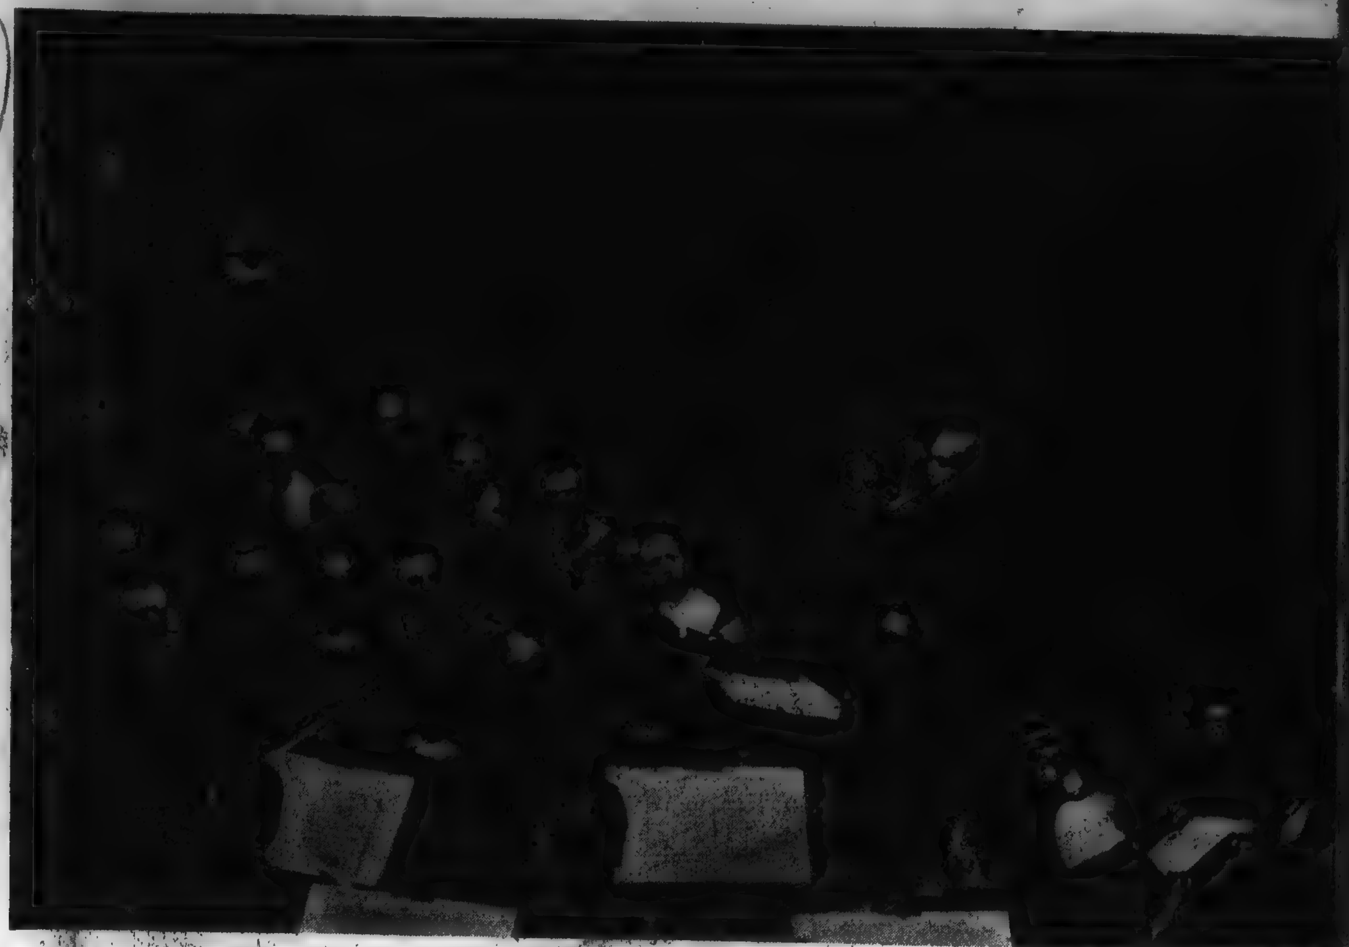
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST - GAZETTE
APR 12 1938

MARTINETS.

Going from the ridiculous to the sublime (just to be different) let us call your attention to the Bach Passion Music (St. Matthew) on WWSW's "Golden Hour" today, tomorrow and Thursday at 4 o'clock and on Friday at 1:45. The music will be played by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky and will be sung by the Harvard Glee Club.

THE BULLETIN OF THE BROOKLYN INSTITUTE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

11



The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor

FINAL CONCERT OF THE SEASON

Friday Evening 8:30 o'clock April 1

OPERA HOUSE, ACADEMY OF MUSIC

SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS ARE NOW OPEN
FOR THE COMING SEASON, 1938-1939

Friday Evening	November 18
Friday Evening	January 6
Thursday Evening	February 9
Friday Evening	March 10
Friday Evening	March 31

SUBSCRIPTION FOR THE FIVE CONCERTS
$12.50, $10.00, $8.00, $7.00, $6.00, $5.00
BOXES: $15.00, $10.00, $8.00. NO TAX.

MAIL ORDERS WILL BE GIVEN PROMPT ATTENTION. COMMUNICATE WITH THE INSTITUTE BOX OFFICE FOR OPERA HOUSE SEATING PLAN.

Prokofiev, Here for Con Hopeful Over Music Tr

tion, and have be having gettin
Nor
in

B. Trans. Mar. 24/38

Leading Russian Composer Says He Is Not a Communist but Is Satisfied with the Soviet

Serge Prokofiev, leading composer of Soviet Russia, is not a Communist, by his own word, but he is not dissatisfied with conditions of music and musicians in USR.

In Boston to give a sort of one-man show at the Boston Symphony concets on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening—playing the piano and conducting in a program of his own music—he said he was "too busy" to undertake the heavy demands made on a Communist in the Soviet Union.

He had some uncomplimentary things to say about audiences in general and Boston audiences in particular.

His programs for Friday and Saturday consists of four works which, he says, are not among his "most serious things." Two of the latter were played here in recent years without success—"Four Portraits" and the Fourth Symphony. The latter was commissioned for the fiftieth anniversary season of the Boston Orchestra but was greeted with the sneers accorded an art work written for an occasion. But Prokofiev says he had been working on it more than a year before he had received the commission from Dr. Koussevitzky.

Prokofiev's Third Symphony and "Chant Symphonique," which he regards among his best efforts, have not been given a chance in Boston. The Boston public will have little difficulty, he intimates, with the program of this week, consisting of two earlier works—the First Piano Concerto and Suite from the ballet, "Chout"—and two more recent but light compositions. One is the Second Suite from the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," which makes no attempt to be strictly symphonice. The other is "Peter and the Wolf," a symphonic fairy tale written for children. The purpose was to acquaint children painlessly with the orchestral instruments. A narrator identifies the several instruments of the orchestra, each of which represents a given character throughout the composition. Richard Hale will be the narrator in Boston, employing an English translation of the original Russian.

Prokofiev speaks informatively and hopefully about contemporary trends in music, particularly in the Soviet Union. The problem there arises, he says, from the great new audiences filling concert halls and opera houses. Instead of giving these audiences simply a diet of the classics or current music written in the style of the classics, Russian composers are writing simple music but "in the idiom of our time." On that foundation the audiences can prepare for the more complicated music of the present day.

The films, Prokofiev said, are not merely an instrument of education; they are to be regarded as a contemporary form of art. The same goes for animated cartoons, which he thinks have a "very great future." The music for films, for the most part, still is unsatisfactory, he thinks, becaue, while Hollywood producers have got to the point of employing serious composers, they insist on music written in old-fashioned style.

"Snow White" he regards as a "marvelous picture, and the music is not very offending."

U. Music Head Backs Boston Audiences

B. Am.

Dean Marshall Says Prokofieff Blast Is Mistake

March 23/38

"If the audience did not like his Fourth Symphony, I should be inclined to blame the symphony—not the audience."

This was the reply today of Dean John P. Marshall, head of the Boston University college of music, to Serge Prokofieff, famous modern Russian composer, who accused Boston music lovers of understanding only "childish" music.

Nettled at the reception given his Fourth Symphony here a few years ago, Prokofieff revealed upon his arrival in Boston that he had arranged a program of "simple music" to the "childish tastes of Boston's symphony-goers." He is scheduled to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon and Saturday night.

"SIMPLE EXPLANATIONS"

A storm of protest followed the Russian composer's remarks. And the latter added fuel to the fire by saying that Richard Hale, narrator, would explain his compositions at the concerts in words of two syllables.

Dean Marshall declared:

"The Boston Symphony audience, which seems to have provoked Serge Prokofieff to the extent that he feels compelled to seek revenge, is without doubt one of the most intelligent musical audiences in the world."

James A. Ecker, supervisor of music in the Boston schools, took up the cudgels for Boston, saying:

"Such an attitude on the part of the composer, however great, is impertinent and unfounded.

FREEDOM VITAL

"Freedom of taste is as important as freedom of speech, and no one person has a right to try to impose his individual taste upon a discriminating public."

Tribute to Prokofieff's genius was paid by Mrs. A. Lewis Armistead

Composer to Give Boston Only "Children's Music"

B. Globe March 23/38

Russia's Prokofieff to Retaliate For "Insult" His Fourth Symphony Received Here

SERGE PROKOFIEFF

Nettled at the reception given his Fourth Symphony by Boston's musical public a few years ago, Serge Prokofieff, who with Stravinsky heads the modern Russian school of composers, on his arrival at the Ritz-Carlton last night revealed to reporters a scheme of retaliation that only a temperamental genius could conceive.

Because "Boston does not understand" his serious music, Prokofieff, it turns out, has purposely chosen for his all-Prokofieff program with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening pieces which are, as he mockingly phrased it, "children's music."

"If the public in Boston cannot understand my serious music, why should I break my baton?" he demanded indignantly. "That's why I'm going to give them children's music. I'm not going to puzzle them, but give them simple things."

Fairy Tale With Narrator

Sure enough, right squat in the middle of his program is a piece called "Peter and the Wolf," an orchestral fairy tale originally written to teach Soviet children the various sounds of the orchestral instruments.

Just to make musical Boston's face even redder—a narrator, Richard Hale, will explain in words of two syllables—in English also—just what instrument is playing and what character it represents in the orchestral fairy tale.

Although this orchestral fairy tale is the crowning indignity that the composer is heaping upon Boston this week, there is no little irony in the other selections from his works chosen for his program for Boston.

For instance, he has chosen "Chout" as his first piece. And "Chout" means "The Buffoon" in English. It is a harsh satire originally composed for Diaghilev's ballet corps in Paris.

Then to give Boston's nose another tweak, his next selection, Piano Concerto No. 1 in D-flat major, opus 10, is the composition which won him the Rubinstein prize when he was only 19!

Having settled the concerto and children's music angles of his unique scheme of revenge, Mr. Prokofieff plans to "honor" musical Boston with a "first performance in America" a presentation of "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet, Second Suite, opus 64.

This ballet he described to reporters last night with a malicious gleam in his eye.

"'Romeo and Juliet'," he explained, "is treated without any complications. The harmonies and tones are treated much more simply than in a symphony."

In other words, he could have written its theme in a symphony but, as he kept reiterating, "Boston wouldn't understand it."

This "first performance in America" ballet composition really is the key to temperamental Mr. Prokofieff's wrath at Boston.

It seems that Dr. Kousseviksky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, commissioned him a year and a half before the 50th anniversary celebration of the orchestra to write a symphony in honor of the anniversary.

"So," said Prokofieff last night, "I had plenty of time to compose the symphony and composed it very slowly. But what happened? When it was played, the Boston public and the critics were very insulting. They not only didn't like it and didn't show any signs of understanding it, but they charged that I had composed it with too much haste.

"The fact of the matter is, four of my most important works have never been performed here in Boston. The two serious pieces that have been performed here—my Fourth Symphony in 'Four Portraits'—were not understood.

"So I give them simple things from now on!"

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

APR 6 - 1938

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Gives Last Concert of the Season

By G. Y. Loveridge

The Boston Symphony Orchestra said farewell for the season, in Metropolitan Theatre last night. The audience was not as large as for some of the four other concerts, but it was a demonstrative gathering, and loath to let Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his men depart.

The program was decidedly interesting. The first symphony by Beethoven and the first by Brahms were performed and two nocturnes by Debussy. There is not much question whose first symphony is the finer; Beethoven had Haydn and Mozart to lean on — and he did—while Brahms had them and Beethoven also—both an advantage and a handicap.

The Beethoven First, heard about as seldom as the Ninth, is a sprightly and tuneful work that almost anybody would enjoy. It carries its hundred-and-some years easily, and the rhythmic gaiety and melodic charm are as attractive as though they had been conceived but yesterday, though at the last count, there was nobody yesterday who could have conceived them. The antics of the almost boisterous finale were delightfully exploited by Dr. Koussevitzky. Genuine, unabashed heat, as the swing musicians say.

There could hardly be a stranger contrast than the Debussy "Nuages," which came next. The symphony was quite of this world; the nocturne was not. In imagery and utterance it proclaimed a different phase of the tonal art. Beethoven had set the pulses going; Debussy lulled and mystified. The curious fragments of melodies in English horn and viola, the haunting voices of the strings, the sense of lights and shadows were magical. The orchestra was brilliantly obediant to the will of its conductor.

"Fetes," in its own way, was quite as beautiful. The lively accents and the pleasant orchestral chatter kept one interested, and the procession, approaching in 'cellos, harps and trumpets, sweeping by and disappearing, was superb.

After the customary smoke-screen had been laid down by the audience the orchestra attacked the first symphony of Brahms. Here was a reading both poetic and muscular. In large outline and in detail it was, this department thought, one of the best performances of the season. The unhurried certainty of the composer, the serene contemplation that leans to austerity, were here displayed with profound effect. Perhaps one felt that sometimes Brahms approached, or announced, his ideas ponderously, but they are always solid ideas and worth contending with.

Brass and woodwinds were especially brilliant in the last movement, which rose by slow waves to a climax such as only the Boston Symphony can produce. Dr. Koussevitzky and the men were applauded again and again after this masterful performance.

The program:

Symphony No. 1 in C major, Op. 21 .... Beethoven
- I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
- II. Andante contabile con moto
- III. Menuetto: Allegro molto e vivace; trio
- IV. Finale: Adagio; Allegro molto e vivace

Two Nocturnes .... Debussy
- Nuages
- Fetes

Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68 .... Brahms
- I. Un poco sostenuto; Allegro
- II. Andante sostenuto
- III. Un poco allegretto e grazioso
- IV. Adagio; Allegro non troppo, ma con brio

Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give a recital with Elizabeth Siedhoff, pianist, in Plantations auditorium on Friday night.

Mr. Burgin was born in Warsaw in 1892. He took his first lessons on the violin when he was five, and at eight he became a pupil of Isidore Lotto. He went to Berlin with his father in 1902. There he played for Joachim, and impressed the great violinist so favorably that a scholarship from the Mendelssohn Fund was made available. Burgin studied two years in Berlin under the supervision of Joachim.

He came to this country at 13, and played in Carnegie hall. Then he went to Petrograd to study with Leopold Auer. After several seasons on the continent he returned here as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1920.

Miss Siedhoff, a pupil of Tobias Matthay, has given concerts and lecture recitals here and abroad.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

APR 9 - 1938

Music and The Drama

BOSTON SYMPHONY PERFORMS 1ST WORK OF PROF. PISTON, ROCKLAND NATIVE

BOSTON, April 8-AP-The first symphony of Prof. Walter Piston, chairman of the department of music at Harvard University, today received its first performance, at the hands of the expert Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sandwiched in the program between the first-born symphonies of a pair of musical giants—Beethoven and Sibelius—the new work, which was conducted by the composer, proved modern, vigorous, and architecturally sound, if not almost entirely lacking in melody.

Denying any "pictorial, narrative, political or philosophical intent," the author, who is a native of Rockland, Me., has the work begin somewhat irregularly and mysteriously with the main or "germinating" theme expressed by plucked strings of 'cellos and double basses.

At the close of the final movement—there are only three—this motif, which underlies the unfolding of the symphony, recurs in full statement by the brass. The reception was moderate.

Although the composer does not specify a key—"symphony" being its only title—Prof. Piston explained it could be called a "Symphony in C." He completed it last Autumn at his home in suburban Belmont. Hitherto he has composed mostly music for piano, quartets and trios. He is 44 years old.

Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's regular conductor, was on the podium for the Beethoven and Sibelius symphonies.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
APR 9 - 1938

Teacher's Symphony Played

BOSTON, April 8 (AP)—The first symphony of Professor Walter Piston, chairman of the department of music at Harvard University, today received its first performance, at the hands of the expert Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sandwiched in the program between the first-born symphonies of a pair of musical giants—Beethoven and Sibelius—the new work, which was conducted by the composer, proved modern, vigorous, and architecturally sound, if not almost entirely lacking in melody.

The work begins somewhat irregularly and mysteriously with the main or "germinating" theme expressed by plucked strings of 'cellos and double bases. At the close of the final movement—there are only three—this motif, which underlies the unfolding of the symphony, recurs in full statement by the brass. The reception was moderate.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

APR 10 1938

MISSA SOLEMNIS

A musical event of the season will be the revival after ten years of Beethoven's mighty choral work, the "Missasolemnis." The mass well be performed by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, in Symphony hall, on Tuesday evening, April 26th—the proceeds to be devoted to the Pension Fund of the orchestra. The chorus in full numbers of the Harvard Glee club and Radcliffe Choral society, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth, will assist, and likewise a quartet of soloists.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 6 - 1938

N. Y. CONCERTS O. K.; BOSTON ORCH 12G

Despite the lateness of the season, concert grosses in New York continued on the upbeat during the past week. Joining in the take were the Boston Symphony, the Philharmonic-Symph and Marian Anderson, Negro contralto.

Estimates for Last Week

Boston Symph. Orch, Carnegie Hall (2,760; $3.50-$1.50). Two concerts, Thursday night (31) and Saturday afternoon (2). Drew estimated $12,000; first performance was entirely subscription, second two-thirds; final appearance in New York for the season; Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Philharmonic-Symph, Carnegie Hall (2,760; $3-60c). Three concerts, Wednesday evening (30), Saturday night (2), and Sunday afternoon (3) drew good $12,100. John Barbirolli conducted; Mischa Levitzki soloist for one performance.

Marian Anderson, Town Hall (1,476; $3-$1). Negro contralto still showing herself one of the big draws with estimated gross of $3,200 (sellout) for one performance, Wednesday night (30). There were 100 standees and 90 seated on the stage.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

APR 11 1938

VIOLINIST OF SYMPHONY TO PLAY HERE

Samuel J. Leibovici, first violinist of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be the soloist at a musicale to be held Tuesday afternoon under the auspices of the Hadassah and Sisterhood of Temple Beth-El, at the Lowell Hebrew Community Centre. Mr. Leibovici has had a colorful musicale career as a violinist, and showed such remarkable ability as a child that he became a pupil at the Paris Conservatory and studied under the foremost French masters. After a brilliant career in France, Mr. Liebovici joined the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky, as first violinist.

Mrs. Gladys Siskind Troubin, who will accompany Mr. Liebovici, is also an accomplished musician and pianist. She has had much success throughout New England as an accompanist and soloist of unusual merit.

CONTINUED

The program to be presented tomorrow is outstanding in its musical value, and is as follows:—

GROUP I.

Romanza .... Beethoven
Praeludium and Allegro — Pugnani-Kreisler
Andante— Violin Concerto—Opus 64 — Mendelssohn

GROUP II.

Slavonic Dance No. 2 — Dvorak-Kreisler
Guitarre— Opus 45—No. 2 — M. Moszkowski
Danse Espagnole from "La Vida Breve" — Emmanuel De Falla-Kreisler
Liebeslied .... Kreisler
Liebesfreud .... Kreisler

The musical will follow the regular April business session. The meeting will have as a feature a linen shower at which each member will contribute some article in household linens to aid in replenishing Hadassah's supply in Palestine.

Following the musical, tea will be served, with Mrs. Edward Ziskind and Mrs. Louis Neyman in the charge of hospitality.

TOLEDO, O.
BLADE

APR 11 1938

R

THOSE who heard Nadia Boulanger, noted French pianist and teacher, in a lecture recital in the Museum of Art Friday night say that she lived up to all that has been said and written of her. They were impressed alike by her superb musicianship and her delightful personality. In spite of the downpour which made attendance an endurance test there was a good crowd to hear the first woman to have conducted the Boston and the London Symphony Orchestras, a woman whose influence is said to be greater than that of any other on modern musicians. And the audience included the most critical among Toledo music lovers.

(13)

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

APR 1 0 1938

New Records Present Theme of Easter

To some, spring means Easter bonnets; to others, daffodils. To many, it brings the wish to fly away to Paris. For those of us who stay at home, spring, Easter or any time set apart for the heart's renewal can be filled with the radiance of music. Since our need of music has been broadened by concerts and radio, the records are increasingly able to satisfy it.

Victor brings out the last of a three-volume recording of an actual performance of "The Passion of Our Lord According to St. Matthew" by Johann Sebastian Bach. Koussevitsky has built a monument for himself in the magnificent conducting of this work. Using the young voices of Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, he has given the Bach masterwork a buoyancy and freedom. The direction of soloists, choruses and, most of all, the Boston Symphony, is clear and definite and climax always well sustained. These are the necessities and the prized virtues of the finest recordings.

The soloists, Janette Vreeland, soprano, and Katheryn Meisle, contralto, are well known for their Bach but they are artistically matched by the unknown John Breibe, tenor, Keith Faulkner and Fritz Lechner, baritones.

The added instrumentalists are: flutist, George Laurent; oboes d'amore, Louis Speyer and Jean Dedergie; harpsichord, Dr. V. Ernest Wolff; organist, Karl Weinrich; violinists, Julius Theodorewicz and Richard Burgin; viola da gamba, Alfred Zighera and English horns, Speyer and Henry Stanislaus. G. Wallace Woodworth prepared the choirs and Dr. Archibald T. Davidson of Harvard, the copious program notes.

Stokowski can extract music and, above all, sensuously beautiful sound out of a Balinese orchestra or a set of Bell Laboratory microphones in Hollywood but when at his best, he is conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra in the Academy of Music. That is where the new Victor records of "Parsifal" were made. Hearing them it is impossible to believe that Wagner or Stokowski either, has not received high dispensation from above. The Prelude and Good Friday Spell prove in the incontrovertible language of music that Wagner was not the agnostic his detractors accused him of being. Stokowski declares it in those marvelous crescendos of his where he begins with orchestral shadows playing on long unbroken silence and urges his musicians on and on until the ultimate in tone and rich harmony is reached.

America has risen to a full appreciation of the pianistic genius of Artur Schnabel since those first concerts of his in 1922. Now it not only welcomes Schnabel with sold-out houses but audiences are beaming upon the advent of his son, Karl Ulrich. R.C.A.-Victor presents Bach's concerto for two pianos and orchestra played by the Schnabels and the London Symphony conducted by John Barbirolli.

I. M. J.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

APR 1 1 1938

Jagel Known For Work in Italian Opera

Frederick Jagel, the Metropolitan tenor who will sing in Schenectady April 28, is famous for his interpretations of the great roles of Italian opera, such as Rodolfo, Vasco de Gama and Rhadames, and has also won recognition as a Wagner singer. Lohengrin has been acclaimed as one of his best parts and last season when Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia orchestra made recordings of "Siegfried", Jagel was chosen to sing the immortal music of the young hero.

Serge Koussevitsky chose the tenor, too, when on November 2, 1934, with the Boston symphony orchestra he presented the third act of "Siegfried" in concert form. The press critics hailed Jagel as a "happy choice".

As guest artist for the Thursday Musical Club's spring concert at Union College, memorial chapel Jagel will take his place among other great singers who have appeared with the local choral group. These have included Nelson Eddy, Lawrence Tibbett, Richard Crooks and Joseph Bentonelli, among others.

Tickets for the "silver anniversary" concert are available through Mrs. A. Stanton McCormick of 1374 Myron street.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

APR 1 4 1938

WAAF will present from noon to 4 p. m. "The Passion of Our Lord, According to St. Matthew," in its entirety. The version to be presented is a recording by the Harvard Glee club, the Radcliffe Choral society, and the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe, Keith Faulkner, and Fritz Lechner as soloists.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 1 7 1938

Symphonic Success

SELDOM MAY one sit through a program of symphonic music that appeals with equal force to emotions and intellect, as did the final concert in the Civic Music Association's course this year, at the municipal Memorial Auditorium last Tuesday night. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, whose visits to Worcester have been all too few, came here for the third consecutive year of the course. Balanced with a perfection of which Dr. Koussevitzky is a past master, the concert began with Haydn's "Symphony in G Major, No. 88," inducing a mood so soon to be shattered by the exciting and arresting Prokofieff "Romeo and Juliet" ballet, second suite, op. 64, given its first presentation in this country in March of this year by the Boston Symphony, with the composer conducting. Those who heard this brilliant premiere were thrilled at the second hearing, last Tuesday night. The atmosphere of the Italy of the Montagues and the Capulets was achieved, often with quaintly ironic effect. The music, daringly modern as it was, between the two symphonies brought storms of surprised applause. The second symphony, the beloved "Second" of Brahms completed a perfect program, gloriously played.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

APR 2 3 1938

PREMIER HAILED AT HUB

Boston, April 22 — (AP) — The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony hall broke its quiet today to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere of Leo Sowerby's concerto for organ and orchestra in C major by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. So great was the applause that Koussevitzky beckoned the burly, bespectacled and fiery-haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 1 3 1938

Audience Delighted by Boston Symphony

Civic Music Association Brings Season To Triumphant Close

By TYRA LUNDBERG FULLER

Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, brought the 1937-1938 concert series of the Worcester Civic Music Association to a triumphant close last night before an enthusiastic and capacity audience in Memorial Auditorium.

The program presented three imposing works: Haydn's "Symphony in G Major, No. 88;" the Second Suite from Serge Prokofkieff's ballet "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64; and Johannes Brahms' "Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 73."

Of outstanding interest to many—although possibly not of greatest enjoyment to the entire audience—was the Prokofieff ballet music. This suite had its American premiere in Boston March 25, and Worcester music lovers owe a debt of gratitude to the Civic Association for sponsoring its early performance here. Strictly modern, from its first startling, crashing dissonances to its macabre strains in the final movement, the modernity of the suite was emphasized by its contrasting setting between two familiar and favorite symphonies.

Homage to Conductor

More than once we have commented on the infectious enthusiasm of a school orchestra, but in an organization like the Boston Symphony that quality of enthusiasm is submerged in pure artistry. It could not be otherwise under a conductor such as Serge Koussevitzky. Not since the long-ago days of Dr. Karl Muck have we seen a baton wielder who directs with such a minimum of effort as Dr. Koussevitzky did the Haydn Symphony, yet who so completely dominates his players. A pointing index finger here, a dip of the baton there, and the result was perfection. The audience surely thought so, to judge by the convincing salvos of applause that followed the conclusion of each work.

The "Romeo and Juliet" Suite presented four movements. The first, "Montagues and Capulets," was characteristically pompous, grandiloquent. "Juliet, the Maiden" was light and dainty, equally befitting its theme. Then came a "Dance" and finally "Romeo by Juliet's Grave" with its descriptive suggestion of grief and tragedy.

It must be that modern compositions make a greater physical demand on conductor as well as players, for Dr. Koussevitzky used far more effort in directing this work.

Brahms Symphony

After the intermission which followed the performance of the Prokofieff Suite, came the familiar and pleasing Brahms Symphony which closed the program. It presents four lovely movements: "Allegro non troppo," "Adagio non troppo," "Adagietto Grazioso; quasi andantine," exquisite in its gracious beauty, and "Allegro con spirito."

At the close the audience seemed loath to leave and Conductor Koussevitzky was called back to the platform again and again to bow his acknowledgment of orcester concert-goers' extended ovation.

ELYRIA, O.
CHRONICLE TELEGRAM

APR 1 5 1938

Premier Woman, Musician Of France At Oberlin Saturday

MLLE. NADIA BOULANGER

OBERLIN, April 15 — The Oberlin Conservatory of Music will be host to Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, premier woman musician of France, when she comes to Oberlin this Saturday, April 16, to give an illustrated lecture on "Views on Music of Today" in Warner Concert Hall at 10:30 a. m.

Music of the 15th and 16th century as well as that of modern composers will be included on the program. As Mlle. Boulanger expects even amateurs to be able to hear music truly and to know and love music, she counts the words she speaks in lecturing as a mere waste—it is the music that is important, and in order to illustrate her lecture a selected group from the Oberlin A Cappella Choir will assist her. Miss Margaret Pohl, graduate student in the Conservatory, will be soloist.

From Musical Family

Mlle. Boulanger was brought up in a family of musicians. When five, she studied piano, but quickly transferred to the organ. She studied for several years at the Paris Conservatory, a pupil of Guilmant and Vierne on the organ, and of Gabriel Faure in composition.

Since 1904 she has given up her work in composition and since that time has devoted herself entirely to teaching. Among her students was her sister, Lili Boulanger, who died in 1918 at the age of 24 after having written works which place her in the ranks of the great composers. Mlle. Boulanger will speak of the works of her sister in her lecture.

Mlle. Boulanger has been teaching at Radcliffe College this semester, and in February broke all of New England's tradition by being the first woman to conduct the Boston Symphony. She is also the first woman to conduct the London Philharmonic in its 126 years of existance.

She comes to Oberlin from Cleveland, where she will lecture on Friday.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
April MERCURY 16/38

Last Commuters' Matinee At Symphony Hall Tuesday

By train, bus and private car, the widely distributed audience of music lovers who subscribe to the Commuters' Matinee series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be on their way Tuesday, April 19, for the last concert of the six. They converge on Symphony Hall from Plattsburg, N. Y., Pawtucket, Castine, Me., Manchester, N. H., Bennington, Vt., Hyannis, Cape Cod, and a hundred communities between. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the following program on Tuesday: Beethoven's First Symphony, in C Major; Debussy's two nocturnes, "Clouds," and "Festivals;" and Brahms' Second Symphony, in D Major.

Those attending the Commuters' Matinees this season will have heard music covering two centuries of the art of orchestral composition, drawn from the works of the following composers: C. P. E. Bach, Haydn, Boccherini, Mozart, Beethoven, Rossini, Liszt, Moussorgsky, Tchaikovsky, Brahms, Rimsky-Korsakov, d'Indy, Sibelius, Debussy, Ravel, Starakodomsky, Amfitheatrof.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 1 3 1938

Boston Symphony Heard In Auditorium Concert

By WALTER W. FARMER

The Worcester Civic Music Association presented the Boston Symphany Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, in the Auditorium last evening as the final event of this season's series of concerts. There was a very large and deeply interested audience.

It is not necessary at this late day for the reviewer to ransack his vocabulary of superlatives in praise of this superb orchestra. It is sufficient to say that this concert was at the same high level of perfection in orchestral virtuosity that has given the organization its undisputed position among the leading orchestras of the world.

The concert opened with Haydn's "Symphony in G" which is number 88 in the astounding total of 104 works by Haydn in this form. It is forgotten sometimes that this composer was shrewd and worldwise and although his character at times may have seemed childlike, it was far from being childish. He had a sly sense of humor, as is shown in the musical theme that he borrowed from Martini and used to embellish his setting of the commandment "Thou shalt not steal." In his music, he was not extravagant, but was capable of expressing, besides innocent or peasant-like gaiety, sorrow, tenderness and regret. Rubenstein is said to have referred condescendingly to "Papa Haydn." To this Von Bulow retored: "Yes! But when he is great-grandfather Rubinstein, Haydn, still will be 'Papa' Haydn!"

The truth of this last remark was revealed by the music heard last evening, for it has not aged, and its freshness and charm still have the power to transport the responsive listener to a realm of the imagination that is "without bitterness, irony or morbidity, but has the peotry of perfect health." The manifold beauties of this work were displayed with grace and true insight, so that the consummate workmanship was revealed with perfect transparency.

Composition by Prokofieff

The second composition was a suite from the ballet "Romeo and Juliet" by the contemporary Russian composer, Serge Prokofieff, who at present is in this country. This is a recent work first presented in Russia a year ago, while its American premiere was given in Boston last month. The various sections of the work are "Montagues and Capulets," "Juliet the maiden," "Friar Laurence" "Dance," "The Parting of Romeo and Juliet," "Dance of the Slave Girls" and "Romeo at Juliet's Grave."

Whatever one's opinion of the merits of this work, it must be admitted that it held the interest at the first hearing. However, there are several reservations that may be made. Is it in good taste to base a ballet on Shakespeare's tragedy? Does the music successfully express the spirit of the drama? Is the plot of the ballet made absurd by a "happy ending" not found in the original story? The reviewer would answer the first two questions, "No," the last question, "Yes." The opening measures were impressive and raised expectations that were not fulfilled by the succeeding pages. If the musical ideas were divested of their gorgeous orchestration, it appears that little of importance would remain, even if the intention of the composer was ironical. In short, it is possible to believe that the composer's great predecessor, Tschaikowsky, has given finer musical expression to this tragedy in his "Overture to Romeo and Juliet."

After intermission, Grahms' "Second Symphony in D" ushered the listeners into another world. In spite of some of the early critics, who found this music merely "pretty," it is not easy to give an adequate verbal description of the impression received from the performance of this work. Arthur Waley, in his translations from the Chinese, puts into English the experience of an ancient poet who, after picturing a lovely twilight scene, concludes with these words "In these things there lies a deep meaning, yet when we would express it, words suddenly fail us." Thus, in this music, there is a profound meaning for those able to receive it—a meaning that only music can suggest. Dissonance and complexity not always are accompanied by depth, and beneath Brahms' smoothly flowing and melodious strains, there lie hidden meanings that remind one of Emerson's vision of the Concord River in which he hears "the spending of the stream through years, through men, through Nature fleet, through love and thought, through power and dream." It scarcely is necessary to add that this masterwork was given an eloquent and moving interpretation that abounded in details of great beauty.

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST
APR 13 1938

(14)

Brilliant Performance Is Offered By Boston Symphony Orchestra

Large Audience Well Pleased With Closing Concert of Civic Music Association

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

Director of Music at Clark University and Music Critic for The Post

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the familiar direction of Dr. Serge Koussevetsky, brought the civic series of concerts to an appropriate close last evening in Memorial Auditorium.

The program introduced one of Haydn's freshest inspirations, the Symphony in G Major, No. 88 of the Paris set and a ballet suite by the contemporary Soviet composer, Serge Prokofieff; Brahms Second Symphony, which was inadequately performed here last fall, provided the second half of the program.

Felicitations of the large audience were presumably directed to the officers of the Civic Music Association as well as to the visiting orchestra in gratitude for a notable series.

In all likelihood Dr. Koussevetsky will be long remembered for his interpretation of Haydn's scintillating scores along with his constant and profitable embassies on behalf of our contemporaries; certainly he has a way with the early Viennese classicists which reveals the fullness of joy and the clear repose of formal structure which was established in that period under these genial auspices. The subject of real admiration in his own day, an admirer declared that after listening to Haydn's compositions he always felt impelled to do some good work, an impulse which later composers have consciously striven to inspire through overwhelming complexity rather than by a winning simplicity.

Soviet "Romeo"

The ballet of "Romeo and Juliet" produced last year in Moscow did not follow closely the Shakesperian model. Prokofieff has gathered selections from the entire score in two suites, of which this is the second suggesting Ravel's similar expedient with "Daphnis and Chloe," although Prokofieff by no means has achieved a score of equal merit. As in his "Lieutenant Kije," arranged from a cinema, the loss of stage action impairs the effect of the music. Prokofieff is a master of orchestral technique, gifted enough to summon thrilling harvests of sound, as in the opening measures of this suite, but one is reminded that the sustaining qualities of music are seldom achieved through a sequence of effects; hence "Romeo and Juliet" becomes spiritless in the lyrical passages.

Thirty years ago a prominent Boston music critic habitually carried a newspaper into the concert hall for reading matter during the performance of Brahms' symphonies. Today the most inexperienced listener to the orchestral repertory considers the Second Symphony a delightful and reasonably lucid work; it is as common as the Fifth by Beethoven, which work is enjoying a well-earned rest these days. In this respect—if one may intrude a bypath of thought—it would be well for Dr. Koussevetsky and his musicians to retire the Brahms work for a season; its performances this season have become routine, lost proportion, and taken on a cast which suggests last spring rather than the present one.

The Haydn Symphony received the magnificent treatment which has placed this orchestra in the forefront of the world's symphonic organizations; the perfection of detail, the genial movement, and the inspiration of alert players brought to life all the charm and naivete of the hurdy-gurdy, the "exquisitely bred kitten" of the finale, and other fleeting phenomena of "Papa" Haydn's artistic genius. Similarly the Prokofieff had great honor bestowed on it. The Brahms was handled variously with an Allegro which disregarded the non troppo until the Coda necessitated a sudden slowing up to avoid a cataclysm; only in the finale did the tempo meet the expressed wishes of the composer, wherein Dr. Koussevetsky did the requisite amount af manual labor and reaped the customary ovation.

A report of this year's campaign was admirably voiced by President Lations who presented Arthur Dann, as new incumbent. This success, and the warm applause of the audience members, suggested the possibility of a supplementary pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony as leaven to Worcester's scant orchestral fare.

YOUNG SINGERS PERFORM WELL

College Choral Groups in "Missa Solemnis"

B. Post April 27/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Last night for the second time in 11 years and the third time in 38, a Symphony Hall audience listened to what is still one of the most discussed and disputed works in the whole range of choral music, Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. The concert was given in aid of the Symphony Orchestra's pension fund, the huge chorus was composed of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and the solo singers were Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe and Mack Harrell.

Beyond even the choral portion of the Ninth Symphony, the Missa Solemnis outrageously taxes chorus and solo singers. The orchestra's portion might have been considered formidable 100 years ago; today in comparison with the symphonies, it exacts of a modern orchestra relatively little. Nevertheless, Dr. Koussevitzky had rehearsed his players diligently and from them extracted as eloquent a realization of Beethoven's intentions as would seem possible of achievement.

But it was the heroic efforts of the chorus that chiefly engaged the listener's attention and also aroused his sympathy. And considering the magnitude of the task which faced them, these collegiate choristers may be said to have covered themselves with glory.

Though Beethoven mercilessly keeps his sopranos above the staff for measures on end, the young women from Radcliffe contrived to make their part almost entirely musical in effect. If the impression at the end of the evenng was that the chorus for the most part divided its time between shouting and whispering, the blame must fall largely upon the shoulders of Beethoven, who conceived his music largely in dynamic terms. But at least the shouting was no more strindent and raucous than need be, and the whispering for the most part did not sink into tonelessness. No less than the chorus, the solo singers had their trials and being only human, they could not but remind us of that fact.

As was the case with the St. Matthew Passion of Bach a year ago, last night's performance was recorded and in due time will appear on Victor records.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
APR 16 1938

The New Records

Courtesy of the New Friends—A Schumann Cycle—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

The major products of the much-talked-of alliance between Victor and the New Friends of Music have finally made their appearance, bringing to about a dozen the total of the albums thus sponsored. As well as being an unprecedented collaboration between a concert group and a recording company, the series has achieved a greater distinction: it has actually produced several albums of unique worth.

Foremost among these are the works by Mozart for small ensemble (which utilized members of the Boston Symphony) and especially ~~the C~~ minor serenade for wind instruments (Koechel No. 388). Though it is one of Mozart's most remarkable works in the category of chamber music, it is not likely that it would have been recorded save for the special circumstances of its performance here. It is written for a double quartet of horns, clarinets, oboes, and bassoons; not, as this commentator mistakenly wrote in his program notes (an error duplicated in the Victor brochure) for the Haffner family, but for a Vienna performance in 1782. Its symphonic style and splendid writing for the winds are both beautifully reproduced by the recording, which was made in Symphony Hall. The excellent performance was prepared by Arthur Fiedler.

A Musical Joke.

Since the B flat Divertimento (Koechel 287) is also promised for release next month by Columbia, consideration of that work will be deferred until the two versions are in hand. Completing the list of works in the "Divertimento" class is the celebrated, and practically unknown, "Musikalische Spass" for string quartet and two horns. Though Mozart's ingenious mockery of inept composers and performers is more vividly conveyed in an actual performance than it is on records, the album is an invaluable addition to recorded Mozartiana. The performers are the Kolisch quartet, plus Domenico Caputo and John Barrows, horns. They make all the wit in the work plain, without diminishing the grace and fluency of the music with which Mozart adorned his satire. This, too, is a first rate recording, excellently balanced and clear.

Vocal Records.

Of the vocal records produced by this association, the most important is the album of Schumann's "Liederkreis" (opus 39) which per- [illegible] to resume [illegible] a much [illegible] be [illegible]'s

What They're Selling.

Aeolian—
"The Old Apple Tree".......V
"Lady Be Good"..............V
Bloomfield—
"Please Be Kind"...........V
"Bewildered"................V
Macy—
"Two Bouquets".............D
"Please Be Kind"...........V
Schirmer—
"Donkey Serenade".........B
"Don't Be That Way".......V

The records reviewed in this column were played on an RCA-R-99, and Victor Shadowgraphed (steel) needles were used. Queries on records, machines, needles, &c. are invited.

ton on trumpet, and drummer Joe Jones. The reverse is "Now Will You Be Good" with some prime vocalizing by James Rushing. All in all, a record which indicates that this "coming" orchestra is already here.

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
APR 18 1938

MUSIC

New Symphonies

Great symphonies, like great novels, are usually written by men of mature years. Notable exceptions are the 39 symphonies of Mozart, who wrote his first when he was eight, and died at an age (34) when the average composer is just beginning to hit his stride. But the big symphonies of the German romantic period usually came comparatively late in their composers' lives. Great epic Symphonist Beethoven, who wrote nine, waited until 30 to write his first one; Symphonist Brahms waited until he was 43; Symphonist Bruckner until he was 42.

Perky young U. S. composers often try to cut their teeth on symphonies, try writing musical epics before they have learned how to spell cat, musically speaking. An exception is Boston's soft-spoken, dark-eyed Walter Piston, who last week conducted the première of his First Symphony with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Like Composers Brahms and Bruckner, Composer Piston had bided his time until he was well into his forties.

Programmed by canny Conductor Kousevitzky between the First Symphony of Beethoven and the First Symphony of Sibelius, Composer Piston's magnum opus drew as many bravos as if it were the real meat in the sandwich. Though part of this enthusiasm may have come from a desire to see local Harvard Professor Piston make good, solemn critics were agreed that his symphony was one of the most individual and stirring works of its kind by a U. S. composer. Praised were its skillful instrumentation and the rugged climax of its final movement. Noted also was an emotional juiciness hitherto lacking in Composer Piston's music.

In the past, 44-year-old Composer Piston's dry, academic, cacophonous works have drawn hosannas from modernist theoreticians rather than from music-hungry audiences. But even conservatives have admitted that he seemed to know what he was doing, and seemed to be doing it with relentless determination.

Determination played a big part in landing quiet-voiced Professor Piston where he is today. At 26, a married man with very little in the way of a formal education, he managed to get enrolled at Harvard, worked his way through, graduated summa cum laude with a Phi Beta Kappa key on his watch chain. A winner of the John Knowles Paine Fellowship, he was sent to Paris for two years to study with famed Pedagogue Nadia Boulanger (TIME, Feb. 28).

The day after Composer Piston's symphony had its première, a much more widely heralded piece of music was broadcast by the NBC Symphony under Conductor Artur Rodzinski: Russian Composer Dmitri Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony. Composer of the famed opera Lady Macbeth of Mzensk and onetime white-haired boy of Soviet music, Shostakovich had lain for two years in official outer darkness, his opera banned and his Fourth Symphony confiscated because of "Leftist" modernistic tendencies (TIME, April 4). First of his works to be O. K.'d by Moscow critics since his downfall, the Fifth Symphony was supposed to indicate the new Soviet trend toward babbling-brook romanticism.

Radio listeners, as well as the 1,300 who filled NBC's Studio 8H, found that Composer Shostakovich had backtracked with a vengeance. His Fifth Symphony avoided the boisterous clatter that had marred his earlier "May Day" Symphony (No. 3), returned to the vitality and sincerity of the First Symphony which made him famous ten years ago. Dominant influences observable in it were not those of post-War modernists but of such romantic symphonists as the late Gustav Mahler.

B. Her. April 27/38

MUSIC

MISSA SOLEMNIS

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Beethoven's Missa Solemnis was given last night as a Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society (G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor). The soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Mack Harrell, bass. The performance, as was the case with the St. Matthew Passion last year, was recorded by the RCA Manufacturing Company.

It is unfortunate that the indifference to choral music that appears to reign in Boston had the result that the hall was not quite full, and that too with the first seven rows of seats taken out to make room for the larger stage. This Mass of Beethoven's is so important a masterpiece of choral music and the difficulties of its performance are such that we cannot expect to hear it more than once or twice in a lifetime. The long task of training a chorus makes it necessary that it and the choral works of Bach and Handel be given in the spring, when presumably people are not as interested in concerts. Nevertheless, a musical community of these proportions and standards should be able to support at least two performances of the Missa Solemnis.

There is little use in scolding the public and we have only resorted to it in this case because it must be painful for Dr. Koussevitzky and all the musicians engaged in yesterday's performance to realize the comparatively moderate interest the public takes in their heroic efforts in this cause. The audience, itself, was exemplary both in helping towards the success of the recording and in honest enthusiasm for the music. At the moment, perhaps, there is more attention paid to Bach, for his B minor Mass or St. Matthew Passion would literally, instead of almost, fill the hall.

There is no need to enlarge on the trends of taste that bring about such a situation. Beethoven's is a different kind of art from Bach's, although it is said that he studied some of Bach's works in this connection. Still, the years 1819-1823, when Beethoven was writing the Missa Solemnis, were in a period which practically ignored Bach. There is more spiritual affinity in Beethoven with Handel; and Sir Donald Tovey finds a kinship to Palestrina, particularly in the use of church modes in which Beethoven was in advance of his time.

Any performance starts under the handicap of the immensely difficult writing for the voices. Not only is it hard to sing the music for its problems of phrasing, holding and the demands made by the number of passages with high notes, but also a chorus must make sure to emphasize Beethoven's rhythms. It has been pointed out that these are easily handled by an instrument. The trouble is that Beethoven insisted that the voices do so too. The choruses from Harvard and Radcliffe, who had been splendidly trained by Mr. Woodworth, did this double task extremely well. The virtues of their training in attack came in most usefully with the rhythmic angle.

The soloists also were an excellent group. Miss Vreeland and Mr. Priebe, especially, sang with superb assurance, and in good voice. Miss Meisle had, now and again, trouble with her vocal line, but otherwise sang adequately. Mr. Harrell was thoroughly competent, though a little subdued in relation to his associates. It would have been well, however, if the soloists and the chorus had got together on their pronunciation of Latin and resolved to use the system of one school. The performance, finally, would not have been the stirring and dynamic event that it was without Dr. Koussevitzky's inspiration.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
APR 27 1938

Local Radcliffe Girls Take Part in Concert

Augusta Alger '40, Ruth Jones '41 and Virginia Jones '38, students at Radcliffe College, were among the 150 student members of the Radcliffe Choral Society who joined the Harvard Glee Club to sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky yesterday at the Boston Symphony hall. All three are graduates of Nott Terrace High School. Miss Alger is daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Alger of Wendell avenue and the Misses Jones are daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Jones of Glenwood boulevard.

14

WORCESTER, MASS.
POST
APR 13 1938

liant Performance Is Offered y Boston Symphony Orchestra

Large Audience Well Pleased With Closing Concert of Civic Music Association

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

Director of Music at Clark University and Music Critic for The Post

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the familiar direction of Dr. Serge Koussevetsky, brought the civic series of concerts to an appropriate close last evening in Memorial Auditorium.

The program introduced one of Haydn's freshest inspirations, the Symphony in G Major, No. 88 of the Paris set and a ballet suite by the contemporary Soviet composer, Serge Prokofieff; Brahms Second Symphony, which was inadequately performed here last fall, provided the second half of the program.

Felicitations of the large audience were presumably directed to the officers of the Civic Music Association as well as to the visiting orchestra in gratitude for a notable series.

In all likelihood Dr. Koussevetsky will be long remembered for his interpretation of Haydn's scintillating scores along with his constant and profitable embassies on behalf of our contemporaries; certainly he has a way with the early Viennese classicists which reveals the fullness of joy and the clear repose of formal structure which was established in that period under these genial auspices. The subject of real adoration in his own day, an admirer declared that after listening to Haydn's compositions he always felt impelled to do some good work, an impulse which later composers have consciously striven to inspire through overwhelming complexity rather than by a winning simplicity.

Soviet "Romeo"

The ballet of "Romeo and Juliet" produced last year in Moscow did not follow closely the Shakesperian model. Prokofieff has gathered selections from the entire score in two suites, of which this is the second suggesting Ravel's similar expedient with "Daphnis and Chloe," although Prokofieff by no means has achieved a score of equal merit. As in his "Lieutenant Kije," arranged from a cinema, the loss of stage action impairs the effect of the music. Prokofieff is a master of orchestral technique, gifted enough to summon thrilling harvests of sound, as in the opening measures of this suite, but one is reminded that the sustaining qualities of music are seldom achieved through a sequence of effects; hence "Romeo and Juliet" becomes spiritless in the lyrical passages.

Thirty years ago a prominent Boston music critic habitually carried a newspaper into the concert hall for reading matter during the performance of Brahms' symphonies. Today the most inexperienced listener to the orchestral repertory considers the Second Symphony a delightful and reasonably lucid work; it is as common as the Fifth by Beethoven, which work is enjoying a well-earned rest these days. In this respect—if one may intrude a bypath of thought—it would be well for Dr. Koussevetsky and his musicians to retire the Brahms work for a season; its performances this season have become routine, lost proportion, and taken on a cast which suggests last spring rather than the present one.

The Haydn Symphony received the magnificent treatment which has placed this orchestra in the forefront of the world's symphonic organizations; the perfection of detail, the genial movement, and the inspiration of alert players brought to life all the charm and naivete of the hurdy-gurdy, the "exquisitely bred kitten" of the finale, and other fleeting phenomena of "Papa" Haydn's artistic genius. Similarly the Prokofieff had great honor bestowed on it. The Brahms was handled variously with an Allegro which disregarded the non troppo until the Coda necessitated a sudden slowing up to avoid a cataclysm; only in the finale did the tempo meet the expressed wishes of the composer, wherein Dr. Koussevetsky did the requisite amount of manual labor and reaped the customary ovation.

A report of this year's campaign was admirably voiced by President Latious who presented Arthur Dann, as new incumbent. This success, and the warm applause of the audience members, suggested the possibility of a supplementary pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony as leaven to Worcester's scant orchestral fare.

YOUNG SINGERS PERFORM WELL

College Choral Groups in "Missa Solemnis"

B Post April 27/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Last night for the second time in 11 years and the third time in 38, a Symphony Hall audience listened to what is still one of the most discussed and disputed works in the whole range of choral music, Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. The concert was given in aid of the Symphony Orchestra's pension fund, the huge chorus was composed of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and the solo singers were Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe and Mack Harrell.

Beyond even the choral portion of the Ninth Symphony, the Missa Solemnis outrageously taxes chorus and solo singers. The orchestra's portion might have been considered formidable 100 years ago; today in comparison with the symphonies, it exacts of a modern orchestra relatively little. Nevertheless, Dr. Koussevitsky had rehearsed his players diligently and from them extracted as eloquent a realization of Beethoven's intentions as would seem possible of achievement.

But it was the heroic efforts of the chorus that chiefly engaged the listener's attention and also aroused his sympathy. And considering the magnitude of the task which faced them, these collegiate choristers may be said to have covered themselves with glory. Though Beethoven mercilessly keeps the sopranos above the staff for measures on end, the young women from Radcliffe contrived to make their part almost entirely musical in effect. If the impression at the end of the evening was that the chorus for the most part divided its time between shouting and whispering, the blame must fall largely upon the shoulders of Beethoven, who conceived his music largely in dynamic terms. But at least the shouting was no more strident and raucous than need be, and the whispering for the most part did not sink into tonelessness. No less than the chorus, the solo singers had their trials and being only human, they could not but remind us of that fact. As was the case with the St. Matthew Passion of Bach a year ago, last night's performance was recorded and in due time will appear on Victor records.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
APR 16 1938

The New Records

Courtesy of the New Friends—A Schumann Cycle—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

The major products of the much-talked-of alliance between Victor and the New Friends of Music have finally made their appearance, bringing to about a dozen the total of the albums thus sponsored. As well as being an unprecedented collaboration between a concert group and a recording company, the series has achieved a greater distinction: it has actually produced several albums of unique worth.

Foremost among these are the works by Mozart for small ensemble (which utilized members of the Boston Symphony) and especially [illegible] minor serenade for wind instruments (Koechel No. 388). Though it is one of Mozart's most remarkable works in the category of chamber music, it is not likely that it would have been recorded save for the special circumstances of its performance here. It is written for a double quartet of horns, clarinets, oboes, and bassoons; not, as this commentator mistakenly wrote in his program notes (an error duplicated in the Victor brochure) for the Haffner family, but for a Vienna performance in 1782. Its symphonic style and splendid writing for the winds are both beautifully reproduced by the recording, which was made in Symphony Hall. The excellent performance was prepared by Arthur Fiedler.

A Musical Joke.

Since the B flat Divertimento (Koechel 287) is also promised for release next month by Columbia, consideration of that work will be deferred until the two versions are in hand. Completing the list of works in the "Divertimento" class is the celebrated, and practically unknown, "Musikalische Spass" for string quartet and two horns. Though Mozart's ingenious mockery of inept composers and performers is more vividly conveyed in an actual performance than it is on records, the album is an invaluable addition to recorded Mozartiana. The performers are the Kolisch quartet, plus Domenico Caputo and John Barrows, horns. They make all the wit in the work plain, without diminishing the grace and fluency of the music with which Mozart adorned his satire. This, too, is a first rate recording, excellently balanced and clear.

Vocal Records.

Of the vocal records produced by this association, the most important is the album of Schumann's "Liederkreis" (opus 39) which per- [illegible] to resume [illegible] a much [illegible] be [illegible]'s

What They're Selling.

Aeolian—
"The Old Apple Tree" V
"Lady Be Good" V
Bloomfield—
"Please Be Kind" V
"Bewildered" V
Macy—
"Two Bouquets" . . . . D
"Please Be Kind" V
Schirmer—
"Donkey Serenade" . . . . B
"Don't Be That Way" V

The records reviewed in this column were played on an RCA-R-99, and Victor Shadowgraphed (steel) needles were used. Queries on records, machines, needles, &c. are invited.

ton on trumpet, and drummer Joe Jones. The reverse is "Now Will You Be Good" with some prime vocalizing by James Rushing. All in all, a record which indicates that this "coming" orchestra is already here.

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
APR 18 1938

MUSIC

New Symphonies

Great symphonies, like great novels, are usually written by men of mature years. Notable exceptions are the 39 symphonies of Mozart, who wrote his first when he was eight, and died at an age (34) when the average composer is just beginning to hit his stride. But the big symphonies of the German romantic period usually came comparatively late in their composers' lives. Great epic Symphonist Beethoven, who wrote nine, waited until 30 to write his first one; Symphonist Brahms waited until he was 43; Symphonist Bruckner until he was 42.

Perky young U. S. composers often try to cut their teeth on symphonies, try writing musical epics before they have learned how to spell cat, musically speaking. An exception is Boston's soft-spoken, dark-eyed Walter Piston, who last week conducted the première of his First Symphony with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Like Composers Brahms and Bruckner, Composer Piston had bided his time until he was well into his forties.

Programmed by canny Conductor Koussevitzky between the First Symphony of Beethoven and the First Symphony of Sibelius, Composer Piston's magnum opus drew as many bravos as if it were the real meat in the sandwich. Though part of this enthusiasm may have come from a desire to see local Harvard Professor Piston make good, solemn critics were agreed that his symphony was one of the most individual and stirring works of its kind by a U. S. composer. Praised were its skillful instrumentation and the rugged climax of its final movement. Noted also was an emotional juiciness hitherto lacking in Composer Piston's music.

In the past, 44-year-old Composer Piston's dry, academic, cacophonous works have drawn hosannas from modernist theoreticians rather than from music-hungry audiences. But even conservatives have admitted that he seemed to know what he was doing, and seemed to be doing it with relentless determination.

Determination played a big part in landing quiet-voiced Professor Piston where he is today. At 26, a married man with very little in the way of a formal education, he managed to get enrolled at Harvard, worked his way through, graduated summa cum laude with a Phi Beta Kappa key on his watch chain. A winner of the John Knowles Paine Fellowship, he was sent to Paris for two years to study with famed Pedagogue Nadia Boulanger (TIME, Feb. 28).

The day after Composer Piston's symphony had its première, a much more widely heralded piece of music was broadcast by the NBC Symphony under Conductor Artur Rodzinski: Russian Composer Dmitri Shostakovich's Fifth Symphony. Composer of the famed opera Lady Macbeth of Mzensk and onetime white-haired boy of Soviet music, Shostakovich had lain for two years in official outer darkness, his opera banned and his Fourth Symphony confiscated because of "Leftist" modernistic tendencies (TIME, April 4). First of his works to be O. K.'d by Moscow critics since his downfall, the Fifth Symphony was supposed to indicate the new Soviet trend toward babbling-brook romanticism.

Radio listeners, as well as the 1,300 who filled NBC's Studio 8H, found that Composer Shostakovich had backtracked with a vengeance. His Fifth Symphony avoided the boisterous clatter that had marred his earlier "May Day" Symphony (No. 3), returned to the vitality and sincerity of the First Symphony which made him famous ten years ago. Dominant influences observable in it were not those of post-War modernists but of such romantic symphonists as the late Gustav Mahler.

B. Herald

MUSIC

27/38

MISSA SOLEMNIS

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Beethoven's Missa Solemnis was given last night as a Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society (G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor). The soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Mack Harrell, bass. The performance, as was the case with the St. Matthew Passion last year, was recorded by the RCA Manufacturing Company.

It is unfortunate that the indifference to choral music that appears to reign in Boston had the result that the hall was not quite full, and that too with the first seven rows of seats taken out to make room for the larger stage. This Mass of Beethoven's is so important a masterpiece of choral music and the difficulties of its performance are such that we cannot expect to hear it more than once or twice in a lifetime. The long task of training a chorus makes it necessary that it and the choral works of Bach and Handel be given in the spring, when presumably people are not as interested in concerts. Nevertheless, a musical community of these proportions and standards should be able to support at least two performances of the Missa Solemnis.

There is little use in scolding the public and we have only resorted to it in this case because it must be painful for Dr. Koussevitzky and all the musicians engaged in yesterday's performance to realize the comparatively moderate interest the public takes in their heroic efforts in this cause. The audience, itself, was exemplary both in helping towards the success of the recording and in honest enthusiasm for the music. At the moment, perhaps, there is more attention paid to Bach, for his B minor Mass or St. Matthew Passion would literally, instead of almost, fill the hall.

There is no need to enlarge on the trends of taste that bring about such a situation. Beethoven's is a different kind of art from Bach's, although it is said that he studied some of Bach's works in this connection. Still, the years 1819-1823, when Beethoven was writing the Missa Solemnis, were in a period which practically ignored Bach. There is more spiritual affinity in Beethoven with Handel; and Sir Donald Tovey finds a kinship to Palestrina, particularly in the use of church modes in which Beethoven was in advance of his time.

Any performance starts under the handicap of the immensely difficult writing for the voices. Not only is it hard to sing the music for its problems of phrasing, holding and the demands made by the number of passages with high notes, but also a chorus must make sure to emphasize Beethoven's rhythms. It has been pointed out that these are easily handled by an instrument. The trouble is that Beethoven insisted that the voices do so too. The choruses from Harvard and Radcliffe, who had been splendidly trained by Mr. Woodworth, did this double task extremely well. The virtues of their training in attack came in most usefully with the rhythmic angle.

The soloists also were an excellent group. Miss Vreeland and Mr. Priebe, especially, sang with superb assurance, and in good voice. Miss Meisle had, now and again, trouble with her vocal line, but otherwise sang adequately. Mr. Harrell was thoroughly competent, though a little subdued in relation to his associates. It would have been well, however, if the soloists and the chorus had got together on their pronunciation of Latin and resolved to use the system of one school. The performance, finally, would not have been the stirring and dynamic event that it was without Dr. Koussevitzky's inspiration.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
APR 27 1938

Local Radcliffe Girls Take Part in Concert

Augusta Alger '40, Ruth Jones '41 and Virginia Jones '38, students at Radcliffe College, were among the 150 student members of the Radcliffe Choral Society who joined the Harvard Glee Club to sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky yesterday at the Boston Symphony hall. All three are graduates of Nott Terrace High School. Miss Alger is daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Alger of Wendell avenue and the Misses Jones are daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Jones of Glenwood boulevard.

Times article.

R. page

End of article

15

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 17 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Report of Progress—Building of Shed Begun—Programs Are Set

By OLIN DOWNES

THE music editor of THE TIMES has been mildly taken to task for a remark in a recent article on American music festivals. In that article he said, en passant, that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival would have developed even more rapidly than it has if the wishes of Dr. Koussevitzky had been followed. The retort courteous to this observation has been made in the form of some special announcements from the management of this festival given annually at Stockbridge, Mass., by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

First and foremost is the news of the actual erection of the new Music Shed, which seats an audience of 5,000 people in a spacious and comfortable way. This edifice, soon to be completed, covers an acre and a half of ground, is surrounded by an arcade twenty-seven feet wide, and open at the sides to the Summer air. This auditorium, as the plan shows, has excellent sight-lines, and it will be subjected to final tests for acoustics next July 1. The expert engaged for this task is Professor Richard Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

* * *

The construction of the Shed follows the gift made last season to the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Tanglewood, the country estate of Mrs. Gorham Brooks. With this gift the Boston Symphony acquired a permanent home for its festival, a place gloriously situated and landscaped and an ideal environment for artistic performance. The Music Shed is designed not only for the practical purposes of an appropriate auditorium, but also as an edifice that will harmonize with its surroundings. Its steel structure is now complete, and its roof going on. It was started last Jan. 1, and it has risen in response to the growth and the pressing needs of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

That festival has developed with impressive public support from recent and very modest beginnings. It was inaugurated by the late Henry Hadley in 1934 as a step toward his conception of an American music festival. Three open-air concerts with players from the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra were given. Mr. Hadley gave his utmost to the plan. In 1936 Dr. Koussevitzky and his players assembled, and the public response to their efforts at once established the logic of the undertaking. Three concerts were given in 1936, and six, in two weeks, in 1937. Meanwhile, in those four years, the attendance had doubled, from 2,500 to over 5,000 a concert. It was evident that the public which assembles at Stockbridge for the festival was behind the institution, and was prepared, in large and increasing numbers, to support it. The festival will be extended next year.

Last season Stockbridge experienced a beneficent catastrophe—the cloudburst, which showed the indispensability, for shelter as well as the desirable acoustics, of a great roofed building. The storm made such a clamor that the orchestra could not be heard; much less could the music transmitted by radio. As for the guests, they were marooned under the tent, helpless, till a late hour, to cross shallow, swirling currents of water.

* * *

A music shed had been virtually decided upon, considerably in advance of this event, which, nevertheless, appears to have had an effect of precipitation. The fact that delightful weather had attended the former season's concerts was evidently not a guarantee against a repetition of the catastrophe. Furthermore, despite surprisingly good acoustics secured within the tent last season, it was realized that a more substantial structure would meet this requirement as no canvas structure ever could do; $81,000 of the $100,000 which the structure costs has been raised. A remarkable response to the announcements of the concerts of next August has taken place; 108 of the 160 boxes have already been sold, while patrons of last year and new ones of the season to come have placed their applications for seats. The concerts next August will be given on the 4th, 6th, 7th and 11th, 13th and 14th of that month. The works to be included in the programs are Beethoven's Sixth and Ninth symphonies, Sibelius's First and Tchaikovsky's Sixth symphonies, a Brahms symphony, to be selected; a Wagner program, drawn from the operas "Walkuere" and "Siegfried"; the Brahms-Haydn Variations, Sibelius's "Tapiola," Debussy's "La Mer," Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kitej," Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Rhapsody," Ravel's "Mother Goose," Copland's "Music for the Theatre" and Walter Piston's "Concerto for Orchestra." Other compositions are to be announced.

* * *

Thus Dr. Koussevitzky's plans for a festival to be systematically extended in its scope and character do advance, and promise always more for the future. It is rather appalling to read that in 1937 over 2,400 automobiles from nearly every one of the United States parked near the scene of the concerts; and "all had left within twenty minutes after," and that "more extended facilities are being prepared for this year." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival is thus up and coming. It is a membership corporation, none of whose officers receive a salary, while the work of promotion is done by local and State committees.

The festival looks confidently ahead and plans optimistically for the future. It has now an established base. "The trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are working in the closest cooperation and they will broaden the program of the festivals as the public demands. With the New York Fair in 1939 it may be expected that a greater program will be developed." It is eminently fitting that these things should transpire in a time when America is realizing herself anew in her thought and her art.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
APR 20 1938

Membership Drive Begun By Berkshire Festival

Dates for 6 August Concerts Are Announced

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., has opened a membership campaign to extend through May 15, in connection with its fifth annual summer festival in the Berkshire Hills, which will be the first festival to be held in the new music shed on the Tanglewood Estate near Lenox, Mass. The six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky's direction will be on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs of August 4, 6, 11 and 13 in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield. Festival members and patrons will be able to obtain tickets at rates lower than those for non-members, and also will be admitted to one of the orchestra's rehearsals.

The steel structure for the music shed has already been installed and the roof and walls are now under construction. The building, shaped like a half-open fan and commanding a view of Lake Mahkeenac and the mountains south of the lake, will have seats for more than five thousand persons.

An announcement sent to those who attended last summer's festival points out that certain temporary features in the music shed will gradually be replaced by permanent ones. The 1938 festival will be the third with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the second to be held on the Tanglewood estate, which was presented to the Boston Symphony and the festival management last year as a permanent site for these events. The first four festivals were outdoors or under canvas. The plan for a building was announced after the 1936 series, and its

---

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
APR 19 1938

Olin Downes To Present Four Lectures at Berkshire Festival

New York Times Critic Returning—Membership Lists Open Until May 15—Privileges Offered

Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, will return this summer to give four lectures on the principal symphonies to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

For the convenience of many music lovers who were unable to attend the lectures last year because of the hour, the lectures this year will be in the afternoon at 3 o'clock. They will be at the Berkshire Museum, Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13.

Membership Lists Open

Illustrated circulars are being mailed from the Festival office in Stockbridge this week urging music lovers to take advantage of the membership privileges which will be available until May 15. In addition to representing a saving in admission to the six concerts, the membership privileges will include admission to a full rehearsal of the orchestra.

The announcement in the circular calls attention to the fact that since last August friends of the Festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured, adding:

Seating Capacity 5000

"The result will be an auditorium of simple but pleasing lines, with a seating capacity of 5000. Certain temporary features will be replaced gradually by permanent ones. Meanwhile there is in process of construction a hall of music wherein the audience may hear the music in its full beauties, while sheltered from storms and sun.

"It has been the aspiration of those in charge of the Festival to build a shrine of music where, amidst the beauties of a New England summer, the finest music may be heard in such a performance as could be expected from one of the greatest orchestras in the world. This aspiration has become a fact.

OLIN DOWNES
To Return for Festival Lectures

"The trustees of the Festival, however, are not content to stop with the achievement of this one goal. It is their hope that public recognition and support, already gratifying proven, will continue to grow, stimulating the Festival to seek wider horizons and greater success. It is their hope that Tanglewood will be known more and more as a vitalizing force in the world of music."

Miss Gamwell Chairman

Other details concerning Festival plans and other cultural interests in the Berkshires may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge or by communicating with the local chairman. Miss Elizabeth Gamwell is chairman of the membership campaign for Pittsfield

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
APR 20 1938

Miss Florence Brigham to Be Guest At Berkshire Pre-nuptial Parties

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., April 20.—Miss Florence Colt Brigham, daughter of Henry D. Brigham of Pittsfield, is to be the honored guest this week at several parties in advance of her marriage to John Wallace Wales, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Wales of Newton, Mass., on Saturday.

Luncheon hostesses include Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane Jr. at Chilton House, Dalton, who is entertaining today. On Friday night Mrs. Philip Weston is to entertain the bridal party and a group of out of town guests at a dinner, to be preceded by a cocktail party given by Mr. and Mrs. William A. Whittlesey at Hillholm. Saturday luncheon for the same group will be given at Dalton by Mrs. Charles James Kittredge.

The Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge, of which Representative Allen T. Treadway is owner and Heaton I. Treadway manager, will be opened for the 165th season on the 28th. Mrs. Lindsay Fairfax and son, William Bradford Fairfax, will arrive during the first week to spend two months.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston and her son, Shepherd Brooks, have been spending a few days at Martin Inn, Lenox. During her stay Mrs. Brooks has visited her former estate, Tanglewood, which, together with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, she presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An $80,000 music shed is being built there.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Latimer Redfield Jr. of New York have been in Great Barrington looking for a house for the summer. Mrs. Redfield is chairman of the Wyantenuck Country Club entertainment committee. The clubhouse is to be opened May 1.

At the Guilder Hollow Club of Mount Sterling, West Egremont, the members have elected as officers: President, Major Hugh Smiley; vice-president, Forrest G. Purinton of Waterbury, Conn.; secretary and treasurer, Whitman W. Bowers; board of governors, the officers with Andrew Westhead, son-in-law of Major Smiley; Judge Arthur F. Ells of Litchfield, Conn.; Donald F. Carpenter of Southport, Conn., and Ernest Link of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson are at the Martin in Stockbridge before opening Ingleside.

Mrs. W. Roscoe Bonsal, who was at St. Lawrence Inn, Lenox, while inspecting her garden at Pembroke House, is to spend the summer at Shady Gate, a cottage on the estate.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowell M. Clucas are leaving today for a trip of six weeks to California.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Trowbridge Elliman have rented the Lynch homestead at Stockbridge for the summer, and Mrs. Brockie Dilworth of Philadelphia is negotiating for summer rental of the Parker cottage, which she occupied the past winter.

The Pops Open Season on May 4

On Wednesday evening, May 4, the Pop concerts will inaugurate their 53d season and take full possession of Symphony Hall for two months to come. Arthur Fiedler, under whose talented leadership the Pops have attained a quite unprecedented popularity, will resume control of the orchestra of Symphony players numbering over 90 which make the Pops a musical treat not to be matched in any other city at this time of year. The auditorium will be decorated in its summer garb, and refreshments served at the tables which will replace the usual rows of seats on the floor of Symphony Hall.

Arthur Fiedler has been studying the large Pops repertory with a view to mingling certain neglected works among the popular classics with those more familiar favorites which make their bid for immortality from year to year. The programs will also be spiced with musical hits of the moment, magnified to Pops proportions. Special programs will be announced as the season progresses.

CLOSING SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony orchestra will bring its 57th season to an end next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall. Serge Koussevitzky has chosen music of Haydn, Debussy and Brahms for the final program. The opening number will be Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88—one of the series which was composed for performance in Paris. Debussy's three orchestral sketches, "La Mer," will be the second number. Brahms' First Symphony in C minor will conclude the season.

B. Globe - April 24/38

MUSIC AND

Beethoven's 'Missa Solemnis'

Beethoven's great choral score, the "Missa Solemnis," will be performed in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening at 8:15 for the benefit of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. The choruses will be the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloists will be as follows: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass.

The "Missa Solemnis," a gigantic score among choral masterpieces, is not often performed, due to its magnitude and difficulty. It was last heard in Boston a decade ago, during the Beethoven Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The work, incidentally, was chosen for the inauguration of Symphony Hall in 1900.

The Pops Begin May 4

The 53d season of "Boston's unique Spring entertainment," the Symphony Hall Pops, will begin Wednesday evening, May 4. The season will as usual continue for two months. Arthur Fiedler returns for a ninth year as conductor. Under his regime the Pops have attained unprecedented popularity.

The orchestra will consist of more than 90 Boston Symphony players. Symphony Hall will be decorated in summer fashion and refreshments will be served at tables replacing the rows of seats upon the floor of the hall.

It is announced that Mr. Fiedler has been studying the Pops repertory with a view to bringing out some neglected "popular classics." Favorite pieces and hits of the day will find place upon the programs.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL CAMPAIGN STARTED

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15. In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3:30 P. M. The other concerts will be at 8:30 P. M. Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel Company and contractors are now engaged building the roof and the walls.

SOWERBY'S CONCERTO FOR ORGAN

B. Post April 23/38

Biggs Soloist at First Performance With Symphony

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The interest, if not the pleasure, in yesterday afternoon's Symphony concert centered largely in the first performance here or anywhere of Leo Sowerby's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, with E. Power Biggs as the soloist. The extremes of the programme fell to two familiar symphonies, Beethoven's Fourth and Schumann's First.

LOSES AGAINST ORCHESTRA

The union of organ and orchestra in choral pieces is common enough and no one has ever questioned its effectiveness. As unassailable is the addition of the organ to the orchestral apparatus, whether for sonority or color, in such pieces as Saint-Saens C minor Symphony, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra" or his "Apline" Symphony, due, by the way, for a revival at Symphony Hall. But an organ concerto is a more delicate and debatable matter. Pitted against the orchestra as a solo instrument or in actual competition with it the organ loses out, unless the orchestral part is specially designed, as in Rheinberger's Concerto for organ, horns and strings.

Shines in Quiet Section

Less discreet than Rheinberger, Mr. Sowerby employs in his Concerto the standard modern orchestra and handles it with his characteristic exuberance. Consequently the organ part is quite outshone in the first movement, though it makes out better in the quiet second division, with its MacDowellish marking "slowly and wistfully." In the last movement, a series of variations on a theme in part disquietingly reminiscent of the Forlane in Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin," Mr. Sowerby has achieved a distinctly better division of interest than in the first.

If, as a result of an unsuccessful solving of this technical problem, any of Mr. Biggs' effort went for naught, that fact is deplorable, since he was confronted with a task of exceeding difficulty. That he mastered these difficulties goes without saying. His recent series of Bach recitals at Harvard's Germanic Museum have established beyond any doubt his virtuosity and musicianship. He was liberally applauded yesterday as was Mr. Sowerby, who was present.

Always Has Melody

As music, this Concerto made excellent entertainment, if that term may here be used with propriety. Happily Mr. Sowerby has not succumbed to the present symphonic trend toward austerity, intellectuality and general drabness. His music, here as elsewhere, is written with a refreshing gusto. Dissonance is not spared, but it is sauce, or garnish, not the meal itself. And there is distinguishable, if not always distinguished melody.

The two Symphonies in B-flat major were probably combined on a single programme for the first time in the history of the Orchestra. If comparisons were here to be made between the essentially classic Beethoven and the essentially romantic Schumann it might be said that the elder composer ran away with the honors in the matter of construction and the younger exhibited the more persuasive ideas.

Schumann's "Spring"

This "Spring" Symphony of Schumann, sketched in a mere four days, is at once the least symphonic and the most melodic of all the important works in the form.

Dr. Koussevitzky's success with both Symphonies has always been marked, and the performances of yesterday, enthusiastically received, were up to his and the Orchestra's high standards. It seemed, indeed, that the performance of Beethoven's Symphony in particular, established a new "high" for that particular work.

AT DRIVE-IN THEATRE

"Boy of the Streets," Monogram's powerful epic of the city slums, is the feature at the Drive-In Theatre, Weymouth, south shore Route 3-A to Nantasket, New England's first open-air auto theatre, through Tuesday, giving Jackie Cooper adult stardom.

The story concerns Chuck, a 16-year-old product of the slums and Norah, a pretty little Irish girl, who worships him. Jackie Cooper gives a stirring performance as Chuck and wins audience sympathy for the sensitive young boy whose sordid environment almost overwhelms him. In addition, the Drive-In theatre will show news, comedies and Mickey Mouse each evening continuous rain or shine.

16

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

APR 23 1938

APPLAUSE UNUSUAL

Boston Concert Crowd Hails World Premiere of Concert.

Boston, April 22. — (AP) — The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony Hall broke its quiet today to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere of Leo Sowerby's concerto for organ and orchestra in C major by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

So great was the applause that Koussevitzky beckoned the burly, bespectacled and fiery-haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

The concerto echoes the classical models of concertos, but has considerable freedom of design and procedure. The tremendous vigor of the first and last movements contrast strongly with the song-like ease of the second movement.

Sowerby, a native of Grand Rapids, Mich., completed it last summer.

Her

MUSIC

Apr 23 38

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The 23d regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The soloist was E. Power Biggs, organist. The program was as follows:

Symphony No. 4 in B flat major Op. 80 .... Beethoven
Concerto for organ and orchestra in C major .... Sowerby
Symphony in B flat major No. 1 Op 38 .... Schumann

For some queer reason the Fourth Symphony is played less than any of the others of Beethoven. No industrious scholar has tabulated the frequency of performance of these nine celebrated works, so that the foregoing statement must be accepted on faith. The comparative neglect is the more extraordinary since the Fourth is a singularly lovely work and may well be preferred by many people to others more renowned. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted it last season, but it was not too soon to hear it again. In the exact and graceful performance yesterday its qualities could be readily appreciated.

Concertos for organ are a rarity, and it is doubtful if any, other than Handel's, are studied and performed. At least we assume that there are organ concertos by various composers—surely Widor and Vierne and Karg-Elert must have written them?—but for the symphony concert audience this was a new experience.

It may be said at once that it was a highly stimulating and exciting experience, for Mr. Sowerby, who was in the hall yesterday to hear the first performance of his Concerto, has written a brilliant and effective work. It is ably developed, romantic in mood and is a work that neither scorns virtuosity nor exploits it for its own sake. It is possible to find too much similarity in mood in the first movement and the finale, so that the latter repeats the effects used in the former. Between them, however, comes a beautiful and restrained slow movement, so that the fault is minimized.

The slow movement, with its delicacy of melodic line and its charming and interesting fugal passage on the organ, is the one that reveals the finest of Mr. Sowerby's musical invention. We would not, at the same time, do away with the power and brilliance of the other two. Without repeated hearings it may be that the first movement sounds a bit muddy. The themes and the workmanship are there, but it requires closer attention than the average Symphony Hall patron is willing to expend in order to follow and sort them out.

It is no secret that the Symphony Hall organ is not the best in the world! Doubtless Mr. Biggs had to resort to many shifts to get the effects the composer wanted. It is certain that the difficult pedal cadenzas had to be finished off in one or two instances on the manuals. The solo part was nevertheless extremely well played by Mr. Biggs. Presumably the difficulties of the Sowerby Concerto had no terrors for a man who has just completed a cycle of all the organ works of Bach. Mr. Biggs accomplished his task with ease, authority and good taste. He was given every support and encouragement by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky. The composer, soloist and conductor were cordially received by the audience.

There are certain works of art which arouse in individuals so warm and enthusiastic a feeling that one has no criticism to offer, no fault to find. Such a work for us is Schumann's First Symphony—and his Fourth, too, for the matter of that. The "Spring" Symphony is the finest flower of the romantic spirit in symphonic music. It bubbles over with new ideas, with vitality and with glorious melody.

One of Dr. Koussevitzky's many virtues as a conductor is his taste for Schumann's symphonies. That alone would be commendable, but it would not be of much practical use in interpretation. Dr. Koussevitzky further so catches the spirit of this music and so cleverly manipulates the orchestration and the orchestra to that spirit that the performances he offers us of Schumann are irresistible. Yesterday's was no exception, and the audience recognized the fact by stamping and cheering.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week will see the final concerts of the season, when Haydn, Debussy and Brahms figure on the program.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

B. Globe April 23/38

Leo Sowerby's Organ Concerto, the last new music to be played this season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given first performance anywhere yesterday afternoon. The soloist was E. Power Biggs, English organist who now lives in Cambridge. The Concerto stood midway upon a program that began with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, and ended with the "Spring" Symphony by Robert Schumann. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Mr. Sowerby is a moderate among present-day American composers, to use a term esteemed in some quarters and opprobrious in others. But as it is applied to him, moderation is a virtue. His music is vigorous and healthy, harmonically up to date yet neither cacophonous nor confused, well contrived if a little on the robust side. Furthermore, Mr. Sowerby possesses a rugged independence of thought and has shown that he knows precisely what he wants to set down. He is plainly a man who realizes that vision and emotion are eternal requisites of art. Perhaps some of us have not always seen and felt with him in earlier compositions, but he has rightfully earned respect as an earnest and resourceful musician.

In the first place, the Organ Concerto is displayful, but its brilliance is not the sort that strives to be sensational. An organist, he has composed with an obvious relish for the virtuoso aspects of his instrument. His themes are clearly stated, and if they are not—at first acquaintance—of plenary inspiration, they are striking and furnish a basis for the varied repetition and the logical development at which he is skilled.

The slow movement offers a good deal of effective but not distinguished melody, and he has succeeded in writing fugal passages that do not sound like a fugue. His instrumentation is perhaps the least individual part of the Concerto, and in certain places is rather heavy-handed. Mr. Sowerby was present, and from the stage received cordial applause.

It was especially fortunate that Mr. Biggs was chosen to perform the solo part, because he is a consummate artist. His achievements have become known to some of the local public, but the very nature of his instrument required such an occasion as this to bring him before the Symphony audiences. He, too, won the favor of the Friday subscribers.

The "ovation" of the afternoon was, however, directed at Dr. Koussevitzky and Robert Schumann, after a particularly vital reading of the "Spring" Symphony. There were stamping and cheers as well as handclapping. Schumann's glorious masterpiece, so warm, radiant and irresistible, so Germanic in style and universal in appeal, is music that Dr. Koussevitzky recreates superlatively well. The orchestra was in top form, it is hardly necessary to add.

Beethoven was accorded like treatment in a performance notable for clarity balanced with verve. Yet the charm of this Symphony is almost too perfect; absolute symmetry can grow monotonous, and Beethoven somehow was more persuasive as the Titan of the odd-numbered symphonies. But whether Beethoven's stormy side or his tranquility wears best, is beside the point. All his symphonies are masterpieces.

The season will be concluded with the concerts next week, when this program will be heard: Symphony in G major, No. 88; Debussy: "La Mer"; Brahms: First Symphony.

C. W. D.

Organ Concerto By Leo Sowerby

B. Trav Apr 23 38

The Boston Symphony programs for tomorrow afternoon and Saturday evening will contain music by Leo Sowerby, prominent American composer, who is known here more by his name than by his works. Between two symphonies in B-flat major, Beethoven's and Schumann's, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will present Sowerby's Concerto for organ and orchestra. The soloist for the performances, the first anywhere, will be the resident organist, E. Power Biggs, who recently completed a notable series of Bach concerts at the Germanic Museum, Harvard University.

Organ concertos — that is, those requiring orchestra, not those written for organ alone—are not common. The present writer recalls only the concertos of Handel. Sowerby being himself an organist as well as an able composer in symphonic forms, the task of writing a concerto for organ and orchestra came naturally to him when he laid out the work in question in the last months of 1936. He completed the score in the summer of last year. If it has a key, it is C major.

There are three movements. The first is marked "vigorously and moderately fast" and is substantially in sonata form. There is an orchestral introduction setting forth fragments of the themes. This is followed by a long passage for organ solo, wherein the long principal theme is exposed.

The second movement bears the indication, "slowly and wistfully." Here, too, the movement begins with an orchestral statement promptly followed by a passage for organ alone. The key is E-flat minor. The third movement, "boldly: moderately fast," moves from C minor to C major. It is essentially a theme and variations. The composer, who, while not shunning dissonance, writes prevailingly in tonal vein, begins the third movement with powerful dissonant chords for the organ.

The present performances will contain some cuts from the original manuscript. (For example, the recapitulation of the first movement.) For that reason, no attempt is here made to describe the form in detail.

M. S.

Sowerby's Organ Concerto

~~B. Glob~~
Monitor

The Arts in Boston

April 23/38

A new organ concerto by the American composer, Leo Sowerby, had its première at yesterday's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first of the last pair but one of the season. The soloist was E. Power Biggs, the young Englishman who now dwells among us and who recently completed the colossal feat of playing the entire organ literature of J. S. Bach in a series of 12 recitals.

Mr. Sowerby occupies a distinguished position among the middle generation of American composers, although only two of his works had previously been heard at these concerts—the symphonic poem, "Prairie," and the Second Piano Concerto. He has a good claim to the title of American composer. Born in Grand Rapids, Mich., he studied in Chicago until he was awarded the first fellowship in music at the American Academy in Rome, in 1921, and he has undoubtedly made a definite effort to reflect the American spirit in his music.

The organ Concerto impressed at a first hearing as an exuberant composition, put together with skill if not always with a sense of inevitability or of marked originality. The first movement is roughly in sonata form, the third consists of variations on a theme. In both of them there is a great deal of noisy jubilation which achieves a certain effectiveness in a traditional manner. Respighi on the lone prairee. The most arresting part of the concerto is a quiet fugal passage for the organ in the second movement. The solo part calls throughout for virtuosic playing, and Mr. Biggs met its demands with technical assurance and musical authority. The composer was present to accept applause and to thank soloist, orchestra and conductor.

The concert opened with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony and closed with Schumann's First. This "Spring" Symphony does not improve with the years, and yesterday's performance did little to freshen it. It had a routine sound, articulation was not of the usual clarity and the conductor seemed disposed to rush through the duller passages. This disposition is understandable, but it doesn't help the symphony. The Beethoven on the other hand, was a marvel of lucidity, balance and grace, a performance in which the orchestra's amazing virtuosity served an interpretation of surpassing poetry.

L. A. S.

Spring Mood at Symphony

B. Adv. April 23/38

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

A MOOD of youthful effulgence dominated the Boston Symphony concerts this weekend in a program which Dr. Koussevitzky had designed especially for spring.

From the opening of that ecstatic poem which is the Beethoven Fourth Symphony, to the close of that glorious burst of creative effort which is the Schumann First Symphony, scarcely a shadow floated across the musical panorama.

Certainly Leo Sowerby's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in C major protruded no darkened horizon.

The new work, given its first performance on the occasion of these concerts, proved a colossus of sound, marvelously lacking in redundancy, artificiality, hysteria, or bored dilletantism.

The effectiveness of the work, of course, lies in its exuberant vitality. It is not, however, one of those works in which enthusiasm escapes bounds. The structure itself is of sufficient breadth and sturdiness. It does not require verboseness to make its stature clear.

* * *

MR. SOWERBY is not primarily an orchestral colorist. But if there is little of that evanescent play of color to which contemporary composers are prone to put the modern virtuoso orchestra, massive effects are created by contrasts of light and shade.

The organ is used for the most part to augment the orchestral score rather than for display purposes. As soloist, E. Power Biggs performed with competence—as was to be expected. English by brith and training, Mr. Biggs is recently a resident of Cambridge. Many will remember the series of concerts in the Germanic Museum this winter in which he traversed the entire organ literature of Bach.

The orchestra performed the new work with the requisite verve and sonority, and at the close Mr. Sowerby was called to the stage to share applause, which was enthusiastically exclamatory.

As a composer, Sowerby is not entirely unknown to these audiences. His Second Concerto for Piano and "Prairie" having been performed at these concerts during the last few years.

Born in the Middle West, Sowerby studied variously with Percy Grainger, Calvin Lamper and Arthur Andersen. His chosen instrument is the organ, in which he was awarded the first fellowship of music at the American Academy in Rome in 1921.

* * *

THE FIFTY-SEVENTH season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be brought to a close with the pair of concerts to be given on next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the final program with Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88; Debussy's "La Mer" and Brahms' First Symphony in C minor will be included.

(17)

Beethoven Mass and Final Concerts of Boston Symphony Orchestra

Symphony Concert

First Performance of Sowerby's Organ Concerto with E. Power Biggs as Soloist

By MOSES SMITH

Serge Koussevitzky has a fondness for symmetry in program-building. He gratified it to good effect recently when he put together the first symphonies of three composers. He has been similarly successful with the program for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra of yesterday afternoon and this evening, a list that begins with Beethoven's Symphony in B-flat major and ends with Schumann's in the same key. The sandwich has for flavorsome middle section Leo Sowerby's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, heard in first performance yesterday by a matinee audience which probably was not of definitive or unified opinion as to whether the music of the contemporary American was to its taste, but which applauded enthusiastically after the performance of the Beethoven Symphony and remained to cheer after the Schumann. For the sake of the record it may be set down that both the organ soloist, E. Power Biggs, and Mr. Sowerby, who had journeyed here from the West for the performance, were the recipients of cordial demonstrations from the audience.

It was an afternoon of brilliant orchestral playing, particularly in the Schumann Symphony, which has long been a show-piece of the Boston Orchestra, and Dr. Koussevitzky. This fact made it seem almost negligible that sometimes the familiar music may not have sounded in precisely the tempo and with the exact shading that one might have wished. That is to say, the essential character of each of the composers was somewhat over-stressed. The classicism of Beethoven emerged a little too precise, the Romanticism of Schumann a little too free. But such procedure was obviously a fault in the right direction, infinitely to be preferred to a distorted Beethoven or a metronomic Schumann. It was characteristic of the latter-day Koussevitzky that even though the last movement of the Beethoven symphony was played at great speed there was no sacrifice of style; and an indication of the extraordinary virtuosity of the Boston Orchestra that there was practically no loss in precision.

Concerning the performance of an unfamiliar work like Sowerby's, difficult to grasp in first (even with the advantage of a preview at the rehearsals), one naturally expresses oneself with less confidence. The presentation seemed excellent. The conductor seemed to have arrived at the heart of the music of manifold expression, the orchestra to play it with assurance, and the soloist to deliver with consummate virtuosity the difficult passages assigned to his instrument. If now and then the organ apparently waged an unequal battle with the orchestra, the circumstance may plausibly have been due to the composer's having in mind a more brilliant instrument than the organ of Symphony Hall.

Anything like a reasoned opinion about the intrinsic character and merit of Mr. Sowerby's music will also have to await another hearing. On the present occasion the work was stronger in the general impression it created than in the degree with which its thematic material seized the imagination. The subject-matter of the first movement seemed disparate, and some of its challenging vigor consequently missed point. There were displayed some striking instances of modern harmony and counterpoint. But they had no sooner arrested the attention than one was disturbed by a glib sequence that repeated what had been said more persuasively and naturally by composers of the nineteenth century.

The second movement, which presented fewer difficulties for the listener, was also more pleasant. The writing was easier, the resultant mood better sustained. There were heard some beautiful sequences for the solo instrument, while the music evaded mushiness, into which it might easily have fallen. At a guess, the composer had here much for which to be thankful to the performers yesterday.

I found the third movement the most engrossing of all, even though the first sound of the principal theme was most disturbing. For the melody seemed to have leaped almost bodily out of the "Tombeau de Couperin" of Ravel. But once you took the theme for granted and ceased worrying about whether or not the similarity was mere coincidence, you found its treatment grateful and stimulating through the successive variations. Here was healthy, forceful expression—"American," if you must have a label. More important, it was contemporaneous. There was no attempt to gloss over the facts of life. If a dissonant progression was germane to the subject-matter and the composer's way with music, it was revealed without apology or without overstatement (which can be just as bad). The method of variation, with its obvious limitations, might well appear to have exhausted itself in the last century. But along comes a composer like Sowerby to remind us of the persistent danger of easy generalizations.

BRAVO! FAMED LEADER CRIES

B. Post Apr. 25/38

Koussevitzky Pleased by College Singers

For three and a half hours, yesterday, the indefatigable Serge Koussevitzky conducted the first combined rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society for Tuesday evening's performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" (Solemn Mass), considered by the composer his greatest work and called by a famous critic a sacred symphony.

"Bravo! Bravo! Bravo!" the famous conductor shouted to the 325 college singers during one chorus.

In his dressing room after the rehearsal, Koussevitzky was overheard by a friend murmuring, "It is going to be much better tomorrow."

The friend remarked he thought the rehearsal as good as a performance.

"Oh, we have a long way to go yet," Koussevitzky said, "and we will do that. We will make some big improvements. But today's rehearsal was very good. In fact, there are places in Europe where the opportunity to hear this marvelous music in a performance as good as that rehearsal would bring enough people to fill the hall 10 times."

Foreword to a Masterpiece

Concerning Beethoven's Rarely Performed Mass, To Be Heard Here Next Tuesday Evening

The performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in D Major, to be given on Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall with the combined forces of the Harvard and Radcliffe choral groups, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and various soloists, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will be only the fifth on record in Boston. The great Mass, which Beethoven considered his finest work, was given here in 1897 by the Cecilia Society under B. J. Lang; by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1900 on the occasion of the opening of Symphony Hall; and twice again in 1927 during the Beethoven festival of the Boston Orchestra. The remarks in an advance notice in the Transcript for the 1897 performance, to the effect that it was a "crying shame" that the work had not been previously presented in a musical centre like Boston, would, with obvious reservation, not be out of place on the eve of the performance next week.

For the fact is that whatever opinion is held on Beethoven's great work — and opinions are many and varied — more frequent and better performances are necessary before any sort of judgment can be formed. The chief objections to the Mass (Cecil Gray, for example, has characterized it as a "magnificent failure") are based on its terrific difficulty, especially in the vocal parts, its fundamental "unsingableness." The work is unquestionably one of the most difficult in modern musical art, by reason of both style and the technical demands imposed upon the singers. Many of the obstacles lie in the very high vocal registration, which leaves the singers screaming or exhausted. Here again arises the old problem of the difference in pitch in Beethoven's day and ours. The question of style — which Beethoven is frequently quoted to have considered much more important than technical facility—is a matter of musicianship pure and simple. Too much Beethoven, such as the Finale of the Ninth Symphony and the Scherzo of the Quartet, Op. 135, has been complacently condemned as "unplayable" at one time or another.

Comparison

Beethoven's Mass, like that other great musical setting of the words of the Catholic service, Bach's High Mass in B minor, passes far beyond the scope dictated by ecclesiastical tradition and observance. The two works cannot help but invite comparison, although any similarities they have are on the surface. Bach accomplishes his end within a broad, formal framework. His wonderful expressiveness is the more remarkable because it is accomplished within this architectural design. Beethoven, on the other hand, achieves his heights in the "Mass" through epitomizing the subjective, personal character of the text in a matter at once free, emotional and dramatic.

"As to form, Bach concerns himself with broad, separate pictures, which he sets aside to form an impressive cycle; Beethoven gathers together figures and events in a great picture; choosing to single out and clarify each individual event in a characteristic fashion," says Max Chop, German commentator. "Bach's method of execution is always melodic-contrapuntal; Beethoven's, for the most part, declamatory."

The circumstances of the composition of the "Missa Solemnis" are not unfamiliar: Beethoven began it in 1818, planning it to be ready for the installation of his pupil, the Archduke Rudolph, as Archbishop of Olmuetz in 1820. The work was not finished until 1823, and not published until 1827, although Beethoven had entered into negotiations of a not precisely ethical nature with no less than four publishers before the work was even completed. The first performance in toto was given in St. Petersburg in 1824; the first American performance in 1880.

In Detail

The "Missa Solemnis" is divided into five movements, the sections of the Catholic High Mass: "Kyrie," "Gloria," "Credo," "Sanctus," and "Agnus Dei." Each of these is subdivided into various parts and treated freely in accordance with the text. The Kyrie is planned in three sections: "Kyrie Eleison," in D major; "Christe Eleison," in B minor, built on a theme from the first part of the movement; and following a cadence in F-sharp minor, the "Kyrie Eleison" again, with new harmonic elaboration and a modulation into E-flat major before returning to a peaceful close in the original key.

The long Gloria, in conformity with the text, contains many sections of greatly varying character. Opening with the "Gloria" motiv—a rising figure from tonic to dominant—first intoned by the orchestra in unison and then by the vocal parts in turn, the movement proceeds to give an individual treatment to every phrase of the text. Finally Beethoven evolves the tremendous fugue, "In Gloria Dei Patris," followed by a section in moderately fast time, and, at long last, a repetition of the original "Gloria" theme.

In the "Credo," like the "Gloria," Beethoven welds into one colossal movement the musical expression of the text which Bach divided into eight separate pieces. Again the movement ends with a gigantic, typically Beethovenesque fugue.

It is in the two final movements, rather than in the Gargantuan choral sections, that Beethoven achieves the utmost in expressive and personal treatment: the "Benedictus," with its celestially beautiful violin obbligato, and the somber, supplicatory "Agnus Dei." The work ends with the lyric, peaceful, and secular "Dona Nobis Pacem," the two sections of which are interrupted by martial drums and trumpets and an anguished "Agnus Dei" from the solos before the resumption of the "Dona" brings the Mass to a close.

JEANNETTE EYRE

JOHN PRIEBE

Tenor soloist in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" at the Pension Fund Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Tuesday evening.

Music of The Week

B. Adv. April 24/38

BEETHOVEN'S "Missa Solemnis"—the work with which Symphony Hall was inaugurated in 1900, will be performed on Tuesday evening by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky for the first time in ten years. The occasion will benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, prepared by G. Wallace Woodworth, will assist. Soloists listed are Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe and Mack Harrell.

---

of Salisbury.

Bo. Ad. Apr. 24/38

Radcliffe Joins Harvard in Song

More than 170 Radcliffe girls of the Radcliffe Choral Society and 150 Harvard boys of the Harvard Glee Club participated with Dr. Serge Kousevitzky and the Boston Symhhony Orchestra in a rehearsal of "Missa Solemnis," by Bethoven, at Symphony Hall yesterday.

The composition, considered one of Beethoven's greatest, will be presented Tuesday night at Symphony Hall. The two college singing groups have been practicing for the performance since September, under the direction of G. Wallace Wood.

RADCLIFFE GIRLS REHEARSE

B. Glbe Ap

PRAISING THE LORD WITH SONG

Here are Roberta Billingsley, '39, of Lynn and Elizabeth Merrick,'41, of Grand Rapids, Mich. who are members of the Radcliffe Choral Society which will present Beethoven's celebrated "Missa Solemnis" at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening for the benefit of the Boston Symphony's pension fund. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct and the Harvard Glee Club will also participate.

(118)

Harvard, Radcliffe Singers Rehearse With Conductor Serge Koussevitzky

B. Globe April 24/38

KOUSSEVITZKY MEETS MISS RADCLIFFE

Famous conductor caught by camera in earnest conversation with several of the bevy of college girls who rehearsed with the Symphony Orchestra yesterday

After practicing since last Fall for a performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, 178 young women and 145 young men, members of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, had their first rehearsal with the orchestra's famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, yesterday.

The groups will perform Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" (Solemn Mass), containing some of the most difficult music ever written for human voice, next Tuesday in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. They have been coached by G. Wallace Woodworth.

Twenty states outside of Massachusetts are represented in the Radcliffe choristers, and 23 outside states and the Philippine Islands supplied the Harvard singers.

The president of the Radcliffe Choral Society is Margaret Brooks, Milton; its secretary, Norma Nasmyth of Brookline. Edward L. Barnes, Chicago, is president of the Harvard Glee Club; Ernest Sachs Jr., St. Louis, vice president; George W. Phillips, New York city, secretary; Leonard Unger, Cleveland, manager.

New Englanders chosen to sing in the Missa Solemnis, after eliminations throughout the year, are:

MASSACHUSETTS — Frank L. McLanathan, Andover; Rita M. Henry, Attleboro; Anthony P. Pickman, Bedford; Barbara Knott, Beverly; Harrison McK. Raine, Billerica; Mary R. Schellens, Clifton; W. Wigglesworth, Harvard; Robert D. Brewer Jr., Hingham; Lawrence B. Grose, Kendal Green; Henry G. Mishkin, Lowell; J. C. Goldthwait, Medfield; E. Dixwell Chase, Milton; S. C. Crocker, Milton; Helen Weston, New Bedford; Eleanor D. Browne, Newburyport; W. N. Calkins, Wakefield; William F. Schreiter, Walpole; Leila Sears, Wayland; Sylvia Merrill, Weymouth Heights; Adelaide J. van Rensselear, Wollaston.

CONNECTICUT—James A. Meath, Bridgeport; Mary Warren, Fairfield; Ruth Macloon, Greenwich; Edith Pratt, Middletown; H. H. Bristol, Naugatuck; Theodora D. Dubois, Hannah Trimm, William Welch, New Haven; Babette Taylor, J. T. Westlake, Norwalk; Katherine Johnson, D. A. Norton, Ridgefield; John H. Eric, Stamford; Eleanor Townsend, Westport.

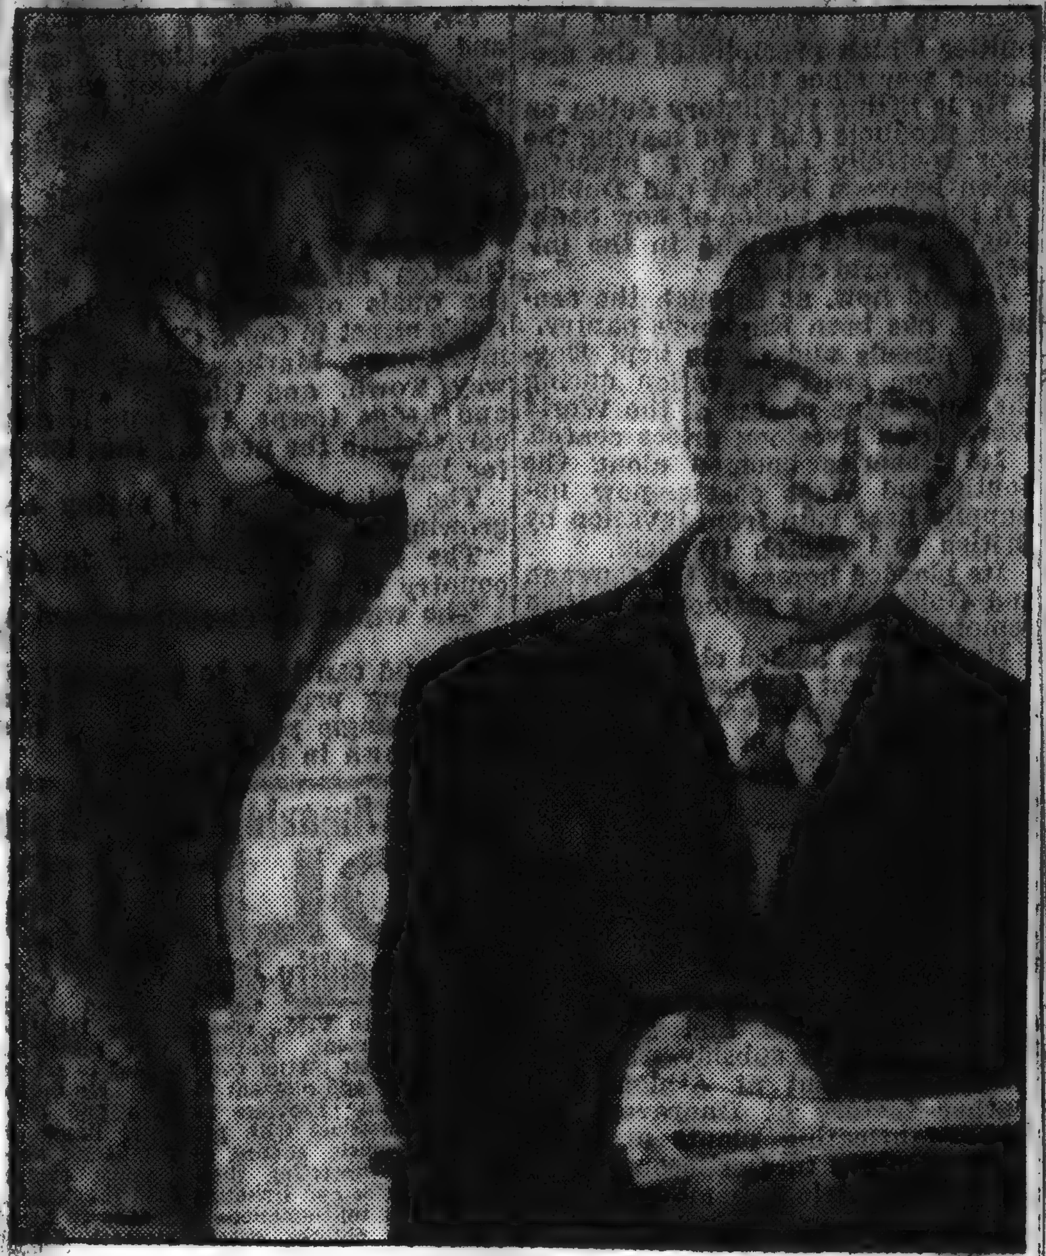
MAINE—C. Boyer, Cape Elizabeth; Elizabeth Davy, Lovell; Vesta Phillips, Portland.

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Mary Annichiarico, Concord; Albert des Rochers, Manchester; David W. Ballard, Peterboro; Anne H. Hewett, Portsmouth.

RHODE ISLAND—A. F. Clifford, Peace Dale; Margaret Emerson, Eleanor Mowry, G. N. Richmond, Providence.

VERMONT—T. D. S. Bassett, Burlington; Gardner Middlebrook, Northfield; Helen Leigh, Old Bennington.

LOOKING OVER SCORE



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, looks over score of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," with Margaret Brooks, of Milton, Radcliffe College senior. The composition will be given Tuesday night at Symphony Hall by 170 girls of the Radcliffe Choral Society and 150 boys of the Harvard Glee Club.

Sun. Advertiser, Apr. 24/38

SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR AT RADCLIFFE

B. Her. April 24/38

Serge Koussevitsky at a rehearsal with the Radcliffe Choral Society. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" will be presented Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

SYMPHONY TO END ITS SEASON

B. Post — Apr. 24/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

WITH the Symphony Concerts of this week, and they include a performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on Tuesday evening with the choirs of Harvard and Radcliffe assisting, the musical season proper is supposed to end. However, there is going to be plenty of music in the weeks that follow. The Pops begin, as is customary, on the Wednesday evening following the final Symphony Concert, and they will continue for two months from that date, May 4th, under the baton of Arthur Fiedler.

Opera in concert form also impends next month and, oddly enough, at the Pops. The occasion will be the 125th anniversary of the birth of Richard Wagner, which auspicious event took place at Leipzig on May 22, 1813. Under the aegis of the Richard Wagner Society portions of "Die Walkuere" will be given with Margaret Halstead and Violetta de Strozzi, sopranos, Colin O'More, tenor, and Raymond Lutz, baritone, as the singers and Fritz Mahler as the guest conductor.

* * * *

In aid of the Orchestra's Pension Fund Tuesday's performance of Beethoven's Mass in D major will be the third which Symphony Hall has known. The first of these served to inaugurate that auditorium in 1900; the second took place at the Beethoven Festival of 1927, which marked the centenary of the composer's death. The Mass itself stands somewhat apart from other musical interpretations of the text by reason of Beethoven's essentially human and even dramatic approach, as in the Dona nobis pacem, where the prayer for peace is accompanied by military instruments. The composition of the music, begun in 1818, but not actually finished until 1823, gave Beethoven much trouble, and when it was done he is said to have preferred it to all else he had written. "Never had he been known," wrote Sir George Grove, "to be so entirely abstracted from external things, so immersed in the struggle of composition. Schindler has well described a strange scene which occurred during the elaboration of the Credo—the house deserted by servants, and denude of every comfort; the master shut up in his room, singing, shouting, stamping, as if in actual conflict of life and death over the fugue 'Et vitam venturi'; his sudden appearance—wild, dishevelled, faint with toil and twenty-four hours' fast!"

The solo singers on Tuesday, whose task, like that of the chorus, is no light one, will be Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe and Mack Harrell. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society have again been prepared by their regular conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth.

It is now almost a foregone conclusion that Dr. Koussevitzky will bring the Symphony season to a close with the First Symphony of Brahms, so devoted is he to the custom of putting that particular piece in that particular place. Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, distinguished for its broadly melodious, slow movement, begins this final programme of the orchestra's 57th season, and the remaining number will be Debussy's "La Mer."

BRAVO! FAMED LEADER CRIES

Koussevitzky Pleased by College Singers

For three and a half hours, yesterday, the indefatigable Serge Koussevitzky conducted the first combined rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society for Tuesday evening's performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" (Solemn Mass), considered by the composer his greatest work and called by a famous critic a sacred symphony.

"Bravo! Bravo! Bravo!" the famous conductor shouted to the 325 college singers during one chorus.

In his dressing room after the rehearsal, Koussevitzky was overheard by a friend murmuring, "It is going to be much better tomorrow."

The friend remarked he thought the rehearsal as good as a performance.

"Oh, we have a long way to go yet," Koussevitzky said, "and we will do that. We will make some big improvements. But today's rehearsal was very good. In fact, there are places in Europe where the opportunity to hear this marvelous music in a performance as good as that rehearsal would bring enough people to fill the hall 10 times."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

APR 20 1938

Festival Shed Steel Finished

Annual Campaign for Memberships Begun

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival in Stockbridge, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campjaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well-known critic, will lecture Aug. 4 and 6, Aug. 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel Company and contractors are now building the roof and walls. The shed, seating more than 5000, is shaped like a half-open fan. It commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

APR 23 1938

Brooklyn Group Plans Symphony Concerts

Mrs. Earle P. Huff and Betty Bartholomew head the senior and junior women's committees for the Sea Scout benefit, Thursday, May 19, at the opening of the Bossert Marine Roof.

Plans for next season's Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, sponsored by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, will be made at the meeting Monday of the concert committee. Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, executive chairman, will be hostess.

19

Pension Fund Concert at Symphony Hall Tuesday Nigh

Mack Harrell, baritone, who will be one of the four soloists in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," to be given Tuesday evening at Symphony Hall for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund. The Beethoven mass has not been given since 1927.

Musical Events

TODAY—The Federal Music Project and the Museum of Fine Arts will sponsor the fifth oratorio concert in the museum at 2:30 P. M. A Buckingham Simson will conduct the State Chorus and Commonwealth Symphony in parts 2 and 3 of Gounod's "Redemption."

Cornelia Ann Francisco, Creole dramatic soprano, will give a recital in Jordan Hall at 3:15 P. M. Alice Reilly is the accompanist. She will sing songs of Haydn, Purcell, Poldowski, Respighi and others. She will conclude with a group of Negro spirituals.

MONDAY—The Malkin Conservatory of Music will give a faculty concert in Steinert Hall at 8:15 P. M. Leon Tumarkin, pianist, Harry Ellis Dickson, violinist, and Joseph Malkin, 'cellist, will play the following program: Beethoven's Trio in B flat major opus 97; Walter Piston's Trio; Tchaikovsky's Trio in A minor.

TUESDAY—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, will give a performance of Beethoven's Missa Salemnis as a pension fund concert in Symphony Hall at 8:15 P. M. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, will assist. The soloists are Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe and Mack Harrell.

POP CONCERTS OPEN WEDNESDAY, MAY 4

On Wenesday evening, May 4th, the Pop Concerts will inaugurate their 53d season and take full possession of Symphony Hall for two make the Pops a musical treat not under whose talented leadership the Pops have attained a quite unprecedented popularity, will resume control of the orchestra of Symphony players numbering over 90 which months to come. Arthur Fiedler, to be matched in any other city at this time of year. The auditorium will be decorated in its summer garb, and refreshments served at the tables which will replace the usual rows of seats on the floor of Smyphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler has been studying the large Pops repertory with a view of mingling certain neglected works among the popular classics with those more familiar

---

Pulpit Digest
Great Neck N.Y.
MAR - 1938

ARTS AND SCIENCES: RECORDED MUSIC

THE event of the month from a musical point of view, and certainly from the point of view of the clergyman interested in buying records, is the publishing of Volume I of the Passion Of Our Lord According to St. Matthew, by Bach, (Victor M411 $20). The occasion of this recording was, we are told, the performance at Symphony Hall, Boston, with the very impressive assistance of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club, and the Radcliffe Choral Society, not to mention several anonymous but praiseworthy soloists. The work is truly free from extraneous noises except in the instance of a soprano aria which is preceded and introduced by a faint apologetic cough. However, we find it rather charming and believe it gives the performance an impromptu air which goes toward contributing a little cheerfulness to what is otherwise a serious and solemn occasion. One is disarmed and set at ease, the impression intensified that one is hearing a radio performance rather than a piecemeal playing of this great work. It seemed to us, also, that there was rather more accompaniment by the harpischord than the orchestra, and that in either case they formed a background of lovely harmony. The work is performed as Bach intended it and scored it. We recommend it particularly for church services where and when soloists are not always available, and believe these records will be fully appreciated by the listening congregation, which, we further believe, will probably be unable to detect the fact that it is hearing facsimiles instead of original voices.

Whether it is the genius of Toscanini, or the fact that the work was recorded in Europe, that is the determining factor in the excellence of the newly performed Beethoven's Sixth, or Pastoral, Symphony, (Victor M-417 $10), we are bound to rush into superlatives. Obviously, Toscanini can call upon any orchestra to perform divinely, and this recording is

---

The Maestro Enjoys Himself Tonight

(This Photograph Was Made by Miss Augusta Alger, a Radcliffe Sophomore)

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard-Radcliffe Choral Society, rehearsing tonight's concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. (Story on Page 2).

B. Trans. April 26/38

Harvard Sings with Radcliffe at Symphony

Dr. Koussevitzky to Lead Groups Tonight in Annual Concert

Tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who is a part of Harvard University himself, will conduct the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society in a joint concert with his orchestra at Symphony Hall for the benefit of the Symphony Pension Fund. They will give Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Not one of the 185 women and 145 men will get more fun out of it than Dr. Koussevitzky, for he enjoys this annual performance more than anything else during the season.

For nights on end the two organizations have been rehearsing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, and sometimes Dr. Koussevitzky has come over to Sever Hall at Harvard in the evening to take a hand himself.

Presence Creates Stir

When he does there is a flutter of apprehension among the young ladies, and an undergraduate tenor is likely to crack on a high note, but before they are done there is a cameraderie which comes from accomplishment; everybody knows that a master has shown him the soul of the music so that he can sing it as Beethoven meant it to be sung.

Tonight Dr. Koussevitzky will be hard on his youthful musicians, for the will not compromise with the music. Yet underlying his stern demands for perfection there will be a companionship of effort which will be felt by the hundreds who annually look forward to this concert.

And among the hundreds will be many who once were part of the performance. They come back year after year, and they cherish the memories of the association which they had to give up when they left college.

These people will be on time tonight. The concert starts at 8.15, and Dr. Koussevitzky will manage to save a frown for latecomers.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS
APR 19 1938

A SNAPP C

Bach's majestic "Passion of Our Lord according to St. Matthews" has been recorded in its entirety by Victor. It takes three fat albums to hold all the music (411-412-413), and it takes something over two hours to listen to it, but it's worth it. The music was recorded at an actual performance in Symphony Hall, Boston, given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitsky conducting; the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society and several soloists, including Jeanette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle and Keith Faulkner.

It is needless to say that the Passion is about as magnificent as any music you are likely to hear. It is almost as needless to say that the groups which co-operated on the recording sing and play the work about as well as you will ever hear it performed. You may disagree with a few individual measures, but, by and large, you will find listening to the music a profound experience. Very little music is so stirring, and so able to move the listener to the depths of his being.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
APR 9 - 1938

MUSIC

Miss Siedhoff and Mr. Burgin Give a Recital

A recital was given by Elizabeth Siedhoff, pianist, and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Plantations auditorium last night.

The audience, though not large, was very cordial.

Miss Siedhoff played three groups of solos and joined Mr. Burgin in a "Chiaconna" by Vitali and a sonata by Franck. Miss Siedhoff's playing is reserved and musicianly. She has ample facility, commands a pleasing tone, and generally keeps the music moving.

The gavotte from "Iphigenia in Aulis" was done with taste and discernment, and the giga by Kammell was a bright trifle. The chorale by Bach was blurred somewhat, and the same might be said of the rhapsody by Dohnanyi that ended the program.

Miss Siedhoff embarked upon the Brahms waltzes of Opus 39. Sixteen waltzes, one after another, are too many for an audience to sit out, but Miss Siedhoff made them interesting. Whether because it is the one we are most familiar with or because it is honestly superior, the waltz in A-flat still seems the best. Miss Siedhoff provided many poetic moments in the Chopin nocturne.

Mr. Burgin's talents are well-known here. He combines beauty of tone and polished technic with thorough grasp of style. He makes the music mean something. The richness of double-stops in the "chiaconna" and the general clarity of line were impressive. The sonata had balance and lustre.

The program:

PIANO
Gavotte from "Iphigenia in Aulis"	Gluck
Giga	Kammell
Chorale: Jesus Christ, the Son of God from Easter Cantata	Bach
VIOLIN AND PIANO
Chiaconna	Vitali
PIANO
16 Waltzes Op. 39	Brahms
VIOLIN AND PIANO SONATA	Cesar Franck
Allegretto ben Moderato
Allegro 2nd movement
Recitative-Fantasia
Allegretto poco mosso
PIANO
Nocturne Op. 37 No. 2	Chopin
Arabesque No. 2	Debussy
Rhapsody in C major	Dohnanyi

---

is far smaller than that of other countries, and it is perhaps because of this that English music is too frequently the last thing to occur to program arrangers and conductors. But Purcell was a great composer, and the British Music Society is doing a notable job in making him, as well as other English composers, better known throughout the world.

R. B.

19

Pension Fund Concert at Symphony Hall Tuesday Night

Mack Harrell, baritone, who will be one of the four soloists in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," to be given Tuesday evening at Symphony Hall for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund. The Beethoven mass has not been given since 1927.

Musical Events

TODAY—The Federal Music Project and the Museum of Fine Arts will sponsor the fifth oratorio concert in the museum at 2:30 P. M. A Buckingham Simson will conduct the State Chorus and Commonwealth Symphony in parts 2 and 3 of Gounod's "Redemption."

Cornelia Ann Francisco, Creole dramatic soprano, will give a recital in Jordan Hall at 3:15 P. M. Alice Reilly is the accompanist. She will sing songs of Haydn, Purcell, Poldowski, Respighi and others. She will conclude with a group of Negro spirituals.

MONDAY—The Malkin Conservatory of Music will give a faculty concert in Steinert Hall at 8:15 P. M. Leon Tumarkin, pianist, Harry Ellis Dickson, violinist, and Joseph Malkin, 'cellist, will play the following program: Beethoven's Trio in B flat major opus 97; Walter Piston's Trio; Tchaikovsky's Trio in A minor.

TUESDAY—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, will give a performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis as a pension fund concert in Symphony Hall at 8:15 P. M. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, will assist. The soloists are Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe and Mack Harrell.

POP CONCERTS OPEN WEDNESDAY, MAY 4

On Wenesday evening, May 4th, the Pop Concerts will inaugurate their 53d season and take full possession of Symphony Hall for two make the Pops a musical treat not under whose talented leadership the Pops have attained a quite unprecedented popularity, will resume control of the orchestra of Symphony players numbering over 90 which months to come. Arthur Fiedler, to be matched in any other city at this time of year. The auditorium will be decorated in its summer garb, and refreshments served at the tables which will replace the usual rows of seats on the floor of Smyphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler has been studying the large Pops repertory with a view of mingling certain neglected works among the popular classics with those more familiar

---

Pulpit Digest
Great Neck N.Y.

MAR - 1938

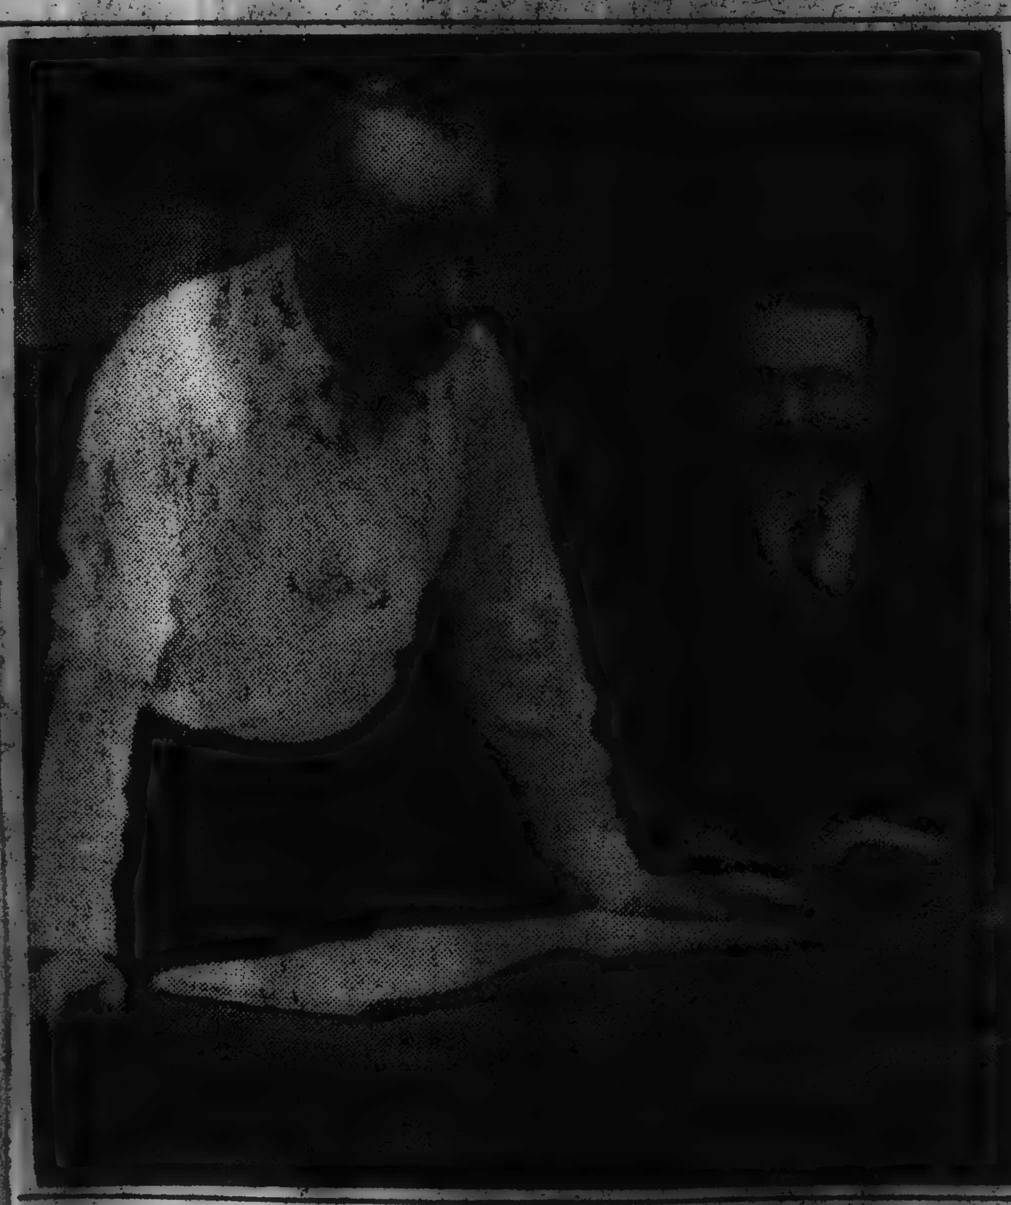
ARTS AND SCIENCES: RECORDED MUSIC

THE event of the month from a musical point of view, and certainly from the point of view of the clergyman interested in buying records, is the publishing of Volume I of the Passion Of Our Lord According to St. Matthew, by Bach, (Victor M411 $20). The occasion of this recording was, we are told, the performance at Symphony Hall, Boston, with the very impressive assistance of Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club, and the Radcliffe Choral Society, not to mention several anonymous but praiseworthy soloists. The work is truly free from extraneous noises except in the instance of a soprano aria which is preceded and introduced by a faint apologetic cough. However, we find it rather charming and believe it gives the performance an impromptu air which goes toward contributing a little cheerfulness to what is otherwise a serious and solemn occasion. One is disarmed and set at ease, the impression intensified that one is hearing a radio performance rather than a piecemeal playing of this great work. It seemed to us, also, that there was rather more accompaniment by the harpischord than the orchestra, and that in either case they formed a background of lovely harmony. The work is performed as Bach intended it and scored it. We recommend it particularly for church services where and when soloists are not always available, and believe these records will be fully appreciated by the listening congregation, which, we further believe, will probably be unable to detect the fact that it is hearing facsimiles instead of original voices.

Whether it is the genius of Toscanini, or the fact that the work was recorded in Europe, that is the determining factor in the excellence of the newly performed Beethoven's Sixth, or Pastoral, Symphony, (Victor M-417 $10), we are bound to rush into superlatives. Obviously, Toscanini can call upon any orchestra to perform divinely, and this recording is

24

The Maestro Enjoys Himself Tonight



(This Photograph Was Made by Miss Augusta Alger, a Radcliffe Sophomore)

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard-Radcliffe Choral Society, rehearsing tonight's concert with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. (Story on Page 2).

B. Trav. April 26/38

Harvard Sings with Radcliffe at Symphony

Dr. Koussevitzky to Lead Groups Tonight in Annual Concert

Tonight Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who is a part of Harvard University himself, will conduct the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society in a joint concert with his orchestra at Symphony Hall for the benefit of the Symphony Pension Fund. They will give Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis."

Not one of the 185 women and 145 men will get more fun out of it than Dr. Koussevitzky, for he enjoys this annual performance more than anything else during the season.

For nights on end the two organizations have been rehearsing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, and sometimes Dr. Koussevitzky has come oven to Sever Hall at Harvard in the evening to take a hand himself.

Presence Creates Stir

When he does there is a flutter of apprehension among the young ladies, and an undergraduate tenor is likely to crack on a high note, but before they are done there is a cameraderie which comes from accomplishment; everybody knows that a master has shown him the soul of the music so that he can sing it as Beethoven meant it to be sung.

Tonight Dr. Koussevitzky will be hard on his youthful musicians, for the will not compromise with the music. Yet underlying his stern demands for perfection there will be a companionship of effort which will be felt by the hundreds who annually look forward to this concert.

And among the hundreds will be many who once were part of the performance. They come back year after year, and they cherish the memories of the association which they had to give up when they left college.

These people will be on time tonight. The concert starts at 8.15, and Dr. Koussevitzky will manage to save a frown for latecomers.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS

APR 19 1938

A SNAPP C

Bach's majestic "Passion of Our Lord according to St. Matthews" has been recorded in its entirety by Victor. It takes three fat albums to hold all the music (411-412-413), and it takes something over two hours to listen to it, but it's worth it. The music was recorded at an actual performance in Symphony Hall, Boston, given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitsky conducting; the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society and several soloists, including Jeanette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle and Keith Faulkner.

It is needless to say that the Passion is about as magnificent as any music you are likely to hear. It is almost as needless to say that the groups which co-operated on the recording sing and play the work about as well as you will ever hear it performed. You may disagree with a few individual measures, but, by and large, you will find listening to the music a profound experience. Very little music is so stirring, and so able to move the listener to the depths of his

---

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
APR 9 - 1938

MUSIC

Miss Siedhoff and Mr. Burgin Give a Recital

A recital was given by Elizabeth Siedhoff, pianist, and Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Plantations auditorium last night.

The audience, though not large, was very cordial.

Miss Siedhoff played three groups of solos and joined Mr. Burgin in a "Chiaconna" by Vitali and a sonata by Franck. Miss Siedhoff's playing is reserved and musicianly. She has ample facility, commands a pleasing tone, and generally keeps the music moving.

The gavotte from "Iphigenia in Aulis" was done with taste and discernment, and the giga by Kammell was a bright trifle. The chorale by Bach was blurred somewhat, and the same might be said of the rhapsody by Dohnanyi that ended the program.

Miss Siedhoff embarked upon the Brahms waltzes of Opus 39. Sixteen waltzes, one after another, are too many for an audience to sit out, but Miss Siedhoff made them interesting. Whether because it is the one we are most familiar with or because it is honestly superior, the waltz in A-flat still seems the best. Miss Siedhoff provided many poetic moments in the Chopin nocturne.

Mr. Burgin's talents are well-known here. He combines beauty of tone and polished technic with thorough grasp of style. He makes the music mean something. The richness of double-stops in the "chiaconna" and the general clarity of line were impressive. The sonata had balance and lustre.

The program:

PIANO

Gavotte from "Iphigenia in Aulis" .... Gluck
Giga .... Kammell
Chorale: Jesus Christ, the Son of God from Easter Cantata .... Bach

VIOLIN AND PIANO

Chiaconna .... Vitali

PIANO

16 Waltzes Op. 39 .... Brahms

VIOLIN AND PIANO SONATA
Cesar Franck

Allegretto ben Moderato
Allegro 2nd movement
Recitative-Fantasia
Allegretto poco mosso

PIANO

Nocturne Op. 37 No. 2 .... Chopin
Arabesque No. 2 .... Debussy
Rhapsody in C major .... Dohnanyi

---

is far smaller than that of other countries, and it is perhaps because of this that English music is too frequently the last thing to occur to program arrangers and conductors. But Purcell was a great composer, and the British Music Society is doing a notable job in making him, as well as other English composers, better known throughout the world.

R. B.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

BOSTON, MONDAY, APRIL 25, 1938

90

Voices Attuned to Symphonic Harmony

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Conducting Orchestra and Harvard-Radcliffe Chorus

Harvard-Radcliffe Singers Ready for Symphony Call

By John D. Beaufort
Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

It is 7:20 of a spring evening in Sever 11, a spacious, mildly antiquated Harvard lecture room built theater fashion. Rows of one-arm desks descend precipitously to a "pit" below, which is almost filled by two upright pianos, their backs to a small platform. The platform contains a desk and a swivel chair, above and behind which are two bracket lamps—coat rack of early Edison style—a statue of some ancient, and a blackboard whose incidental intelligence varies from the schedule of rehearsals to the somewhat ambiguous: "Manager has lost pen."

At 7:30, the auditorium is almost filled. A man on the platform, his serious face constantly animated by a smile of both kindliness and amusement, stops talking to those nearby, opens a green volume and shouts, "Kyrie!"

This having no immediate effect on the 300 or so young men and women before him, he waits a minute or two and tries again.

"Be Resourceful"

"Now, make it good," he commands, raising his hand.

But the effort is frustrated by the arrival of a dozen bewildered-looking Radcliffe girls who enter and huddle in the doorway. Like the escape from a steam pressure valve, a terrific hissing sets up from those already seated—especially the men.

"Sit down somewhere as quickly as you can," says the conductor, and when this gives no sign of allaying panic, adds, "Be resourceful!"

Finally, every last Radcliffe choralite is seated, and G. Wallace Woodworth begins conducting the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society in one of their last rehearsals before the performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall tomorrow evening, for the benefit of the Symphony Pension Fund.

Serious Work Begins

Soon the door of Sever 11 opens again. There is no hissing this time. Instead, a burst of applause greets Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, a small man in a big black overcoat who descends the stairs, mounts the platform and shakes hands with Mr. Woodworth.

"The greatest joy of the season is the work with you," says Dr. Koussevitzky quietly when the applause has ceased. "I will conduct, myself—may I?"

Immediately the serious work of the evening begins, and it becomes obvious that the hissing, the laughter and the demonstrations of enthusiasm are merely the escaping sparks of an intensely charged interest and joy in the singing of great choral music. Harvard indifference was never more belied.

"Speak the words," says the conductor, interrupting to explain the interpretation of certain passages. "The words are extremely important. Do not think to sing. . . . Not so heavy, more light and simple. . . . Can I have the words? More 'Miserere.' When you have the quarters, speak them. . . . Speak in piano."

Conductor Demands Feeling

One of the mass's tremendous climaxes, signalized by a tumultuous tenor entry, stops the rehearsal short. There is no lack of sound, but the attack resembles the rush of frightened sheep through a narrow gate, and the tumult and the shouting dies almost immediately. Everyone, including Dr. Koussevitzky, bursts out laughing. After a long silence, in which he appears to be studying the music, Dr. Koussevitzky says in a voice of eloquent feeling:

"It was wonderful."

Once more, there is prolonged laughter.

"Please," says the conductor at another point, "exultation. You cannot praise God without exultation. You sound cold like ice, awfully cold. You must sing this like a child sings when he is happy. It must be most simple and with the most inner feeling from here." He presses both hands to his heart.

At 10:40 the rehearsal ends for the performance which will mark the Glee Club's and the Choral Society's 21st consecutive year of appearances with the Boston Symphony.

Actually, the Harvard Glee Club is a young organization. For although founded in 1858, it did not mature for 61 years. In 1919, however, the club decided once and for all to put away childish things—the "Bulldog on the Bank" variety of trivia traditional with mandolin, banjo and singing clubs—and to become a man.

Pioneering by Davison

Seven years previously, Dr. Archibald T. Davison had accepted an invitation to coach the Glee Club and it was he who instigated the revolution which put it into long trousers. Dr. Davison seems to have practiced the gentle art of boring from within long before it became a part of the Russian technique. Merely by showing them the fascination of really fine choral works, he soon had his men singing the music of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Handel, Palestrina, Mendelssohn, Schuman, European and American folk songs and also works by modern composers. Despite opposition, especially from some of the "old grads," the Club expanded from 75 men to its present membership of 237.

(Continued on Page 11, Column 1)

Harvard-Radcliffe Singers

(Continued from Page 9)

Every year, more men try out for the Glee Club than for the football team, according to Leonard Unger, '39, undergraduate manager. Out of some 350 candidates, 237 this year passed the quartet trials, which practically determine membership. These trials, in which four men participate at a time, allow each singer to prove that he has not been merely a McCarthy for the man behind him.

The influence of the Harvard Glee Club has extended far beyond the bounds of Cambridge or Boston. Every year, its tours cover hundreds of miles. Usually only 60 men go on the longer trips but an effort is made to spread these tours out among all the members and as many as possible participate in the Symphony Hall concerts. Tomorrow, there will be 145 men and 185 women. Among its other activities, the Club gives joint concerts with Wellesley, Smith, Vassar, Wells College and of course, the Radcliffe Choral Society, which has been associated with the Glee Club for many years.

Receipts Pay for Trip

Having grown to man's estate, it is interesting to note that the Club is an autonomous organization, conducting itself independently of the university. Its recent Spring trip, which cost $2,300, was paid for entirely from concert receipts. Everyone, from the conductor to the least important second tenor, participates purely for the love of the music.

Even in Europe, Dr. Davison's efforts have borne fruit. The Club's European tour in 1921 provided considerable stimulus for the founding of the "Choral Française." Several French composers offered to write music for the Harvard organization and Dr. Davison was decorated by the French Government.

The Glee Club's first appearance with the Boston Symphony occurred in 1917, when it was invited by Dr. Karl Muck to sing the Brahms "Schiksalslied" and a Bach Cantata with the Radcliffe Choral Society. Since then, the two organizations have annually sung with the orchestra such works as the "Missa Solemnis," the Ninth Symphony, Brahms' "German Requiem," Bach's "B Minor Mass" and his St. Matthew Passion," which was recorded last year by Victor.

After 15 years, during which time he had made many special arrangements of folk songs and other music, Dr. Davison turned his baton over to Mr. Woodworth—who is as much "Woody" to the present singers as Dr. Davison was "Doc" to their predecessors. "Woody" had been a Glee Club accompanist for several years and was assistant conductor at the time Dr. Davison retired. During "Woody's" absence this winter, "Doc" returned to conduct rehearsals for several weeks.

When the Harvard Music Building was erected about 25 years ago, a special rehearsal room was provided for the Glee Club. But somehow, Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings still find the singers pushing out the walls of Sever 11, recently repainted. And though the drafty old hall may not be responsible for the immense success of both the Glee Club and the Choral Society, it has played too important a part in the onward and upward march to be abandoned merely because there happen to be new quarters.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

APR 24 1938

Boston Symphony Orchestra Brooklyn Committee to Meet; Next Season's Dates Announced

The Brooklyn Committee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, Adrian Van Sinderen, chairman, will have its Spring meeting tomorrow afternoon at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, executive chairman. Other officers of the committee are Mrs. Edward C. Blum and Mrs. William H. Good, vice chairmen; Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, chairman of the membership commitee, and Mrs. Trafton O. Badger, chairman of the Junior League Committee.

The orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Kousevitzky, will open its Brooklyn season on Friday evening, Nov. 18. The remaining concerts will be held on Friday evening, Jan. 6; Thursday evening, Feb. 9; Friday evening, March 10, and Friday evening, March 31. The performances will be given at 8:30 in the opera house of the Academy of Music. The concerts are held under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

The "Missa Solemnis"

B Globe April 27/38

Beethoven's choral masterpiece, the "Missa Solemnis," was performed at Symphony Hall last night for the benefit of the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted. The choruses were the 350 young men and women of the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass. The organist was Albert Snow.

This performance was living testimony to the extraordinary opportunity with which Bostonians have been provided in the past several years by the association of the Harvard and Radcliffe singers and the Boston Symphony in presenting great masterpieces of choral music. A decade ago the "Missa Solemnis" was last given here by them; in succession came the M minor Mass of Bach, Brahms' "German Requiem" and the "Saint Matthew Passion" of Bach. And various works of slighter stature have been proferred by these forces at various Spring festivals of the orchestra. Could any city short of New York match this record? And, in fact, could New York meet the general standard of performance which has happily been our good fortune?

The "Missa Solemnis," with its cruel difficulties for the voices, its departure from some of the traditional formulas of the liturgical setting, has for more than 100 years furnished musical academicians with such points of dispute as delight the pedantic mind. Beethoven began it in 1818, intending it for the installation as Archbishop of Olmutz of his princely friend and benefactor, the Archduke Rudolph. But as on other occasions, Beethoven's genius refused to be pressed, and the composer labored intermittently over his work for some time. Not until 1823 was it finished, three years too late for the Archduke's elevation.

While Beethoven did not entirely abandon the general formal plan of the mass traditional in his day, there is irony in the fact that a work whose very purpose obligated it to be impersonal should have turned out a vividly dramatic embodiment of the words addressed by man to his Creator. The "Missa Salemnis" is a personal expression of faith like the religious masterpieces of Bach, Mozart and Brahms. No supreme artist like Beethoven, whose instinct carried him directly to the heart of all matters of faith and emotion, could have been bound by traditional forms.

He spoke directly and intensely to his Creator in his own way, and so great was his genius and so great his heart that he spoke for all mankind. Perhaps the vocal counterpoint of Bach was more inventive and complex; perhaps Mozart was more graceful in what he wrote of his Requiem. Yet there is no music more exalted than the "Missa Solemnis," whose fervent emotion is expressed in the austere, somewhat mystic and original style of the Ninth Symphony and the last quartets. The chances are the "Missa Solemnis" was not understood in Beethoven's lifetime.

The pedants may carp as they like of Beethoven's merciless vocal writing, which occasionally asks singers—especially young singers—what is almost impossible. Those sustained A's and B's above the treble clef must have given the Radcliffe girls many a nightmare. Yet the voices are simply a means to Beethoven's expressive purpose, they function as instruments in his symphonic pattern. If singers could not cope with his music, that was not his fault. He knew what he wanted. His orchestra is dynamic and eloquent. Though the texture of the music is lighter than that of the B minor Mass, it shows a false accent or a poor attack all the more conspicuously.

Last night's performance, which was recorded like the "St. Matthew Passion" a year ago, was overwhelming in its emotional intensity. If the chorus did not enter precisely here or there, or if the counterpoint was not always clear, that was no serious obstacle to the expression of Beethoven's thought. Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting was marvel of exactitude and fire. The chestra played beautifully and the loists were all competent, though the voices of Miss Meisle and Mr. Harrell were not always robust enough to be heard above instrumentalist and chorus.

At the end, there were again stamping and cheers for a magnificent achievement, in which Mr. Woodworth and Dr. Archibald T. Davison, former conductor of the Glee Club, properly shared.

C. W. D.

(Final programme Book With Complete Index is Enclosed)

For Immediate Release
(Mailed April 27/38)

21

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA COMPLETES 57TH SEASON

Kousevitzky Again Justifies Reputation As Programme Maker

Included in the final programme book for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's fifty-seventh season is a summary of the programmes of Serge Koussevitzky's fourteenth season as conductor. Eighty-six works by forty composers were played. Of these, twenty-eight were symphonies, sixteen concertos of one or another kind, twelve were suites, nine tone poems, and five overtures. Composers now living wrote thirty-two of the works, thirty-three were by nineteenth century men, nine from the eighteenth century.

Listed in the summary are the works which compose the balanced repertory of a full symphonic year. Bach, his son Carl Philip Emanuel, and Boccherini represent the pre-classical composers. Haydn and Mozart, with three works each, fill in the classical period proper. Beethoven's first, third, fourth and seventh symphonies, the "Emperor" concerto and the third "Leonora" overture are all on the records of the twenty-four Friday and Saturday programmes. The "Missa Solemnis", presented as this season's Pension Fund concert, was recorded by RCA Victor, as was last year's performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion", a recording which, according to the Chicago News, "represents quite the most singular item to be found in all recorded music." Other choral works given during the current season were "Psalm XLVII" by Florent Schmitt and the "Requiem" of Fauré which was conducted by Nadia Boulanger, an authority on the work and the composer, and two works of Sibelius in which the Helsingfors University Chorus appeared with the Orchestra.

The great symphonies of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries form the inevitable substance of a catholic and comprehensive repertory. The twentieth century contains its measure of classics already, and these are increasingly recurrent as their significance becomes more generally apparent. The G minor Symphony of Albert Roussel, one of the works commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its fiftieth anniversary season was revived for the fourth time since 1930. Hindemith's Concert Music for String and Brass Choirs was also revived.

Ravel heads the list with nine works, due to the fact that Dr. Koussevitzky separated one pair of Friday and Saturday concerts into two memorial programmes after the composer's death, in an attempt both to pay fitting tribute and to give a rounded view of his work. To Prokofieff, with eight works, falls second place. Prokofieff accepted a long-standing invitation

(Turn page for continuation)

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
APR 23 1938

Brooklyn Already Supporting Boston Symphony Next Season

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announces that reservations for the coming season's series of five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Brooklyn Academy of Music are being made at a fast pace. The dates were announced on April 1 to an audience hearing the final concert by the orchestra for the current season. Since then subscribers have hastened to reserve their seats again, and a surprisingly large number of newcomers have added their names to the list.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open its Brooklyn season on Friday evening, Nov. 18. The remaining concerts will be held on Friday evening, Jan. 6; Thursday evening, Feb. 9; Friday evening, March 10, and Friday evening, March 31. The performances will be given at 8:30 o'clock in the opera house of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 24 1938

Boston Orchestra Lists Dates

Many reservations have been made for the coming season's series of five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, according to an announcement by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. The orchestra, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open its Brooklyn season on Friday night, Nov. 18. The other concerts will be on the nights of Jan. 6, Feb. 9, March 10 and March 31.

The Brooklyn committee for the concert series will hold its Spring meeting tomorrow afternoon at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, executive chairman, at 40A Monroe Place, Brooklyn. Other committee members are Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. William H. Good, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow and Mrs. Trafton O. Badger.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Sunday Journal & American
APR 24 1938

Boston Symphony Group to Report

Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, acting chairman, will hold a meeting of the Brooklyn committee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at her home, 40A Monroe pl., tomorrow afternoon.

Reports on the activities of the committee for the 1937-38 season will be made by the committee chairman, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, chairman of boxes, and other committee heads.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
APR 24 1938

Boston Symphony

Brooklyn Institute Reports Heavy Advance Subscriptions

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announces that reservations for the coming season's series of five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Brooklyn Academy of Music are being made at a fast pace. The dates were announced on April 1 to an audience hearing the final concert by the orchestra for the current season. Since then subscribers have hastened to reserve their seats again and a surprisingly large number of newcomers have added their names to the list.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
MAY 2 - 1938

BY CECIL SMITH.

Under the direction of Rudolph Ganz, guest conductor for the day, the Illinois Symphony orchestra put in a vigorous and spirited afternoon in the interests of modern French music at the Great Northern theater yesterday. The concert was the first of a series of six attractive programs to be given this week by the Federal Music project in recognition of National Music week.

The novelty of the day was Albert Roussel's Third symphony, in G minor. Other items listed were Debussy's early "Scotch March" and three compositions of Maurice Ravel, the song cycle "Shéhérazade," revived after ten years and sung by Mary Ann Kaufman, soprano, the "Pavane for a Dead Infanta," and the "Spanish Rhapsody."

The symphony was the third work by Roussel, who died last August, to be introduced here this season to a public far too unfamiliar with his work. Earlier in the year Hans Lange conducted both the "Suite in F" and "Pour une Fête de Printemps."

The G minor symphony was written for the fiftieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was first played by that group, and was revived in Boston in October, 1937. Outside of Boston it has hardly been known at all in America. Yesterday's performance indicated that this neglect is peculiarly unwaranted. The symphony is fertile in important musical ideas strongly put together, and instinct with deep feeling. The slow movement and the scherzo are especially happy, the one for its eloquent rise to a sweeping melodic climax at the end and the other for its pungent use of sharp cross rhythms. The harmonic style of the whole symphony is conventional enough not to outrage auditors whose ears are sensitive to excesses of dissonance, yet it is fresh, individual, and masculine.

(Final programme Book With Complete Index is Enclosed)

For Immediate Release
(Mailed April 27/38)

21

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA COMPLETES 57TH SEASON

Koussevitzky Again Justifies Reputation As Programme Maker

Included in the final programme book for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's fifty-seventh season is a summary of the programmes of Serge Koussevitzky's fourteenth season as conductor. Eighty-six works by forty composers were played. Of these, twenty-eight were symphonies, sixteen concertos of one or another kind, twelve were suites, nine tone poems, and five overtures. Composers now living wrote thirty-two of the works, thirty-three were by nineteenth century men, nine from the eighteenth century.

Listed in the summary are the works which compose the balanced repertory of a full symphonic year. Bach, his son Carl Philip Emanuel, and Boccherini represent the pre-classical composers. Haydn and Mozart, with three works each, fill in the classical period proper. Beethoven's first, third, fourth and seventh symphonies, the "Emperor" concerto and the third "Leonora" overture are all on the records of the twenty-four Friday and Saturday programmes. The "Missa Solemnis", presented as this season's Pension Fund concert, was recorded by RCA Victor, as was last year's performance of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion", a recording which, according to the Chicago News, "represents quite the most singular item to be found in all recorded music." Other choral works given during the current season were "Psalm XLVII" by Florent Schmitt and the "Requiem" of Fauré which was conducted by Nadia Boulanger, an authority on the work and the composer, and two works of Sibelius in which the Helsingfors University Chorus appeared with the Orchestra.

The great symphonies of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries form the inevitable substance of a catholic and comprehensive repertory. The twentieth century contains its measure of classics already, and these are increasingly recurrent as their significance becomes more generally apparent. The G minor Symphony of Albert Roussel, one of the works commissioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for its fiftieth anniversary season was revived for the fourth time since 1930. Hindemith's Concert Music for String and Brass Choirs was also revived.

Ravel heads the list with nine works, due to the fact that Dr. Koussevitzky separated one pair of Friday and Saturday concerts into two memorial programmes after the composer's death, in an attempt both to pay fitting tribute and to give a rounded view of his work. To Prokofieff, with eight works, falls second place. Prokofieff accepted a long-standing invitation

(Turn pages for continuation)

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN
APR 23 1938

Brooklyn Already Supporting Boston Symphony Next Season

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announces that reservations for the coming season's series of five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Brooklyn Academy of Music are being made at a fast pace. The dates were announced on April 1 to an audience hearing the final concert by the orchestra for the current season. Since then subscribers have hastened to reserve their seats again, and a surprisingly large number of newcomers have added their names to the list.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open its Brooklyn season on Friday evening, Nov. 18. The remaining concerts will be held on Friday evening, Jan. 6; Thursday evening, Feb. 9; Friday evening, March 10, and Friday evening, March 31. The performances will be given at 8:30 o'clock in the opera house of the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 24 1938

Boston Orchestra Lists Dates

Many reservations have been made for the coming season's series of five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, according to an announcement by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. The orchestra, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open its Brooklyn season on Friday night, Nov. 18. The other concerts will be on the nights of Jan. 6, Feb. 9, March 10 and March 31.

The Brooklyn committee for the concert series will hold its Spring meeting tomorrow afternoon at the home of Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, executive chairman, at 40A Monroe Place, Brooklyn. Other committee members are Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. William H. Good, Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow and Mrs. Trafton O. Badger.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Sunday Journal & American
APR 24 1938

Boston Symphony Group to Report

Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, acting chairman, will hold a meeting of the Brooklyn committee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at her home, 40A Monroe pl., tomorrow afternoon.

Reports on the activities of the committee for the 1937-38 season will be made by the committee chairman, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, chairman of boxes, and other committee heads.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
APR 24 1938

Boston Symphony

Brooklyn Institute Reports Heavy Advance Subscriptions

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announces that reservations for the coming season's series of five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Brooklyn Academy of Music are being made at a fast pace. The dates were announced on April 1 to an audience hearing the final concert by the orchestra for the current season. Since then subscribers have hastened to reserve their seats again and a surprisingly large number of newcomers have added their names to the list.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
MAY 2 - 1938

BY CECIL SMITH.

Under the direction of Rudolph Ganz, guest conductor for the day, the Illinois Symphony orchestra put in a vigorous and spirited afternoon in the interests of modern French music at the Great Northern theater yesterday. The concert was the first of a series of six attractive programs to be given this week by the Federal Music project in recognition of National Music week.

The novelty of the day was Albert Roussel's Third symphony, in G minor. Other items listed were Debussy's early "Scotch March," and three compositions of Maurice Ravel, the song cycle "Shéhérazade," revived after ten years and sung by Mary Ann Kaufman, soprano, the "Pavane for a Dead Infanta," and the "Spanish Rhapsody."

The symphony was the third work by Roussel, who died last August, to be introduced here this season to a public far too unfamiliar with his work. Earlier in the year Hans Lange conducted both the "Suite in F" and "Pour une Fête de Printemps."

The G minor symphony was written for the fiftieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was first played by that group, and was revived in Boston in October, 1937. Outside of Boston it has hardly been known at all in America. Yesterday's performance indicated that this neglect is peculiarly unwarranted. The symphony is fertile in important musical ideas strongly put together, and instinct with deep feeling. The slow movement and the scherzo are especially happy, the one for its eloquent rise to a sweeping melodic climax at the end and the other for its pungent use of sharp cross rhythms. The harmonic style of the whole symphony is conventional enough not to outrage auditors whose ears are sensitive to excesses of dissonance, yet it is fresh, individual, and masculine.

27

to conduct a programme only in late season after Dr. Koussevitzky had introduced three of his new scores. In one of these, the Second Violin Concerto, Heifetz played the solo part.

Following these two exceptions, Beethoven and Sibelius hold equal place with six works each. But throughout the significant new ranks with the familiar old. Experiments in extending the foundations of the repertory have brought forth unfamiliar music of Haydn and Mozart, and in the past two seasons of Clementi and Monteverdi.

Indiana University's survey of musical trends has pointed out the Boston Symphony's preëminence in encouraging and presenting works from living writers. In this connection it is interesting to note that in the index of Nicholas Slonimsky's book "Music Since 1900" Serge Koussevitzky's name has as many references as the total for all other conductors. Among this season's Americans are Walter Piston with a First Symphony, Edward Burlingame Hill with a Third, Leo Sowerby with an Organ Concerto. Malipiero and Pizzetti of Italy, Prokofieff and Starokadomsky of Russia, and the Roumanians Enesco and Alessandresco are all on the list.

Koussevitzky has maintained his custom of inviting soloists and conductors, for special works and programmes. So Nadia Boulanger conducted Fauré's "Requiem", Georges Enesco a programme of music mainly by himself and a compatriot, Prokofieff a list of his own devising; Hindemith played his own Viola Concerto, Menuhin the newly introduced Violin Concerto of Schumann. The concentrated attention of a season, then, is upon symphonic music. The soloists are the logical guests of an occasion.

> "Boston has always been the steadiest and best proponent of modern music", reads the Mueller survey. "Whether because many prominent American composers spent at least part of their musical career in or about the city, or because the spirit of Americanism runs higher than in New York or other cities, Boston has been the acknowledged leader in this field. . . . Boston in the last decade has been filling about ten per cent of her programmes with American music, two or three times as much as many of the others, and well above the national average of six per cent."

The programmes of the twenty-four Friday-Saturday concerts were the source of twelve Monday-Tuesday programmes, of eight at Harvard University, five each in Providence, and Brooklyn, ten in New York, two each in Hartford, New Haven and Pittsburgh, and single concerts in Ann Arbor, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Montclair and New Brunswick, N. J., Northampton, Mass., Philadelphia, Rochester, Springfield, Mass., Toledo and Worcester. Added to these are the six concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge, Mass., during the first two weeks of August. Dr. Koussevitzky will cut short his annual visit to Europe and return to his orchestra during the last week of July to prepare the Festival programmes.

Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

APR 23 1938

Music and The Drama

BOSTON SYMPHONY AUDIENCE APPLAUDS PERFORMANCE OF SOWERBY CONCERTO

BOSTON, April 22-AP-The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony Hall broke its quiet calm today to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere performance of Leo Sowerby's Concerto for organ and orchestra in C major by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The applause led Koussevitzky to beckon the burly, bespectacled and fiery-haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

The concerto echoes the classical models for concertos, but has considerable freedom of design and procedure. The tremendous vigor of the first and last movements contrast strongly with the songlike ease of the second movement.

Sowerby, a native of Grand Rapids, Mich., completed it last Summer.

E. Powers Biggs of Cambridge was at the organ for the concerto.

BANGOR, ME.
NEWS

APR 23 1938

Sowerby's Concerto Wins Approval

BOSTON, April 22—(AP)—The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony Hall broke its quiet calm today to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere performance of Leo Sowerby's concerto for organ and orchestra in C major by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The applause led Koussevitzky to beckon the burly, bespectacled and fiery haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

The concerto echoes the classical models for concertos, but has considerable freedom of design and procedure. The tremendous vigor of the first and last movements contrast strongly with the song-like ease of the second movement.

Sowerby, a native of Grand Rapids, Mich., completed it last summer.

E. Powers Biggs of Cambridge was at the organ for the concerto.

LEOMINSTER, MASS.
ENTERPRISE

APR 23 1938

COMPOSER IS ACCLAIMED

BOSTON, April 23 (AP)—The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony Hall broke its quiet yesterday to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere of Leo Sowerby's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in C Major by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

So great was the applause that Koussevitzky beckoned the burly, bespectacled and fiery-haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

APR 24 1938

Berkshire Festival Drive For Membership Opens

The opening of the annual membership campaign is announced by Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will again present Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of six concerts this summer.

The performance will take place on August 4, 6, 7 and 11, 13 and 14 at Tanglewood on Lake Mahkeenac, between Stockbridge and Lee, Mass. The Sunday concerts will be at 3:30 p. m., while the others will be at 8:30 p. m.

Of additional interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has already been erected and the building of the roof, walls and flooring is now in progress. Shaped like a half open fan, the shed will seat about 5000 persons.

While the programs have not been completed, by way of special interest there will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Koussevitzky Plans to Visit New Home of Berkshire Fete

Tr. Apr 30

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives its final concert of the season tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall, will go to "Tanglewood," home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, on Monday, to inspect the "Shed," permanent home of the Festival, now under construction. He also will attend a meeting that day at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, speaking to more than fifty members of the advisory board and committee workers of the Festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be accompanied by Bentley W. Warren, president of the trustees of the Boston Orchestra; Henry B. Sawyer, member of the board; Professor Richard B. Fay of M. I. T., consultant on acoustics for the new Shed, and Dr. Archibald T. Davison of Harvard. From Stockbridge Dr. Koussevitzky will proceed to New York to embark on Wednesday on the Normandie for his summer vacation.

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY TO INSPECT MUSIC SHED

B Globe April 30/38

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will visit "Tanglewood," the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, next Monday, to inspect the music shed being constructed. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will open the shed in August with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The conductor will be accompanied Monday by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony trustees; Henry B. Sawyer, of the orchestra's board; Prof. Richard B. Fay of M. I. T., consultant on acoustics for the new music shed, and Dr. Archibald T. Davison of Harvard. At noon, at the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, Dr. Koussevitzky will address 50 members of the Festival's advisory board. He will sail from New York Wednesday for a vacation in France.

to conduct a programme only in late season after Dr. Koussevitzky had introduced three of his new scores. In one of these, the Second Violin Concerto, Heifetz played the solo part.

Following these two exceptions, Beethoven and Sibelius hold equal place with six works each. But throughout the significant new ranks with the familiar old. Experiments in extending the foundations of the repertory have brought forth unfamiliar music of Haydn and Mozart, and in the past two seasons of Clementi and Monteverdi.

Indiana University's survey of musical trends has pointed out the Boston Symphony's preëminence in encouraging and presenting works from living writers. In this connection it is interesting to note that in the index of Nicholas Slonimsky's book "Music Since 1900" Serge Koussevitzky's name has as many references as the total for all other conductors. Among this season's Americans are Walter Piston with a First Symphony, Edward Burlingame Hill with a Third, Leo Sowerby with an Organ Concerto. Malipiero and Pizzetti of Italy, Prokofieff and Starokadomsky of Russia, and the Roumanians Enesco and Alessandresco are all on the list.

Koussevitzky has maintained his custom of inviting soloists and conductors, for special works and programmes. So Nadia Boulanger conducted Fauré's "Requiem", Georges Enesco a programme of music mainly by himself and a compatriot, Prokofieff a list of his own devising; Hindemith played his own Viola Concerto, Menuhin the newly introduced Violin Concerto of Schumann. The concentrated attention of a season, then, is upon symphonic music. The soloists are the logical guests of an occasion.

"Boston has always been the steadiest and best proponent of modern music", reads the Mueller survey. "Whether because many prominent American composers spent at least part of their musical career in or about the city, or because the spirit of Americanism runs higher than in New York or other cities, Boston has been the acknowledged leader in this field. . . . Boston in the last decade has been filling about ten per cent of her programmes with American music, two or three times as much as many of the others, and well above the national average of six per cent."

The programmes of the twenty-four Friday-Saturday concerts were the source of twelve Monday-Tuesday programmes, of eight at Harvard University, five each in Providence, and Brooklyn, ten in New York, two each in Hartford, New Haven and Pittsburgh, and single concerts in Ann Arbor, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Montclair and New Brunswick, N. J., Northampton, Mass., Philadelphia, Rochester, Springfield, Mass., Toledo and Worcester. Added to these are the six concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge, Mass., during the first two weeks of August. Dr. Koussevitzky will cut short his annual visit to Europe and return to his orchestra during the last week of July to prepare the Festival programmes.

Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

APR 23 1938

Music and The Drama

BOSTON SYMPHONY AUDIENCE APPLAUDS PERFORMANCE OF SOWERBY CONCERTO

BOSTON, April 22-AP-The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony Hall broke its quiet calm today to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere performance of Leo Sowerby's Concerto for organ and orchestra in C major by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The applause led Koussevitzky to beckon the burly, bespectacled and fiery-haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

The concerto echoes the classical models for concertos, but has considerable freedom of design and procedure. The tremendous vigor of the first and last movements contrast strongly with the song-like ease of the second movement.

Sowerby, a native of Grand Rapids, Mich., completed it last Summer.

E. Powers Biggs of Cambridge was at the organ for the concerto.

BANGOR, ME.
NEWS

APR 23 1938

Sowerby's Concerto Wins Approval

BOSTON, April 22—(AP)—The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony Hall broke its quiet calm today to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere performance of Leo Sowerby's concerto for organ and orchestra in C major by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The applause led Koussevitzky to beckon the burly, bespectacled and fiery haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

The concerto echoes the classical models for concertos, but has considerable freedom of design and procedure. The tremendous vigor of the first and last movements contrast strongly with the song-like ease of the second movement.

Sowerby, a native of Grand Rapids, Mich., completed it last summer.

E. Powers Biggs of Cambridge was at the organ for the concerto.

LEOMINSTER, MASS.
ENTERPRISE

APR 23 1938

COMPOSER IS ACCLAIMED

BOSTON, April 23 (AP)—The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony Hall broke its quiet yesterday to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere of Leo Sowerby's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in C Major by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

So great was the applause that Koussevitzky beckoned the burly, bespectacled and fiery-haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

APR 24 1938

Berkshire Festival Drive For Membership Opens

The opening of the annual membership campaign is announced by Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which will again present Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of six concerts this summer.

The performance will take place on August 4, 6, 7 and 11, 13 and 14 at Tanglewood on Lake Mahkeenac, between Stockbridge and Lee, Mass. The Sunday concerts will be at 3:30 p. m., while the others will be at 8:30 p. m.

Of additional interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has already been erected and the building of the roof, walls and flooring is now in progress. Shaped like a half open fan, the shed will seat about 6000 persons.

While the programs have not been completed, by way of special interest there will be a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Koussevitzky Plans to Visit New Home of Berkshire Fete

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives its final concert of the season tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall, will go to "Tanglewood," home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, on Monday, to inspect the "Shed," permanent home of the Festival, now under construction. He also will attend a meeting that day at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, speaking to more than fifty members of the advisory board and committee workers of the Festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be accompanied by Bentley W. Warren, president of the trustees of the Boston Orchestra; Henry B. Sawyer, member of the board; Professor Richard B. Fay of M. I. T., consultant on acoustics for the new Shed, and Dr. Archibald T. Davison of Harvard. From Stockbridge Dr. Koussevitzky will proceed to New York to embark on Wednesday on the Normandie for his summer vacation.

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY TO INSPECT MUSIC SHED

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will visit "Tanglewood," the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, next Monday, to inspect the music shed being constructed. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will open the shed in August with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The conductor will be accompanied Monday by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony trustees; Henry B. Sawyer, of the orchestra's board; Prof. Richard B. Fay of M. I. T., consultant on acoustics for the new music shed, and Dr. Archibald T. Davison of Harvard. At noon, at the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, Dr. Koussevitzky will address 50 members of the Festival's advisory board. He will sail from New York Wednesday for a vacation in France.

article in Springfield

News

Bottom - R. page.

---

reads same as

Season folder

for 1938

2

COURIER
Rockland - Me.
APR 26 1938

SYMPHONY HALL, BOSTON

TUESDAY EVENING, April 26, 1938

Eightieth concert for the benefit of the orchestra's
PENSION FUND
by the

Boston Symphony Orchestra

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Conductor

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF THE HARVARD GLEE CLUB
RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
G. WALLACE WOODWORTH, Conductor

SOLOISTS
JEANNETTE VREELAND, Soprano
KATHRYN MEISLE, Contralto
JOHN PRIEBE, Tenor
MACK HARRELL, Bass

ALBERT W. SNOW, Organ

NOTICE: By courtesy of all those taking part in this Pension Fund concert, the RCA Manufacturing Company will make Victor records of the present performance of the "Missa Solemnis."

The audience is requested to refrain from applause between numbers and to minimize any sounds which might interfere with the success of the records.

---

the better jazz with the more agreeable "moderns," he can—and does—provide a repertory broad enouth to please every possible taste A record season is anticipated. Even at this date reservations exceed 25,-000. Some figure that—25,000!

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 20 1938

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Membership Campaign

Stockbridge, April 20—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, opens its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the room and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured, adding:—

"The result will be an auditorium of simple but pleasing lines, with a seating capacity of 5000. Certain temporary features will be replaced gradually by permanent ones. Meanwhile there is in process of construction a hall of music wherein the audience may hear the music in its full beauties, while sheltered from storms and sun.

"It has been the aspiration of those in charge of the festival to build a shrine of music where, amidst the beauties of a New England summer, the finest music may be heard in such a performance as could be expected from one of the greatest orchestras in the world. This aspiration has become a fact.

"The trustees of the festival, however, are not content to stop with the achievement of this one goal. It is their hope that public recognition and support, already gratifyingly proved, will continue to grow, stimulating the festival to seek wider horizons and greater success. It is their hope that "Tanglewood" will be known more and more as a vitalizing force in the world of music."

Other details concerning festival plans and other cultural interests in the Berkshires may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., at Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

✓
✓

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
APR 14 1938

SYMPHONY FLUTIST PLAYER

Boston, April 14 (UP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, [illegible], Boston Symphony orchestra flutist and teacher, died yesterday after a long illness. Born at Bordeaux, France, he joined the Boston Symphony in 1922.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
APR 20 1938

LM OF
USIC
St. Clair Heisted

Heard
Matinee

...r cordiality ...terday after... ...nce as Serge ...s customary ...stage, across ...the podium. ...the six com... ...had had a ...Burgin conducting while Dr. Koussevitzky was in Florida; they were glad to welcome him back to the shepherding of his brilliant flock. At the close of the concert, applause was again extended. It was a temporary leavetaking and an expression of satisfaction with the comprehensive fare offered them through the season which has included a guest conductor, a 'cello, viola and piano concerto. This final program was strictly classical, if one accepts Debussy in that arrival.

The program of yesterday offered the Beethoven First, "Nuages" and "Fetes" from the Nocturne set of Debussy, and Brahms' No. 2 in D major. Here was music, often heard, that cleans the mind and purges the spirit of disorder. It is good to hear it like the visit of old friends in whom we find some new trait to admire at each meeting. Dr. Koussevitzky took the opening movement of the Beethoven with calm; if the gay spirits of Mozart's Leporello dashes in here and there, there was also the miss of a recalled golden turn as though the forsythia of the week had lured it all into the Fenway. The rest of the symphony was modeled with bright precision; given the clear textured life that the Hand guiding the hands reveals to us so happily.

At some former time, we recall a more evanescent cloud picture attained by the Boston Symphony, yet the assembling, the drifting and the fresh floating vision are but excuses for sumptuously gentle tonalities in whatever slight dynamic variation the master wills at the moment. However realistically or atmospherically we view "Fetes," the music holds a never-fading challenge to the imagination and its colors are generous in their shadings.

The fluently accented Brahms in the lively pacing and light grace given it by Dr. Koussevitzky, the balance of parts that darkened its spirits in the adagio by a barely caught vibration of the darker strings and its working up to concluding brilliance held the attention by its unfolding pattern.

"Well done! a pleasant afternoon. We enjoyed our visit so much—goodby till next year."

ST. PAUL, MINN.
NEWS
APR 20 1938

SO W
By PAU

Guest

I had a swell idea the other day on how to dodge some work. Pleasant attractive, talented, Dimitri Mitropoulos is bringing his Minneapolis Symphony orchestra to the Auditorium April 25. It will be the first appearance of the organization in St. Paul under his baton and Alice O'Brien and Mrs. Edwin White came to me in quest of some publicity for the concert.

"Why not make Mr. Mitropoulos guest conductor of this column?" I suggested.

Miss O'Brien and Mrs. White thought it was a brilliant idea but bashful Mr. Mitropoulos wasn't quite so enthusiastic. He conducts orchestras, not columns. Mrs. White who served as my emissary didn't fall down on the job, however. She got her story. And I escape the work. I turn the column over to Mrs. White:

Invitation

Question by Mrs. White: How did you happen to come to America?

Answer by Mr. Mitropoulos: The fact is I never dreamed of coming because I never dreamed I was a good enough conductor. Then one day I received an invitation from Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. He had heard of me in Europe and he thought he would like me to conduct in Bos-

---

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 23 1938

CONCERT RECORDS

From Bach to Bétove

SUBSTANTIAL additions to the recorded library of Bach continue to arrive. Victor has issued its third and final volume of the St. Matthew Passion, recorded at a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in which Mr. Koussevitzky and his men had the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society, and soloists. Probably a better recording of the great music could have been made in a studio, with a shrewder choice of soloists, but the three volumes (M-411, M-412, and M-413) make up an imposing presentation of the score and Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment is sound throughout. If you happen to have an earlier Victor performance of the Passion (M-138), the new albums will be a welcome replacement, since M-138 was a short version with only organ accompaniment. However, the early edition, with all its defects, had one brilliant performance—that of the Narrator, sung by a tenor whom you might not associate with Bach: Allan Jones.

There are now three Albert Schweitzer albums of Bach's organ music. The latest to be released here is Columbia 320, containing the C-minor, C-major, and E-minor preludes and fugues, and the A-minor fugue. The new volume maintains Dr. Schweitzer's high standards. There is an excellent and often diverting accompanying booklet by Alec Robertson, who indicates that one may write about Bach without being dolefully soulful.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
APR 22 1938

Six Concerts to Be Given Again at Stockbridge

Berkshire Festival, With Koussevitzki Conducting, to Be Heard in New Music Shed

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the roof and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured.

BEETHOVEN'S

MISSA SOLEMNIS

IN D MAJOR, Op. 123

FOR ORCHESTRA, CHORUS, AND FOUR SOLO VOICES

KYRIE: Assai sostenuto: Mit Andacht;
Andante assai ben marcato; Tempo primo

GLORIA: Allegro vivace; Larghetto; Allegro

INTERMISSION

CREDO: Allegro ma non troppo; Adagio;
Andante; Allegro; Grave

INTERMISSION

SANCTUS: Adagio: Mit Andacht; Allegro pesante;
Presto; Preludium: Sostenuto ma non troppo;
Andante molto cantabile
(Violin solo, RICHARD BURGIN)

AGNUS DEI: Adagio; Allegretto vivace;
Allegro vivace; Tempo primo

KYRIE

Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison.

Lord, have mercy. Christ, have mercy.

GLORIA

Gloria in excelsis Deo, et in terra pax hominibus bonae voluntatis. Laudamus te, benedicimus te, adoramus te, glorificamus te. Gratias agimus tibi propter gloriam tuam, domine Deus, Rex coelestis, pater omnipotens, Domine fili unigenite. Jesu Christe, domine Deus, agnus Dei, filius patris, qui tollis peccata mundi, miserere nobis, suscipe deprecationem nostram, qui sedes ad dexteram patris. Quoniam tu solus sanctus, tu solus dominus, tu solus altissimus, Jesu Christe, cum sancto spiritu in gloria Dei patris. Amen.

Glory be to God on high, and on earth peace, good will towards men. We praise thee, we bless thee, we worship thee, we glorify thee, we give thanks to thee for thy great glory, O Lord God heavenly King, God the Father Almighty.

O Lord, the only-begotten Son Jesus Christ; O Lord God, Lamb of God, Son of the Father, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us. Thou that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us. Thou that takest away the sins of the world, receive our prayer. Thou that sittest at the right hand of God the Father, have mercy upon us.

For thou only art holy; thou only art the Lord; thou only, O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, art most high in the glory of God, the Father. Amen.

CREDO

Credo in unum Deum, Patrem omnipotentem, Factorem coeli et terrae visibilium omnium et invisibilium. Et in unum Dominum Jesum, Christum, Filium Dei unigenitum, et ex Patre natum ante omnia saecula. Deum de Deo, lumen de lumine, Deum verum de Deo vero. Genitum, non factum, consubstantialem Patri, per quem omnia facta sunt. Qui propter nos homines, et propter nostram salutem descendit de coelis. Et incarnatus est de Spiritu sancto ex Maria Virgine: Et homo factus est. Crucifixus etiam pro nobis: sub Pontio Pilato passus, et sepultus est. Et resurrexit tertia die, secundum Scipturas. Et ascendit in coelum, sedet ad

I believe in one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and of all things visible and invisible.

And in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only-begotten Son of God, and born of the Father before all ages; God of God; Light of Light; true God of true God; begotten, not made; of the same substance with the Father; by whom all things were made. Who for us men, and for our salvation, came down from heaven, and became incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary, and was made man. He was crucified also for us, suffered under Pontius Pilate, and was buried. And the third day He rose again according to the

---

COURIER
Rockland - Me.
APR 26 1938

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
APR 20 1938

LM OF
USIC

St. Clair Heistad

Heard
Matinee

ar cordiality
terday after-nce as Serge
s customary
stage, across the podium.
the six com-
had had a
Burgin conducting while Dr. Koussevitzky was in Florida; they were glad to welcome him back to the shepherding of his brilliant flock. At the close of the concert, applause was again extended. It was a temporary leavetaking and an expression of satisfaction with the comprehensive fare offered them through the season which has included a guest conductor, a cello, viola and piano concerto. This final program was strictly classical, if one accepts Debussy in that arrival.

The program of yesterday offered the Beethoven First, "Nuages" and "Fetes" from the Nocturne set of Debussy, and Brahms' No. 2 in D major. Here was music, often heard, that cleans the mind and purges the spirit of disorder. It is good to hear it like the visit of old friends in whom we find some new trait to admire at each meeting. Dr. Koussevitzky took the opening movement of the Beethoven with calm; if the gay spirits of Mozart's Leporello dashed in here and there, there was also the miss of a regalled golden turn as though the forsythia of the week had lured it all into the Fenway. The rest of the symphony was modeled with bright precision; given the clear textured life that the Hand guiding the hands reveals to us so happily.

At some former time, we recall a more evanescent cloud picture attained by the Boston Symphony, yet the assembling, the drifting and the fresh floating vision are but excuses for sumptuously gentle tonalities in whatever slight dynamic variation the master wills at the moment. However realistically or atmospherically we view "Fetes," the music holds a never-fading challenge to the imagination and its colors are generous in their shadings.

The fluently accented Brahms in the lively pacing and light grace given it by Dr. Koussevitzky, the balance of parts that darkened its spirits in the adagio by a barely caught vibration of the darker strings and its working up to concluding brilliance held the attention by its unfolding pattern.

"Well done! a pleasant afternoon. We enjoyed our visit so much—goodby till next year."

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 23 1938

2

CONCERT RECORDS

From Bach to Bétove !

SUBSTANTIAL additions to the recorded library of Bach continue to arrive. Victor has issued its third and final volume of the St. Matthew Passion, recorded at a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in which Mr. Koussevitzky and his men had the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society, and soloists. Probably a better recording of the great music could have been made in a studio, with a shrewder choice of soloists, but the three volumes (M-411, M-412, and M-413) make up an imposing presentation of the score and Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment is sound throughout. If you happen to have an earlier Victor performance of the Passion (M-138), the new albums will be a welcome replacement, since M-138 was a short version with only organ accompaniment. However, the early edition, with all its defects, had one brilliant performance—that of the Narrator, sung by a tenor whom you might not associate with Bach: Allan Jones.

There are now three Albert Schweitzer albums of Bach's organ music. The latest to be released here is Columbia 320, containing the C-minor, C-major, and E-minor preludes and fugues, and the A-minor fugue. The new volume maintains Dr. Schweitzer's high standards. There is an excellent and often diverting accompanying booklet by Alec Robertson, who indicates that one may write about Bach without being dolefully soulful.

---

the better jazz, with the more agreeable "moderns," he can—and does—provide a repertory broad enouth to please every possible taste. A record season is anticipated. Even at this date reservations exceed 25,000. Some figure that—25,000!

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 20 1938

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Membership Campaign

Stockbridge, April 20—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, opens its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the room and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured, adding:—

"The result will be an auditorium of simple but pleasing lines, with a seating capacity of 5000. Certain temporary features will be replaced gradually by permanent ones. Meanwhile there is in process of construction a hall of music wherein the audience may hear the music in its full beauties, while sheltered from storms and sun.

"It has been the aspiration of those in charge of the festival to build a shrine of music where, amidst the beauties of a New England summer, the finest music may be heard in such a performance as could be expected from one of the greatest orchestras in the world. This aspiration has become a fact.

"The trustees of the festival, however, are not content to stop with the achievement of this one goal. It is their hope that public recognition and support, already gratifyingly proved, will continue to grow, stimulating the festival to seek wider horizons and greater success. It is their hope that "Tanglewood" will be known more and more as a vitalizing force in the world of music."

Other details concerning festival plans and other cultural interests in the Berkshires may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

✓

✓

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
APR 14 1938

SYMPHONY FLUTIST PLAYER

Boston, April 14 (UP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 69, Boston Symphony orchestra flutist and teacher, died yesterday after a long illness. Born at Bordeaux, France, he joined the Boston Symphony in 1923.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
NEWS
APR 20 1938

SO W

By PAU

Guest

I had a swell idea the other day on how to dodge some work. Pleasant attractive, talented, Dimitri Mitropoulos is bringing his Minneapolis Symphony orchestra to the Auditorium April 25. It will be the first appearance of the organization in St. Paul under his baton and Alice O'Brien and Mrs. Edwin White came to me in quest of some publicity for the concert.

"Why not make Mr. Mitropoulos guest conductor of this column?" I suggested.

Miss O'Brien and Mrs. White thought it was a brilliant idea but bashful Mr. Mitropoulos wasn't quite so enthusiastic. He conducts orchestras, not columns. Mrs. White who served as my emissary didn't fail down on the job, however. She got her story. And I escape the work. I turn the column over to Mrs. White:

Invitation

Question by Mrs. White: How did you happen to come to America?

Answer by Mr. Mitropoulos: The fact is I never dreamed of coming because I never dreamed I was a good enough conductor. Then one day I received an invitation from Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. He had heard of me in Europe and he thought he would like me to conduct in Bos-

---

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
APR 22 1938

Six Concerts to Be Given Again at Stockbridge

Berkshire Festival, With Koussevitski Conducting, to Be Heard in New Music Shed

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the roof and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured.

2

dexteram Patris. Et iterum venturus est cum gloria, judicare vivos et mortuos: cujus regni non erit finis. Et in Spiritum sanctum Dominum, et vivificantem: qui ex Patre Filioque procedit. Qui cum Patre et Filio simul adoratur, et conglorificatur: qui locutus est per Prophetas. Et Unum, Sanctam, Catholicam et Apostolicam Ecclesiam. Confiteor unum baptisma in remissionem peccatorum. Et expecto resurrectionem mortuorum. Et vitam venturi saeculi. Amen.

Scriptures, and ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of the Father. And He is to come again with glory to judge the living and the dead, of whose kingdom there shall be no end.

And in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Life-giver, who proceedeth from the Father and the Son; who, together with the Father and the Son, is adored and glorified; who spoke by the Prophets. And one Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church. I confess one baptism for the remission of sins; and I look for the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come. Amen.

SANCTUS

Sanctus dominus, Deus Sabaoth! Pleni sunt coeli et terra gloria tua. Osanna in excelsis.

Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord of Hosts! Heaven and earth are full of thy glory. Hosanna in the highest.

BENEDICTUS

Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini. Osanna in excelsis.

Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest.

AGNUS DEI

Agnus Dei, qui tollis peccata mundi, miserere nobis, dona nobis pacem.

Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us, grant us thy peace.

Remaining Boston Symphony Concerts of the season:

NEXT FRIDAY AFTERNOON and SATURDAY EVENING,

APRIL 29 AND 30

Programme

HAYDN……………………Symphony in G major, No. 88
DEBUSSY……………………"La Mer" ("The Sea")
BRAHMS……………………Symphony No. 1 in C minor

Those who may be interested in the Boston Symphony Concerts of next season (1938–1939) are invited to inquire at the subscription office, Symphony Hall.

COURIER
Rockland-Me.
APR 26 1938

REALM OF MUSIC

by Gladys St. Clair Heistad

My good friend, Ellen Tolman of Auburn, Mass., has been here this week and has left me a sheaf of programs covering the splendid concerts she has been hearing, also clippings pertaining to coming attractions. The Boston Symphony Orchestra April 12 gave a notable performance on Hayden's Symphony in G major, No. 88; Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," Ballet, Second Suite, Op. 64; and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D major, No. 73. Miss Tolman was returning home to attend the concert of April 20, when the artists would be Rubinoff and His Violin, and Fray and Braggiotti, famous piano often heard on the air. Rubinoff's program was scheduled to include in addition to the most popular numbers he has played over the air, several of his own compositions. It is interesting to note that the proceeds from this concert, sponsored by the Telegram-Gazette, will be turned over to the Community Chest.

• • • •

The announcement is made that the 53d season of the Pop Concerts will open May 4, continuing nightly through May and June. To gather about a table with one's friends over cool refreshment; to smoke, while listening to Handel or Wagner, or Cole Porter played by a full-sized and illustrious symphony orchestra—that is a privilege which no Bostonian will forego, and which no other city this side of Europe can boast. The question of programmes is always understandingly met by Arthur Fiedler, the talented conductor of these Pops. Widely conversant with classical music, with the better jazz, with the more agreeable "moderns," he can—and does—provide a repertory broad enouth to please every possible taste. A record season is anticipated. Even at this date reservations exceed 25,-000. Some figure that—25,000!

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
APR 20 1938

Heard
Matinee

ar cordiality
terday after-
nce as Serge
s customary
stage, across
the podium.
the six com-
had had a
Burgin con-
ducting while Dr. Koussevitzky was in Florida; they were glad to welcome him back to the shepherding of his brilliant flock. At the close of the concert, applause was again extended. It was a temporary leavetaking and an expression of satisfaction with the comprehensive fare offered them through the season which has included a guest conductor, a 'cello, viola and piano concerto. This final program was strictly classical, if one accepts Debussy in that arrival.

The program of yesterday offered the Beethoven First, "Nuages" and "Fetes" from the Nocturne set of Debussy, and Brahms' No. 2 in D major. Here was music, often heard, that cleans the mind and purges the spirit of disorder. It is good to hear it like the visit of old friends in whom we find some new trait to admire at each meeting. Dr. Koussevitzky took the opening movement of the Beethoven with calm; if the gay spirits of Mozart's Leporello dashed in here and there, there was also the miss of a recalled golden turn as though the forsythia of the week had lured it all into the Fenway. The rest of the symphony was modeled with bright precision; given the clear textured life that the Hand guiding the hands reveals to us so happily.

At some former time, we recall a more evanescent cloud picture attained by the Boston Symphony, yet the assembling, the drifting and the fresh floating vision are but excuses for sumptuously gentle tonalities in whatever slight dynamic variation the master wills at the moment. However realistically or atmospherically we view "Fetes," the music holds a never-fading challenge to the imagination and its colors are generous in their shadings.

The fluently accented Brahms in the lively pacing and light grace given it by Dr. Koussevitzky, the balance of parts that darkened its spirits in the adagio by a barely caught vibration of the darker strings and its working up to concluding brilliance held the attention by its unfolding pattern.

"Well done! a pleasant afternoon. We enjoyed our visit so much—goodby till next year."

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 23 1938

CONCERT RECORDS

From Bach to Bétove !

SUBSTANTIAL additions to the recorded library of Bach continue to arrive. Victor has issued its third and final volume of the St. Matthew Passion, recorded at a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in which Mr. Koussevitzky and his men had the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society, and soloists. Probably a better recording of the great music could have been made in a studio, with a shrewder choice of soloists, but the three volumes (M-411, M-412, and M-413) make up an imposing presentation of the score and Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment is sound throughout. If you happen to have an earlier Victor performance of the Passion (M-138), the new albums will be a welcome replacement, since M-138 was a short version with only organ accompaniment. However, the early edition, with all its defects, had one brilliant performance—that of the Narrator, sung by a tenor whom you might not associate with Bach: Allan Jones.

There are now three Albert Schweitzer albums of Bach's organ music. The latest to be released here is Columbia 320, containing the C-minor, C-major, and E-minor preludes and fugues, and the A-minor fugue. The new volume maintains Dr. Schweitzer's high standards. There is an excellent and often diverting accompanying booklet by Alec Robertson, who indicates that one may write about Bach without being dolefully soulful.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 20 1938

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Membership Campaign

Stockbridge, April 20—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, opens its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the room and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured, adding:—

"The result will be an auditorium of simple but pleasing lines, with a seating capacity of 5000. Certain temporary features will be replaced gradually by permanent ones. Meanwhile there is in process of construction a hall of music wherein the audience may hear the music in its full beauties, while sheltered from storms and sun.

"It has been the aspiration of those in charge of the festival to build a shrine of music where, amidst the beauties of a New England summer, the finest music may be heard in such a performance as could be expected from one of the greatest orchestras in the world. This aspiration has become a fact.

"The trustees of the festival, however, are not content to stop with the achievement of this one goal. It is their hope that public recognition and support, already gratifyingly proved, will continue to grow, stimulating the festival to seek wider horizons and greater success. It is their hope that "Tanglewood" will be known more and more as a vitalizing force in the world of music."

Other details concerning festival plans and other cultural interests in the Berkshires may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
APR 14 1938

SYMPHONY FLUTIST PLAYER

Boston, April 14 (UP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, Boston Symphony orchestra flutist and teacher, died yesterday after a long illness. Born at Bordeaux, France, he joined the Boston Symphony in 1923.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
NEWS
APR 20 1938

SO W

By PAU

Guest

I had a swell idea the other day on how to dodge some work. Pleasant attractive, talented, Dimitri Mitropoulos is bringing his Minneapolis Symphony orchestra to the Auditorium April 25. It will be the first appearance of the organization in St. Paul under his baton and Alice O'Brien and Mrs. Edwin White came to me in quest of some publicity for the concert.

"Why not make Mr. Mitropoulos guest conductor of this column?" I suggested.

Miss O'Brien and Mrs. White thought it was a brilliant idea but bashful Mr. Mitropoulos wasn't quite so enthusiastic. He conducts orchestras, not columns. Mrs. White who served as my emissary didn't fall down on the job, however. She got her story. And I escape the work. I turn the column over to Mrs. White:

Invitation

Question by Mrs. White: How did you happen to come to America?

Answer by Mr. Mitropoulos: The fact is I never dreamed of coming because I never dreamed I was a good enough conductor. Then one day I received an invitation from Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. He had heard of me in Europe and he thought he would like me to conduct in Bos-

---

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
APR 22 1938

Six Concerts to Be Given Again at Stockbridge

Berkshire Festival, With Koussevitski Conducting, to Be Heard in New Music Shed

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the roof and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured.

23

Scriptures, and ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of the Father. And He is to come again with glory to judge the living and the dead, of whose kingdom there shall be no end.

And in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Life-giver, who proceedeth from the Father and the Son; who, together with the Father and the Son, is adored and glorified; who spoke by the Prophets. And one Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church. I confess one baptism for the remission of sins; and I look for the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come. Amen.

NCTUS

Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord of Hosts! Heaven and earth are full of thy glory. Hosanna in the highest.

EDICTUS

Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest.

NUS DEI

Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us, grant us thy peace.

---

phony Concerts of the season:

OON and SATURDAY EVENING,

29 AND 30

ogramme

……Symphony in G major, No. 88
…………"La Mer" ("The Sea")
……Symphony No. 1 in C minor

d in the Boston Symphony Concerts of invited to inquire at the subscription

---

COURIER

Rockland - Me.

APR 2 6 1938

REALM OF MUSIC

by Gladys St. Clair Heistad

My good friend, Ellen Tolman of Auburn, Mass., has been here this week and has left me a sheaf of programs covering the splendid concerts she has been hearing, also clippings pertaining to coming attractions. The Boston Symphony Orchestra April 12 gave a notable performance on Hayden's Symphony in G major, No. 88; Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," Ballet, Second Suite, Op. 64; and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D major, No. 73. Miss Tolman was returning home to attend the concert of April 20, when the artists would be Rubinoff and His Violin, and Fray and Braggiotti, famous piano often heard on the air. Rubinoff's program was scheduled to include in addition to the most popular numbers he has played over the air, several of his own compositions. It is interesting to note that the proceeds from this concert, sponsored by the Telegram-Gazette, will be turned over to the Community Chest.

* * * *

The announcement is made that the 53d season of the Pop Concerts will open May 4, continuing nightly through May and June. To gather about a table with one's friends over cool refreshment; to smoke, while listening to Handel or Wagner, or Cole Porter played by a full-sized and illustrious symphony orchestra—that is a privilege which no Bostonian will forego, and which no other city this side of Europe can boast. The question of programmes is always understandingly met by Arthur Fiedler, the talented conductor of these Pops. Widely conversant with classical music, with the better jazz, with the more agreeable "moderns," he can—and does—provide a repertory broad enouth to please every possible taste A record season is anticipated. Even at this date reservations exceed 25,000. Some figure that—25,000!

* * * *

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

APR 2 0 1938

Heard
' Matinee

ar cordiality
terday after-
nce as Serge
s customary
stage, across
the podium.
the six com-
had had a
Burgin con-

ducting while Dr. Koussevitzky was in Florida; they were glad to welcome him back to the shepherding of his brilliant flock. At the close of the concert, applause was again extended. It was a temporary leavetaking and an expression of satisfaction with the comprehensive fare offered them through the season which has included a guest conductor, a 'cello, viola and piano concerto. This final program was strictly classical, if one accepts Debussy in that arrival.

The program of yesterday offered the Beethoven First, "Nuages" and "Fetes" from the Nocturne set of Debussy, and Brahms' No. 2 in D major. Here was music, often heard, that cleans the mind and purges the spirit of disorder. It is good to hear it like the visit of old friends in whom we find some new trait to admire at each meeting. Dr. Koussevitzky took the opening movement of the Beethoven with calm; if the gay spirits of Mozart's Leporello dashed in here and there, there was also the miss of a recalled golden turn as though the forsythia of the week had lured it all into the Fenway. The rest of the symphony was modeled with bright precision; given the clear textured life that the Hand guiding the hands reveals to us so happily.

At some former time, we recall a more evanescent cloud picture attained by the Boston Symphony, yet the assembling, the drifting and the fresh floating vision are but excuses for sumptuously gentle tonalities in whatever slight dynamic variation the master wills at the moment. However realistically or atmospherically we view "Fetes," the music holds a never-fading challenge to the imagination and its colors are generous in their shadings.

The fluently accented Brahms in the lively pacing and light grace given it by Dr. Koussevitzky, the balance of parts that darkened its spirits in the adagio by a barely caught vibration of the darker strings and its working up to concluding brilliance held the attention by its unfolding pattern.

"Well done! a pleasant afternoon. We enjoyed our visit so much—goodby till next year."

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 23 1938

CONCERT RECORDS

From Bach to Bétove

SUBSTANTIAL additions to the recorded library of Bach continue to arrive. Victor has issued its third and final volume of the St. Matthew Passion, recorded at a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in which Mr. Koussevitzky and his men had the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society, and soloists. Probably a better recording of the great music could have been made in a studio, with a shrewder choice of soloists, but the three volumes (M-411, M-412, and M-413) make up an imposing presentation of the score and Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment is sound throughout. If you happen to have an earlier Victor performance of the Passion (M-138), the new albums will be a welcome replacement, since M-138 was a short version with only organ accompaniment. However, the early edition, with all its defects, had one brilliant performance—that of the Narrator, sung by a tenor whom you might not associate with Bach: Allan Jones.

There are now three Albert Schweitzer albums of Bach's organ music. The latest to be released here is Columbia 320, containing the C-minor, C-major, and E-minor preludes and fugues, and the A-minor fugue. The new volume maintains Dr. Schweitzer's high standards. There is an excellent and often diverting accompanying booklet by Alec Robertson, who indicates that one may write about Bach without being dolefully soulful.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 2 2 1938

Six Concerts to Be Given Again at Stockbridge

Berkshire Festival, With Koussevitski Conducting, to Be Heard in New Music Shed

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the roof and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

[illegible] 2 0 1938

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Membership Campaign

Stockbridge, April 20—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, opens its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the room and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured, adding:—

"The result will be an auditorium of simple but pleasing lines, with a seating capacity of 5000. Certain temporary features will be replaced gradually by permanent ones. Meanwhile there is in process of construction a hall of music wherein the audience may hear the music in its full beauties, while sheltered from storms and sun. ✓

"It has been the aspiration of those in charge of the festival to build a shrine of music where, amidst the beauties of a New England summer, the finest music may be heard in such a performance as could be expected from one of the greatest orchestras in the world. This aspiration has become a fact. ✓

"The trustees of the festival, however, are not content to stop with the achievement of this one goal. It is their hope that public recognition and support, already gratifyingly proved, will continue to grow, stimulating the festival to seek wider horizons and greater success. It is their hope that "Tanglewood" will be known more and more as a vitalizing force in the world of music."

Other details concerning festival plans and other cultural interests in the Berkshires may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., at Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

APR 1 4 1938

SYMPHONY FLUTIST PLAYER

Boston, April 14 (UP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, Boston Symphony orchestra flutist and teacher, died yesterday after a long illness. Born at Bordeaux, France, he joined the Boston Symphony in 1923.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
NEWS

APR 2 0 1938

SO W
By PAU

Guest

I had a swell idea the other day on how to dodge some work. Pleasant attractive, talented, Dimitri Mitropoulos is bringing his Minneapolis Symphony orchestra to the Auditorium April 25. It will be the first appearance of the organization in St. Paul under his baton and Alice O'Brien and Mrs. Edwin White came to me in quest of some publicity for the concert.

"Why not make Mr. Mitropoulos guest conductor of this column?" I suggested.

Miss O'Brien and Mrs. White thought it was a brilliant idea but bashful Mr. Mitropoulos wasn't quite so enthusiastic. He conducts orchestras, not columns. Mrs. White who served as my emissary didn't fail down on the job, however. She got her story. And I escape the work. I turn the column over to Mrs. White:

* * *

Invitation

Question by Mrs. White: How did you happen to come to America?

Answer by Mr. Mitropoulos: The fact is I never dreamed of coming because I never dreamed I was a good enough conductor. Then one day I received an invitation from Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. He had heard of me in Europe and he thought he would like me to conduct in Boston for two weeks during his vacation in 1936. So I came and was invited again the next year—and to Minnesota as well. The Twin Cities were kind enough to like me! So I am here.

Scriptures, and ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of the Father. And He is to come again with glory to judge the living and the dead, of whose kingdom there shall be no end.

And in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Life-giver, who proceedeth from the Father and the Son; who, together with the Father and the Son, is adored and glorified; who spoke by the Prophets. And one Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church. I confess one baptism for the remission of sins; and I look for the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come. Amen.

NCTUS

Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord of Hosts! Heaven and earth are full of thy glory. Hosanna in the highest.

NEDICTUS

Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest.

GNUS DEI

Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us, grant us thy peace.

---

phony Concerts of the season:

OON and SATURDAY EVENING,

L 29 AND 30

rogramme

........Symphony in G major, No. 88

.... "La Mer" ("The Sea")

........Symphony No. 1 in C minor

ed in the Boston Symphony Concerts of invited to inquire at the subscription

---

COURIER

Rockland-Me.

APR 2 6 1938

conduct and deportment t he day.

For the recital boys vere dressed alike in whi nd white blouses. Their ong was "The Battle Hy Republic," played as they
he stage; then they play
Long Ago," "Music in the "Bells of St. Mary's." T eth Post and George Ro

My good friend, Ellen Tolman of Auburn, Mass., has been here this week and has left me a sheaf of programs covering the splendid concerts she has been hearing, also clippings pertaining to coming attractions. The Boston Symphony Orchestra April 12 gave a notable performance on Hayden's Symphony in G major, No. 88; Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," Ballet, Second Suite, Op. 64; and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D major, No. 73. Miss Tolman was returning home to attend the concert of April 20, when the artists would be Rubinoff and His Violin, and Fray and Braggiotti, famous piano often heard on the air. Rubinoff's program was scheduled to include in addition to the most popular numbers he has played over the air, several of his own compositions. It is interesting to note that the proceeds from this concert, sponsored by the Telegram-Gazette, will be turned over to the Community Chest.

* * * *

The announcement is made that the 53d season of the Pop Concerts will open May 4, continuing nightly through May and June. To gather about a table with one's friends over cool refreshment; to smoke, while listening to Handel or Wagner, or Cole Porter played by a full-sized and illustrious symphony orchestra—that is a privilege which no Bostonian will forego, and which no other city this side of Europe can boast. The question of programmes is always understandingly met by Arthur Fiedler, the talented conductor of these Pops. Widely conversant with classical music, with the better jazz, with the more agreeable "moderns," he can—and does—provide a repertory broad enouth to please every possible taste A record season is anticipated. Even at this date reservations exceed 25,000. Some figure that—25,000!

* * * *

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

[illegible] 2 0 19[illegible]

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Membership Campaign

Stockbridge, April 20—The Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, opens its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the room and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured, adding:—

"The result will be an auditorium of simple but pleasing lines, with a seating capacity of 5000. Certain temporary features will be replaced gradually by permanent ones. Meanwhile there is in process of construction a hall of music wherein the audience may hear the music in its full beauties, while sheltered from storms and sun. ✓

"It has been the aspiration of those in charge of the festival to build a shrine of music where, amidst the beauties of a New England summer, the finest music may be heard in such a performance as could be expected from one of the greatest orchestras in the world. This aspiration has become a fact. ✓

"The trustees of the festival, however, are not content to stop with the achievement of this one goal. It is their hope that public recognition and support, already gratifyingly proved, will continue to grow, stimulating the festival to seek wider horizons and greater success. It is their hope that "Tanglewood" will be known more and more as a vitalizing force in the world of music."

Other details concerning festival plans and other cultural interests in the Berkshires may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., at Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

APR 1 4 1938

SYMPHONY FLUTIST PLAYER

Boston, April 14 (UP)—Gaston Daniel Bladet, 59, Boston Symphony orchestra flutist and teacher, died yesterday after a long illness. Born at Bordeaux, France, he joined the Boston Symphony in 1923.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

APR 2 0 1938

Boston Symphony Heard At Commuters' Matinee

There was a particular cordiality in the greeting of yesterday afternoon's Symphony audience as Serge Koussevitzky began his customary dignified saunter down stage, across stage (bow) and up to the podium. This was the last of the six commuter's matinees; they had had a pleasant interim of Mr. Burgin conducting while Dr. Koussevitzky was in Florida; they were glad to welcome him back to the shepherding of his brilliant flock. At the close of the concert, applause was again extended. It was a temporary leavetaking and an expression of satisfaction with the comprehensive fare offered them through the season which has included a guest conductor, a 'cello, viola and piano concerto. This final program was strictly classical, if one accepts Debussy in that arrival.

The program of yesterday offered the Beethoven First, "Nuages" and "Fetes" from the Nocturne set of Debussy, and Brahms' No. 2 in D major. Here was music, often heard, that cleans the mind and purges the spirit of disorder. It is good to hear it like the visit of old friends in whom we find some new trait to admire at each meeting. Dr. Koussevitzky took the opening movement of the Beethoven with calm; if the gay spirits of Mozart's Leporello dashed in here and there, there was also the miss of a recalled golden turn as though the forsythia of the week had lured it all into the Fenway. The rest of the symphony was modeled with bright precision; given the clear textured life that the Hand guiding the hands reveals to us so happily.

At some former time, we recall a more evanescent cloud picture attained by the Boston Symphony, yet the assembling, the drifting and the fresh floating vision are but excuses for sumptuously gentle tonalities in whatever slight dynamic variation the master wills at the moment. However realistically or atmospherically we view "Fetes," the music holds a never-fading challenge to the imagination and its colors are generous in their shadings.

The fluently accented Brahms in the lively pacing and light grace given it by Dr. Koussevitzky, the balance of parts that darkened its spirits in the adagio by a barely caught vibration of the darker strings and its working up to concluding brilliance held the attention by its unfolding pattern.

"Well done! a pleasant afternoon. We enjoyed our visit so much—goodby till next year."

ST. PAUL, MINN.
NEWS

APR 2 0 1938

SO W

By PAU

Guest

I had a swell idea the other day on how to dodge some work. Pleasant attractive, talented, Dimitri Mitropoulos is bringing his Minneapolis Symphony orchestra to the Auditorium April 25. It will be the first appearance of the organization in St. Paul under his baton and Alice O'Brien and Mrs. Edwin White came to me in quest of some publicity for the concert.

"Why not make Mr. Mitropoulos guest conductor of this column?" I suggested.

Miss O'Brien and Mrs. White thought it was a brilliant idea but bashful Mr. Mitropoulos wasn't quite so enthusiastic. He conducts orchestras, not columns. Mrs. White who served as my emissary didn't fail down on the job, however. She got her story. And I escape the work. I turn the column over to Mrs. White:

* * *

Invitation

Question by Mrs. White: How did you happen to come to America?

Answer by Mr. Mitropoulos: The fact is I never dreamed of coming because I never dreamed I was a good enough conductor. Then one day I received an invitation from Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. He had heard of me in Europe and he thought he would like me to conduct in Boston for two weeks during his vacation in 1936. So I came and was invited again the next year—and to Minnesota as well. The Twin Cities were kind enough to like me! So I am here.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 23 1938

CONCERT RECORDS

From Bach to Bétove

SUBSTANTIAL additions to the recorded library of Bach continue to arrive. Victor has issued its third and final volume of the St. Matthew Passion, recorded at a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in which Mr. Koussevitzky and his men had the assistance of the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society, and soloists. Probably a better recording of the great music could have been made in a studio, with a shrewder choice of soloists, but the three volumes (M-411, M-412, and M-413) make up an imposing presentation of the score and Mr. Koussevitzky's treatment is sound throughout. If you happen to have an earlier Victor performance of the Passion (M-138), the new albums will be a welcome replacement, since M-138 was a short version with only organ accompaniment. However, the early edition, with all its defects, had one brilliant performance—that of the Narrator, sung by a tenor whom you might not associate with Bach: Allan Jones.

There are now three Albert Schweitzer albums of Bach's organ music. The latest to be released here is Columbia 320, containing the C-minor, C-major, and E-minor preludes and fugues, and the A-minor fugue. The new volume maintains Dr. Schweitzer's high standards. There is an excellent and often diverting accompanying booklet by Alec Robertson, who indicates that one may write about Bach without being dolefully soulful.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 2 2 1938

Six Concerts to Be Given Again at Stockbridge

Berkshire Festival, With Koussevitski Conducting, to Be Heard in New Music Shed

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the roof and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 24 1938

124

MUSIC OF TH

AN ANNIVERSARY

A Decade's Perspective of the Works of Henry Gilbert, American Composer

By OLIN DOWNES

It is ten years since he died, but not so long since we visited the workroom where there were so many talks. It was part of a little house and yard on a quiet street in Cambridge, Mass. There was an old table on which he composed, with music paper, in meticulous order, upon it. The very modest furniture, consisting principally of several ramshackle chairs, would hold together. A small wooden bookshelf hung on the wall, two decks of it. Packed tight, it was filled principally with small volumes of Thoreau, George Borrow, Herman Melville, Poe, Mark Twain and Whitman. He was very orderly, with all his shagginess, and gave a startled look around the room if a volume was out of place or missing.

* * *

The piano was awful. It was an old upright. Some of the keys in the lower part either would not sound or came up too slowly, giving the impression of something toothless. He would strike fascinating chords upon it, and snicker when your own fingers failed to find them. He was devoted to that piano, and averred a special reason for his attachment, so great that it was long years before he would agree to the acceptance as a loan from a leading piano house of a fine new instrument! He said that the tone of a new piano would "seduce" him. If he could write something that pleased him on the old rattle-trap it would be likely to stand up on its own merits, whereas the sheer sonority of a better medium might disguise for him the weakness of a poor composition! But there was reason to suspect that some more personal and perhaps sentimental reason attached him to the ancient and decrepit recipient of his musical ideas. Perhaps it was just that being a very sensitive man underneath as rough and horny a shell as ever lived a musician and poet, he felt freer to confide his ideas to it. For he lived many years of agonized experiment and self-examination in the attempt, while painfully conscious of his limitations as compared with his conceptions, "to write one good page of music." Or perhaps he had earned the piano painfully, or it had come to him through some cherished source. Whatever the reason, that piano was his true friend and companion of his soul. When the newer instrument came in, it was only a fair-weather friend, and the earlier intimacy could not be replaced or imitated. There was another thing about the old piano that sticks out in the mind, as it stuck out, very prominently, on the music rack. It was a sentence copied by hand from an indignant letter that Mark Twain wrote a publisher who had attempted to polish the author's style. The sentence of protest, which our friend was reluctant to have out of his sight in working hours, read thus: "PLAIN CLARITY IS BETTER THAN ORNATE OBSCURITY."

He abided by that in his daily relations and in his music.

* * *

Henry Gilbert was the first American pupil of Edward MacDowell when he returned to this country from Europe in the Eighties to teach and continue his creative career, Gilbert never attained his full creative stature, for he was one of the "lonely" Americans of an early period in our music. There were no sympathetic friends or relatives, there was no money, and very little adequate instruction. An attack of typhoid in later years, so severe that its physical ravages depleted his strength for work, hastened his death on May 18, 1928. But before he had gone he did put down on paper certain priceless things, in themselves of artistic and national significance, and, let us hope, prophetic of certain fundamental attributes that will develop in the American musical art of the future.

At the foundation of it all was his incontrovertible sincerity, the sense of what was free and noble, the vision of the America sung by Whitman. There was the passion, the compulsion toward the expression of these things in an art. There are usually successive periods sometimes clearly demarcated in the musical evolution of a people. At a certain time a nation, such as Russia in the early nineteenth century, which has been dominated by foreign artistic influences, realizes the importance of its own folk music and cultivates it. Later there are developed devices of artistic workmanship. Still later comes a time when the art of a great master shapes and sublimates the expressive impulses of generations.

* * *

Gilbert definitely struck out for self-realization in our native art at a time when such courses had no general approval. He, an outstanding figure of Arthur Farwell's devoted circle, was perhaps an extremist, as what man of genius is not, and when nothing short of obsession would make any dent in the walls of conservatism and servility before foreign art. And he was eternally right. He said, indeed he snorted and swore, that American music was not to be found, let alone heard, in our concert halls and opera houses, completely dominated in his lifetime by German and French conceptions of music-making. He said he had to hunt for genuine musical expressions of the land in places completely outside the precincts of conservatories and operatic and concert activities. For a practically penniless person he traveled an astonishing number of miles over the country, listened with his ear to ground, and was able to record what he heard. He was fascinated by the folk music that ascended from the American soil, and admired the raciness of the songs, often cheap and vulgar, sometimes highly original, of the music halls and the music counters in the department stores. He lived closer to the earth than many people can, even if they want to, in these mechanized days. He proceeded, not as a man with a pet theory or some fanciful social gospel to exhale, but as an artist, one whose nature it is to express the stuff of life in terms of living art. For he was genuinely a musician, potently creative. As man and artist he was at one with himself. He heeded the still, small voice in all that he lived or put on music paper. So doing, he became an outstanding pioneer and prophet of American music.

He gained his first conspicuous success with the "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes," when it was performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in April of 1911. Before that, through the interest of Arthur Farwell, this composition had had a hearing at a semi-popular concert in New York City. Therefore, since our American musical public is inclined to estimate a composer as well as a person by the society in which he is seen, the "Comedy Overture" did not receive serious attention, critical or otherwise, until the Boston performance. Then Philip Hale and H. T. Parker of Boston, among others, gave the music the recognition it deserved. In a certain important direction it was a pioneer piece, breaking ground, and making a veritable local sensation in a way that would now be accepted as a foregone conclusion and a matter of course in native composition. By "way" we mean Gilbert's bold, if not scandalous, use of an American popular musical idiom, known at the moment as "rag-time," a designation which has been replaced in our day by the gaudier and noisier term of "jazz" or its even jazzier descendant, "swing." And the different terms have something in them which points out the difference in the musical substances involved. Gilbert's "rag-time" motive, which opened his overture, came genuinely of the South and was redolent with the humor and the melancholy, too, of the strains of a day when we as a population were far less urbanized, sophisticated and cocktailed than at present. In fact the source of the inspiration of the "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes" is indicative of the nature of its melodic material. It was inspired by the "Uncle Remus" tales of Joel Chandler Harris. Gilbert, fascinated by the narratives of that imaginary Aesop of American folklore, had made an operetta, in which all the animals of the Tales were personified. Each animal had a characteristic motive. We once saw the sketches of a work which probably will never see the light. As memory goes. they were extremely amusing, fanciful, piquant, with a flourish to which Br'er Rabbit shook his ears, and a glissando when Br'er Ba'r growled, "G'wine up, g'wine up." It was one of the composer's many disappointments and tragedies that when the operetta was in a way to completion the Harris heirs refused to give him permission of copyright, bestowing their favor upon another composer who never has been heard from. One thing remained from this particular wreck: the "Comedy Overture," which had no text, and therefore no restrictions in performance.

* * *

Max Fiedler, then conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, immediately recognized the humor, romanticism and complete originality of style and approach of this music. But it was weeks, indeed it was the end of the season, when he ventured to put the piece—the work of a man with no friends in high places—at the end of a program, when any one disturbed or inclined to hold the musical nose could escape by the nearest exit. For the overture began with a merry theme in the "rag-time" rhythm, and "rag-time," up to that moment, had never been heard echoing in the precincts of Symphony Hall. The "Comedy Overture" came off superbly. It had defects of instrumentation and a certain awkwardness of connecting passages, modulation, instrumentation. But it was exhilaratingly, astonishingly alive, and on the spot it put to death a new composition, played at the same concert, by an older and widely known composer. The "Comedy Overture" remains a delightful piece of music, the work of a poet as well as one in whose sounds rang the laughter of a Mark Twain and the unmistakable spirit of a young nation.

* * *

There were other significant orchestral works, not so unified, and uneven in style, because in some cases they appeared in final form as the overhauling, correction, supplementation of ideas of a youth when the composer had yet to learn the elements of skillful composition and instrumentation. So that not all of "The Dance on Place Congo," after George W. Cable's story of the dances of the slaves in the old days in New Orleans, equals the wild prelude, the grace and sentiment of certain intervening pages, and the fantastic end, when a bell tolls and there is a pause and cries of despair and a sound of what could be the shuffling of feet, as the miserable ones who have danced their hour and forgotten toil and woe heel back at the signal to quarters. There was the "Shout," as it originally was called, later entitled "Negro Rhapsody," performed at the Carl Stoeckels Norfolk Festival; the brief prelude and interludes written as incidental music to Synge's "Riders to the Sea" and to another Irish drama, "The Twisting of the Rope"; songs to Celtic poems; the rousing ditty, "Fifteen Men on a Dead Man's Chest," after the verses of Stevenson, and many other expressions, experimental, imaginative, sometimes influenced by the very musical elements against which Gilbert fought with determination, quickly to realize his mistake and reverse his footsteps.

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
APR 25 1938

MUSIC

Orchestral Prima Donnas

It takes at least 70 musicians to make a symphony orchestra, and they must be as carefully fitted as the parts of a machine. A symphony orchestra in good running order has from 28 to 34 violinists, from twelve to 14 viola players, from ten to twelve cellists, from eight to twelve contrabassists. It must have one piccolo player, two flutists, two oboists, an English-horn player, two clarinetists, a bass clarinetist, two bassoonists, a contrabassoonist, four or five horn players, three trumpeters, three trombonists, a tuba player, a kettledrummer, and a harpist. Each of these musical specialists is indispensable to the proper functioning of the mechanism. A symphony orchestra without a kettledrummer, for instance, is about as helpless as a car without a carburetor.

Just as baseball managers try to outbid one another for fine pitchers and hitters, so orchestral managers try to outbid one another for champion piccolo players and contrabassoonists. The violin and the cello are commonly placed among the noblest of musical instruments, but good violinists and cellists bring only a fair figure (average salary: about $80 a week). Most strenuous bidding frequently takes place over first-class oboists and horn players. Fiddlers are the symphonic world's plentiful proletariat. But fine horn players are rarer than fine conductors, and often make a bigger difference to the sound of an orchestra.

Last year, NBC's orchestral scouts, seeking talent to build the 94-man NBC Symphony, snooped around the concert halls of several U. S. cities, succeeded in luring key men from the Detroit Symphony and other Midwest orchestras. Symphonic managers all over the U. S. shivered in their boots, fearing that NBC's juicy contracts might tempt their most prized performers. Manager Alfred Reginald Allen of the famed Philadelphia Orchestra tried to placate the NBC menace by offering the loan of his players "at any time," including his two world-famous instrumentalists—suave Oboist Marcel Tabuteau and courtly, grey-haired Flutist William Kincaid.

For the time being NBC only sniffed, did not bite. But last week Philadelphia newshawks revealed that Manager Allen had caught at least three Philadelphia Orchestra men in the act of reaching for NBC contracts. A six-months-notice clause in their contracts (upheld by American Federation of Musicians' President Joseph N. Weber at a special Manhattan conference) foiled Trombonist Charles Gusikoff and Contrabassist Anton Torello. But prized Horn Player Arthur I. Berv got loose, signed up with NBC. Oboist Tabuteau and Flutist Kincaid, whose Philadelphia salaries are rumored to be in the neighborhood of $300 per week, would not say whether they had been tempted, indicated they would stay where they are.

U. S. orchestras are internationally conceded to be the world's best. Best of the world's best are the 57-year-old Boston Symphony, the 96-year-old New York Philharmonic-Symphony, the 38-year-old Philadelphia Orchestra and the five-months-old NBC Symphony. Connoisseurs rate at the top Boston strings, Philadelphia wood winds (flutes, oboes, etc.), Manhattan brasses (horns, trumpets, etc.). The NBC Symphony, which now takes second place only to Boston in strings, is still trailing Philadelphia and the New York Philharmonic in brasses and wood winds. With NBC again hungrily on the hunt for lip & lung virtuosos, symphonic boards of directors are lashing down those they still possess, hoping the ropes will hold.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 26 1938

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Opening Program to Feature Beethoven Ninth Symphony

Beethoven's Ninth symphony will be presented on the opening program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the inauguration of the new music shed at Tanglewood on Aug. 4, it was announced yesterday. Serge Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Cecelia Society Chorus of Boston will appear in the final choral movement. The four soloists will be announced later.

Soloists will also take part in the concert on Aug. 11, which will open the second series of the festival. The program that evening will be devoted to Wagner, and will include the last scene from "Die Walkuere" and the complete third act of "Siegfried."

Among the American works listed will be a composition by the late Henry Hadley, who was the first conductor of the Berkshire Festival; "Music for the Theatre" by Aaron Copland and Concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
APR 26 1938

Berkshire Music Fete Program Is Announced

Boston Symphony to Play Beethoven's Ninth

Beethoven's ninth symphony was announced yesterday as the principal work to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky's direction on the opening evening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the Tanglewood Estate, Lenox, Mass., Thursday, August 4. The other concerts will be given Saturday night, August 6; Sunday afternoon, August 7; Thursday night, August 11; Saturday night, August 13, and Sunday afternoon, August 14.

The Cecilia Society of Boston and four soloists will sing with the orchestra in the Beethoven symphony. On August 11 a Wagner program, including the final scene of "Die Walküre" and Act III of "Siegfried" in full, will be given with solo singers. Among the symphonies to be heard in the festival are Beethoven's "Pastoral," Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic," the first symphony of Sibelius and the second of Brahms. Other works scheduled are Brahms's Haydn Variations, Sibelius's "Tapiola," Debussy's "La Mer," Ravel's "Ma Mere l'Oye," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Caprice," Respighi's "Pines of Rome" and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kiji" suite.

A work by Henry Hadley will be played in memory of its composer, who conducted the first two festivals in this series in 1934 and 1935. Other American works to be heard are Aaron Copeland's "Music for the Theater" and Walter Piston's concerto for orchestra.

Further information is obtainable by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
APR 24 1938

Members Invited For Berkshire August Festival

'La Mer' To Be Included in Boston Symphony's Programs for the Series

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. has opened a membership campaign for its fifth annual festival, which will consist of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the new music shed now under construction on the Tanglewood Estate near Lenox, Mass. The dates are Thursday and Saturday nights at 8:30 and Sunday afternoons at 3:30, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Enrollment of memberships, with privileges including admission to one of the rehearsals as well as lower admission prices to the concerts close on May 15.

The programs have not yet been announced in full, but Debussy's "La Mer" is to be one of the festival numbers. The music shed, in the shape of a half-open fan and opening on a view of the lake and mountains, will seat 5,000. Certain temporary features in the shed this summer will be gradually replaced by permanent ones. Requests for memberships, reservations and other information about the 1938 festival should be sent to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs on the afternoons of August 4, 6, 11 and 13 in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield.

The first two festivals, with Henry Hadley conducting, were held on the Dan R. Hanna estate near Stockbridge in 1934 and 1935. The association of the Boston Symphony with these festivals began in 1936, when three concerts were given on the Holmwood estate between Stockbridge and Lenox. Last summer's festival, of six concerts, was the first to be held on the Tanglewood estate, which was donated to the Boston Symphony for these festivals by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 24 1938

124

MUSIC OF TH

AN ANNIVERSARY

A Decade's Perspective of the Works of Henry Gilbert, American Composer

By OLIN DOWNES

It is ten years since he died, but not so long since we visited the workroom where there were so many talks. It was part of a little house and yard on a quiet street in Cambridge, Mass. There was an old table on which he composed, with music paper, in meticulous order, upon it. The very modest furniture, consisting principally of several ramshackle chairs, would hold together. A small wooden bookshelf hung on the wall, two decks of it. Packed tight, it was filled principally with small volumes of Thoreau, George Borrow, Herman Melville, Poe, Mark Twain and Whitman. He was very orderly, with all his shagginess, and gave a startled look around the room if a volume was out of place or missing.

* * *

The piano was awful. It was an old upright. Some of the keys in the lower part either would not sound or came up too slowly, giving the impression of something toothless. He would strike fascinating chords upon it, and snicker when your own fingers failed to find them. He was devoted to that piano, and averred a special reason for his attachment, so great that it was long years before he would agree to the acceptance as a loan from a leading piano house of a fine new instrument! He said that the tone of a new piano would "seduce" him. If he could write something that pleased him on the old rattle-trap it would be likely to stand up on its own merits, whereas the sheer sonority of a better medium might disguise for him the weakness of a poor composition! But there was reason to suspect that some more personal and perhaps sentimental reason attached him to the ancient and decrepit recipient of his musical ideas. Perhaps it was just that being a very sensitive man underneath as rough and horny a shell as ever lived a musician and poet, he felt freer to confide his ideas to it. For he lived many years of agonized experiment and self-examination in the attempt, while painfully conscious of his limitations as compared with his conceptions, "to write one good page of music." Or perhaps he had earned the piano painfully, or it had come to him through some cherished source. Whatever the reason, that piano was his true friend and companion of his soul. When the newer instrument came in, it was only a fair-weather friend, and the earlier intimacy could not be replaced or imitated. There was another thing about the old piano that sticks out in the mind, as it stuck out, very prominently, on the music rack. It was a sentence copied by hand from an indignant letter that Mark Twain wrote a publisher who had attempted to polish the author's style. The sentence of protest, which our friend was reluctant to have out of his sight in working hours, read thus: "PLAIN CLARITY IS BETTER THAN ORNATE OBSCURITY."

He abided by that in his daily relations and in his music.

* * *

Henry Gilbert was the first American pupil of Edward MacDowell when he returned to this country from Europe in the Eighties to teach and continue his creative career. Gilbert never attained his full creative stature, for he was one of the "lonely" Americans of an early period in our music. There were no sympathetic friends or relatives, there was no money, and very little adequate instruction. An attack of typhoid in later years, so severe that its physical ravages depleted his strength for work, hastened his death on May 19, 1928. But before he had gone he did put down on paper certain priceless things, in themselves of artistic and national significance, and, let us hope, prophetic of certain fundamental attributes that will develop in the American musical art of the future.

a population were far less urbanized, sophisticated and cocktailed than at present. In fact the source of the inspiration of the "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes" is indicative of the nature of its melodic material. It was inspired by the "Uncle Remus" tales of Joel Chandler Harris. Gilbert, fascinated by the narratives of that imaginary Aesop of American folklore, had made an operetta, in which all the animals of the Tales were personified. Each animal had a characteristic motive. We once saw the sketches of a work which probably will never see the light. As memory goes, they were extremely amusing, fanciful, piquant, with a flourish to which Br'er Rabbit shook his ears, and a glissando when Br'er Bar growled, "G'wine up, g'wine up." It was one of the composer's many disappointments and tragedies that when the operetta was in a way to completion the Harris heirs refused to give him permission of copyright, bestowing their favor upon another composer who never has been heard from. One thing remained from this particular wreck: the "Comedy Overture," which had no text, and therefore no restrictions in performance.

* * *

Max Fiedler, then conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, immediately recognized the humor, romanticism and complete originality of style and approach of this music. But it was weeks, indeed it was the end of the season, when he ventured to put the piece—the work of a man with no friends in high places—at the end of a program, when any one disturbed or inclined to hold the musical nose could escape by the nearest exit. For the overture began with a merry theme in the "rag-time" rhythm, and "rag-time," up to that moment, had never been heard echoing in the precincts of Symphony Hall. The "Comedy Overture" came off superbly. It had defects of instrumentation and a certain awkwardness of connecting passages, modulation, instrumentation. But it was exhilaratingly, astonishingly alive, and on the spot it put to death a new composition, played at the same concert, by an older and widely known composer. The "Comedy Overture" remains a delightful piece of music, the work of a poet as well as one in whose sounds rang the laughter of a Mark Twain and the unmistakable spirit of a young nation.

* * *

There were other significant orchestral works, not so unified, and uneven in style, because in some cases they appeared in final form as the overhauling, correction, supplementation of ideas of a youth when the composer had yet to learn the elements of skillful composition and instrumentation. So that not all of "The Dance on Place Congo," after George W. Cable's story of the dances of the slaves in the old days in New Orleans, equals the wild prelude, the grace and sentiment of certain intervening pages, and the fantastic end, when a bell tolls and there is a pause and cries of despair and a sound of what could be the shuffling of feet, as the miserable ones who have danced their hour and forgotten toil and woe heel back at the signal to quarters. There was the "Shout," as it originally was called, later entitled "Negro Rhapsody," performed at the Carl Stoeckels Norfolk Festival; the brief prelude and interludes written as incidental music to Synge's "Riders to the Sea" and to another Irish drama, "The Twisting of the Rope"; songs to Celtic poems; the rousing ditty, "Fifteen Men on a Dead Man's Chest," after the verses of Stevenson, and many other expressions, experimental, imaginative, sometimes influenced by the very musical elements against which Gilbert fought with determination, quickly to realize his mistake and reverse his footsteps.

At the foundation of it all was his incontrovertible sincerity, the sense of what was free and noble, the vision of the America sung by Whitman. There was the passion, the compulsion toward the expression of these things in an art. There are usually successive periods sometimes clearly demarcated in the musical evolution of a people. At a certain time a nation, such as Russia in the early nineteenth century, which has been dominated by foreign artistic influences, realizes the importance of its own folk music and cultivates it. Later there are developed devices of artistic workmanship. Still later comes a time when the art of a great master shapes and sublimates the expressive impulses of generations.

* * *

Gilbert definitely struck out for self-realization in our native art at a time when such courses had no general approval. He, an outstanding figure of Arthur Farwell's devoted circle, was perhaps an extremist, as what man of genius is not, and when nothing short of obsession would make any dent in the walls of conservatism and servility before foreign art. And he was eternally right. He said, indeed he snorted and swore, that American music was not to be found, let alone heard, in our concert halls and opera houses, completely dominated in his lifetime by German and French conceptions of music-making. He said he had to hunt for genuine musical expressions of the land in places completely outside the precincts of conservatories and operatic and concert activities. For a practically penniless person he traveled an astonishing number of miles over the country, listened with his ear to ground, and was able to record what he heard. He was fascinated by the folk music that ascended from the American soil, and admired the raciness of the songs, often cheap and vulgar, sometimes highly original, of the music halls and the music counters in the department stores. He lived closer to the earth than many people can, even if they want to, in these mechanized days. He proceeded, not as a man with a pet theory or some fanciful social gospel to exhale, but as an artist, one whose nature it is to express the stuff of life in terms of living art. For he was genuinely a musician, potently creative. As man and artist he was at one with himself. He heeded the still, small voice in all that he lived or put on music paper. So doing, he became an outstanding pioneer and prophet of American music.

He gained his first conspicuous success with the "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes," when it was performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in April of 1911. Before that, through the interest of Arthur Farwell, this composition had had a hearing at a semi-popular concert in New York City. Therefore, since our American musical public is inclined to estimate a composer as well as a person by the society in which he is seen, the "Comedy Overture" did not receive serious attention, critical or otherwise, until the Boston performance. Then Philip Hale and H. T. Parker of Boston, among others, gave the music the recognition it deserved. In a certain important direction it was a pioneer piece, breaking ground, and making a veritable local sensation in a way that would now be accepted as a foregone conclusion and a matter of course in native composition. By "way" we mean Gilbert's bold, if not scandalous, use of an American popular musical idiom, known at the moment as "rag-time," a designation which has been replaced in our day by the gaudier and noisier term of "jazz" or its even jazzier descendant, "swing." And the different terms have something in them which points out the difference in the musical substances involved. Gilbert's "rag-time" motive, which opened his overture, came genuinely of the South and was redolent with the humor and the melancholy, too, of the strains of a day when we as

---

TIME MAGA
CHICAGO, ILL.
APR 25 1938

MUSIC

Orchestral Prima Donnas

It takes at least 70 musicians to make a symphony orchestra, and they must be as carefully fitted as the parts of a machine. A symphony orchestra in good running order has from 28 to 34 violinists, from twelve to 14 viola players, from ten to twelve cellists, from eight to twelve contrabassists. It must have one piccolo player, two flutists, two oboists, an English-horn player, two clarinetists, a bass clarinetist, two bassoonists, a contrabassoonist, four or five horn players, three trumpeters, three trombonists, a tuba player, a kettledrummer, and a harpist. Each of these musical specialists is indispensable to the proper functioning of the mechanism. A symphony orchestra without a kettledrummer, for instance, is about as helpless as a car without a carburetor.

Just as baseball managers try to outbid one another for fine pitchers and hitters, so orchestral managers try to outbid one another for champion piccolo players and contrabassoonists. The violin and the cello are commonly placed among the noblest of musical instruments, but good violinists and cellists bring only a fair figure (average salary: about $80 a week). Most strenuous bidding frequently takes place over first-class oboists and horn players. Fiddlers are the symphonic world's plentiful proletariat. But fine horn players are rarer than fine conductors, and often make a bigger difference to the sound of an orchestra.

Last year, NBC's orchestral scouts, seeking talent to build the 94-man NBC Symphony, snooped around the concert halls of several U. S. cities, succeeded in luring key men from the Detroit Symphony and other Midwest orchestras. Symphonic managers all over the U. S. shivered in their boots, fearing that NBC's juicy contracts might tempt their most prized performers. Manager Alfred Reginald Allen of the famed Philadelphia Orchestra tried to placate the NBC menace by offering the loan of his players "at any time," including his two world-famous instrumentalists—suave Oboist Marcel Tabuteau and courtly, grey-haired Flutist William Kincaid.

For the time being NBC only sniffed, did not bite. But last week Philadelphia newshawks revealed that Manager Allen had caught at least three Philadelphia Orchestra men in the act of reaching for NBC contracts. A six-months-notice clause in their contracts (upheld by American Federation of Musicians' President Joseph N. Weber at a special Manhattan conference) foiled Trombonist Charles Gusikoff and Contrabassist Anton Torello. But prized Horn Player Arthur I. Berv got loose, signed up with NBC. Oboist Tabuteau and Flutist Kincaid, whose Philadelphia salaries are rumored to be in the neighborhood of $300 per week, would not say whether they had been tempted, indicated they would stay where they are.

U. S. orchestras are internationally conceded to be the world's best. Best of the world's best are the 57-year-old Boston Symphony, the 96-year-old New York Philharmonic-Symphony, the 38-year-old Philadelphia Orchestra and the five-months-old NBC Symphony. Connoisseurs rate at the top Boston strings, Philadelphia wood winds (flutes, oboes, etc.), Manhattan brasses (horns, trumpets, etc.). The NBC Symphony, which now takes second place only to Boston in strings, is still trailing Philadelphia and the New York Philharmonic in brasses and wood winds. With NBC again hungrily on the hunt for lip & lung virtuosos, symphonic boards of directors are lashing down those they still possess, hoping the ropes will hold.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
APR 26 1938

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Opening Program to Feature Beethoven Ninth Symphony

Beethoven's Ninth symphony will be presented on the opening program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the inauguration of the new music shed at Tanglewood on Aug. 4, it was announced yesterday. Serge Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Cecelia Society Chorus of Boston will appear in the final choral movement. The four soloists will be announced later.

Soloists will also take part in the concert on Aug. 11, which will open the second series of the festival. The program that evening will be devoted to Wagner, and will include the last scene from "Die Walküre" and the complete third act of "Siegfried."

Among the American works listed will be a composition by the late Henry Hadley, who was the first conductor of the Berkshire Festival; "Music for the Theatre" by Aaron Cop [illegible] orchestra by W

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
APR 26 193

Berkshire Music Fete Program Is Announced

Boston Symphony to Play Beethoven's Ninth

Beethoven's ninth symphony was announced yesterday as the principal work to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky's direction on the opening evening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the Tanglewood Estate, Lenox, Mass., Thursday, August 4. The other concerts will be given Saturday night, August 6; Sunday afternoon, August 7; Thursday night, August 11; Saturday night, August 13, and Sunday afternoon, August 14.

The Cecilia Society of Boston and four soloists will sing with the orchestra in the Beethoven symphony. On August 11 a Wagner program, including the final scene of "Die Walküre" and Act III of "Siegfried" in full, will be given with solo singers. Among the symphonies to be heard in the festival are Beethoven's "Pastoral," Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic," the first symphony of Sibelius and the second of Brahms. Other works scheduled are Brahms's Haydn Variations, Sibelius's "Tapiola," Debussy's "La Mer," Ravel's "Ma Mere l'Oye," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Caprice," Respighi's "Pines of Rome" and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kiji" suite.

A work by Henry Hadley will be played in memory of its composer, who conducted the first two festivals in this series in 1934 and 1935. Other American works to be heard are Aaron Copeland's "Music for the Theater" and Walter Piston's concerto for orchestra.

Further information is obtainable by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
APR 24 1938

Members Invited For Berkshire August Festival

'La Mer' To Be Included in Boston Symphony's Programs for the Series

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. has opened a membership campaign for its fifth annual festival, which will consist of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the new music shed now under construction on the Tanglewood Estate near Lenox, Mass. The dates are Thursday and Saturday nights at 8:30 and Sunday afternoons at 3:30, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Enrollment of memberships, with privileges including admission to one of the rehearsals as well as lower admission prices to the concerts close on May 15.

The programs have not yet been announced in full, but Debussy's "La Mer" is to be one of the festival numbers. The music shed, in the shape of a half-open fan and opening on a view of the lake and mountains, will seat 5,000. Certain temporary features in the shed this summer will be gradually replaced by permanent ones. Requests for memberships, reservations and other information about the 1938 festival should be sent to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs on the afternoons of August 4, 6, 11 and 13 in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield.

The first two festivals, with Henry Hadley conducting, were held on the Dan R. Hanna estate near Stockbridge, in 1934 and 1935. The association of the Boston Symphony with these festivals began in 1936, when three concerts were given on the Holmwood estate between Stockbridge and Lenox. Last summer's festival, of six concerts, was the first to be held on the Tanglewood estate, which was donated to the Boston Symphony for these festivals by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston.

25

Beethoven's 'Missa Solemnis'

Monitor April 27/38

The Arts in Boston

For the first time in 11 years and the third time in its history, the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night presented Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis." The occasion was the annual Pension Fund concert. The orchestra was assisted by the combined choruses from Harvard and Radcliffe and by these soloists: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, Kathryn Meisle, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Mack Harrell, bass. The audience, which did not quite fill the hall, gave an ovation at the close to all concerned in the performance, including G. Wallace Woodworth, who trained the chorus, and Dr. Archibald T. Davison, who inaugurated the serious study of choral music at Harvard.

The performance was on the whole a magnificent realization of the great work. The huge chorus in particular distinguished itself for tone quality, precision and vitality. It is as true now as it was when the predecessors of these undergraduates sang these choruses, at the Beethoven Festival in 1927, that music of this kind gets its full expression from such fresh young voices and such youthful ardor, eagerness and devotion. The choristers had mastered the complex rhythmical problems that Beethoven set; and the sopranos attacked the formidable passages in prolonged high tessitura with successful daring

The soloists, too, were of remarkable quality. One cannot recall hearing another quartet in any of the major choral works which exhibited such evenness of ability and such mutuality of musical expression. Their singing in the Sanctus and the Agnus Dei especially was one of the high points of the performance, but throughout they were vocally admirable and at one with the music.

Over everything Dr. Koussevitzky presided with masterful baton, alert and exacting. He finds the Mass in D above all an intensely dramatic score. No doubt he is keenly responsive to the religious devotion in it, but with his temperament this devotion takes on a sometimes theatrical expression. The dynamic contrasts he demands convey to some of us anything but a devotional experience. For one example, in the Credo the "sub Pontio Pilato passus, et sepultus est" is whispered, and then is suddenly followed by a shouted "Et resurrexit." Granted the appropriateness of the dynamic scheme, it is possible to feel that less violence would be more suitable and more truly effective. L. A. S.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

APR 25 1938

NINTH SYMPHONY ON 1ST PROGRAM

Serge Koussevitzky Announces Festival Numbers

AT TANGLEWOOD

Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston to Appear With Orchestra on August 4.

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with choral finale for the inauguration of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood August 4. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and four vocal soloists will appear with the orchestra on this occasion.

At the concert August 11 which opens the second series of the Festival, scenes from music dramas of Wagner will be presented in concert form with soloists. The program will include the last scene from "Die Walkure", and the complete third act of "Siegfried".

Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, performed last year and at once closely associated with the beautiful natural setting at Tanglewood, will again be played. Other symphonies will include the First of Sibelius, the Second of Brahms, Tchaikovsky's Sixth (Pathetique).

Among shorter works will be the Brahms-Haydn Variations; "Tapiola" by Sibelius; "La Mer" by Debussy; "Ma mere l'oye" by Ravel; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Caprice espagnole"; Respighi's "Pines of Rome"; "Kije" Suite by Prokofiev.

A work by Henry Hadley will be played in memory of the first conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Other American composers to be represented will be Aaron Copland with his "Music for the Theater", and Walter Piston with his Concerto for Orchestra.

It will here be seen that Dr. Koussevitzky is recognizing contemporary music and the work of American composers.

The advisory committee includes Mrs. Shelley W. Potter of North Adams, Charles L. Safford and Roderick Danaher of Williamstown and Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett of Adams.

SYMPHONY ENDS 57TH MUSIC YEAR

B. Post

Conductor and Players at Best in Debussy's "La Mer"

April 30/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The ceremonial which marks the final Symphony Concert was duly accomplished yesterday. A rising orchestra and audience greeted Dr. Koussevitzky, and Brahms' First Symphony was in its accustomed place as final number. It may be presumed that the volumes of applause, to which were added at times even more emphatic signs of approval, had a personal as well as a musical prompting. This, Dr. Koussevitzky's 14th season, has yielded to none of its predecessors in interest, while the standards of performance have continued their steady upward course.

"LA MER" THE TRUE CLIMAX

With the C-minor Symphony of Brahms having become somewhat like the annual Christmastide "Messiah," the true climax of yesterday's concert came earlier in the afternoon, namely, with Debussy's "La Mer." Hearing the performance of yesterday, which combined a degree of vitality here unusual for Dr. Koussevitzky with the wealth of color and variety of tonal effect to which he had already accustomed us, it was easy to understand the enthusiasm of the New York reviewers when the piece was played there a few weeks ago.

For the ninth time, Dr. Koussevitzky has demonstrated that we can never assume that he has spoken his last word with any music. He and the orchestra grow together, and it is well that they should. A fig for your conductor who is so good that neither he himself nor any other could possibly be better.

Too Many Strings

But for an error in judgment, the performance of the first piece of the afternoon, Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, would have equalled in its modest way that of "La Mer." Departing from what has lately been his altogether admirable custom, Dr. Koussevitzky made use of all his strings, save only three double-basses, and the resulting body of tone, particularly in the first movement, was often too heavy for the music. Better a performance by a chamber orchestra, such as Mr. Zighera's, than so much weight of tone applied to unweighty ideas. Even the celebrated Largo, a movement of a breadth rare for Haydn, seemed a trifle too ponderous.

Tomorrow opportunity will be offered for a more or less extended comment upon this, the orchestra's 57th season. Again, Dr. Koussevitzky has earned his reputation as the finest programme maker of them all, from whatever angle the matter is viewed. His curiosity and his catholicity are indisputable, and, not for him, the grab-bag lists of so many of his colleagues.

Four Helpers During Season

However, if Dr. Koussevitzky has dominated the season, he has had more helpers than ever before. Daniele Amfitheatrof conducted two pairs of concerts; Messrs. Burgin, Prokofieff and Enesco each presided over one, and Nadia Boulanger conducted a performance of Faure's Requiem. In addition to Enesco and Prokofieff, two other notable composers, Rachmaninoff and Hindemith, made their appearance, but as soloist in their music, not as conductors of it.

And so to the Pops, the Berkshire Festival and, before we know it, the opening of another season. Already our expectations are aroused.

April 27/38 LOWELL COURIER-CITIZEN, W

MOMENTS MUSICAL

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

To Whom Announcements and Communications on Musical Matters May Be Addressed at This Office.

Boston Programs.

As these notes went to press the Boston Symphony orchestra was presenting Beethoven's Missa Solemnis with the assistance of capable soloists and a chorus from the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe and Mack Harrell.

The regular symphony season closes with the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week when two classic symphonies will be played, that of Haydn in G major and Brahms No. 1 in C minor. In between will come the three symphonic sketches by Debussy under the general title of "La Mer." Presented in New York only recently, the critics agreed that the interpretation of this work is one of Dr. Koussevitzky's finest and most imaginative achievements.

Then, starting on May 4 in Symphony hall, come the pleasant informalities of the Pop Concerts. And ahead is the Berkshire Festival which opens on August 4 in the newly constructed shelter at Tanglewood.

Sowerby's Organ Concerto.

In its first performance anywhere, Leo Sowerby's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra was heard at the Boston Symphony concerts of last week, with E. Power Biggs, whose recitals in Methuen and in the Germanic Museum in Cambridge have been attended by many local musicians, at the somewhat old-fashioned console of the organ in Symphony hall. To this listener it was a novelty in more senses than one. Since the organ has for so long been associated with churchly music, it is perhaps the most conservative of instruments. And although its possibilities, by reason of the vast improvements in mechanism have enchanced its use and scope in concert and recital, composers for it have still shown a tendency toward conservatism. Mr. Sowerby evidently has no such inhibitions. He is all for contrasts of color, swiftly moving passages, brilliant arpeggio passages for the organ against an orchestral background that, truth to tell, sometimes overpowers the solo instrument. And all, for the most part, in the modern idiom and often in the American tempo and spirit. There is no need to cavil at that. It was not conceived or designed as churchly music. Yet one would have to become better acquainted with it to pass on its merits from an organist's viewpoint. Hearing it for the first time there was doubt that it showed the qualities of the organ at their best. And that, despite the fact that most of us are becoming accustomed to dissonances and acrid chords, at least to the extent that we do not decamp hastily from the hall when we hear them. As a matter of fact Mr. Sowerby does not go to such extremes in this composition as some of his generation. Nevertheless as an organ work the concerto is "different."

Mr. Biggs, as it seemed to us, gave a facile and colorful performance He made much of the quieter middle movement The pedal passages in the turbulent final movement called for and received no little virtuosity There was a real thrill in the sonorities which brought the variations on the main theme to a close. Dr. Koussevitzky entered into the orchestral score with ardor and energy. When Mr. Sowerby, who in aspect is the antithesis of the traditional picture of a temperamental and sensitive artist, was called to the platform with Dr. Koussevitzky, Mr. Biggs and concert Master Burgin, there were felicitations all round. There was no mistaking that the composer has originality and talent. Or that he writes his music as an American.

'Missa Solemnis' Arrives

Beethoven Work Played at Pension Fund Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra

B. Trans. April 27/38

By MOSES SMITH

A noisy demonstration like that in which a large audience indulged at Symphony Hall last evening at the end of the performance of the Beethoven Mass in D for the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra cannot be explained merely by goodwill toward the performers or appreciation of the quality of the performance. It necessarily implies an excitement springing from the intrinsic music.

Thus at the close of the fifth recorded presentation of the Beethoven Mass in Boston ended the legend of the work's failure to appeal to a large number of listeners. So far as Boston is concerned, at least, the Mass need no longer be the exclusive possession of a few enthusiastic scholars in the privacy of their studies, but may now safely be included in the concert-hall repertory. It may not have the wide popularity of the Bach B minor Mass or the Brahms Requiem. To put the matter in a different way, the Beethoven Mass had probably better be presented on rarer occasions. But last night's experience definitely established it as music for the ear as well as the eye.

The principal assigned reason for the failure of the Beethoven masterpiece to make its way has been the difficulty of performance, particularly in the demands made on the singers—a difficulty which, nevertheless, has not prevented the Ninth Symphony from achieving genuine popularity. Last night's performance was remarkable in this regard. The joined forces of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society sang with remarkable expressiveness, freedom, precision and, above all, sonority. Not in years have the Cambridge student organizations contained voices of equivalent quality, so well trained and resourceful in song. With good reason last night's audience responded generously to Serge Koussevitzky's suggestion, when the conductor led on the stage the two men who shared in preparing the choruses—G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor, and Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor-emeritus.

The "Missa Solemnis" is by no means a smooth-textured, uniform masterpiece. It is rather more "uneven" than most of the master's finer works for orchestra, piano and chamber groups. Its greatest effectiveness is due to the very intensity of expression and reiteration which, at times, cause the music to fall flat. There are superlatively dramatic moments, like the stunning final measures of the Gloria. Only Beethoven could have written music of such moving beauty as is contained in the beginning of the Sanctus. But many pages still fail to come to life. And if they were relatively few last night it was because for Dr. Koussevitzky the performance was a labor of love.

One had some reservations on the score of dynamics and particularly tempos. It is quite likely that when the conductor attempts the Mass again—and let us hope it will be soon—he will modify his scale of values in both regards. But the prevailing warmth, vitality and intensity of expression were such as to make questioning assume the character of quibbling.

It goes without saying that the quality of instrumental playing on the part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was usually very high. That fact makes it all the more difficult to explain a ragged attack or faulty intonation on occasion. The misfortune was the greater because the lapses will be perpetuated: last night's performance of the Mass, like that of the Bach "Matthew Passion" a year ago, was recorded by the Victor Phonograph Company. The audience, requested not to applaud between numbers, behaved gratifyingly. But at least one impatient handclap was probably perpetuated for posterity.

The soloists were Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, Kathryn Meisle, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Mac Harrell, bass. They were a capable if not consistently distinguished quartet, singing as a rule with commendable expressiveness and purity of tone. Albert W. Snow was the organist. The long violin solo was played by Richard Burgin.

Symphony Season Concluded

Monitor April 30/38

The Arts in Boston

With the customary rites, the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its Friday series of concerts yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Dr. Koussevitzky was greeted by a standing orchestra and audience, the applause was warm throughout, and there was the usual ovation at the end.

The program, which will be repeated tonight at the final concert of this fifty-seventh season, consisted of the Haydn Symphony in G major, No. 88, Debussy's "La Mer" and the First Symphony of Brahms. The list served to emphasize once more the brilliant qualities of the orchestra and the catholicity of the conductor. Here are three masterpieces of different musical ages, classic, impressionistic and romantic. Listening to any one of them, you would think that here, and probably here alone, lay Dr. Koussevitzky's sympathies.

The Brahms First is one of his most favored war horses. As a piece to end a season, it has few equals, perhaps none. The Koussevitzkyan performance of it is one of the great experiences of the concert hall. Yet this conductor's interpretation of "La Mer," at the opposite pole in every respect, is equally masterly. But neither of these performances surpasses that of the Haydn G major Symphony. Here Dr. Koussevitzky finds the just expression of chaste form and subtle articulation. In all these works, as in so many others, the orchestra is the eloquent mouthpiece of composer and conductor. Fortunate is the town that possesses such an instrument and such a leader.

The orchestral year has been notably successful, from both the popular and the musical viewpoints. There has been a renewed exploration of unfamiliar paths and an unremitting devotion to artistic ideals. Further comment on the season will appear next Tuesday on the Art, Music and Theater Page. L. A. S.

B. Globe

MUSIC

April 30/38

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Custom reigns at the beginning and the end of a Boston Symphony season. Thus it was that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the Symphony Hall stage yesterday afternoon for the last Friday concert, was a signal for audience and orchestra to rise. Each Autumn and Spring this dignified and charming rite provides a fitting display of regard for the gifted man, whose ministrations elevated the Boston Symphony again to superlative rank, and who has maintained it there for so many years.

Custom decrees that there shall be no soloist at these opening and closing concerts, and that only familiar music shall be played. Accordingly, yesterday's list began with the G major Symphony No. 88, by Haydn; continued with the three symphonic sketches, "The Sea," by Debussy, and ended with the First Symphony of Brahms. The last-named, incidentally, has come to be the official finale of the season, to judge by the number of times Dr. Koussevitzky has employed it for the purpose. The imposing design of the work, its impressive sonorities and classic nature rightfully entitle it to the place.

The G major Haydn Symphony has been an especial favorite with Dr. Koussevitzky, for it has stood many times upon his programs. The gentleness and luminous clarity of his reading long since endeared both work and performance to Boston concert-goers. So it was again yesterday.

Where once the conductor brought out the shadowy, evanescent side of Debussy's music, he now seeks finish of details, and robust clearness in "La Mer." There have been two schools of thought about Debussy, one of which has insisted that vague, luscious harmonies are the essence of Debussy, and that jagged rhythmic lines and bold dissonance result from mistaken interpretation. Those of such a mind might find it difficult to support their belief after so marvelous a performance of this masterpiece as we heard yesterday. Debussy's sea was no mill pond; there were no water lilies in Dr. Koussevitzky's reading yesterday.

Both orchestra and conductor must have been tired after an arduous season that culminated in last Tuesday's performance of the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis." There was no evidence of it in the vitality and splendor of their Haydn, Debussy and Brahms, apart from a slight nervous tension that detracted from the usual Boston Symphony precision.

Somehow the handclapping, the stamping and cheering that followed the Brahms Symphony seemed louder than usual. At any rate, they constituted a thorough-going "ovation." A repetition of the program tonight will finish the season.

C. W. D.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1938

Dr. Koussevitzky Wins Ovation as Symphony Season Comes to a Close

Enthusiastic Audience Applauds Final Concert of 57th Season

Mrs. John Bartol, Mrs. Constantine A. Belash, Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, Mrs. Charles Devens Among Many Noted

By ALISON ARNOLD

Yesterday, the fifty-seventh season of Friday afternoon Symphony Concerts came to a close. All winter, Friday afternoons have been strictly reserved for these outstanding concerts, as members of Boston society refuse to let anything short of dire necessity interfere with their attendance at the Symphony. The end of the season proves that the time has come for summer plans, but Friday, Oct. 7, when the concerts will be resumed, is already encircled in red on many calendars.

When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky appeared yesterday, the audience arose in a body, and the applause was deafening, while at the close of the concert, the enthusiasm knew no bounds, and cheers and stampings augmented the wild applause. The program opened with Haydn's Symphony in G major, always a favorite. Following this came Debussy's marvelously descriptive "La Mer," and the concert ended with the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

It seemed as if everyone was present for this grand finale of the season. Sitting down near the front were Mrs. John Bartol and her daughter, Mrs. Constantine A. Belash. Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott wore a black gown with a crisp bow of brown taffeta at the neckline, just matching the filmy brown veil adorning her hat. Her daughter, Mrs. Charles Devens, wore a checked jacket with her navy skirt and smart off-the-face hat. Miss Peggy Hardwick had a pale pink carnation exactly matching her cunning antelope dwarf cap, pinned on the lapel of her checked jacket that she wore with her violet tweed skirt. Arriving with her was Miss Betty Albers, whose tiny turban fashioned of a Persian print, was most becoming.

With Mrs. Morton Prince, who wore black, was her sub-debutante daughter, Betsy, in rose tweeds. Attending together were Mrs. Marshal Fabyan, Jr., in navy with shell pink accessories, and Miss Barbara Bremer, whose navy blue gown was sprinkled with tiny pink pin dots that matched the brim of her jaunty sailor. Also wearing the popular navy and pink combination was Mrs. Charles Howard. Mrs. Moses Williams wore with her slim black coat, a hat with a black brim and a white crown banded with red.

Chatting together in the foyer during the intermission were Mrs. Edward A. Taft, in navy, her turban brightened with diminutive circles of yellow, and Mrs. Valentine Hollingsworth, also in navy, with which she wore a sailor of toast straw. Wearing a chic tan straw sailor with her beige frock was Mrs. Alfred R. McIntyre. Miss Isabella Grandin's toque was a mass of white flowers, and a single white blossom adorned the top of Miss Marjorie Motley's tiny black pillbox hat that had a trailing veil which wound about her throat.

One of the early arrivals was Mrs. Daniel A. De Menocal in trimly tailored tweeds. Strolling about the foyer together were Miss Jane Megrew, in a bright print, and Miss Mary Elizabeth Lowe in beige. With her Oxford gray tailler that had narrow white pencil stripes, Mrs. William B. Long wore a silver fox cape and a raspberry red sailor hat.

In the large audience there were many debutantes of the season just over. With her navy coat, Miss Katharine Putnam wore a hat of shiny rough straw wreathed with flowers shading from palest yellow to deep rose red. Miss Susan Storey was all in black, and Miss Jean Clark, who attended with her mother, Mrs. Paul Foster Clark, topped her green skirt with a gay plaid jacket. Still another 1937-38 debutante was Miss Virginia Prout, who was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Henry Prout.

Miss Charlotte Rantoul wore with her springlike print, an unusual hat of bright red straw, and Miss Lucile Swift, who was escorted by Mr. Francis Chalifoux, brightened her black frock with her open-crowned cerise turban. All in navy blue was Mrs. Adams Sherman Hill, and in black and white was Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike. Mrs. John T. Bottomley was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Ellen Bottomley.

Among the many others present were Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs. Arthur Bell, Mrs. Francis G. Barnum, Mrs. Augustus W. Soule, Mrs. Carl Dreyfus, Miss Elizabeth C. Leland, Mrs. Charles Gaston Smith, Mrs. Hugh Bancroft, Mrs. Stearns Poor, Miss Eleanor Coolidge, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt, Mrs. Harry B. Stebbins, Mrs. J. Dellinger Barney and her daughter, Miss Faith Barney, Mrs. Roland Nickerson, Mrs. Edward Caldwell Moore, Mrs. Robert Cushman, Miss Gertrude Sands, Mrs. Winthrop Coffin, Miss Aimee Lamb, Mrs. Lawrence Black, Mrs. Frank H. Stewart, Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French, Mrs. William H. Coburn, Mrs. Walter B. Clifford, Mrs. Marc Peter, Jr., Miss Reinette Plimpton, Miss Olive Perry, Mrs. Roland Hopkins and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs.

Pops Thursday Will Be Benefit

Many reservations have already been made for the Pop concert next Thursday evening, May 5, at Symphony Hall, being sponsored by a distinguished committee for the benefit of the George Junior Republic in Freeville, N. Y. Although this social agency is located in the adjoining state of New York the need of training young people between the ages of 15 and 21 for responsible citizenship is becoming increasingly apparent to social agencies here in Boston and the best way to meet this need is by enlarging the facilities of the Junior Republic in Freeville in order that its service may be made available to our young people. Many of the youths in Massachusetts have had the benefit of Junior Republic training and more can be helped through the support of friends in Boston.

Dr. Alexander Forbes of the Harvard Medical School and Milton is president of the Board of Trustees, whose membership includes Mr. Samuel Cabot, Mr. John Richardson, Mr. Donald Scott, Mr. Theodore T. Whitney, Mrs. Langdon P. Marvin, Mr. Robert Grant, Jr., and Mr. Charles D. Osborne, who is vice-president of the board.

Among those who are attending the benefit are Mrs. John Balch, Mrs. Lincoln Bryant, Mr. Laurence Curtis, Mrs. Douglas Crocker, Dr. and Mrs. George P. Denny, Mrs. George H. Davenport, Dr. and Mrs. Ronald M. Ferry, Mrs. J. Malcolm Forbes, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Mr. Albert Goodhue, Mr. Frederic S. Goodwin, Mrs. Chester Guild, Dr. Edward Harding, Miss Mary B. Jackson, Mrs. Charles Jackson, Mrs. Carl T. Keller, Dr. Arthur R. Kimpton, Mrs. Frederic C. Lawrence, Mrs. Laurence M. Lombard, Mrs. Eldon Macleod, Mrs. M. L. Madden, Mr. Charles F. Mills, Mr. Arthur H. Morse, Mrs. Noel Morss, Miss Amelia Peabody, Mrs. Frederick S. Pratt, Mrs. Robert P. Parker, Mr. Chandler H. Pratt, Mrs. Henry H. Perry, Mrs. Ralph S. Richmond, Mr. James W. Russell, Jr., Miss Mary S. Rousmaniere, Mrs. George C. Shattuck, Mr. Philip L. Spalding, Mr. Edward A. Taft, Miss Helen Thomas, Mrs. George Upton, Mr. Donald C. Watson, Miss Mary E. Williams, and Mrs. George Wigglesworth.

B. Her.

MUS

By ALEXANDER

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The 24th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. This and the repetition of the concert tomorrow evening comprise the final pair of the 57th season. The program was as follows:

Haydn	Symphony in G major No. 88.
Debussy	"La Mer." Three Symphonic Sketches.
Brahms	Symphony No. 1 in C minor Op. 68.

Once again and for the 13th time under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction the Boston Symphony Orchestra has completed a gloriously successful season. The splendid performance of the Brahms First Symphony, which has become the traditional finale, brought forth the expected and deserved ovation. We are more fortunate than we know in having this amazing orchestra year after year at our beck and call and ever with undiminished standards of perfection.

Previously we heard an excellent performance of one of Haydn's most ingratiating symphonies and a brilliant interpretation of Debussy's "La Mer." Dr. Koussevitzky is wise in reviving many of the symphonies of Haydn and Mozart. There are so many to choose from that a concert audience hardly gets familiar with the charming qualities and originality of any one. The great symphonies of Mozart and the "Surprise" of Haydn may be exceptions, nor would we wish to have Mozart's three masterpieces neglected. But Haydn wrote so much that was at least as good as and frequently better than the "Surprise" that it is only intelligent to search about among them. None of the three presented this season, for example, is at all too well known. Moreover, the music of both composers fits well on almost any program and makes a perfect contrast with either the romantics or the moderns.

Debussy "La Mer", as a case in point, lost none of its wondrous charm and mysterious illusion by coming after the direct geniality of Haydn. It is a marvelous score, so subtle in its cumulation of effects, evoking the wilderness and fascination of the sea without showing the guiding hand of the artist. Debussy's methods in building these musical edifices, which may be called by a variety of names, are remarkable when one studies them, and the total effect is no less so when one simply listens. Every rhythmical figure, every harmonic sequence and all the scraps of melody are bent to creating this impression of the whole. And how beautifully in such a performance as yesterday's is that impression conveyed!

To go from the particular to the general, we can look back on a most interesting season, which for novelty far outstripped the past two. For several years Dr. Koussevitzky has been content to rest on his oars as far as more than a modicum of new music is concerned. That is, he has offered not more than a dozen new works each season with a handful of revivals of modern music. This year there have been four first performances anywhere and considerably over 20 other works that were unfamiliar to Boston.

We have summed up the season in an article to appear Sunday. Consequently we shall only briefly indicate some conclusions here. Three of the first performances were interesting not only for intrinsic merit but also because they were the product of American composers. These were the Symphonies of Piston and Hill and the Organ Concerto of Sowerby. Mr. Piston's symphony would win our vote as one of the two important scores introduced here during the season. The other would certainly be Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto.

The works presented by Mr. Prokofieff himself were minor ones, as was also the "Lieutenant Kije" Suite, tho cha me viol

one
Hin
bra
Syn
high if they were not category established above, in that they have been played here before. Of but slightly less interest were Malipiero's Second Symphony and the concerto by Starokadomsky; nor should we forget Sibelius's impressive "The Origin of Fire." Altogether it has been an exceptionally good and lively season and reflects the greatest credit on Dr. Koussevitzky's intelligence and taste.

Symphony Finishes Season

B. Adv. By Ruth Marsters May 1/38

Music Editor

RELUCTANTLY acknowledging the close of another Boston Symphony season, the capacity audiences of the 24th pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening stood to express their zealous appreciation of Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky had chosen a program singularly well designed for the occasion.

There was, to begin with, a Haydn Symphony—one of those works through which the orchestra usually moves trippingly and with an easy grace.

There was Debussy's "La Mer," of which Dr. Koussevitzky's reading the orchestra's performance is considered by many unparalleled.

Lastly, the Brahms First Symphony supplied the more rhapsodic vein and the opportunity for soaring with those outpourings of sound for which the orchestra is likewise peculiarly adapted.

* * *

THE performance on Friday began in a manner move constrained than is either salutory or usual.

Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, last heard at these con[illegible] Adrian Boult during his visit as guest conductor in 1937, is a work of rare charm. From its somewhat formal introduction and the bright Allegro, through the sweetly singing Largo, the jocose Menuetto, there is never a dull, an awkward moment. The capricious Finale deliciously recalls Tovey's allusion to its main theme as "an exquisitely bred kitten."

Undoubtedly the orchestra has surpassed its Friday afternoon performance of Debussy's "La Mer." The three symbolic sketches are of course acknowledged to be tone painting of a high order, but Dr. Koussevitzky's reading on this occasion lacked its usual fine poetry.

The performance was neither so vivid nor so subtle as he usually manages. (Mood is of ephemeral substance, to be sure, and perhaps more to be valued because it cannot always be turned on at 2:30 or 8:15 as the case may be.)

The Brahms proceeded with some gusto, the horns vying with the strings in their zest for excellence.

But the immediate performance was not as important as that which it represented. The Orchestra, completing its fifty-seventh season, stands at the height of its enviable reputation as one of the foremost organizations of its kind in the world. The termination of each of Dr. Koussevitzky's 14 years as conductor has stood as a milepost along a path of consistently greater achievement.

Programs, in which the best of contemporary efforts and the literature of the classics find their places in due order, are so arranged as to raise program-making to the dignity of an art. And always there is the shining caliber of the orchestra, the vivid personality of Serge Koussevitzky as an artist to render Boston concert audiences among the most fortunate anywhere.

SUMMARIZES SYMPHONY SEASON

B. Post May 1/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

RAVEL, with nine pieces played, and Prokofieff, with eight, led all other composers in the Boston Symphony season just past. Even Beethoven, generally the high man, trailed with six, four symphonies, an overture and a concerto; a figure equalled by Sibelius. Of course there was a reason, or rather two reasons. The death of Ravel on Dec. 28 occasioned a memorial pair of concerts and Dr. Koussevitzky, in order to do the job right, presented a different programme at each. As for Prokofieff, with four pieces, three of them novelties, already to his credit, he appeared as guest-conductor in a programme of his own works, of which three again were new. Yet Prokofieff in his much discussed and much criticised statement to the press complained that Boston did not sufficiently appreciate him!

Twenty-six compositions were performed for the first time at these concerts and all of them, save the Requiem of Faure, Bach's Sixth Brandenburg Concerto and Pizzetti's "Concerto del l'Estate" were new to Boston. How many of them will remain in the repertory? Not many, probably. Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto, introduced here by Jascha Heifetz, is sure to attract other violinists, and Dr. Koussevitzky is quite certain to repeat his amusing "Lieutenant Kije" suite. The Third Symphony of Edward Burlingame Hill is much too attractive to be dropped; the Symphony of Walter Piston, a less genial work, is sufficiently serious to warrant another hearing.

Other violinists may or may not play the long-buried and generally ineffective Violin Concerto of Schumann. It is not likely that pianists in general will be attracted by Rachmaninoff's brilliant but essentially empty "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini," which he himself played here.

Besides Prokofieff, Georges Enesco appeared as composer-conductor renewing our acquaintance with the alluring First Rumanian Rhapsody and introducing his soundly made Second Suite in the classical manner. The Symphonic poem, "Actaeon," by his countryman, Allesandresco, the only novelty in that no longer popular form, was hardly worth presenting. The other guest-conductor, Daniele Amfitheatrof, who led a pair of concerts in mid-season, is not likely to return to us. His own "American Panorama" was so bad as to be almost a scandal. Since she directed the Bach Cantata Club's performance of Faure's Requiem and was hence the first woman ever to lead the Symphony Orchestra at a regular concert, Nadia Boulanger should also be included here.

In addition to hearing Rachmaninoff and Prokofieff as soloists in their own works—the latter played his youthful and unimportant First Piano Concerto—we were honored by the personal appearance of Paul Hindemith, most notable of German modernists, playing his provocative Viola Concerto, "Kammermusik" No. 5, while at the same concert Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the rugged and impressive "Konzertmusik" for strings and brass, composed for the orchestra's 50th season.

Three symphonies by Brahms and none by Bruckner will some day seem an unequal distribution of favors. However, the revival after 23 years of Mahler's Fifth Symphony, repeated at a later pair of concerts, was one of the high spots and likewise one of the big successes of the season. This reviewer, who feels deeply that Bruckner and Mahler have yet to receive their just deserts in this city, herewith repeats his plea for the introduction or the revival, as the case may be, of Mahler's Second, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth and of Bruckner's Third, Fifth, Sixth and Ninth Symphonies. Another composer who needs a bit of championing is D'Indy, represented this season only by the delightful Symphony on a French Mountain Air, played at a pair of Monday and Tuesday concerts, with Robert Casadesus as the assisting pianist and Mr. Burgin conducting.

To mention the outstanding performances in a season that seemed to surpass even its 14 predecessors under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction would be virtually to review most of the programmes in detail. Suffice it then to mention those of Beethoven's First, Third and Fourth Symphonies and Sibelius' First and Second, those of all the pieces by Ravel, Debussy's "La Mer," Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" and "Death and Transfiguration" and also those of the violin concertos of Brahms and Mendelssohn with Messrs. Heifetz and Menuhin as the respective soloists.

Besides the Pops, which begin on Wednesday, there will be two other concerts this week, both on Friday evening. At Jordan Hall there will be a Community Orchestra Festival under the auspices of the WPA, with Margaret Kurkjian, pianist, as soloist, and at the Museum of Fine Arts the Harvard Glee Club will give its yearly concert there, open to the public without charge.

By Wednesday evening, when Arthur Fiedler raises his baton over an orchestra of some 90 Symphony players, Symphony Hall will have assumed its most festive summer garb. The programme of the opening night well suggests the range which Mr. Fiedler's lists will adopt. On it are to be found the March from the "Caucasian Sketches" of Ippolitav-Ivanov, the Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Grieg's "Spring," the Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Chabrier's "Marche Joyeuse," Dances by Kodaly, and "Delirien" Waltzes of Josef Strauss, Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture and a Hungarian Dance of Brahms. For more timely interest there will be a selection from "Snow White" and a piece called "Swing Stuff," by McBride, which will receive its first performance.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

APR 21 1938

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Is Announced

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival announcements are out. The programs, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will be given in the new auditorium at Tanglewood, the first series on August 4, 6 and 7, and the second series on August 11, 13 and 14.

There will be four lectures by Olin Downes at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, August 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

It is expected that the auditorium, with a seating capacity of 5,000, will be ready for the festival in August. The plans do not include finishing it in all details the first season but temporary features will be replaced later by permanent ones.

[redacted]

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1938

Dr. Koussevitzky Wins Ovation as Symphony Season Comes to a Close

Enthusiastic Audience Applauds Final Concert of 57th Season

Mrs. John Bartol, Mrs. Constantine A. Belash, Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, Mrs. Charles Devens Among Many Noted

By ALISON ARNOLD

Yesterday, the fifty-seventh season of Friday afternoon Symphony Concerts came to a close. All winter, Friday afternoons have been strictly reserved for these outstanding concerts, as members of Boston society refuse to let anything short of dire necessity interfere with their attendance at the Symphony. The end of the season proves that the time has come for summer plans, but Friday, Oct. 7, when the concerts will be resumed, is already encircled in red on many calendars.

When Dr. Serge Koussevitzky appeared yesterday, the audience arose in a body, and the applause was deafening, while at the close of the concert, the enthusiasm knew no bounds, and cheers and stampings augmented the wild applause. The program opened with Haydn's Symphony in G major, always a favorite. Following this came Debussy's marvelously descriptive "La Mer," and the concert ended with the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

It seemed as if everyone was present for this grand finale of the season. Sitting down near the front were Mrs. John Bartol and her daughter, Mrs. Constantine A. Belash. Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott wore a black gown with a crisp bow of brown taffeta at the neckline, just matching the filmy brown veil adorning her hat. Her daughter, Mrs. Charles Devens, wore a checked jacket with her navy skirt and smart off-the-face hat. Miss Peggy Hardwick had a pale pink carnation exactly matching her cunning antelope dwarf cap, pinned on the lapel of her checked jacket that she wore with her violet tweed skirt. Arriving with her was Miss Betty Albers, whose tiny turban fashioned of a Persian print, was most becoming.

With Mrs. Morton Prince, who wore black, was her sub-debutante daughter, Betsy, in rose tweeds. Attending together were Mrs. Marshal Fabyan, Jr., in navy with shell pink accessories, and Miss Barbara Bremer, whose navy blue gown was sprinkled with tiny pink pin dots that matched the brim of her jaunty sailor. Also wearing the popular navy and pink combination was Mrs. Charles Howard. Mrs. Moses Williams wore with her slim black coat, a hat with a black brim and a white crown banded with red.

Chatting together in the foyer during the intermission were Mrs. Edward A. Taft, in navy, her turban brightened with diminutive circles of yellow, and Mrs. Valentine Hollingsworth, also in navy, with which she wore a sailor of toast straw. Wearing a chic tan straw sailor with her beige frock was Mrs. Alfred R. McIntyre. Miss Isabella Grandin's toque was a mass of white flowers, and a single white blossom adorned the top of Miss Marjorie Motley's tiny black pillbox hat that had a trailing veil which wound about her throat.

One of the early arrivals was Mrs. Daniel A. De Menocal in trimly tailored tweeds. Strolling about the foyer together were Miss Jane Megrew, in a bright print, and Miss Mary Elizabeth Lowe in beige. With her Oxford gray tailler that had narrow white pencil stripes, Mrs. William B. Long wore a silver fox cape and a raspberry red sailor hat.

In the large audience there were many debutantes of the season just over. With her navy coat, Miss Katharine Putnam wore a hat of shiny rough straw wreathed with flowers shading from palest yellow to deep rose red. Miss Susan Storey was all in black, and Miss Jean Clark, who attended with her mother, Mrs. Paul Foster Clark, topped her green skirt with a gay plaid jacket. Still another 1937-38 debutante was Miss Virginia Prout, who was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Henry Prout.

Miss Charlotte Rantoul wore with her springlike print, an unusual hat of bright red straw, and Miss Lucile Swift, who was escorted by Mr. Francis Chalifoux, brightened her black frock with her open-crowned cerise turban. All in navy blue was Mrs. Adams Sherman Hill, and in black and white was Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike. Mrs. John T. Bottomley was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Ellen Bottomley.

Among the many others present were Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs. Arthur Bell, Mrs. Francis G. Barnum, Mrs. Augustus W. Soule, Mrs. Carl Dreyfus, Miss Elizabeth C. Leland, Mrs. Charles Gaston Smith, Mrs. Hugh Bancroft, Mrs. Stearns Poor, Miss Eleanor Coolidge, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt, Mrs. Harry B. Stebbins, Mrs. J. Dellinger Barney and her daughter, Miss Faith Barney, Mrs. Roland Nickerson, Mrs. Edward Caldwell Moore, Mrs. Robert Cushman, Miss Gertrude Sands, Mrs. Winthrop Coffin, Miss Aimee Lamb, Mrs. Lawrence Black, Mrs. Frank H. Stewart, Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French, Mrs. William H. Coburn, Mrs. Walter B. Clifford, Mrs. Marc Peter, Jr., Miss Reinette Plimpton, Miss Olive Perry, Mrs. Roland Hopkins and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs.

Pops Thursday Will Be Benefit

Many reservations have already been made for the Pop concert next Thursday evening, May 5, at Symphony Hall, being sponsored by a distinguished committee for the benefit of the George Junior Republic in Freeville, N. Y. Although this social agency is located in the adjoining state of New York the need of training young people between the ages of 15 and 21 for responsible citizenship is becoming increasingly apparent to social agencies here in Boston and the best way to meet this need is by enlarging the facilities of the Junior Republic in Freeville in order that its service may be made available to our young people. Many of the youths in Massachusetts have had the benefit of Junior Republic training and more can be helped through the support of friends in Boston.

Dr. Alexander Forbes of the Harvard Medical School and Milton is president of the Board of Trustees, whose membership includes Mr. Samuel Cabot, Mr. John Richardson, Mr. Donald Scott, Mr. Theodore T. Whitney, Mrs. Langdon P. Marvin, Mr. Robert Grant, Jr., and Mr. Charles D. Osborne, who is vice-president of the board.

Among those who are attending the benefit are Mrs. John Balch, Mrs. Lincoln Bryant, Mr. Laurence Curtis, Mrs. Douglas Crocker, Dr. and Mrs. George P. Denny, Mrs. George H. Davenport, Dr. and Mrs. Ronald M. Ferry, Mrs. J. Malcolm Forbes, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Mr. Albert Goodhue, Mr. Frederic S. Goodwin, Mrs. Chester Guild, Dr. Edward Harding, Miss Mary B. Jackson, Mrs. Charles Jackson, Mrs. Carl T. Keller, Dr. Arthur R. Kimpton, Mrs. Frederic C. Lawrence, Mrs. Laurence M. Lombard, Mrs. Eldon Macleod, Mrs. M. L. Madden, Mr. Charles F. Mills, Mr. Arthur H. Morse, Mrs. Noel Morss, Miss Amelia Peabody, Mrs. Frederick S. Pratt, Mrs. Robert P. Parker, Mr. Chandler H. Pratt, Mrs. Henry H. Perry, Mrs. Ralph S. Richmond, Mr. James W. Russell, Jr., Miss Mary S. Rousmaniere, Mrs. George C. Shattuck, Mr. Philip L. Spalding, Mr. Edward A. Taft, Miss Helen Thomas, Mrs. George Upton, Mr. Donald C. Watson, Miss Mary E. Williams, and Mrs. George Wigglesworth.

B. Her.

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The 24th regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. This and the repetition of the concert tomorrow evening comprise the final pair of the 57th season. The program was as follows:

Haydn	Symphony in G major No. 88.
Debussy	"La Mer," Three Symphonic Sketches.
Brahms	Symphony No. 1 in C minor Op. 68.

Once again and for the 13th time under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction the Boston Symphony Orchestra has completed a gloriously successful season. The splendid performance of the Brahms First Symphony, which has become the traditional finale, brought forth the expected and deserved ovation. We are more fortunate than we know in having this amazing orchestra year after year at our beck and call and ever with undiminished standards of perfection.

Previously we heard an excellent performance of one of Haydn's most ingratiating symphonies and a brilliant interpretation of Debussy's "La Mer." Dr. Koussevitzky is wise in reviving many of the symphonies of Haydn and Mozart. There are so many to choose from that a concert audience hardly gets familiar with the charming qualities and originality of any one. The great symphonies of Mozart and the "Surprise" of Haydn may be exceptions, nor would we wish to have Mozart's three masterpieces neglected. But Haydn wrote so much that was at least as good as and frequently better than the "Surprise" that it is only intelligent to search about among them. None of the three presented this season, for example, is at all too well known. Moreover, the music of both composers fits well on almost any program and makes a perfect contrast with either the romantics or the moderns.

Debussy "La Mer", as a case in point, lost none of its wondrous charm and mysterious illusion by coming after the direct geniality of Haydn. It is a marvelous score, so subtle in its cumulation of effects, evoking the wilderness and fascination of the sea without showing the guiding hand of the artist. Debussy's methods in building these musical edifices, which may be called by a variety of names, are remarkable when one studies them, and the total effect is no less so when one simply listens. Every rhythmical figure, every harmonic sequence and all the scraps of melody are bent to creating this impression of the whole. And how beautifully in such a performance as yesterday's is that impression conveyed!

To go from the particular to the general, we can look back on a most interesting season, which for novelty far outstripped the past two. For several years Dr. Koussevitzky has been content to rest on his oars as far as more than a modicum of new music is concerned. That is, he has offered not more than a dozen new works each season with a handful of revivals of modern music. This year there have been four first performances anywhere and considerably over 20 other works that were unfamiliar to Boston.

We have summed up the season in an article to appear Sunday. Consequently we shall only briefly indicate some conclusions here. Three of the first performances were interesting not only for intrinsic merit but also because they were the product of American composers. These were the Symphonies of Piston and Hill and the Organ Concerto of Sowerby. Mr. Piston's symphony would win our vote as one of the two important scores introduced here during the season. The other would certainly be Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto.

The works presented by Mr. Prokofieff himself were minor ones, as was also the "Lieutenant Kije" Suite, though none of them w charm or value. Hindemith mermusik," in which he play viola, was entertaining and yet one of his more serious works. Both Hindemith's "Konzertmusik" for brass and strings and Roussel's Third Symphony would, of course, rank high if they were not out of the category established above, in that they have been played here before. Of but slightly less interest were Malipiero's Second Symphony and the concerto by Starokadomsky; nor should we forget Sibelius's impressive "The Origin of Fire." Altogether it has been an exceptionally good and lively season and reflects the greatest credit on Dr. Koussevitzky's intelligence and taste.

Symphony Finishes Season

B. Adv.

By Ruth Marsters May 1/38

Music Editor

RELUCTANTLY acknowledging the close of another Boston Symphony season, the capacity audiences of the 24th pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening stood to express their zealous appreciation of Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky had chosen a program singularly well designed for the occasion.

There was, to begin with, a Haydn Symphony—one of those works through which the orchestra usually moves trippingly and with an easy grace.

There was Debussy's er," of which Dr. K ad- ing th ce r-his visit as guest conductor in 1937, is a work of rare charm. From its somewhat formal introduction and the bright Allegro, through the sweetly singing Largo, the jocose Menuetto, there is never a dull, an awkward moment. The capricious Finale deliciously recalls Tovey's allusion to its main theme as "an exquisitely bred kitten."

Undoubtedly the orchestra has surpassed its Friday afternoon performance of Debussy's "La Mer." The three symbolic sketches are of course acknowledged to be tone painting of a high order, but Dr. Koussevitzky's reading on this occasion lacked its usual fine poetry.

The performance was neither vivid nor so subtle as he usually manages. (Mood is of ephemeral substance, to be sure, and haps more to be valued be it cannot always be turned 2:30 or 8:15 as the case may

Brahms proceeded with some gusto, the horns vying with the strings in their zest for excellence.

But the immediate performance was not as important as that which it represented. The Orchestra, completing its fifty-seventh season, stands at the height of its enviable reputation as one of the foremost organizations of its kind in the world. The termination of each of Dr. Koussevitzky's 14 years as conductor has stood as a milepost along a path of consistently greater achievement.

Programs, in which the best of contemporary efforts and the literature of the classics find their places in due order, are so arranged as to raise program-making to the dignity of an art. And always there is the shining caliber of the orchestra, the vivid personality of Serge Koussevitzky as an artist to render Boston concert audiences among the most fortunate anywhere.

---

that I can when I get esome there.
can't get anything
just sit and mope
thinking how lovely
ld be if you were only th anything would be better
just sitting there—and th ing—and slowly going cra
He looked at her wit
longing of love
But
of you

SUMMARIZES SYMPHONY SEASON

B. Post May 1/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

RAVEL, with nine pieces played, and Prokofieff, with eight, led all other composers in the Boston Symphony season just past. Even Beethoven, generally the high man, trailed with six, four symphonies, an overture and a concerto; a figure equalled by Sibelius. Of course there was a reason, or rather two reasons. The death of Ravel on Dec. 28 occasioned a memorial pair of concerts and Dr. Koussevitzky, in order to do the job right, presented a different programme at each. As for Prokofieff, with four pieces, three of them novelties, already to his credit, he appeared as guest-conductor in a programme of his own works, of which three again were new. Yet Prokofieff in his much discussed and much criticised statement to the press complained that Boston did not sufficiently appreciate him!

Twenty-six compositions were performed for the first time at these concerts and all of them, save the Requiem of Faure, Bach's Sixth Brandenburg Concerto and Pizzetti's "Concerto del l'Estate" were new to Boston. How many of them will remain in the repertory? Not many, probably. Prokofieff's Second Violin Concerto, introduced here by Jascha Heifetz, is sure to attract other violinists, and Dr. Koussevitzky is quite certain to repeat his amusing "Lieutenant Kije" suite. The Third Symphony of Edward Burlingame Hill is much too attractive to be dropped; the Symphony of Walter Piston, a less genial work, is sufficiently serious to warrant another hearing.

Other violinists may or may not play the long-buried and generally ineffective Violin Concerto of Schumann. It is not likely that pianists in general will be attracted by Rachmaninoff's brilliant but essentially empty "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini," which he himself played here.

Besides Prokofieff, Georges Enesco appeared as composer-conductor, renewing our acquaintance with the alluring First Rumanian Rhapsody and introducing his soundly made Second Suite in the classical manner. The Symphonic poem, "Actaeon," by his countryman, Allesandresco, the only novelty in that no longer popular form, was hardly worth presenting. The other guest-conductor, Daniele Amfitheatrof, who led a pair of concerts in mid-season, is not likely to return to us. His own "American Panorama" was so bad as to be almost a scandal. Since she directed the Bach Cantata Club's performance of Faure's Requiem and was hence the first woman ever to lead the Symphony Orchestra at a regular concert, Nadia Boulanger should also be included here.

In addition to hearing Rachmaninoff and Prokofieff as soloists in their own works—the latter played his youthful and unimportant First Piano Concerto—we were honored by the personal appearance of Paul Hindemith, most notable of German modernists, playing his provocative Viola Concerto, "Kammermusik" No. 5, while at the same concert Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the rugged and impressive "Konzertmusik" for strings and brass, composed for the orchestra's 50th season.

Three symphonies by Brahms and none by Bruckner will some day seem an unequal distribution of favors. However, the revival after 23 years of Mahler's Fifth Symphony, repeated at a later pair of concerts, was one of the high spots and likewise one of the big successes of the season. This reviewer, who feels deeply that Bruckner and Mahler have yet to receive their just deserts in this city, herewith repeats his plea for the introduction or the revival, as the case may be, of Mahler's Second, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth and of Bruckner's Third, Fifth, Sixth and Ninth Symphonies. Another composer who needs a bit of championing is D'Indy, represented this season only by the delightful Symphony on a French Mountain Air, played at a pair of Monday and Tuesday concerts, with Robert Casadesus as the assisting pianist and Mr. Burgin conducting.

To mention the outstanding performances in a season that seemed to surpass even its 14 predecessors under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction would be virtually to review most of the programmes in detail. Suffice it then to mention those of Beethoven's First, Third and Fourth Symphonies and Sibelius' First and Second, those of all the pieces by Ravel, Debussy's "La Mer," Strauss' "Ein Heldenleben" and "Death and Transfiguration" and also those of the violin concertos of Brahms and Mendelssohn with Messrs. Heifetz and Menuhin as the respective soloists.

Besides the Pops, which begin on Wednesday, there will be two other concerts this week, both on Friday evening. At Jordan Hall there will be a Community Orchestra Festival under the auspices of the WPA, with Margaret Kurkjian, pianist, as soloist, and at the Museum of Fine Arts the Harvard Glee Club will give its yearly concert there, open to the public without charge.

By Wednesday evening, when Arthur Fiedler raises his baton over an orchestra of some 90 Symphony players, Symphony Hall will have assumed its most festive summer garb. The programme of the opening night well suggests the range which Mr. Fiedler's lists will adopt. On it are to be found the March from the "Caucasian Sketches" of Ippolitav-Ivanov, the Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Grieg's "Spring," the Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Chabrier's "Marche Joyeuse," Dances by Kodaly, and "Delirien" Waltzes of Josef Strauss, Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture and a Hungarian Dance of Brahms. For more timely interest there will be a selection from "Snow White" and a piece called "Swing Stuff," by McBride, which will receive its first performance.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

APR 21 1938

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Is Announced

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival announcements are out. The programs, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will be given in the new auditorium at Tanglewood, the first series on August 4, 6 and 7, and the second series on August 11, 13 and 14.

There will be four lectures by Olin Downes at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, August 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

It is expected that the auditorium, with a seating capacity of 5,000, will be ready for the festival in August. The plans do not include finishing it in all details the first season but temporary features will be replaced later by permanent ones.

CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

APR 23 1938

27

Boston Symphony Plays Here This Year

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

APR 25 1938

OFF FOR BOSTON.

MR. AND MRS. J. HERMAN THUMAN left on Sunday for Boston, where they will be present at the performance of the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" on Tuesday evening, presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, plus a chorus composed of members of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliff College Club, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. When the Boston Symphony Orchestra appeared here last December in the Artist Series that distinguished musical institution discussed with Mr. Thuman the performance of that score, that was interpreted by the chorus of the last May Festival. Dr. Koussevitzky invited Mr. and Mrs. Thuman to be present as his guests at this forthcoming interpretation of that famous work by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

After that intriguing experience, the Thumans will go on to New York where Mr. Thuman will keep various appointments with the powers that be, regarding soloists for the next May Festival, in 1939; and also in connection with Mr. Thuman's Artist Series, both in Cincinnati and in Dayton. This famous Cincinnati impresario has also several engagements with Nelson Eddy, who will appear here next February and March under Mr. Thuman's direction, Cincinnati being one of the cities in which that popular and gifted artist will appear next year.

CINCINNATI, O.
POST

APR 22 1938

Music on the Disc

Appreciation of the Classics Increased by Fine Recordings

A renaissance of interest in the classical music of the great symphonies, operas and other works of the "masters" is one of the encouraging phenomena of present-day American life. Fortune magazine conducted one of its notable surveys some months ago, and found that more than half of the people in the United States like to listen to classical music, and more than one-fourth of them could correctly identify Toscanini.

Undoubtedly the radio has been largely responsible for this musical uplift of the masses, through making the Metropolitan Opera, New York Philharmonic, and other great musical organizations audible to millions instead of only a few thousands. Following, perhaps, on this renewed appreciation of the "good things," and certainly doing much to sustain it, comes the rapidly spreading distribution of fine records, such as those which distinguish the list of April releases.

Parsifal, Prelude and Good Friday Spell. Music from Wagner's great religious music drama, superbly played by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra. A Victor Musical Masterpiece album of four 12-inch records. Timed, of course, for Easter, but one of the most beautiful recordings of all time. The music of the Prelude is solemn and reverent, that of the Good Friday Spell is in a happier vein; all of it is Wagner at his best. Our own Cincinnati Symphony, playing this music in its pre-Easter concerts this year, sounded better than the Philadelphia Orchestra on records; but the latter has the great advantage of being available for repetition whenever desired—and that is often!

The Passion of Our Lord According to St. Matthew. Volume 3 of Victor's recording of Johann Sebastian Bach's monumental work, as played at a public concert in Boston by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, G. Wallace Woodworth conductor, and soloists. An album of nine 12-inch records, making a total of 27 records or 54 "sides" for the complete work. This is the first and only complete recording of the St. Matthew Passion, regarded by many as the greatest work of the greatest composer. It was a gigantic recording task, which Victor calls its proudest achievement. Artistically, the recording is completely satisfactory, having a minimum of extraneous noises, the maximum of musically satisfying breaks, and the presence of a brilliant array of talent. In the concluding set of records released this month, the music ascends to a sweeping climax.

Bach, Concerto in C Major. Played by Artur Schnabel and Karl Ulrich Schnabel on two pianos, with the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Adrian Boult. Victor Musical Masterpiece Album consisting of three 12-inch records. Those of the laity who read the New Yorker's recent "Profile" of Artur Schnabel and therein learned what an extraordinary musical personality he is, will be much interested in this recording, along with those of the musical intelligentia who have almost made a "cult" of him. He is an artist who has become tremendously popular by spurning all the things that ordinarily make for popularity. With Karl Ulrich Schnabel, a pianist of almost equal ability, and the splendid orchestra under Sir Adrian Boult, he gives this Bach composition a performance that fairly sparkles with brilliant technique and polish. The first and third movements are lively and gay, the second is contemplative but not melancholy, and the contrast is quite pleasing.

Mozart, Serenade "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik." Played by the Pro Arte Quartet with the addition of a second double bass. A Victor two-pocket album of 12-inch records. For musical relaxation, give us Mozart; and here is one of the most familiar, and certainly one of the most delightful of his smaller works. The performance is by one of the world's most distinguished quartets.

Two exceptionally interesting individual records come from Victor this month:

Boston "Pops" Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, plays on one 12-inch record, Jacob Gade's Tango Tzigane entitled "Jalousie," and on the other side Manuel de Falla's "Ritual Dance of Fire" from the ballet "El Amor Brujo." The tango is most seductive and the "Fire Dance" is quite modern.

Arthur Rubinstein, the pianist who made such a hit on the Matinee Musicale program here in Cincinnati this last winter, gives a splendid performance of that great favorite, Rachmaninoff's "Prelude in C Sharp Minor." On the other side is the interesting "Minuet and Trio" by Schubert. A notable record for those who like brilliant piano performances.—H. W. M.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

APR 23 1938

Member Drive Opened for Festival

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitsky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3:30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8:30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture Aug. 4 and 6, Aug. 11 and 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel Company and contractors are now busily engaged building the roof and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5,000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country, who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

APR 24 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PLANNED FOR AUGUST

Has Already Launched Membership Drive Which Will Close May 15

The Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a summer institution of significance, announced the opening of its annual campaign for memberships last week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture August 4 and 6, August 11 and 13, at the Berkshire museum at Pittsfield.

Of added interest this summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed. The steel structure has been completed by the Bethlehem Steel company and contractors are now busily engaged building the roof and the walls. The shed, seating more than 5000 people, is shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mahkeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

Announcements are being mailed to thousands of music lovers in all parts of the country who flocked to Tanglewood last summer. They call attention to the fact that since last August, friends of the festival have come forward with sums ranging from modest bits to handsome contributions in order that a permanent structure might be assured, adding:—

"The result will be an auditorium of simple but pleasing lines, with a seating capacity of 5000. Certain temporary features will be replaced gradually by permanent ones. Meanwhile there is in process of construction a hall of music where the audience may hear the music in its full beauties, while sheltered from storms and sun.

"It has been the aspiration of those in charge of the festival to build a shrine of music where, amidst the beauties of a New England summer, the finest music may be heard in such a performance as could be expected from one of the greatest orchestras in the world. This aspiration has become a fact.

"The trustees of the festival, however, are not content to stop with the achievement of this one goal. It is their hope that public recognition and support, already gratifyingly proved, will continue to grow, stimulating the festival to seek wider horizons and greater success. It is their hope that "Tanglewood" will be known more and more as a vitalizing force in the world of music."

Other details concerning festival plans and other cultural interests in the Berkshires may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic festival, inc., at Stockbridge.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

APR 24 1938

BEETHOVEN'S "MISSA SOLEMNIS" TUESDAY NIGHT

Beethoven's great mass in which, as Ernest Newman has written, "he dramatized his religious text as no one has done before or has done since," will be performed next Tuesday evening under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, in a joint choral and orchestral Pension Fund concert. It was with the "Missa Solemnis" that Symphony hall was inaugurated in 1900, and this music has not been heard here since it was performed at the Beethoven Festival ten years ago. A chorus in full numbers, consisting of the Harvard Glee club and Radcliffe Choral society, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth, will combine with the orchestra. The quartet of soloists include: Jeannette Vreeland, Kathryn Meisle, John Priebe, and Mack Harrell. The performance will bgin at 8.15.

LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

APR 24 1938

LAST SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Boston Symphony orchestra will bring its [illegible] season to an end next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony hall. Serge Koussevitzky has chosen music of Haydn, Debussy and Brahms for the final programme. The opening number will be Haydn's Symphony in G major, No. 88, one of the series which was composed for performance in Paris. Debussy's three orchestral sketches, "La Mer," will be the second number. Brahms' First Symphony in C minor will conclude the season.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH

April 28/38

Radcliffe Singers

MISS VICTORIA QUAMME OF Minneapolis, was one of the 150 Radcliffe students, members of the Radcliffe Choral society, who joined the Harvard Glee club in singing with the Boston Symphony orchestra Tuesday evening when a performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" was given in Symphony hall. For thirteen years the Harvard and Radcliffe choral groups have sung annually with the Boston Symphony orchestra. The performance was for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

ELMSFORD, N. Y.
WEEKLY EAGLE

APR 29 1938

Mlle. Nadia Bourlanger, visiting lecturer in music from the Ecole Normal in Paris, is the first woman to conduct the Royal Philharmonic Society in London last year and has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She is giving a course in the comparative study of early and modern music at Radcliffe.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 23 1938

BOSTON

SYMPHONIC AUDIENCE GIVES OVATION TO COMPOSER

BOSTON, April 22 (AP) — The usually conservative Friday afternoon audience at Symphony Hall broke its quiet today to applaud enthusiastically the world premiere of Leo Sowerby's Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in C Major by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

So great was the applause that Koussevitzky beckoned the burly, bespectacled and fiery-haired Chicago composer from his seat to the podium.

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J.
WEEKLY RECORD

APR 22 1938

Mlle. Nadia Bourlanger, visiting lecturer in music from the Ecole Normal in Paris, is the first woman to conduct the Royal Philharmonic Society in London last year and has conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra. She [illegible]ing a course in the comparative study of early and modern music at Radcliffe.

28

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
EXAMINER

APR 24 1938

Londoners Play Sibelius Third, Seventh Symphonies

To its regular American record releases, Victor has newly added a brilliant special European list, full of unfamiliar masterworks, novelties and eminent soloists.

First to hand are a Sibelius album, Beethoven's supreme C sharp minor Quartet Opus 131, and Brahms' second String Sextet, in G.

The Beethoven is played with exalted feeling, clean skill and exhaustive knowledge by the famous Adolf Busch Quartet. The Brahms, peculiarly Brahmsian in its thick deep sonority, is rendered in all its warm melodic charm by the Budapest Quartet with an extra British viola and cello.

Of Sibelius, the London Symphony, led by Finland's Robert Kajanus, presents the Third Symphony, while the equally admirable B. B. C. Symphony is led by Serge Koussevitzky in the Seventh.

The Third, despite its Sibelian dour sweep and grandeur, is a lesser score, for its manner and emotion are fairly obvious. But the Seventh is Sibelius at his best; its elaborate single movement is enriched by a vast and probing originality. (A flaw in the Koussevitzky recording is that many of the discs end with disconcerting abruptness.)

Among outstanding Columbia albums—

Schumann's lovably poetic A major Quartet Opus 41 is played by the top rank Lener String Quartet.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 24 1938

Hub 'Pops' On Air May 4

Fiedler Again To Be Director

Boston's annual "pop" concerts, long a feature of musical life in the Bay State capital during the Spring and early Summer season, return to the air on Wednesday, May 4, from 9.30 to 10.30 p. m. over the NBC Blue Network.

As in years past the broadcasts, to be heard each Wednesday for nine weeks, will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, the first native Bostonian ever to conduct the "pop" concerts.

This year will be the fifty-third that musicians of the Boston Symphony orchestra have given a Spring season of light and semi-classical works, and the more popular classics at popular prices. It will be the eighth year that the NBC has broadcast these concerts each week from Symphony Hall in Boston.

The orchestra strives to reach the widest possible audience among music lovers. The atmosphere of the concerts is one of easy informality. The audience is seated at tables, where soft drinks and other light refreshments are available, and listens to the gayest of good music played by a full-sized orchestra comprising some of the country's outstanding artists.

Fiedler, a virtuoso of the piano, violin and viola, studied in Europe until the World War interrupted his training, and then continued his studies in the United States. He has been associated with the Boston Symphony for many years.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 24 1938

WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE

IS GEORGE FOXHALL'S FACE RED? Mr. Foxhall recently was named to the talent committee of the Civic Music Association, so it seemed fitting to ask him the next morning how he liked the symphony. "What symphony?" says George, and we mentioned the Boston Symphony Orchestra appearance at the Auditorium.

"MY GOSH," SOBS MR. FOXHALL, "and I went to the bowling tournament."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

APR 25 1938

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony To Open Berkshire Festival

Cecilia Chorus and Soloists To Appear at Music Shed's Opening—Scenes From Wagner Planned

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate the new music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 4 at Tanglewood with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Chorale Finale in which the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston and four vocal soloists will appear with the orchestra.

More Than 100 Voices

The chorus of trained voices numbering more than 100 has often appeared with the orchestra in Boston. It's director is Arthur Fiedler, who annually conducts the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall.

For the second Thursday of the Festival, scenes from the music dramas of Wagner will be presented in concert form with soloists. Works will include the last scene of "Die Walkyrie" and the complete third act of "Siegfried."

Henry Hadley Memorial

Dr. Koussevitzky will choose one of Henry Hadley's composition's for performance at this year's concerts as a memorial to the first conductor of the Festival.

Other works to be played will include Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony which was performed last year and at once closely associated with the beautiful natural setting at Tanglewood. Other symphonies will include the Second of Brahms, Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony ("Pathetique"), and the First of Sibelius. There will be orchestral numbers other than symphonies by Debussy, Brahms, Bach, Sibelius, Ravel, Rimsky-Korsakov, Aaron Copeland and Prokofieff.

Thus will appear works by contemporary as well as American composers.

Reservations Increase

Already more patrons and members have made reservations than at the same period last year. Reversing last year's trend more reservations are being made for the front reserved section than for the rear.

The trustees of the Festival met Saturday, approved the tentative program submitted by Dr. Koussevitzky and considered details of promotion.

Miss Smith To Sail

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, returned to New York yesterday and will sail for France Wednesday with her mother, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith. She will be gone until the middle of July. George W. Edman of Pittsfield is chairman of the coordinating committee. Mrs. Edman is executive vice president. Norval H. Busey Jr., of Lee and New York, will be acting president. Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge is treasurer.

The advisory board consisting of sub-chairmen from a wide radius will meet next Monday at the Red Lion Inn to report on memberships. The meeting is called for 3.30.

Information concerning the Festival may be secured from sub-chairmen or directly from the office at Stockbridge. Seating plans of the new building drawn to scale have been printed and may be obtained from sub-chairmen or from the office.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS

APR 26 1938

To Dedicate Music Shed

Boston, Mass., April 25 (AP)—With a performance of Beethoven's massive Ninth Symphony, in which a large chorus sings the closing movement, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will dedicate the Berkshire symphonic festival's expensive new music shed at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, August 4th. An announcement tonight disclosed the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and four soloists would appear with the orchestra.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

APR 26 1938

Orchestra, Chorus To Aid in Rite

Boston—(AP) — With a performance of Beethoven's massive Ninth Symphony, in which a large chorus sings the closing movement, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will dedicate the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's expensive new music shed at Tanglewood in Stockbridge Aug. 4. An announcement last night disclosed the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and four soloists would appear with the orchestra.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

APR 26 1938

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, and four lectures by Olin Downes, will be held this summer August 4, 6, 7, 11 ,13 and 14, at Tanglewood, just outside of Lenox.

The new music shed, a steel structure shaped like a half-open fan, and with a seating capacity of 5000, will be inaugurated at the first concert August 4. On this occasion the Boston Symphony will play Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia society chorus of Boston and four vocal soloists will also take part in this concert.

Ou August 11, at the concert opening the second series of three concerts, scenes from Wagner's music dramas, including the last scene from "Die Walkure" and the complete third act of "Siegfried," will be presented in concert form with soloists.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony will be played this year, as well as Sibelius' First, Brahms' Second, and Tchaikovsky's Sixth (Pathetique).

Among shorter works will bet he Brahms-Saydn Variations; "Tapiola" by Sibelius; "La Mer" by Debussy; "Ma mere l'oye" by Ravel; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Caprice espagnole"; Respighi's "Pines of Rome"; "Kije" Suite by Prokofiev.

A work by Henry Hadley will be played in memory of the first conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Other American composers to be represented will be Aaron Copland with his "Music for the Theatre,' and Walter Piston with his Concerto for Orchestra.

Mr. Downes' lectures will be given August 4, 6, 11 and 13, in the afternoon at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 26 1938

Berkshire Festival Opens Campaign

Drive For Members to Last Through May 15

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a Summer institution of significance, announces the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this Summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed, seating more than 5000 people, and shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mankeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

APR 26 1938

MUSIC NOTES

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., announced today that a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will open the festival on August 4. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston will participate. Soloists will be announced later. At the concert on August 11, which begins the second series of the festival, scenes from the Wagnerian music-dramas will be given in concert form.

* * *

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 27 1938

The Berkshire Festival

This Summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox holds promise of being the most important as well as the most enjoyable of the annual series. The program, as announced, offers generous portions of Beethoven and Brahms, with Tchaikowsky, Wagner, and other established masters well represented. In addition it has some, but not too much, of later composers, including some products of contemporary genius.

The excellence of the program itself is abundant attraction, especially such a program played by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky. This year, too, the new Music Shed will be ready for use, thus eliminating the discomforts and inconveniences of bad weather experienced in previous Festivals.

Those in charge of this Berkshire Festival, who have made it, in a few brief years, the important musical occasion that it is, are to be commended for their enterprise. There is every indication now that with the improved facilities for concerts, the event will continue to increase in significance and public interest.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

APR 26 1938

Random Notes

By E V. W.

week-end . . . Miss Ruth Hindon was in black, the skirt and bodice being edged with white embroidery. With her was Miss Barbara Hallenbeck, who was in lilac blue chiffon with jeweled clips . . . Wide interest in Berkshire Music Festival next August under Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

APR 28 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY TO BE SPEAKER

Conductor to Address committee for Berkshire Festival Monday

Stockbridge, Mass. — Serge Kosusevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57th season at Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday night. Before he sails for Europe next week he will inspect Tanglewood, where he and the orchestra will perform at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

At Tanglewood a music shed to seat more than 5,000 is being built, the result of contributions from music lovers in many parts of the country. The orchestra will inaugurate the shed Aug. 4 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia Society Chorus, Boston, and prominent soloists will appear.

Dr. Koussevitzky will motor from Boston Monday and in the afternoon will speak to the advisory committee, consisting of community chairmen from a wide area.

Joseph Franz, engineer in charge of the Tanglewood construction, is gradin gand rolling the grounds in anticipation of the visit. Roads are being built, grass planted, paths opened on the estate and additional drains have been built by the superintendent, Ward Gaston.

Accompanying Dr. Koussevitzky will be Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra board of trustees and a summer resident of Williamstown; Henry B. Sawyer, member of the orchestra board; Lucien Price, Boston Globe; Prof. Richard Fay, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, festival consultant on acoustics; Dr. Archibald Davison, Harvard, and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky will go to New York from Tanglewood.

28

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
EXAMINER

APR 24 1938

Londoners Play Sibelius Third, Seventh Symphonies

To its regular American record releases, Victor has newly added a brilliant special European list, full of unfamiliar masterworks, novelties and eminent soloists.

First to hand are a Sibelius album, Beethoven's supreme C sharp minor Quartet Opus 131, and Brahms' second String Sextet, in G.

The Beethoven is played with exalted feeling, clean skill and exhaustive knowledge by the famous Adolf Busch Quartet. The Brahms, peculiarly Brahmsian in its thick deep sonority, is rendered in all its warm melodic charm by the Budapest Quartet with an extra British viola and cello.

Of Sibelius, the London Symphony, led by Finland's Robert Kajanus, presents the Third Symphony, while the equally admirable B. B. C. Symphony is led by Serge Koussevitzky in the Seventh.

The Third, despite its Sibelian dour sweep and grandeur, is a lesser score, for its manner and emotion are fairly obvious. But the Seventh is Sibelius at his best; its elaborate single movement is enriched by a vast and probing originality. (A flaw in the Koussevitzky recording is that many of the discs end with disconcerting abruptness.)

Among outstanding Columbia albums—

Schumann's lovably poetic A major Quartet Opus 41 is played by the top rank Lener String Quartet.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 24 1938

Hub 'Pops' On Air May 4

Fiedler Again To Be Director

Boston's annual "pop" concerts, long a feature of musical life in the Bay State capital during the Spring and early Summer season, return to the air on Wednesday, May 4, from 9.30 to 10.30 p. m. over the NBC Blue Network.

As in years past the broadcasts, to be heard each Wednesday for nine weeks, will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, the first native Bostonian ever to conduct the "pop" concerts.

This year will be the fifty-third that musicians of the Boston Symphony orchestra have given a Spring season of light and semi-classical works, and the more popular classics at popular prices. It will be the eighth year that the NBC has broadcast these concerts each week from Symphony Hall in Boston.

The orchestra strives to reach the widest possible audience among music lovers. The atmosphere of the concerts is one of easy informality. The audience is seated at tables, where soft drinks and other light refreshments are available, and listens to the gayest of good music played by a full-sized orchestra comprising some of the country's outstanding artists.

Fiedler, a virtuoso of the piano, violin and viola, studied in Europe until the World War interrupted his training, and then continued his studies in the United States. He has been associated with the Boston Symphony for many years.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 24 1938

WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE

IS GEORGE FOXHALL'S FACE RED? Mr. Foxhall recently was named to the talent committee of the Civic Music Association, so it seemed fitting to ask him the next morning how he liked the symphony. "What symphony?" says George, and we mentioned the Boston Symphony Orchestra appearance at the Auditorium.

"MY GOSH," SOBS MR. FOXHALL, "and I went to the bowling tournament."

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS

[illegible] 1938

To Dedicate Music Shed

Boston, Mass., April 25 (AP)—With a performance of Beethoven's massive Ninth Symphony, in which a large chorus sings the closing movement, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will dedicate the Berkshire symphonic festival's expensive new music shed at Tanglewood in Stockbridge, August 4th. An announcement tonight disclosed the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and four soloists would appear with the orchestra.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

APR 25 1938

Beethoven's Ninth Symphony To Open Berkshire Festival

Cecilia Chorus and Soloists To Appear at Music Shed's Opening—Scenes From Wagner Planned

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate the new music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 4 at Tanglewood with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with Chorale Finale in which the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston and four vocal soloists will appear with the orchestra.

More Than 100 Voices

The chorus of trained voices numbering more than 100 has often appeared with the orchestra in Boston. It's director is Arthur Fiedler, who annually conducts the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall.

For the second Thursday of the Festival, scenes from the music dramas of Wagner will be presented in concert form with soloists. Works will include the last scene of "Die Walkyrie" and the complete third act of "Siegfried."

Henry Hadley Memorial

Dr. Koussevitzky will choose one of Henry Hadley's composition's for performance at this year's concerts as a memorial to the first conductor of the Festival.

Other works to be played will include Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony which was performed last year and at once closely associated with the beautiful natural setting at Tanglewood. Other symphonies will include the Second of Brahms, Tchaikovsky's Sixth Symphony ("Pathetique"), and the First of Sibelius. There will be orchestral numbers other than symphonies by Debussy, Brahms, Bach, Sibelius, Ravel, Rimsky-Korsakov, Aaron Copeland and Prokofieff.

Thus will appear works by contemporary as well as American composers.

Reservations Increase

Already more patrons and members have made reservations than at the same period last year. Reversing last year's trend more reservations are being made for the front reserved section than for the rear.

The trustees of the Festival met Saturday, approved the tentative program submitted by Dr. Koussevitzky and considered details of promotion.

Miss Smith To Sail

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, returned to New York yesterday and will sail for France Wednesday with her mother, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith. She will be gone until the middle of July. George W. Edman of Pittsfield is chairman of the coordinating committee. Mrs. Edman is executive vice president. Norval H. Busey Jr., of Lee and New York, will be acting president. Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge is treasurer.

The advisory board consisting of sub-chairmen from a wide radius will meet next Monday at the Red Lion Inn to report on memberships. The meeting is called for 3.30.

Information concerning the Festival may be secured from sub-chairmen or directly from the office at Stockbridge. Seating plans of the new building drawn to scale have been printed and may be obtained from sub-chairmen or from the office.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

APR 26 1938

MUSIC NOTES

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., announced today that a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will open the festival on August 4. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston will participate. Soloists will be announced later. At the concert on August 11, which begins the second series of the festival, scenes from the Wagnerian music-dramas will be given in concert form. • • •

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE

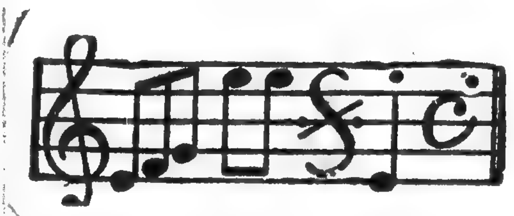
APR 26 1938

Orchestra, Chorus To Aid in Rite

Boston—(AP) — With a performance of Beethoven's massive Ninth Symphony, in which a large chorus sings the closing movement, Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will dedicate the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's expensive new music shed at Tanglewood in Stockbridge Aug. 4. An announcement last night disclosed the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and four soloists would appear with the orchestra.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

APR 26 1938



The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, and four lectures by Olin Downes, will be held this summer August 4, 6, 7, 11 ,13 and 14, at Tanglewood, just outside of Lenox.

The new music shed, a steel structure shaped like a half-open fan, and with a seating capacity of 5000, will be inaugurated at the first concert August 4. On this occasion the Boston Symphony will play Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia society chorus of Boston and four vocal soloists will also take part in this concert.

Ou August 11, at the concert opening the second series of three concerts, scenes from Wagner's music dramas, including the last scene from "Die Walkure" and the complete third act of "Siegfried," will be presented in concert form with soloists.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony will be played this year, as well as Sibelius' First, Brahms' Second, and Tchaikovsky's Sixth (Pathetique).

Among shorter works will bet he Brahms-Saydn Variations; "Tapiola" by Sibelius; "La Mer" by Debussy; "Ma mere l'oye" by Ravel; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Caprice espagnole": Respighi's "Pines of Rome"; "Kije" Suite by Prokofiev.

A work by Henry Hadley will be played in memory of the first conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Other American composers to be represented will be Aaron Copland with his "Music for the Theatre,' and Walter Piston with his Concerto for Orchestra.

Mr. Downes' lectures will be given August 4, 6, 11 and 13, in the afternoon at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

APR 26 1938

Berkshire Festival Opens Campaign

Drive For Members to Last Through May 15

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky have become a Summer institution of significance, announces the opening of its annual campaign for memberships this week. The campaign will extend through May 15.

In addition to representing a saving in admission to the concerts, one of the privileges extended to members and to patrons will be admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

As in 1937, there will be six concerts, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 p. m. The other concerts will be at 8.30 p. m. Olin Downes, well known critic, will lecture Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Of added interest this Summer will be the inauguration of the new music shed, seating more than 5000 people, and shaped like a half-open fan. Located near the historic Hawthorne pines, it commands an impressive view of Lake Mankeenac and the range of mountains to the south.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

APR 27 1938

The Berkshire Festival

This Summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox holds promise of being the most important as well as the most enjoyable of the annual series. The program, as announced, offers generous portions of Beethoven and Brahms, with Tchaikowsky, Wagner, and other established masters well represented. In addition it has some, but not too much, of later composers, including some products of contemporary genius.

The excellence of the program itself is abundant attraction, especially such a program played by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky. This year, too, the new Music Shed will be ready for use, thus eliminating the discomforts and inconveniences of bad weather experienced in previous Festivals.

Those in charge of this Berkshire Festival, who have made it, in a few brief years, the important musical occasion that it is, are to be commended for their enterprise. There is every indication now that with the improved facilities for concerts, the event will continue to increase in significance and public interest.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

APR 26 1938

Random Notes

BY R V. W.

week-end . . . Miss Ruth Hindon was in black, the skirt and bodice being edged with white embroidery. With her was Miss Barbara Hallenbeck, who was in lilac blue chiffon with jeweled clips . . . Wide interest in Berkshire Music Festival next August under Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

APR 28 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY TO BE SPEAKER

Conductor to Address committee for Berkshire Festival Monday

Stockbridge, Mass. — Serge Kosusevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57th season at Symphony Hall, Boston, Saturday night. Before he sails for Europe next week he will inspect Tanglewood, where he and the orchestra will perform at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

At Tanglewood a music shed to seat more than 5,000 is being built, the result of contributions from music lovers in many parts of the country. The orchestra will inaugurate the shed Aug. 4 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia Society Chorus, Boston, and prominent soloists will appear.

Dr. Koussevitzky will motor from Boston Monday and in the afternoon will speak to the advisory committee, consisting of community chairmen from a wide area.

Joseph Franz, engineer in charge of the Tanglewood construction, is gradin gand rolling the grounds in anticipation of the visit. Roads are being built, grass planted, paths opened on the estate and additional drains have been built by the superintendent, Ward Gaston.

Accompanying Dr. Koussevitzky will be Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra board of trustees and a summer resident of Williamstown; Henry B. Sawyer, member of the orchestra board; Lucien Price, Boston Globe; Prof. Richard Fay, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, festival consultant on acoustics; Dr. Archibald Davison, Harvard, and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky will go to New York from Tanglewood.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

APR 27 1938

FESTIVAL GROUP PLANS MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Pittsfield, April 26—Twenty members of the Pittsfield committee for the Berkshire Symphonic festival met this afternoon with the chairman, Miss Elizabeth Gamwell at 80 Colt road to complete plans for the membership campaign which will extend until May 15.

Miss Gamwell explained the privileges extended to members and announced that the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Dr Koussevitzky would open the festival August 4 with Beethoven's Ninth symphony and that the Cecilia chorus of Boston would participate.

Although tentative selections for the six programs have been made, Dr Koussevitzky sent word today that he expects to have the official program ready this week. It will not vary much from the list of numbers already announced. The second series of concerts will open August 11 with the first scene from "Die Walkyrie" with prominent soloists participating. The entire last act of "Siegfried" also will be presented with soloists.

On Miss Gamwell's committee are Mrs J. Colville Vance, Mrs Clifford Francis, Mrs David K. Spofford, Mrs Wendell G. Ahern, Mrs Robert H. Colton, Mrs Michael L. Eisner, Mrs Stanley Clarke, Mrs Elmer A. Euston, Mrs Wolcott Fuller, Mrs Briggs Gettys, Miss Catherine Hiatt, Mrs Harry B. Jones, Miss Julia Ellen Kinney, Miss Catherine A. Manion, Mrs Karl Nelson, Miss Francis Murphy, Mrs Peter Pianarosa, Miss Mary Quirk, Miss Barbara Rhodes, Miss Julia Wink.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD

APR 27 1938

Berkshire To Open With '9th'

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with choral finale for the inauguration of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood August 4. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and four vocal soloists will appear with the orchestra on this occasion.

At the concert August 11 which opens the second series of the Festival, scenes from music dramas of Wagner will be presented in concert form with soloists. The program will include the last scene from "Die Walkuere", and the complete third act of "Siegfried".

Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, performed last year and at once closely associated with the beautiful natural setting at Tanglewood, will again be played. Other symphonies will include the First of Sibelius, the Second of Brahms, Tschaikowsky's Sixth (Pathetique).

Among shorter works will be the Brahms-Haydn Variations; "Tapiola" by Sibelius; "La Mer" by Debussy; "Ma mere l'oye" by Ravel; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Caprice espagnole"; Respighi's "Pines of Rome"; "Kije" Suite by Prokofiev.

A work by Henry Hadley will be played in memory of the first conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Other American composers to be represented will be Aaron Copland with his "Music for the Theater", and Walter Piston with his Concerto for Orchestra.

It will here be seen that Dr. Koussevitzky is recognizing contemporary music and the work of American composers.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 27 1938

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Opening Program to Feature Beethoven Ninth Symphony

Beethoven's Ninth symphony will be presented on the opening program of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the inauguration of the new music shed at Tanglewood on Aug. 4, it was announced yesterday. Serge Koussevitzky will direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Cecelia Society Chorus of Boston will appear in the final choral movement. The four soloists will be announced later.

Soloists will also take part in the concert on Aug. 11, which will open the second series of the festival. The program that evening will be devoted to Wagner, and will include the last scene from "Die Walkuere" and the complete third act of "Siegfried."

Among the American works listed will be a composition by the late Henry Hadley, who was the first conductor of the Berkshire Festival; "Music for the Theatre" by Aaron Copland and Concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

APR 28 1938

Dr. Koussevitzky To Visit Tanglewood Monday; Addresses Advisory Board In Afternoon

Conductor Closes Boston Season Saturday, Sails For Europe Wednesday

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57th season at Symphony Hall in Boston Saturday night. Before he sails for Europe on the Normandie next week, he will inspect Tanglewood where he and the orchestra will perform at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

At Tanglewood there is rapidly taking form a huge music shed to seat more than 5000 persons. This building is the result of contributions from music lovers in many parts of the country. The orchestra will inaugurate the shed Aug. 4 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia Society chorus of Boston and prominent soloists will appear with the orchestra for the inauguration.

Meeting at Red Lion

Dr. Koussevitzky will motor from Boston Monday and in the afternoon will speak to the advisory committee consisting of community chairmen from a widespread area. The meeting will be held at Red Lion Inn.

Joseph Franz, engineer in charge of the Tanglewood construction, is engaged in grading and rolling the grounds about the shed in anticipation of the visit by the conductor and a group of friends Monday. New roads are being built, grass seed planted, paths opened on the estate and additional drains have been built by the superintendent, Ward Gaston.

Accompanying Dr. Koussevitzky Monday will be Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra board of trustees and a summer resident of Williamstown; Henry B. Sawyer, member of the orchestra board; Lucien Price of the Boston Globe Professor Richard Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Festival consultant on acoustics; Dr. Archibald Davison of Harvard University and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

Dr. Koussevitzky will go directly to New York from Tanglewood and will embark on the Normandie Wednesday.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

APR 29 1938

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY PLANS TO INSPECT TANGLEWOOD ESTATE

Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57th season at Symphony Hall in Boston, Mass., Saturday. Before he sails from New York on the Normandie next week he will inspect "Tanglewood," in the Berkshire Hills, where he and the orchestra will perform six concerts in August.

At "Tanglewood," permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., there is rapidly taking form a huge music shed with a seating capacity of more than 5,000 persons. Funds for this development have come from music lovers in all parts of America, ranging from modest bits to substantial donations.

The orchestra will inaugurate the shed August 4 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Also appearing with the orchestra that evening will be the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and prominent soloists. The other concerts will be August 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

Monday at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Dr. Koussevitzky will speak to more than 50 members of the advisory board and committee workers, who have been largely responsible for the success of the Festival to date.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

APR 29 1938

Tanglewood Shed Will Be Inspected

PITTSFIELD, April 28 — Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57th season at Symphony Hall in Boston Saturday. Before he sails from New York on the Normandie next week he will inspect "Tanglewood," in the Berkshire Hills, where he and the orchestra will perform six concerts in August.

Monday at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Dr. Koussevitzky will speak to more than 50 members of the advisory board and committee workers, who have been largely responsible for the success of the Festival to date.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Festival, sailed for Europe this week and in her absence Mrs. Alice Gould Edman of Pittsfield, executive vice-president, will preside.

OSSINING, N. Y.
CITIZEN - REGISTER

APR 30 1938

Mack Harrell Will Sing at Festival

Will Take Solo Parts at County Center

Engagement of Mack Harrell, New York baritone, completes arrangements for solo parts in the final night program of the fourteenth annual Westchester Music Festival to be held at the County Center, White Plains, in May, Mrs. Valentine E. Macy, Festival president, announced today.

The engagement will be Mr. Harrell's second Festival appearance of the season, as he will also take part in the Montreal Spring Festival in May. He recently appeared with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, and was reengaged this Spring as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky.

In the Festival program he will sing the baritone part in the Dett oratorio, "The Ordering of Moses" on May 21. Other soloists will be: Miss Ellen Repp of New Rochelle, contralto; Miss Dorothy Baker, a lyric soprano now residing in New York City; and Donald Rogers of Scarsdale.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy, conductor, will present a symphony concert Friday night, May 20. The Festival program opens May 13 with a junior concert.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

APR 29 1938

Renowned Boston Symphony Closes Its 57th Season

SHOULD any person well-informed on musical affairs be asked to name the country's leading orchestras, he would unhesitatingly place the Boston Symphony right in the front rank, since it is quite generally conceded that with the New York and Philadelphia organizations, it forms the invincible triumvirate on this side of the Atlantic.

With this week's programs, that end tomorrow night, the Boston Symphony brings to a close its 57th season in the field of classic instrumental music. Ever since its founding by the late Major Henry L. Higginson back in 1881, the orchestra has held unswervingly to the very highest standards. With its firm establishment Major Higginson realized the first dream and aspiration of his life—an organization equal to the best European orchestras—a phenonemon unknown in America prior to that year.

The idea had come to him as a student in Vienna. It was an ambitious dream for an impecunious young man, but after many years, having made his fortune as a banker, he was able to give the Boston Symphony orchestra to the world. He engaged the finest musicians in Europe, and brought to this country a succession of the greatest conductors of their time. He set a new precedent by exacting of the musicians entire devotion of their talents to the orchestra. The conductor he gave entire artistic freedom. The wisdom of these policies soon showed as each conductor expended his genius to the cumulative improvement of an ensemble which soon had the world's attention.

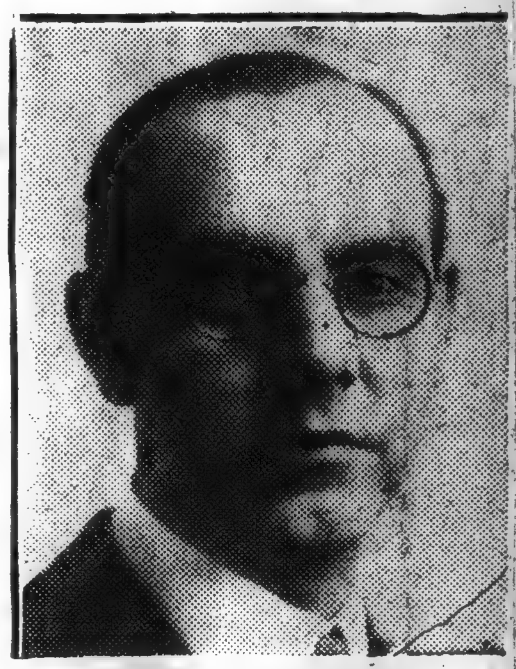
George Henschel first established the orchestra in his three seasons of 1881-1884. Then came Wilhelm Gericke, who through 12 years drilled it into what came to be its tradition of perfection. Arthur Nikisch, the most illustrious conductor of the day, had a shorter term, as did also Emil Paur and Max Fiedler. In 1900, Symphony hall, the orchestra's present home, was built. Dr. Karl Muck, from 1906, carried the orchestra to an unprecedented degree of virtuosity and beauty. In his 84th year the orchestra's founder left it in the control of a board of trustees. After two French conductors, Henri Rabaud and Pierre Monteux, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky began his term in 1924. The great Russian leader has brought new beauties to the Boston Symphony concerts, a fresh importance and distinction reflected in the greatly enlarged public, the festivals and special choral concerts, the broadened repertory—new and old—of the regular concerts, and the qualities of performance which are as indefinable as the genius which directs them.

The full chronology of the conductors follows:

George Henschel	1881-1884
Wilhelm Gericke	1884-1889
Arthur Nikisch	1889-1893
Emil Paur	1893-1898
Wilhelm Gericke	1898-1906
Karl Muck	1906-1908
Max Fiedler	1908-1912
Karl Muck	1912-1918
Henri Rabaud	1918-1919
Pierre Monteux	1919-1924
Serge Koussevitzky	1924-

Though it may not be generally known, there was established a few years ago by the White Fund trustees a plan whereby the members of the High School orchestra have been enabled to attend Boston Symphony concerts. Four season tickets for the 24 Saturday evening concerts are purchased and Music Supervisor Robert E. Sault rotates them among the members of the orchestra who are in the senior class. By confining the privilege to the seniors in the orchestra, Mr. Sault believes that this plan will enable the students who leave the scchool each June, a more intensive opportunity of indulging in music study and appreciation than they would obtain if the courtesies were spread over the entire personnel of the orchestra. Thus each year, should the policy be continued, the retiring members will participate in this highly beneficial and praiseworthy plan at a time when it is most needed and properly appreciated. The action of the White Fund trustees was most favorably commented upon by G. E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, at a meeting of the board of directors, since it was the first time such a far-sighted movement had been observed during the long history of the Boston Symphony.

—A. L. M.



JOSEPH WILKINSON

One Week Engagement of San Carlo Opera In Boston.

The San Carlo Opera company of Fortune Gallo will return to Boston for a week's engagement at the Boston Opera House beginning Monday evening, May 16. The engagement will benefit the Forest Hills General hospital.

The repertory will be as follows: Monday evening, May 16, "La Traviata," by Verdi; Tuesday evening, Leoncavallo's "I Pagliacci," and "Cavalleria Rusticana," by Mascagni; Wednesday evening, "Madame Butterfly," by Puccini; Thursday afternoon, Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" (sung in English), followed by a one-act ballet, "Viennese Life," with music by Johann Strauss; Thursday evening, Verdi's "Rigoletto"; Friday evening, "Aida," by Verdi; Saturday afternoon, Bizet's "Carmen"; Saturday evening, "Il Trovatore," by Verdi.

Norma Jean Erdmann, the Boston soprano, will sing the title part of "Madame Butterfly" and the role of Micaela in "Carmen." Carlo Peroni will again be musical director.

Eleborate Program Announced for Berkshire Festival.

Beethoven's ninth symphony was announced yesterday as the principal work to be played by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky's direction on the opening evening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on the Tanglewood estate, Lenox, Mass., Thursday, Aug. 4. The other concerts will be given Saturday night, Aug. 6; Sunday afternoon, Aug. 7; Thursday night, Aug. 11; Saturday night, Aug. 13, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14.

The Cecilia society of Boston and four soloists will sing with the orchestra in the Beethoven symphony. On Aug. 11 a Wagner program, including the final scene of "Die Walkure" and Act III of "Siegfried" in full, will be given with solo singers. Among the symphonies to be heard in the festival are Beethoven's "Pastoral," Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic," the first symphony of Sibelius, and the second of Brahms. Other works scheduled are Brahms' Haydn Variations, Sibelius' "Tapiola," Debussy's "La Mer," Ravel's "Ma Mere l'Oye," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Caprice," Respighi's "Pines of Rome" and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kiji" suite.

A work by Henry Hadley will be played in memory of its composer, who conducted the first two festivals in this series in 1934 and 1935. Other American works to be heard are Aaron Copeland's "Music for the Theatre" and Walter Piston's concerto for orchestra.

Further information is obtainable by writing to the Berkshire Symponic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.
NEWS
APR 30 1938

Engage Young Baritone Soloist For 14th Annual Music Festival

Mack Harrell to Sing on Final Night of Program at County Center

Engagement of Mack Harrell, young New York baritone, completes arrangements for solo parts in the final night program of the 14th annual Westchester Music Festival to be held in the County Center here next month, according to Mrs. Valentine E. Macy of Ossining, festival president.

Other soloists to sing in the program on Saturday night, May 21, have been selected in auditions held during the past several weeks. They include Miss Ellen Repp of New Rochelle, a contralto; Miss Dorothy Baker, a lyric soprano now residing in New York City, and Donald Rogers of Scarsdale.

The engagement here will be Mr. Harrell's second festival appearance of this season, as he will also take part in the Montreal Spring Festival in May. He recently appeared with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, and was re-engaged this Spring as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under [redacted].

Last Fall Mr. Harrell toured many European countries, and will return abroad next January, following appearances in this country during the Fall. While in Europe next year he also will appear with the Concert Gebeouw Orchestra in Amsterdam under William Mongelberg.

Born in Celeste, Texas, in 1909, at an early age young Harrell took up the violin. After serving as concertmaster of the Dallas Symphony and the Oklahoma City orchestras, he went to Philadelphia to continue violin study with Emanuel Zetlin. There he was induced to sing by Robert Weer, well-known voice teacher there. Later dropping the violin for the serious pursuit of a vocal career, he won a fellowship at the Juillard Graduate School. Numerous successful appearances in this portion of the country followed, prior to his outstanding tour of Europe last Fall.

In the festival program Mr. Harrell will sing the baritone part in the Dett oratorio, "The Ordering of Moses." Also on that night's varied program will be the Bach "B Minor Mass" and "The Origin of Fire," by Sibelius. Five hundred singers from 8 choral units of Westchester and Greenwich, Conn., will be heard in the choral concert with the soloists, accompanied by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Hugh Ross, festival director, will direct the final night program.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy, conductor, will present a symphony concert on Friday night, May 20. The festival program opens on Friday, May 13, with a junior concert in which 300 singers from junior and senior high schools will be heard, with a band of 100 musicians from senior and junior schools.

Music News at H

B. Trans. April 30/38

Tribute to a Conductor; Westminster Festival; Plans and Prospects

A facsimile of a rare musical document, a page from a volume of vocal music published in 1588 by William Byrd, was presented to Serge Koussevitzky by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society after the last rehearsal for the recent performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis." The gift was made as a tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky's enthusiasm in attracting public interest to music requiring the human voice as auxiliary performer.

The page contains Byrd's eulogy of the voice and the delights and practical advantages of using it to sing. Byrd's phrases are quaint, but his ideas are still interesting, the officers of the choral society said in giving the facsimile to Dr. Koussevitzky. "There is not any Music of Instruments whatsoever," says Byrd, "comparable to that which is made of the voices of Men, where the voices are good, and the same well sorted and ordered."

HANOVER, PA.
SUN
APR 30 1938

NOTED SINGER WILL BE GUEST SOLOIST

Fraser Gange, Baritone, Has Been Secured For Hanover Civic Orchestra Concert Thursday, May 12

The Hanover Civic Orchestra Association has announced that it has secured the noted baritone, Fraser Gange, as guest soloist with the Civic Orchestra for the annual spring concert, Thursday evening, May 12, in the Eichelberger High school auditorium.

Mr. Gange who records exclusively for Columbia has been compared as an artist with David Bispham. He came to this country in 1923, and has achieved the unusual distinction of appearing more than six times with the New York Symphony orchestra, five times with the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, and a dozen or more times with the New York Philharmonic under its various conductors. He has also made a number of appearances with the Boston Symphony orchestra both in [redacted] and Boston, with the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto in conjunction with the Cincinnati orchestra. the New York Oratorio Society, and with the Cincinnati and other symphony orchestras.

Among the records of his voice available are Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," Seaks' "On the Road to Mandalay," "Song to the Evening Star" from Wagner's "Tannhauser" and Gypsy Love Song by Victor Herbert.

He maintains his own studio in New York city and teaches four days a week at Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore. During the summer he is a member of the summer school faculty of the Juilliard Institute of New York city.

J. Herbert Springer, well-known pianist, has consented to act as accompanist for Mr. Gange.

The orchestra board has also announced that a party for the members of the orchestra and board will be held next Wednesday evening, May 4, at rehearsal headquarters in the Gitt Building, Center square.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 29 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY WILL INSPECT MUSIC SHED IN THE BERKSHIRES

Stockbridge, April 29 — Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra's 57th season [redacted] hall in Boston Saturday. Before he sails from New York on the Normandie Wednesday he will inspect the new music shed at "Tanglewood," in the Berkshire hills, where he and the orchestra will perform six concerts in August.

The orchestra will inaugurate the shed August 4 with Beethoven's Ninth symphony. Also appearing with the orchestra that evening will be the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston and prominent soloists. The other concerts will be August 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Monday at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, Dr Koussevitzky will speak to more than 50 members of the advisory board and committee workers, who have been largely responsible for the success of the festival to date.

Pops Conductor Pop Concerts Open Wednesday

Apr. 30

Arthur Fiedler, who will take up the baton at Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening for the 53d season of pop concerts.

Next Wednesday night at 8:30, Arthur Fiedler will inaugurate the 53rd season of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall. Conductor Fiedler will have at his bidding about 90 symphony players. Tables will, as usual, cover the floor of the hall which will be decorated in its more festive summer garb. The Pops will be given each night, Sundays included in the month of May, for two months to come. Arthur Fiedler, the brilliant leader of the Pops for the last eight seasons, may well be called the most popular of the long line of Pops conductors, for the attendance has risen to capacity proportions in the two seasons past, and promises to make a new record in the season to come.

The program for the opening night is as follows:

Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" ....Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Nicolai
Spring (String Orchestra)...........Grieg
Bacchnale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Joyeuse Marche.................Chabrier
Dances of Galanta...............Kodaly
"Delirien," Waltzes.........Josef Strauss
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..Tchaikovsky
Fantasy: "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"............Churchill-Bodge
"Swing Stuff"...................McBride
Solo clarinet: Manuel Valerio
(First performance)
First Hungarian Dance............Brahms

Fiedler Swings Pops Opener on Wednesday

'Alligators' to Have Field Day as 'Killer-Diller' Goes to Town

Trans Apr 30

Alligators will shuffle and truck among the tables at Symphony Hall when the Pops open Wednesday night, for Arthur Fiedler and his cats will go to town with some swing stuff torn off by Robert McBride. Manuel Valerio, a Boston boy, will be the killer-diller of the occasion.

Well, anyway, there will be a swing tune on the program. Ninety members of the Boston Symphony comprising the Pops orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler will play it—or go to town, as the swing addicts (alligators) put it.

Originally the composer, who teaches at Bennington College, called the pieces "Design for a Killer-Diller" (that's a swing term for clarinetist). The clarinet itself is known among those same "wacky" folk as the "licorice stick" or agony-pipe."

Mr. Fiedler doesn't expect any swooning in the aisles by indignant dowagers who hear his hot licks. He believes they are conditioned to swing by the jazz they have heard at Pops. And what, says Mr. Fiedler, is swing anyway but free jazz?

Snow White and Dwarfs

Another opening night novelty will be "Fantasy on Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," arranged by Peter Bodge. Formerly Pops played selections from popular musical comedies of the season, such as "Wintergreen for President," from "Of Thee I Sing, but nowadays, as Mr. Fiedler points out, the movies provide the favorite tunes. Opening night and each Wednesday through the season, a part of the Pops program will be broadcast over a nationwide hookup.

Swing stuff will be only a

Continued on Page 2—Column 8

Fiedler to Swing His Pops Opener

Continued from Page One

minor matter on the opening night program, which is varied enough to appeal to any taste. There will be a Georgian march by Ipolitov-Ivanov, and a Strauss waltz, both new to Boston. The latter is entitled "Delirien" and is by Josef, a brother of the great Johann. There will also be Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," without which no Pops season is orthodox. Local alligators ar ehoping that Fiedler and his cats may eventually be persuaded to swing it.

THE subject of music for "relaxation"—as well as the season—brings us to the Pops.

The avidity of Bostonions for these concerts amounts to a veritable fetish. At the same time the venerable lineage of the Pops establishes them as an institution—the fifty-third birthday of which will be celebrated on Wednesday evening of this week when Arthur Fiedler, conductor for eight seasons past ,appears in Symphony Hall with his Pops Orchestra to begin a new one.

As is usual at these occasions, the floor will be usurped by tables at which one may take beer with one's Strauss—or lemondade—or ice cream. (Champagne is also on the menu, but among the wine consumers, we have noticed that it is the claret punch which is most popular.)

A warning is here made to the uninitiate who might tend to become carried away by the apparent frivolity of all this. If you order while the music is going on —if you even indulge in a polite whisper, you are deliberately inviting some pretty unsympathetic shushing. Of course, if you are not easily dismayed there's nothing to stop you from going right ahead and enjoying yourself. But remember, we in Boston take our relaxation seriously—
R. M.

Opening 'Pops' Benefits Hospital

B. Adv. May 1/38

ALONG comes the season of benefit pop concerts . . . always gay events. Wednesday . . . opening night of the 1938 "Pops" in Symphony Hall . . . will aid two worthwhile philanthropies. Ticket sale for seats in the first half of the orchestra floor benefits the Scholarship fund of May School . . . while the remainder of the lower auditorium has been taken over by the Boston committee of the Baldwinville Hospital Cottages for Children . . . one of society's pet charities.

Working for the success of the May School venture are Mrs. Charles H. Haskins . . . head of the school . . . Mrs. Walter Irving Badger, Mrs. Talbot Chase, Mrs. James Bryant Conant, Mrs. Parker Converse, Mrs. Henry Parsons King, Jr., and Mrs. Bertram K. Little . . . all alumnae of the school. Ticket sale is being directed by Elizabeth Lowell Ware . . . post-debutante daughter of Mrs. Charles Eliot Ware of Brimmer street.

Mrs. Thomas Allen, Jr., is looking after the ticket sale for the Baldwinville benefit . . . and Mrs. W. Russell MacAusland chairmans the sponsoring committee.

Her assistants include Mrs. Max Ordway Whiting, Mrs. Francis G. Barnum, Mrs. William Van V. Warren, Miss Katharine French, Miss Edith Sears, Mrs. C. Nichols Greene, Mrs. William E. Gardner, Mrs. Elliott B. Robbins, Mrs. Samuel C. Payson, Mrs. Godfrey Brinley, Mrs. Bertram G. Waters, Miss Sarah Goddard Bradlee and Mrs. Edward Iselin.

Another interesting benefit affair of the week is slated for Friday evening at the Hotel Continental . . . setting for the annual Cambridge Assembly, which benefits Cambridge Hospital.

Scores of dinner and cocktail parties precede the soiree . . . always one of the most important social events in the University City.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 29 1938

Words About Music

EIGHTY-SIX works by 40 composers were played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its 57th season. Composers now living wrote 32 of the works, 33 were by 19th century men, 9 from the 18th century.

Bach, his son Carl Philip Emanuel, and Boccherini represent the pre-classical composers. Haydn and Mozart, with three works each, fill in the classical period proper. Beethoven's first, third, fourth and seventh symphonies, the "Emperor" concerto and the third "Leonora" overture are all on the record. The "Missa Solemnis" was presented as this season's Pension Fund concert.

Ravel heads the 20th century list with nine works, because of the fact that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky separated one pair of Friday and Saturday concerts into two memoral programs after the composer's death, to give a rounded view of his work. To Prokofieff, with eight works, falls second place.

Indiana University's survey of musical trends has pointed out the Boston Symphony's preeminence in presenting works from living writers. In the index of Nicholas Slonimsky's book "Music Since 1900" Serge Koussevitzky's name has as many references as the total for all other conductors. Among this season's Americans are Walter Piston with a First Symphony, Edward Burlingame Hill with a Third, Leo Sowerby with an Organ Concerto. Malipiero and Pizzetti of Italy, Prokofieff and Starokadomsky of Russia, and the Rumanians Enesco and Alessandresco are all on the list.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
APR 30 1938

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky, who fathered the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, has definitely scheduled scores by American composers for this summer's festival. In memory of Henry Hadley one of his works will be played. Others include Aaron Copland ("Music for the Theater") and Walter Piston with his piano concerto.

A performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Cecilia Society of Boston singing the choral portions is scheduled for Aug. 4. Opera will also be given. The last scene from "Die Walkuere" and the complete third act of "Siegfried" are listed. Four other symphonies will be performed—Beethoven's "Pastoral," given last summer, the Sibelius first, the Brahms second and Tschaikoswky's "Pathetique."

Ninth Symphony Chosen

April 30/38

The Ninth Symphony by Beethoven has been selected for the program opening of the new music shed at Tanglewood. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin on Aug. 4, and there will be other concerts Aug. [illegible] and 14. The Sunday concerts will be at 3:30 p. m., the others at 8:30 p. m.

The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston will take part with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Beethoven Ninth.

For other programs, Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Sibelius first, the Brahms second, the Tchaikovsky sixth, the Brahms-Haydn variations, "Tapiola," by Sibelius, "La Mer," by Debussy, "Ma Mere L'Cye," by Ravel, "Caprice Espagnol," by Rimsky-Korsakov, "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi, and the "Kiji," suite, by Prokofiev.

Compositions by American composers also will be performed.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.
NEWS
APR 30 1938

3

Engage Young Baritone Soloist For 14th Annual Music Festival

Mack Harrell to Sing on Final Night of Program at County Center

Engagement of Mack Harrell, young New York baritone, completes arrangements for solo parts in the final night program of the 14th annual Westchester Music Festival to be held in the County Center here next month, according to Mrs. Valentine E. Macy of Ossining, festival president.

Other soloists to sing in the program on Saturday night, May 21, have been selected in auditions held during the past several weeks. They include Miss Ellen Repp of New Rochelle, a contralto; Miss Dorothy Baker, a lyric soprano now residing in New York City, and Donald Rogers of Scarsdale.

The engagement here will be Mr. Harrell's second festival appearance of this season, as he will also take part in the Montreal Spring Festival in May. He recently appeared with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, and was re-engaged this Spring as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under [redacted].

Last Fall Mr. Harrell toured many European countries, and will return abroad next January, following appearances in this country during the Fall. While in Europe next year he also will appear with the Concert Gebeouw Orchestra in Amsterdam under William Mongelberg.

Born in Celeste, Texas, in 1909, at an early age young Harrell took up the violin. After serving as concertmaster of the Dallas Symphony and the Oklahoma City orchestras, he went to Philadelphia to continue violin study with Emanuel Zetlin. There he was induced to sing by Robert Weer, well-known voice teacher there. Later dropping the violin for the serious pursuit of a vocal career, he won a fellowship at the Juillard Graduate School. Numerous successful appearances in this portion of the country followed, prior to his outstanding tour of Europe last Fall.

In the festival program Mr. Harrell will sing the baritone part in the Dett oratorio, "The Ordering of Moses." Also on that night's varied program will be the Bach "B Minor Mass" and "The Origin of Fire," by Sibelius. Five hundred singers from 8 choral units of Westchester and Greenwich, Conn., will be heard in the choral concert with the soloists, accompanied by the Philadelphia Orchestra. Hugh Ross, festival director, will direct the final night program.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy, conductor, will present a symphony concert on Friday night, May 20. The festival program opens on Friday, May 13, with a junior concert in which 300 singers from junior and senior high schools will be heard, with a band of 100 musicians from senior and junior schools.

HANOVER, PA.
SUN
APR 30 1938

NOTED SINGER WILL BE GUEST SOLOIST

Fraser Gange, Baritone, Has Been Secured For Hanover Civic Orchestra Concert Thursday, May 12

The Hanover Civic Orchestra Association has announced that it has secured the noted baritone, Fraser Gange, as guest soloist with the Civic Orchestra for the annual spring concert, Thursday evening, May 12, in the Eichelberger High school auditorium.

Mr. Gange who records exclusively for Columbia has been compared as an artist with David Bispham. He came to this country in 1923, and has achieved the unusual distinction of appearing more than six times with the New York Symphony orchestra, five times with the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, and a dozen or more times with the New York Philharmonic under its various conductors. He has also made a number of appearances with the Boston Symphony orchestra both in [redacted] and Boston, with the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto in conjunction with the Cincinnati orchestra, the New York Oratorio Society, and with the Cincinnati and other symphony orchestras.

Among the records of his voice available are Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," Seaks' "On the Road to Mandalay," "Song to the Evening Star" from Wagner's "Tannhauser" and Gypsy Love Song by Victor Herbert.

He maintains his own studio in New York city and teaches four days a week at Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore. During the summer he is a member of the summer school faculty of the Juilliard Institute of New York city.

J. Herbert Springer, well-known pianist, has consented to act as accompanist for Mr. Gange.

The orchestra board has also announced that a party for the members of the orchestra and board will be held next Wednesday evening, May 4, at rehearsal headquarters in the Gitt Building, Center square.

Music News at H

B. Trans. April 30/38

Tribute to a Conductor; Westminster Festival; Plans and Prospects

A facsimile of a rare musical document, a page from a volume of vocal music published in 1588 by William Byrd, was presented to Serge Koussevitzky by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society after the last rehearsal for the recent performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis." The gift was made as a tribute to Dr. Koussevitzky's enthusiasm in attracting public interest to music requiring the human voice as auxiliary performer.

The page contains Byrd's eulogy of the voice and the delights and practical advantages of using it to sing. Byrd's phrases are quaint, but his ideas are still interesting, the officers of the choral society said in giving the facsimile to Dr. Koussevitzky. "There is not any Music of Instruments whatsoever," says Byrd, "comparable to that which is made of the voices of Men, where the voices are good, and the same well sorted and ordered."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
APR 29 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY WILL INSPECT MUSIC SHED IN THE BERKSHIRES

Stockbridge, April 29 — Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra's 57th season [redacted] hall in Boston Saturday. Before he sails from New York on the Normandie Wednesday he will inspect the new music shed at "Tanglewood," in the Berkshire hills, where he and the orchestra will perform six concerts in August.

The orchestra will inaugurate the shed August 4 with Beethoven's Ninth symphony. Also appearing with the orchestra that evening will be the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston and prominent soloists. The other concerts will be August 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

Monday at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, Dr Koussevitzky will speak to more than 50 members of the advisory board and committee workers, who have been largely responsible for the success of the festival to date.

Pops Conductor

Arthur Fiedler, who will take up the baton at Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening for the 53d season of pop concerts.

Pop Concerts Open Wednesday

Next Wednesday night at 8:30, Arthur Fiedler will inaugurate the 53rd season of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall. Conductor Fiedler will have at his bidding about 90 symphony players. Tables will, as usual, cover the floor of the hall which will be decorated in its more festive summer garb. The Pops will be given each night, Sundays included in the month of May, for two months to come. Arthur Fiedler, the brilliant leader of the Pops for the last eight seasons, may well be called the most popular of the long line of Pops conductors, for the attendance has risen to capacity proportions in the two seasons past, and promises to make a new record in the season to come.

The program for the opening night is as follows:

Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" . . . . Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" Nicolai
Spring (String Orchestra) . . . . Grieg
Bacchnale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Joyeuse Marche . . . . Chabrier
Dances of Galanta . . . . Kodaly
"Delirien," Waltzes . . . . Josef Strauss
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" . Tchaikovsky
Fantasy: "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" . . . . Churchill-Bodge
"Swing Stuff" . . . . McBride
Solo clarinet: Manuel Valerio
(First performance)
First Hungarian Dance . . . . Brahms

Fiedler Swings Pops Opener on Wednesday

'Alligators' to Have Field Day as 'Killer-Diller' Goes to Town

Trans Apr 30

Alligators will shuffle and truck among the tables at Symphony Hall when the Pops open Wednesday night, for Arthur Fiedler and his cats will go to town with some swing stuff torn off by Robert McBride. Manuel Valerio, a Boston boy, will be the killer-diller of the occasion.

Well, anyway, there will be a swing tune on the program. Ninety members of the Boston Symphony comprising the Pops orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler will play it—or go to town, as the swing addicts (alligators) put it.

Originally the composer, who teaches at Bennington College, called the pieces "Design for a Killer-Diller" (that's a swing term for clarinetist). The clarinet itself is known among those same "wacky" folk as the "licorice stick" or agony-pipe."

Mr. Fiedler doesn't expect any swooning in the aisles by indignant dowagers who hear his hot licks. He believes they are conditioned to swing by the jazz they have heard at Pops. And what, says Mr. Fiedler, is swing anyway but free jazz?

Snow White and Dwarfs

Another opening night novelty will be "Fantasy on Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," arranged by Peter Bodge. Formerly Pops played selections from popular musical comedies of the season, such as "Wintergreen for President," from "Of Thee I Sing, but nowadays, as Mr. Fiedler points out, the movies provide the favorite tunes. Opening night and each Wednesday through the season, a part of the Pops program will be broadcast over a nationwide hookup.

Swing stuff will be only a

Continued on Page 2—Column 8

Fiedler to Swing His Pops Opener

Continued from Page One

minor matter on the opening night program, which is varied enough to appeal to any taste. There will be a Georgian march by Ipolitov-Ivanov, and a Strauss waltz, both new to Boston. The latter is entitled "Delirien" and is by Josef, a brother of the great Johann. There will also be Tchaikovsky's "1812 Overture," without which no Pops season is orthodox. Local alligators ar ehoping that Fiedler and his cats may eventually be persuaded to swing it.

THE subject of music for "relaxation"—as well as the season—brings us to the Pops.

The avidity of Bostonians for these concerts amounts to a veritable fetish. At the same time the venerable lineage of the Pops establishes them as an institution—the fifty-third birthday of which will be celebrated on Wednesday evening of this week when Arthur Fiedler, conductor for eight seasons past, appears in Symphony Hall with his Pops Orchestra to begin a new one.

As is usual at these occasions, the floor will be usurped by tables at which one may take beer with one's Strauss—or lemondade—or ice cream. (Champagne is also on the menu, but among the wine consumers, we have noticed that it is the claret punch which is most popular.)

A warning is here made to the uninitiate who might tend to become carried away by the apparent frivolity of all this. If you order while the music is going on—if you even indulge in a polite whisper, you are deliberately inviting some pretty unsympathetic shushing. Of course, if you are not easily dismayed there's nothing to stop you from going right ahead and enjoying yourself. But remember, we in Boston take our relaxation seriously—R. M.

Opening 'Pops' Benefits Hospital

ALONG comes the season of benefit pop concerts . . . always gay events. Wednesday . . . opening night of the 1938 "Pops" in Symphony Hall . . . will aid two worthwhile philanthropies. Ticket sale for seats in the first half of the orchestra floor benefits the Scholarship fund of May School . . . while the remainder of the lower auditorium has been taken over by the Boston committee of the Baldwinville Hospital Cottages for Children . . . one of society's pet charities.

Working for the success of the May School venture are Mrs. Charles H. Haskins . . . head of the school . . . Mrs. Walter Irving Badger, Mrs. Talbot Chase, Mrs. James Bryant Conant, Mrs. Parker Converse, Mrs. Henry Parsons King, Jr., and Mrs. Bertram K. Little . . . all alumnae of the school. Ticket sale is being directed by Elizabeth Lowell Ware . . . post-debutante daughter of Mrs. Charles Eliot Ware of Brimmer street.

Mrs. Thomas Allen, Jr., is looking after the ticket sale for the Baldwinville benefit . . . and Mrs. W. Russell MacAusland chairmans the sponsoring committee.

Her assistants include Mrs. Max Ordway Whiting, Mrs. Francis G. Barnum, Mrs. William Van V. Warren, Miss Katharine French, Miss Edith Sears, Mrs. C. Nichols Greene, Mrs. William E. Gardner, Mrs. Elliott B. Robbins, Mrs. Samuel C. Payson, Mrs. Godfrey Brinley, Mrs. Bertram G. Waters, Miss Sarah Goddard Bradlee and Mrs. Edward Iselin.

Another interesting benefit affair of the week is slated for Friday evening at the Hotel Continental . . . setting for the annual Cambridge Assembly, which benefits Cambridge Hospital.

Scores of dinner and cocktail parties precede the soiree . . . always one of the most important social events in the University City.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 29 1938

Words About Music

EIGHTY-SIX works by 40 composers were played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its 57th season. Composers now living wrote 32 of the works, 33 were by 19th century men, 9 from the 18th century.

Bach, his son Carl Philip Emanuel, and Boccherini represent the pre-classical composers. Haydn and Mozart, with three works each, fill in the classical period proper. Beethoven's first, third, fourth and seventh symphonies, the "Emperor" concerto and the third "Leonora" overture are all on the record. The "Missa Solemnis" was presented as this season's Pension Fund concert.

Ravel heads the 20th century list with nine works, because of the fact that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky separated one pair of Friday and Saturday concerts into two memoral programs after the composer's death, to give a rounded view of his work. To Prokofieff, with eight works, falls second place.

Indiana University's survey of musical trends has pointed out the Boston Symphony's preeminence in presenting works from living writers. In the index of Nicholas Slonimsky's book "Music Since 1900" Serge Koussevitzky's name has as many references as the total for all other conductors. Among this season's Americans are Walter Piston with a First Symphony, Edward Burlingame Hill with a Third, Leo Sowerby with an Organ Concerto. Malipiero and Pizzetti of Italy, Prokofieff and Starokadomsky of Russia, and the Rumanians Enesco and Alessandresco are all on the list.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
APR 30 1938

Serge Koussevitzky, who fathered the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, has definitely scheduled scores by American composers for this summer's festival. In memory of Henry Hadley one of his works will be played. Others include Aaron Copland ("Music for the Theater") and Walter Piston with his piano concerto.

A performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the Cecilia Society of Boston singing the choral portions is scheduled for Aug. 4. Opera will also be given. The last scene from "Die Walkuere" and the complete third act of "Siegfried" are listed. Four other symphonies will be performed—Beethoven's "Pastoral," given last summer, the Sibelius first, the Brahms second and Tschaikoswky's "Pathetique."

Ninth Symphony Chosen

Post April 30/38

The Ninth Symphony by Beethoven has been selected for the program opening of the new music shed at Tanglewood. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin on Aug. 4, and there will be other concerts Au[illegible] and [illegible]. The Sunday concerts will be at 3:30 p. m., the others at 8:30 p. m.

The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston will take part with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Beethoven Ninth.

For other programs, Serge Koussevitzky has chosen the Sibelius first, the Brahms second, the Tchaikovsky sixth, the Brahms-Haydn variations, "Tapiola," by Sibelius, "La Mer," by Debussy, "Ma Mere L'Cye," by Ravel, "Caprice Espagnol," by Rimsky-Korsakov, "The Pines of Rome," by Respighi, and the "Kiji," suite, by Prokofiev.

Compositions by American composers also will be performed.

Pops Season

1938

BLANK PAGE

31

Swing Concert Tonight; Pops Open

Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct the 53rd season of the Pops, which will open Wednesday evening at Symphony Hall, with an orchestra composed of Boston Symphony players.

"Pops" Begin

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Globe May 1/38

Symphony Hall Pop Concerts Begin Wednesday Night

The 53d season of Pop concerts will begin at Symphony Hall on Wednesday night at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler will again be conductor and the orchestra will consist of about 90 Boston Symphony players. There will be concerts each night, including Sundays during May, for the next two months. Under Mr. Fiedler's guidance the Pops have attained unprecedented popularity. They promise to continue at this peak for, it is said, 31,000 tickets have already been sold for various concerts during the season about to begin.

Symphony Hall will again be decorated in the cool Summer fashion that has made it so attractive in the past several years. Refreshments will, of course, be served at the tables on the floor of the hall.

The opening night program will feature first performance of McBride's "Swing Stuff," with an intricate clarinet solo to be played by Manuel Valerio. The complete programs through next Sunday will be as follows:

Wednesday, Opening Night—Georgian march from the "Caucasian Sketches," Ippolitov-Ivanov; overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; Spring (string orchestra), Grieg; Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Joyeuse Marche, Chabrier; Dances of Galanta, Kodaly; "Delirien," waltzes, Josef Strauss; Ouverture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Churchill-Bodge; "Swing Stuff," McBride. Solo clarinet, Manuel Valerio (first performance); First Hungarian Dance, Brahms.

Thursday—Entrance of the Guests Into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser," Wagner; overture to "Sakuntala," Goldmark; Turkish March, Mazart; "Espana," rhapsody, Chabrier; Suite from the Ballet "Nutcracker," Tchaikovsky; Walther's prize song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; Divertissement, Ibert; "Roses from the South," waltzes, Strauss; Malaguena, Lecuona; "Strike Up the Band," Gershwin.

Friday—Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet; Overture to "The Barber of Seville," Rossini; March of the Little Lead Soldiers, Pierne; "Finlandia," Symphonic poem, Sibelius; Finale, "Scheherazade," Rinsky-Korsakov; Valse Triste, Sibelius; Ballet of the Hours, from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; "Voices of Spring," Waltzes, Strauss; Prelude in C Sharp Minor, Rachmaninoff; Seventh Slavonic Dance, Dvorak.

Saturday—Military Polonaise, Chopin-Glazounov; Largo, from the "New World," Symphony, Dvorak; Entrance of the Little Fauns, Pierne; Waltz of the Flowers, from the "Nutcracker" Suite, Tchaikovsky; "The Prince and the Princess," from "Scheherazada," Rimsky-Korsakov; Ave Maria (violin solo, Julius Theodorowicz), Bach-Gounod; Bolero, Ravel; College Medley by the Regis College Glee Club, Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Churchill-Bodge; March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar.

Sunday, May 8—Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; "Pinnocchio," a merry overture, Toch; "The Girl With the Flaxen Hair," Debussy; Third Movement (Allegro molto Vivace), "Pathetic" Symphony, Tchaikovsky; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18, Rachmaninoff, soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma; "Tales From the Vienna Woods," Waltzes, Moto Perpetuo, March from "The Gypsy Baron," Strauss.

Pop Concerts Open 53rd Season at Symphony Hall

Next Wednesday night at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler will inaugurate the 53d season of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall. Mr. Fiedler will have at his bidding about 90 Symphony players. Tables will, as usual, cover the floor of the hall which will be decorated in its more festive summer garb. The Pops will be given each night, Sundays included in the month of May, for two months to come. Arthur Fiedler, the brilliant leader of the Pops for the last eight seasons, may well be called the most popular of the long line of Pops conductors, for the attendance has risen to capacity proportions in the two seasons past, and promises to make a new record in the season to come.

The program for the first week will be as follows:

Opening Night
WEDNESDAY, MAY 4, at 8:30

Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" ....Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ....Nicolai
Spring (string orchestra)..........Grieg
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Joyeuse Marche..............Chabrier
Dances of Galanta..............Kodaly
"Delirien," Waltzes.........Josef Strauss
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..Tchaikovsky
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ....Churchill-Bodge
"Swing Stuff"..............McBride
Solo clarinet: Manuel Valerio
(First Performance)
First Hungarian Dance............Brahms

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 5

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser............Wagner
Overture to "Sakuntala"........Goldmark
Turkish March..............Mozart
"Espana," Rhapsody..........Chabrier
Suite from the Ballet "Nutcracker" Tchaikovsky
Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"..........Wagner
Divertissement ....Ibert
"Roses from the South," Waltzes..Strauss
Malaguena ....Lecuona
"Strike Up the Band"..........Gershwin

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 6

Prelude to "Carmen"..............Bizet
Overture to "The Barber of Seville".Rossini
March of the Little Lead Soldiers..Pierne
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem....Sibelius
Finale, "Scheherazade"..Rimsky-Korsakov
Valse Triste ....Sibelius
Ballet of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
"Voices of Spring," Waltzes.....Strauss
Prelude in C sharp minor..Rachmaninoff
Seventh Slavonic Dance..........Dvorak

SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 7

Military Polonaise .....Chopin-Glazounov
Largo, from the "New World" Symphony ....Dvorak
Entrance of the Little Fauns.....Pierne
Waltz of the Flowers, from the "Nutcracker" Suite ......Tchaikovsky
"The Prince and the Princess," from "Scheherazade" .....Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria ....Bach-Gounod
Violin solo: Julius Theodorowicz
Bolero ....Ravel
College Medley
by the Regis College Glee Club
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven, Dwarfs" ....Churchill-Bodge
March, "Pomp and Circumstance"..Elgar

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 8

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
"Pinocchio," A Merry Overture.....Toch
"The Girl with the Flaxen Hair"..Debussy
Third Movement (Allegro molto Vivace), "Pathetic" Symphony ......Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Oberon"..........Weber
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in D minor, Op. 18.........Rachmaninoff
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ....Strauss
Moto Perpetuo ....Strauss
March from "The Gypsy Baron"..Strauss

POPS PROGRAMMES

Post May 1/38

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 5

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser" ....Wagner
Overture to "Sakuntala ....Goldmark
Turkish March ....Mozart
"Espana," Rhapsody ....Chabrier
Suite from the Ballet "Nutcracker" ....Tchaikovsky
Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" ....Wagner
Divertissement ....Ibert
"Roses from the South," Waltzes .Strauss
Malaguena ....Lecuona
"Strike Up the Band" ....Gershwin

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 6

Prelude to "Carmen" ....Bizet
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Rossini
March of the Little Lead Soldiers ..Pierne
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ....Sibelius
Finale, "Scheherazade" ..Rimsky-Korsakov
Valse Triste ....Sibelius
Ballet of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" ....Ponchielli
"Voices of Spring," Waltzes .....Strauss
Prelude in C sharp minor ....Rachmaninoff
Seventh Slavonic Dance ....Dvorak

SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 7

Military Polonaise .... Chopin-Glazounov
Largo, from the "New World" Symphony ....Dvorak
Entrance of the Little Fauns ......Pierne
Waltz of the Flowers, from the "Nutcracker" Suite ......Tchaikovsky
"The Prince and the Princess," from "Scheherazade" ..Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria ....Bach-Gounod
Violin solo: Julius Theodorowicz
Bolero ....Ravel
College Medley by the Regis College Glee Club
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ......Churchill-Bodge
March "Pomp and Circumstance" ...Elgar

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 8

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
"Pinocchio," A Merry Overture.... Toch
"The Girl With the Flaxen Hair ..Debussy
Third Movement (Allegro molto Vivace), "Pathetic" Symphony ....Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Oberon" ....Weber
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18 ....Rachmaninoff
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ....Strauss
Moto Perpetuo ....Strauss
March from "The Gypsy Baron" ...Strauss

Fifty-Seventh Season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Ends Tonight Pops Next Week

B. Trans.
April 30/38

Going Into May

ARTHUR FIEDLER

For the ninth season conductor of the Symphony Hall Pop concerts, which will begin their fifty-third season next Wednesday evening.

Programs for Pop Concerts

In Boston the month of Maying connotes Pops concerts. With calendar-like precision they arrive next Wednesday night, to take nightly possession of Symphony Hall for two months, including Sundays through the month of May. The fifty-third season of Pops will be the ninth under Arthur Fiedler's direction. As in the past, patrons will be given their choice between sitting at tables on the floor or less informally in the regular seats in the two balconies. Those exercising the first alternative may have brought to them refreshments, solid and liquid, and smokes. All and sundry may, if they prefer, adjourn to refreshment and smoking rooms between numbers. Discreet conversation during the performance of the music is not frowned upon. Gayety is the watchword at Pops—gayety without boisterousness. The music appropriately is prevailingly light, though Mr. Fiedler is not unaware that what may have been heavy for a previous generation may be light for ours.

Here are the programs for the first week:

Opening Night
Wednesday, May 4

Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" .... Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicolai
Spring (String Orchestra)...........Grieg
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Joyeuse Marche .... Chabrier
Dances of Galanta .... Kodaly
"Delirien," Waltzes.......Josef Strauss
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tschaikowsky
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill-Bodge
"Swing Stuff" .... McBride
Solo clarinet: Manuel Valerio
(First performance)
First Hungarian Dance..........Brahms

Thursday Evening, May 5

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Overture to "Sakuntala"......Goldmark
Turkish March .... Mozart
"Espana," Rhapsody .... Chabrier
Suite from the Ballet "Nutcracker" Tschaikowsky
Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner
Divertissement .... Ibert
"Roses from the South," Waltzes Strauss
Malaguena .... Lecuona
Strike Up the Band............Gershwin

Friday Evening, May 6

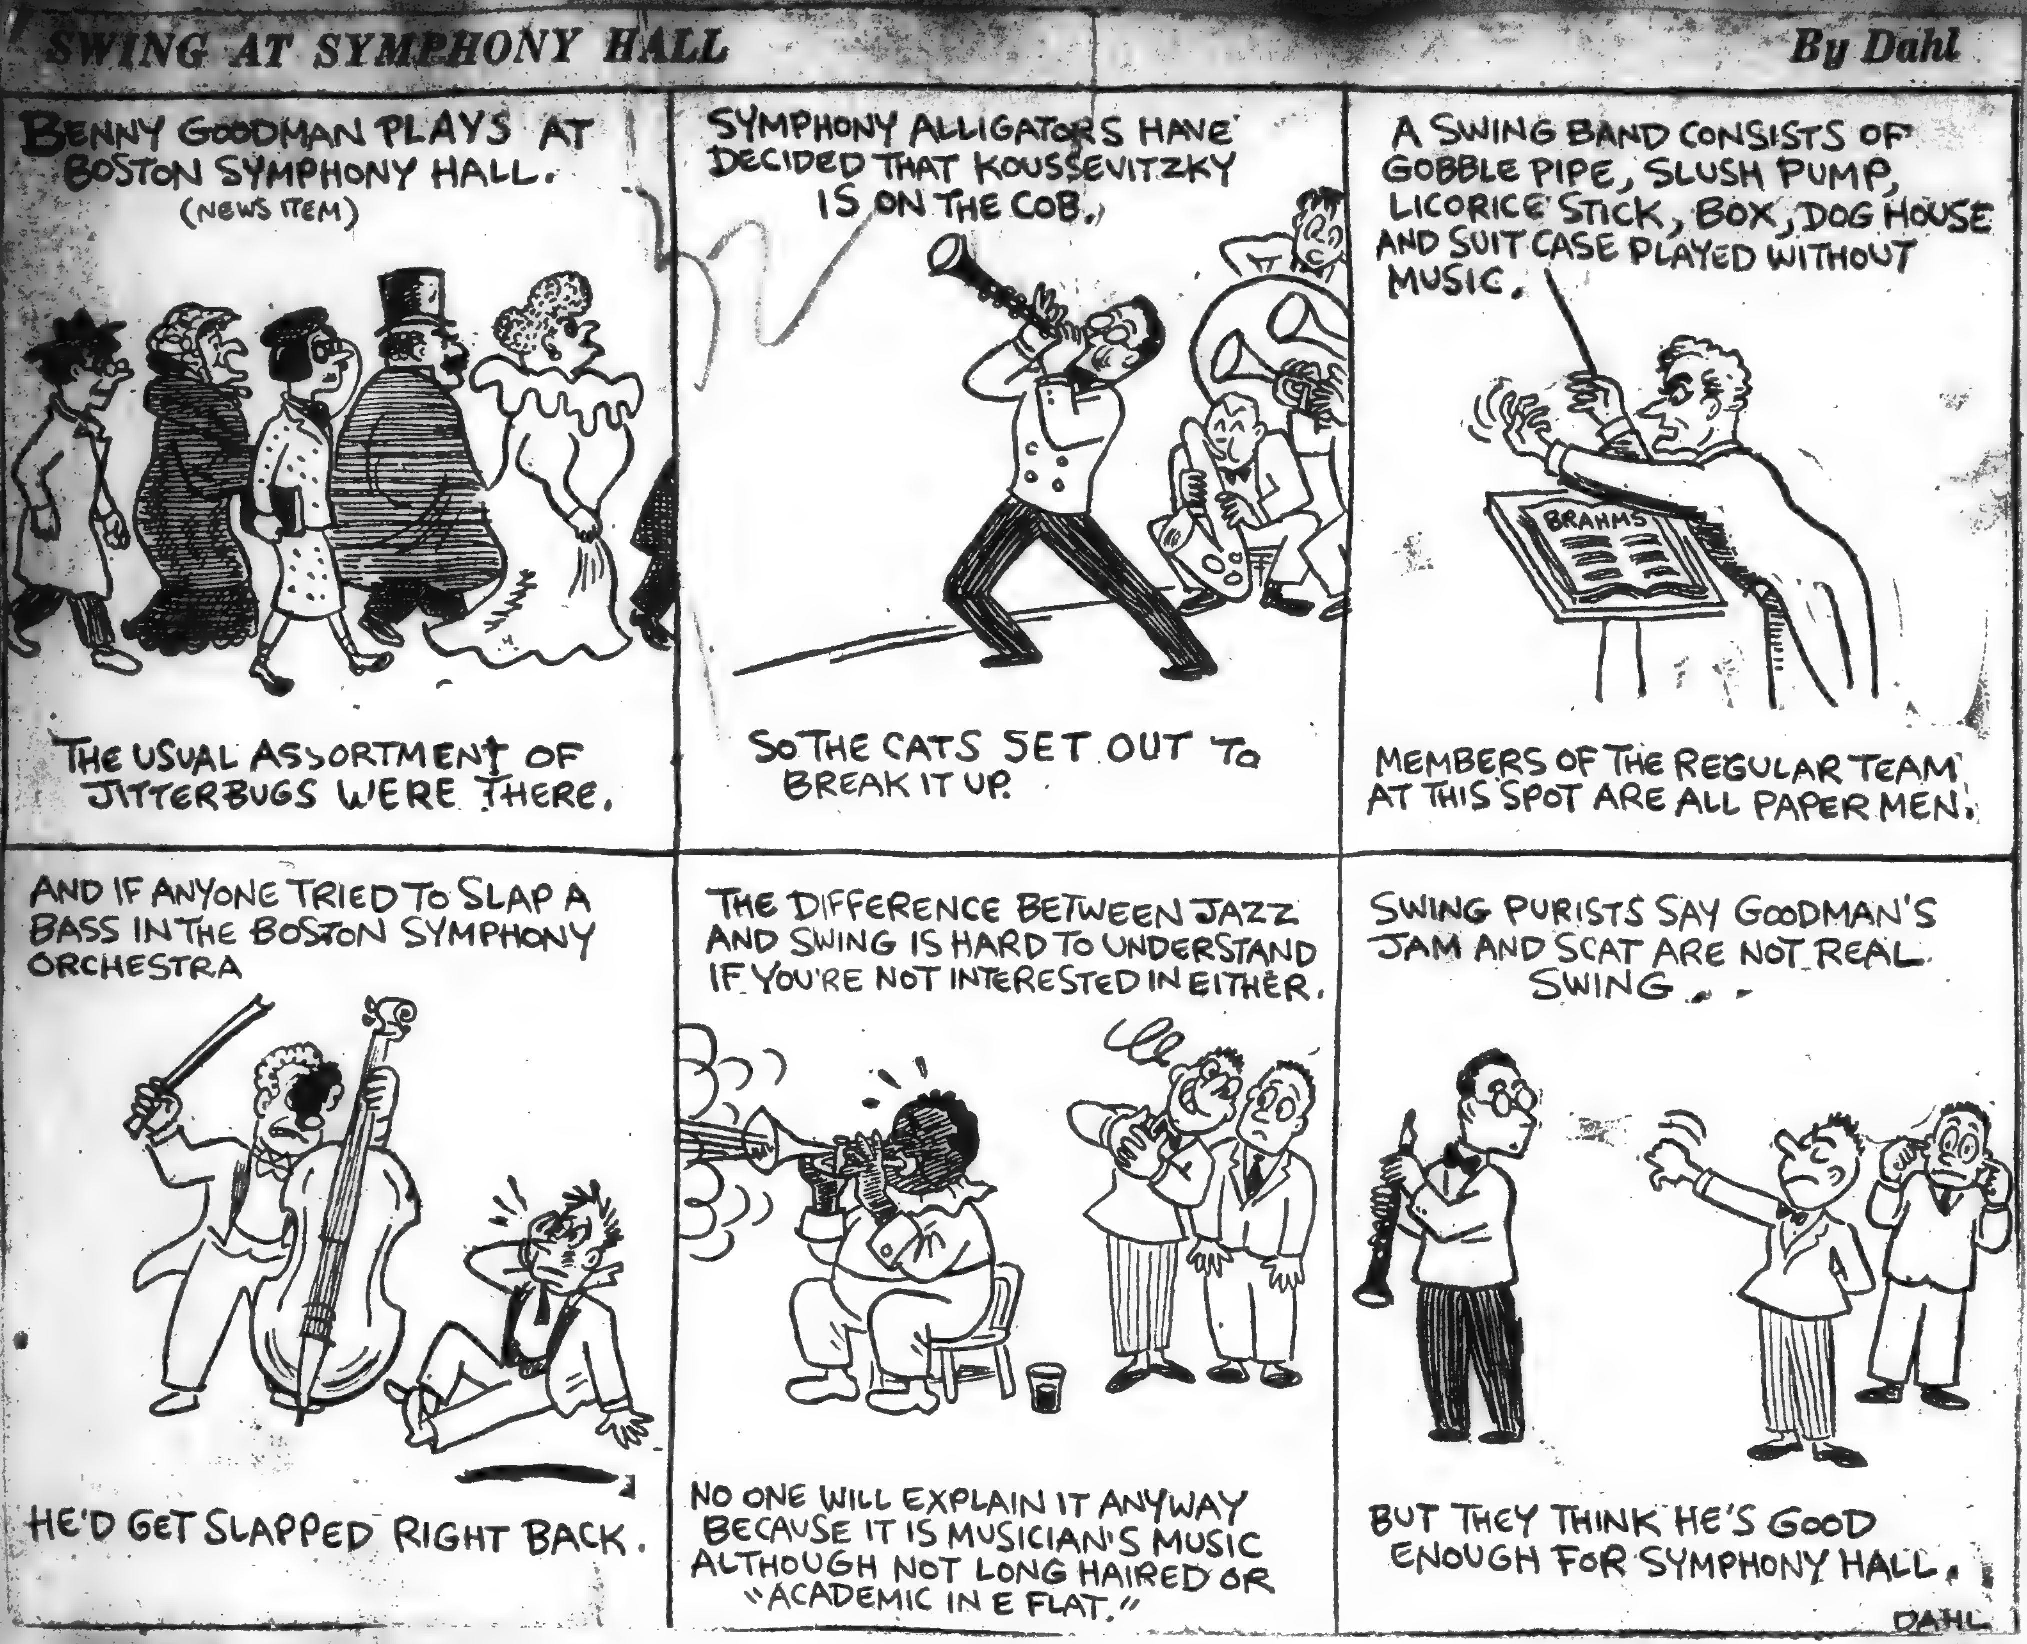
Prelude to "Carmen"............Bizet
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Rossini
March of the Little Lead Soldiers Pierne
Finlandia .... Sibelius
Finale, "Scheherazade"..Rimsky-Korsakov
Valse Triste .... Sibelius
Ballet of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
"Voices of Spring," Waltzes.....Strauss
Prelude in C-sharp minor...Rachmaninoff
Seventh Slavonic Dance.........Dvorak

Saturday Evening, May 7

Military Polonaise......Chopin-Glazounov
Largo, from the "New World" Symphony .... Dvorak
Entrance of the Little Fauns......Pierne
Waltz of the Flowers, from the "Nutcracker" Suite..........Tschaikowsky
"The Prince and the Princess" from "Scheherazade" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
Violin solo: Julius Theodorowicz
Bolero .... Ravel
College Medley by the Regis College Glee Cub
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ....Churchill-Bodge
March, "Pomp and Circumstance"..Elgar

Sunday Evening, May 8

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
"Pinocchio," a Merry Overture......Toch
"The Girl with the Flaxen Hair".Debussy
Third Movement (Allegro molto Vivace) "Pathetic" Symphony....Tschaikowsky
Overture to "Oberon"............Weber
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in D-minor, Op. 18...........Rachmaninov
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes Strauss
Moto Perpetuo..................Strauss
March from "The Gypsy Baron"..Strauss



SWING AT SYMPHONY HALL
By Dahl
BENNY GOODMAN PLAYS AT BOSTON SYMPHONY HALL. (NEWS ITEM)
THE USUAL ASSORTMENT OF JITTERBUGS WERE THERE.
SYMPHONY ALLIGATORS HAVE DECIDED THAT KOUSSEVITZKY IS ON THE COB.
SO THE CATS SET OUT TO BREAK IT UP.
A SWING BAND CONSISTS OF GOBBLE PIPE, SLUSH PUMP, LICORICE STICK, BOX, DOG HOUSE AND SUIT CASE PLAYED WITHOUT MUSIC.
BRAHMS
MEMBERS OF THE REGULAR TEAM AT THIS SPOT ARE ALL PAPER MEN.
AND IF ANYONE TRIED TO SLAP A BASS IN THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
HE'D GET SLAPPED RIGHT BACK.
THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN JAZZ AND SWING IS HARD TO UNDERSTAND IF YOU'RE NOT INTERESTED IN EITHER.
NO ONE WILL EXPLAIN IT ANYWAY BECAUSE IT IS MUSICIAN'S MUSIC ALTHOUGH NOT LONG HAIRED OR "ACADEMIC IN E FLAT."
SWING PURISTS SAY GOODMAN'S JAM AND SCAT ARE NOT REAL SWING . . .
BUT THEY THINK HE'S GOOD ENOUGH FOR SYMPHONY HALL.
DAHL

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

MAY 1 - 1938

Reasons for Golschmann's $30,000 Salary

Symphony Conductor's Pay Compared With Other Men's in Same Field.

By Thomas B. Sherman

JUDGING from the tone and content of letters received by the Post-Dispatch and the more informal expressions of opinion one hears among patrons of music in the city, it has been widely assumed that the reductions in pay suffered by members of the St. Louis orchestra was somehow caused by the increase of salary granted to the conductor, Vladimir Golschmann. The size of Golschmann's salary has also been the cause of more than a little surprise. One gathers that it is considered high, if not excessive, by many.

As for the connection between Golschmann's pay and that of his colleagues in the orchestra it is revealing no secret to say that the two arrangements were concluded separately. What influence one may have had on the other in the minds of the directors who were trying to balance a budget is known only to them and they have made no statement on the subject. The size of Golschmann's salary, however, can be discussed in relationship to certain established criteria.

Obviously the directors of the Symphony Society did not agree to pay him $30,000 or even $28,000 because he was a nice fellow and they liked him. They arrived at this figure, as they would have arrived at the price of any commodity or service affected by competitive bidding. In other words, Golschmann's pay has been determined more or less by the prevailing salaries of other conductors of the same general category throughout the country. It is the standard fixed by the market and is therefore the only one that has any objective meaning.

—o-o—

THAT BEING SO it becomes pertinent to inquire into salaries paid elsewhere. In Boston, for instance, Koussevitzky is paid $70,000 a year [redacted] Golschmann's $30,000. Boston, a more important musical center, if not a larger city than St. Louis, is supported by richer music patrons and caters to a more populous metropolitan district.

But if one asks is Koussevitzky worth two and a third times as much as Golschmann one need not expect an answer that means anything. There is no way of reducing the matter to statistics. Boston is paying Koussevitzky that extremely handsome salary because the Boston directors think he is worth it and because they wouldn't be able to keep him if they didn't.

—o-o—

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA, however, is obviously in a different category from St. Louis. The same may be said of New York and Philadelphia. They support the de luxe orchestras of the world and it is to be expected that they would pay their conductors more. The Pittsburgh orchestra, however, should rank lower if anything. That city has about the same population as St. Louis but its musical tradition is not so old and its orchestra was organized only last year. But in order to obtain the services of Fritz Reiner, whose adaptability to the Pittsburgh public is still to be determined, the Pittsburgh directors had to offer him $30,000 a year in his first contract.

Other cities with orchestras of the same rank as St. Louis are Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. Of these only one pays its conductor less than St. Louis. All others pay the same or more. Obviously then, according to the only standard that has any economic validity $30,000 is not an excessive figure for a conductor who is an established success in his community and who is beginning his eighth year of service.

—o-o—

ON THE SUBJECT of whether any conductor is worth so much money much can be said pro and contra. A year's pay for Golschman is more money than Mozart had in his whole life. On the other hand, it is much less than Nelson Eddy makes for one month's work. Interpretive artists—that is, singers and virtuoso instrumentalists—receive, in general, much greater reward from the public than the creative artists who furnish the music to be sung or played. Composers have a notoriously hard time of it. These injustices, unfortunately, are not peculiar to the realm of music as everybody knows. A prize fighter is paid more than the President of the United States and the dewiest and most inconspicuous starlet in Hollywood pays her agent more than the United States pays its major-generals. So one gets nowhere rapidly by bringing in such comparisons.

Persons who have an idealistic view of music feel—and properly so—that music would be better off if artists accepted it as a way of life rather than a means of getting rich. But since idealism of that sort is not possible in a competitive world an orchestra that wants the services of a conductor of a certain quality will undoubtedly have to pay the price fixed by the market.

Diapason
Chicago Ill

MAY 1 - 1938

SOWERBY CONCERTO HEARD FIRST IN BOSTON

E. POWER BIGGS AT ORGAN

Premiere by Boston Symphony Orchestra Under the Baton of Koussevitsky Wins High Praise for New Composition.

By WILLIAM E. ZEUCH

According to Berlioz, the orchestra is the emperor—the organ the pope. The two combined would seem to represent the ultimate in instrumental music. A world premiere of a concerto for organ and orchestra is almost as startling news as "when a man bites a dog." That so few have been written may be ascribed to the scarcity of adequate organs in concert halls, both here and in Europe. Such a work is foredoomed to definitely limited hearings. It must, therefore, have been a labor of sheer love, based on the sincerest artistry, which impelled Leo Sowerby to create the really great Concerto which came to its first public performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall, Boston, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, with E. Power Biggs at the organ, in the concerts of April 22 and 23.

The first movement, in C major, more or less in sonata form, presents a finely woven tonal tapestry, characteristically Sowerby. Modern it is, to be sure, but dissonances are more pleasant—never once suggesting cacophony. The second movement, in E flat minor, "slowly and wistfully," makes instant appeal, even to those who have yet to be convinced as to the modern trend in music. Especially lovely is the quiet fugal exposition for organ alone, which was played by Mr. Biggs on the 8-ft. gedeckt, with tremulant, on the swell. The brilliantly exuberant last movement literally took the audience by storm. The theme of this movement arrests immediate attention, and is easily recognizable through the variations to which it has been subjected.

Dr. Sowerby owes not one bar of his music to any man, and this, his latest creation, will fix more firmly than ever his place as a truly great American composer.

Mr. Biggs surmounted the difficulties of the score with ease and taste. The bravura passages flashed brilliantly despite the archaic instrument at his disposal. The tones of this definitely "dated" organ, with its cumbersome console, must, indeed, have presented serious problems to him.

As illustrative of the impression made by the premiere of Mr. Sowerby's work, Alexander Williams, the critic of the Boston Herald, may be quoted. In his appraisal he said:

> * * * Mr. Sowerby, who was in the hall yesterday to hear the first performance of his concerto, has written a brilliant and effective work. It is ably developed, romantic in mood and is a work that neither scorns virtuosity nor exploits it for its own sake. * * *

The critic of the Boston Globe had this to say of Mr. Biggs' playing:

> It was especially fortunate that Mr. Biggs was chosen to perform the solo part, because he is a consummate artist. His achievements have become known to some of the local public, but the very nature of his instrument required such an occasion as this to bring him before the symphony audiences.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 1 - 1938

WILL INSPECT MUSIC SHED

Koussevitzky to Visit Scene for Berkshire Music Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, will visit Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., tomorrow, to inspect the music shed being built to house the festival events. During the day he will speak to more than fifty members of the festival advisory board and committee workers at a meeting to be held in the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, at which Mrs. Alice Gould Edman of Pittsfield, executive vice president, will preside.

On his visit, Dr. Koussevitzky will be accompanied by Bentley W. Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees; Henry B. Sawyer, member of the orchestra's board; Professor Richard B. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, consultant on acoustics for the shed, and Dr. Archibald Davison of the music faculty of Harvard University. Dr. Koussevitzky will inaugurate the shed, Aug. 4, with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth symphony. He will sail for Europe Wednesday on the Normandie.

JITTERBUGS TAKE OVER SYMPHONY

B. Post — May 2/38

Cheer, Sway, Stamp as Goodman's Band Plays Swing

A congress of 2600 jitterbugs gathered last night at Symphony Hall to hear the music of Mr. Benny Goodman and his band, and, while they didn't dance in the aisles, having been restrained by shocked Symphony Hall attaches and the Sunday no-dancing law, they managed to give a fair imitation of what is laughingly called terpsichore right in their seats.

HOT JAM SESSION

Jitterbugs are devotees of swing music, it was explained privately by Mr. Goodman, who is also known as the King of Swing. And there were so many fawning subjects of Mr. Goodman present demanding his autograph that three men had to be put to work signing the programmes.

A large number of regular patrons of Symphony Hall attended the swing concert, which was for the benefit of the Infants' Hospital, but they sat well out in the middle of the auditorium and were in no danger of the plaster statues prancing off the pedestals and coming down boom.

Sway and Bounce in Seats

It was, to quote Mr. Goodman again, the hottest jam session that his band has staged in many weeks, and the largest audience of jitterings were out in front cheering and hollering at the top of their lungs and stamping their feet in time with the band. It was a demonstration that has never happened before in Symphony Hall.

There were several things that Mr. Goodman and his band played that had a most extraordinary effect upon the jitterbugs. They began stamping their feet in time, they swayed and bounced around in their seats and a glassy expression was to be found in their eyes, while their mouths all dropped open and their hands flapped like the flippers of seals. Many of them made strange noises that can only be described as something between a cry of ecstasy and a heartfelt ouch.

Wholesale Jail Delivery

The tunes that had this effect upon the jitterbugs were, notably, "King Porter Stomp," "Shine," "Sing, Sing, Sing" and "Roll 'Em." Maybe the psychiatrists might want to make up their minds between mannic-depressive and shizophrenia in reaching a diagnosis, and the names of the most exciting tunes might help.

Mr. Goodman says it isn't his fault. "Almost all swing playing," said he "reflects an effort by the players to escape from the most confining element in present-day jazz, the prisons whose bars are the 32 measures of the average tune." And after being almost trampled to death by a crowd of jitterbugs, it is only fair to report that it wasn't an escape but a wholesale jail delivery.

Only Three Casualties

Symphony Hall sold out for the Goodman concert, and the audience was mixed, including everyone from ladies in chinchilla wraps to girls who chewed gum and didn't miss a beat, and gentlemen in top hats and tails to lads wearing loud checked coats and saddle shoes with turned up toes.

It was something new, Symphony Hall attaches admitted, and clubby as they are with the canons of good music, they were very much alarmed when the jitterbugs began bouncing around in their seats. Except for three girls who fainted, there wasn't a casualty.

SWING MUSIC BY GOODMAN

Benny and Orchestra at Symphony Hall

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Those who believe that the world is reverting to savagery would hardly have been persuaded from that melancholy conviction by attending the musical delirium offered by Benny Goodman and his orchestra at Symphony Hall last evening. Swing is the thing today (and Mr. Goodman is its prophet) and swing is definitely orgiastic; nor does its improvisational character make it any less so. The closest parallel to last evening's entertainment would be found in the jungle.

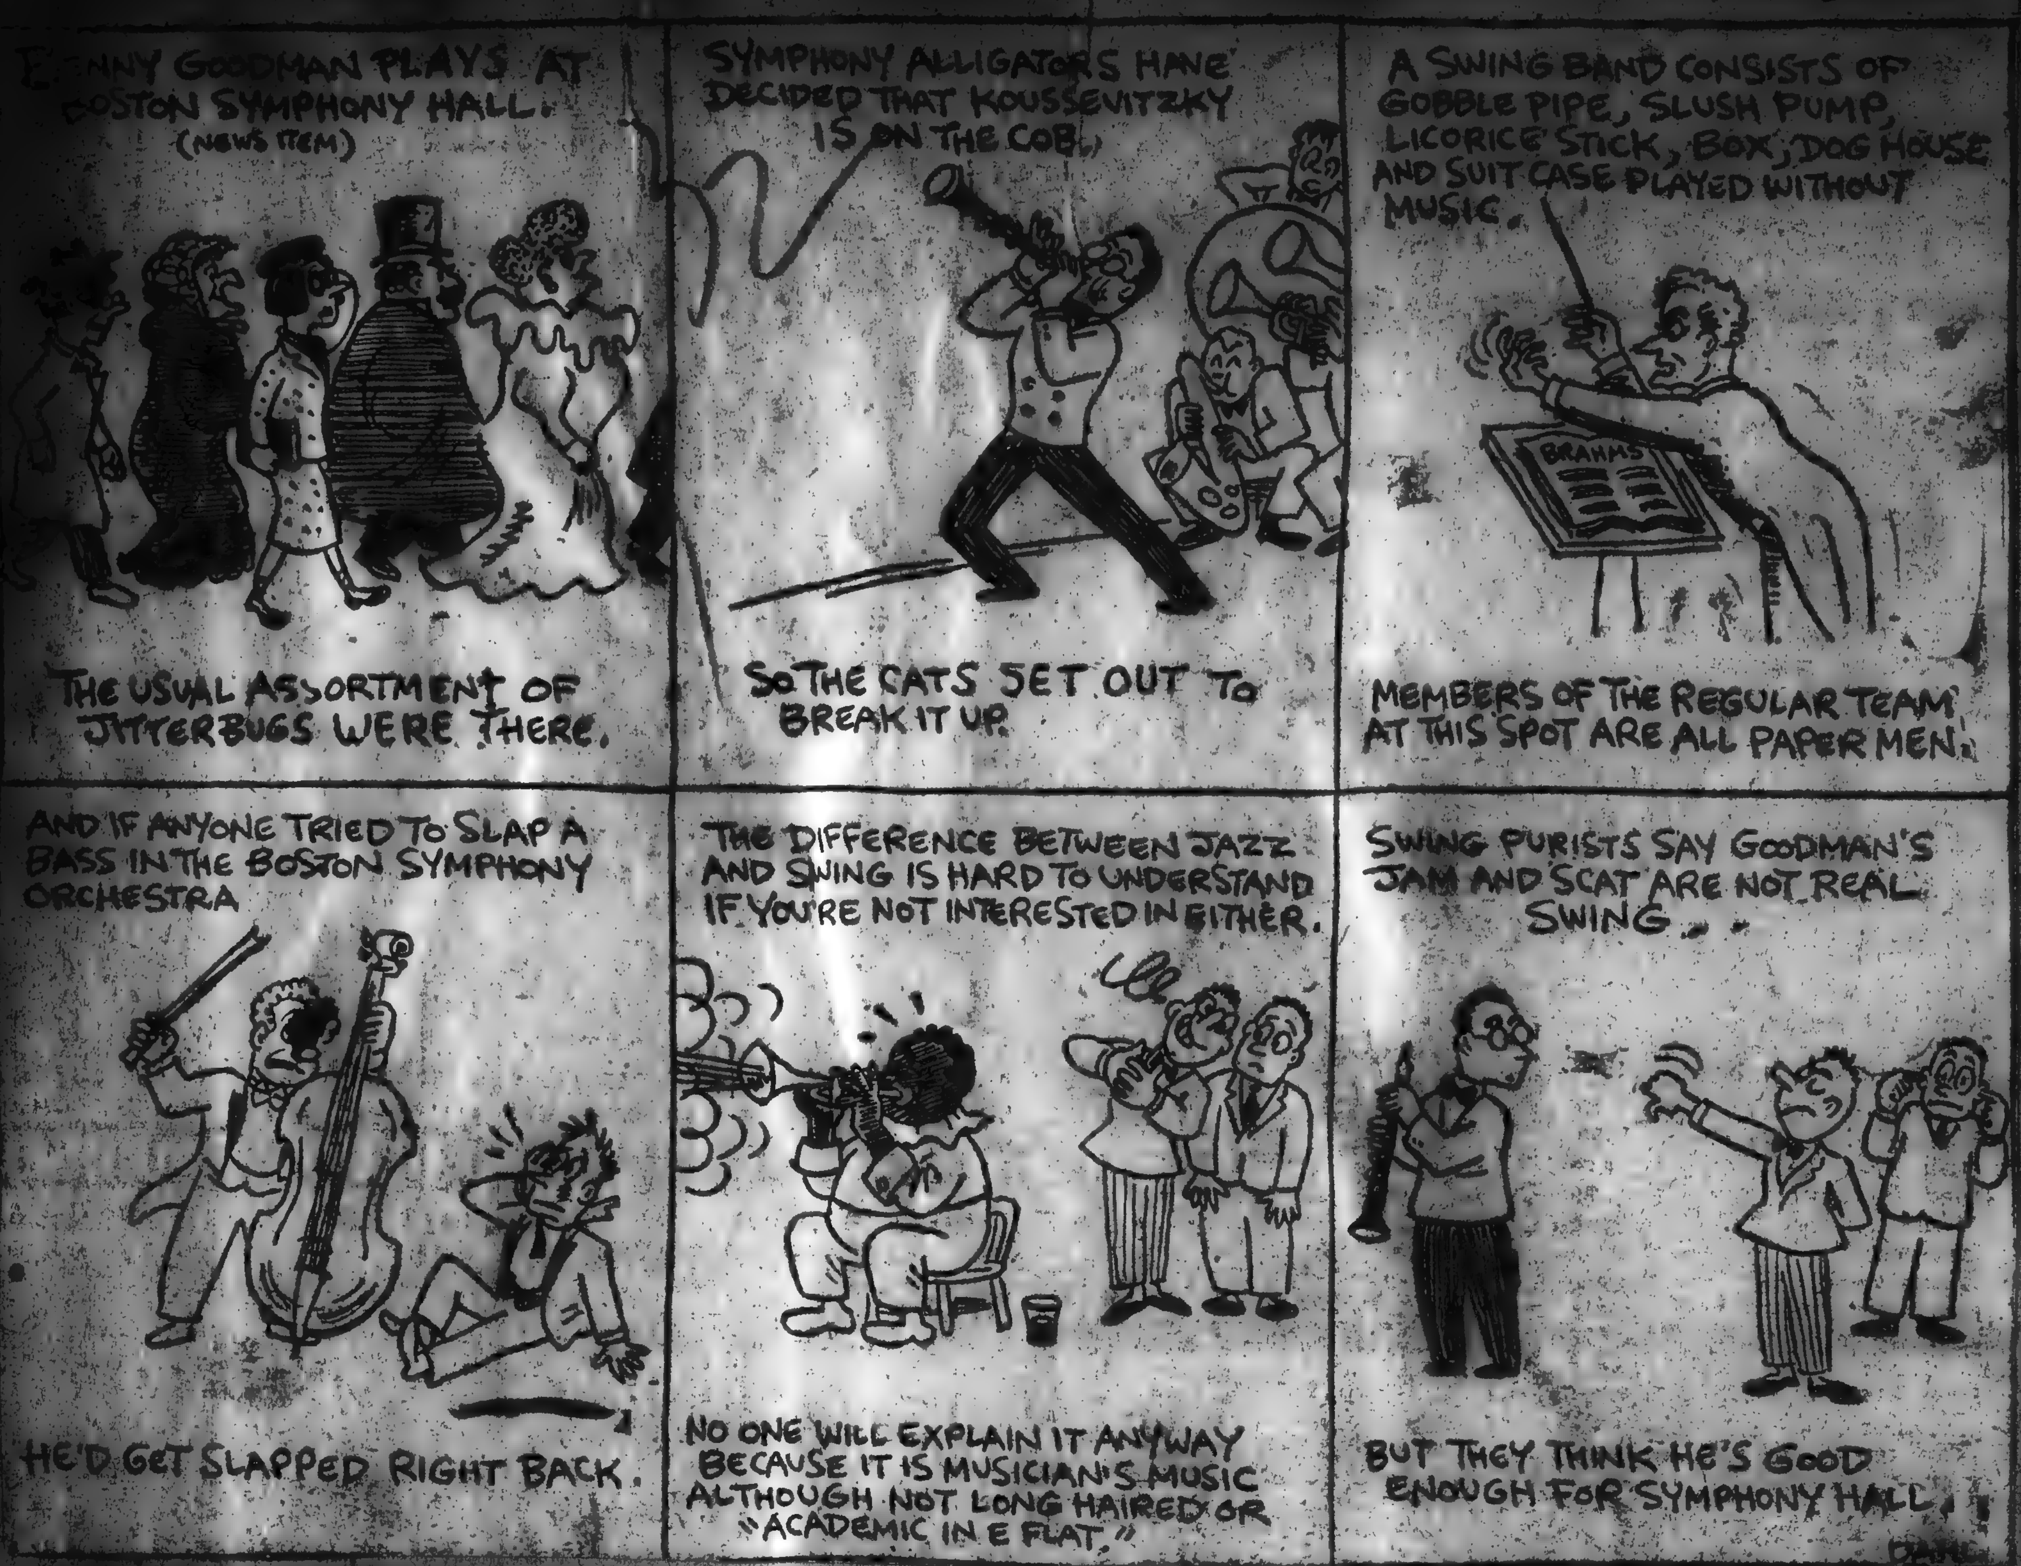
Cont.

That a high degree of a certain kind of skill goes into the preparation and performance of swing is undeniable. Crude as that special manifestation is, the expert at swing must be a natural musician; he must have inventiveness and what, for lack of a better word, may be called imagination. And he must be adroit with lips or fingers. Your swing musician, or your ordinary jazz player, for that matter, can do things with trumpets and trombones which a symphony orchestra virtuoso would have once declared impossible. And for him, likely as not, they would be.

From the musical point of view—and swing has about as much to do with music as its weird vocabulary has with English—the most interesting item in the first half of the programme, all that your thin-skinned, tender-eared reviewer would endure, was the playing of the trio composed of Teddy Wilson, pianist; Dave Tough, drummer, and the mild appearing, scholarly looking Mr. Goodman, with his clarinet. Mr. Tough, who has succeeded Gene Krupa in this ensemble, is not only a rhythmico-percussive wizard, he is also a juggler of no mean ability. The audience, which would make the average assemblage of football fans look like a prayer meeting, liked him quite a lot.

This audience was, in a way, more interesting than the orchestra, which after all, is merely the sort of thing one finds in the dizzier night clubs, only more so. At a guess, not more than one per cent of it could have been over 25. Like mumbledy-peg and marbles, swing has its definite period of addiction. Therein, of course, lies the hope for the human race, in time they get over it.

ING AT SYMPHONY HALL By Dall



BENNY GOODMAN PLAYS AT BOSTON SYMPHONY HALL. (NEWS ITEM)
THE USUAL ASSORTMENT OF JITTERBUGS WERE THERE.
SYMPHONY ALLIGATORS HAVE DECIDED THAT KOUSSEVITZKY IS ON THE COB.
SO THE CATS SET OUT TO BREAK IT UP.
A SWING BAND CONSISTS OF GOBBLE PIPE, SLUSH PUMP, LICORICE STICK, BOX, DOG HOUSE AND SUIT CASE PLAYED WITHOUT MUSIC.
BRAHMS
MEMBERS OF THE REGULAR TEAM AT THIS SPOT ARE ALL PAPER MEN.
AND IF ANYONE TRIED TO SLAP A BASS IN THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
HE'D GET SLAPPED RIGHT BACK.
THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN JAZZ AND SWING IS HARD TO UNDERSTAND IF YOU'RE NOT INTERESTED IN EITHER.
NO ONE WILL EXPLAIN IT ANYWAY BECAUSE IT IS MUSICIAN'S MUSIC ALTHOUGH NOT LONG HAIRED OR "ACADEMIC IN E FLAT."
SWING PURISTS SAY GOODMAN'S JAM AND SCAT ARE NOT REAL SWING...
BUT THEY THINK HE'S GOOD ENOUGH FOR SYMPHONY HALL.
DALL

ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH
MAY 1 - 1938

Reasons for Golschmann's $30,000 Salary

Symphony Conductor's Pay Compared With Other Men's in Same Field.

By Thomas B. Sherman

JUDGING from the tone and content of letters received by the Post-Dispatch and the more informal expressions of opinion one hears among patrons of music in the city, it has been widely assumed that the reductions in pay suffered by members of the St. Louis orchestra was somehow caused by the increase of salary granted to the conductor, Vladimir Golschmann. The size of Golschmann's salary has also been the cause of more than a little surprise. One gathers that it is considered high, if not excessive, by many.

As for the connection between Golschmann's pay and that of his colleagues in the orchestra it is revealing no secret to say that the two arrangements were concluded separately. What influence one may have had on the other in the minds of the directors who were trying to balance a budget is known only to them and they have made no statement on the subject. The size of Golschmann's salary, however, can be discussed in relationship to certain established criteria.

Obviously the directors of the Symphony Society did not agree to pay him $30,000 or even $28,000 because he was a nice fellow and they liked him. They arrived at this figure, as they would have arrived at the price of any commodity or service affected by competitive bidding. In other words, Golschmann's pay has been determined more or less by the prevailing salaries of other conductors of the same general category throughout the country. It is the standard fixed by the market and is therefore the only one that has any objective meaning.

—o-o—

THAT BEING SO it becomes pertinent to inquire into salaries paid elsewhere. In Boston, for instance, Koussevitzky is paid $70,000 a year [illegible] Golschmann's $30,000. Boston, a more important musical center, if not a larger city than St. Louis, is supported by richer music patrons and caters to a more populous metropolitan district.

But if one asks is Koussevitzky worth two and a third times as much as Golschmann one need not expect an answer that means anything. There is no way of reducing the matter to statistics. Boston is paying Koussevitzky that extremely handsome salary because the Boston directors think he is worth it and because they wouldn't be able to keep him if they didn't.

—o-o—

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA, however, is obviously in a different category from St. Louis. The same may be said of New York and Philadelphia. They support the de luxe orchestras of the world and it is to be expected that they would pay their conductors more. The Pittsburgh orchestra, however, should rank lower if anything. That city has about the same population as St. Louis but its musical tradition is not so old and its orchestra was organized only last year. But in order to obtain the services of Fritz Reiner, whose adaptability to the Pittsburgh public is still to be determined, the Pittsburgh directors had to offer him $30,000 a year in his first contract.

Other cities with orchestras of the same rank as St. Louis are Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. Of these only one pays its conductor less than St. Louis. All others pay the same or more. Obviously then, according to the only standard that has any economic validity $30,000 is not an excessive figure for a conductor who is an established success in his community and who is beginning his eighth year of service.

—o-o—

ON THE SUBJECT of whether any conductor is worth so much money much can be said pro and contra. A year's pay for Golschman is more money than Mozart had in his whole life. On the other hand, it is much less than Nelson Eddy makes for one month's work. Interpretive artists—that is, singers and virtuoso instrumentalists—receive, in general, much greater reward from the public than the creative artists who furnish the music to be sung or played. Composers have a notoriously hard time of it. These injustices, unfortunately, are not peculiar to the realm of music as everybody knows. A prize fighter is paid more than the President of the United States and the dewiest and most inconspicuous starlet in Hollywood pays her agent more than the United States pays its major-generals. So one gets nowhere rapidly by bringing in such comparisons.

Persons who have an idealistic view of music feel—and properly so—that music would be better off if artists accepted it as a way of life rather than a means of getting rich. But since idealism of that sort is not possible in a competitive world an orchestra that wants the services of a conductor of a certain quality will undoubtedly have to pay the price fixed by the [illegible]

Diapason
Chicago Ill
MAY 1 - 1938

SOWERBY CONCERTO HEARD FIRST IN BOSTON

E. POWER BIGGS AT ORGAN

Premiere by Boston Symphony Orchestra Under the Baton of Koussevitzky Wins High Praise for New Composition.

By WILLIAM E. ZEUCH

According to Berlioz, the orchestra is the emperor—the organ the pope. The two combined would seem to represent the ultimate in instrumental music. A world premiere of a concerto for organ and orchestra is almost as startling news as "when a man bites a dog." That so few have been written may be ascribed to the scarcity of adequate organs in concert halls, both here and in Europe. Such a work is foredoomed to definitely limited hearings. It must, therefore, have been a labor of sheer love, based on the sincerest artistry, which impelled Leo Sowerby to create the really great Concerto which came to its first public performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Symphony Hall, Boston, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with E. Power Biggs at the organ, in the concerts of April 22 and 23.

The first movement, in C major, more or less in sonata form, presents a finely woven tonal tapestry, characteristically Sowerby. Modern it is, to be sure, but dissonances are more pleasant—never once suggesting cacophony. The second movement, in E flat minor, "slowly and wistfully," makes instant appeal, even to those who have yet to be convinced as to the modern trend in music. Especially lovely is the quiet fugal exposition for organ alone, which was played by Mr. Biggs on the 8-ft. gedeckt, with tremulant, on the swell. The brilliantly exuberant last movement literally took the audience by storm. The theme of this movement arrests immediate attention, and is easily recognizable through the variations to which it has been subjected.

Dr. Sowerby owes not one bar of his music to any man, and this, his latest creation, will fix more firmly than ever his place as a truly great American composer.

Mr. Biggs surmounted the difficulties of the score with ease and taste. The bravura passages flashed brilliantly despite the archaic instrument at his disposal. The tones of this definitely "dated" organ, with its cumbersome console, must, indeed, have presented serious problems to him.

As illustrative of the impression made by the premiere of Mr. Sowerby's work, Alexander Williams, the critic of the Boston Herald, may be quoted. In his appraisal he said:

> * * * Mr. Sowerby, who was in the hall yesterday to hear the first performance of his concerto, has written a brilliant and effective work. It is ably developed, romantic in mood and is a work that neither scorns virtuosity nor exploits it for its own sake. * * *

The critic of the Boston Globe had this to say of Mr. Biggs' playing:

> It was especially fortunate that Mr. Biggs was chosen to perform the solo part, because he is a consummate artist. His achievements have become known to some of the local public, but the very nature of his instrument required such an occasion as this to bring him before the symphony audiences.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 1 - 1938

WILL INSPECT MUSIC SHED

Koussevitzky to Visit Scene for Berkshire Music Festival

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, will visit Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., tomorrow, to inspect the music shed being built to house the festival events. During the day he will speak to more than fifty members of the festival advisory board and committee workers at a meeting to be held in the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, at which Mrs. Alice Gould Edman of Pittsfield, executive vice president, will preside.

On his visit, Dr. Koussevitzky will be accompanied by Bentley [illegible]

JITTERBUGS TAKE OVER SYMPHONY

B. Post May 2/38

Cheer, Sway, Stamp as Goodman's Band Plays Swing

A congress of 2600 jitterbugs gathered last night at Symphony Hall to hear the music of Mr. Benny Goodman and his band, and, while they didn't dance in the aisles, having been restrained by shocked Symphony Hall attaches and the Sunday no-dancing law, they managed to give a fair imitation of what is laughingly called terpsichore right in their seats.

HOT JAM SESSION

Jitterbugs are devotees of swing music, it was explained privately by Mr. Goodman, who is also known as the King of Swing. And there were so many fawning subjects of Mr. Goodman present demanding his autograph that three men had to be put to work signing the programmes.

A large number of regular patrons of Symphony Hall attended the swing concert, which was for the benefit of the Infants' Hospital, but they sat well out in the middle of the auditorium and were in no danger of the plaster statues prancing off the pedestals and coming down boom.

Sway and Bounce in Seats

It was, to quote Mr. Goodman again, the hottest jam session that his band has staged in many weeks, and the largest audience of jitterings were out in front cheering and hollering at the top of their lungs and stamping their feet in time with the band. It was a demonstration that has never happened before in Symphony Hall.

There were several things that Mr. Goodman and his band played that had a most extraordinary effect upon the jitterbugs. They began stamping their feet in time, they swayed and bounced around in their seats and a glassy expression was to be found in their eyes, while their mouths all dropped open and their hands flapped like the flippers of seals. Many of them made strange noises that can only be described as something between a cry of ecstasy and a heartfelt ouch.

Wholesale Jail Delivery

The tunes that had this effect upon the jitterbugs were, notably, "King Porter Stomp," "Shine," "Sing, Sing, Sing" and "Roll 'Em." Maybe the psychiatrists might want to make up their minds between mannic-depressive and shizophrenia in reaching a diagnosis, and the names of the most exciting tunes might help.

Mr. Goodman says it isn't his fault. "Almost all swing playing," said he "reflects an effort by the players to escape from the most confining element in present-day jazz, the prisons whose bars are the 32 measures of the average tune." And after being almost trampled to death by a crowd of jitterbugs, it is only fair to report that it wasn't an escape but a wholesale jail delivery.

Only Three Casualties

Symphony Hall sold out for the Goodman concert, and the audience was mixed, including everyone from ladies in chinchilla wraps to girls who chewed gum and didn't miss a beat, and gentlemen in top hats and tails to lads wearing loud checked coats and saddle shoes with turned up toes.

It was something new, Symphony Hall attaches admitted, and clubby as they are with the canons of good music, they were very much alarmed when the jitterbugs began bouncing around in their seats. Except for three girls who fainted, there wasn't a casualty.

SWING MUSIC BY GOODMAN

Benny and Orchestra at Symphony Hall

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Those who believe that the world is reverting to savagery would hardly have been persuaded from that melancholy conviction by attending the musical delirium offered by Benny Goodman and his orchestra at Symphony Hall last evening. Swing is the thing today (and Mr. Goodman is its prophet) and swing is definitely orgiastic; nor does its improvisational character make it any less so. The closest parallel to last evening's entertainment would be found in the jungle

That a high degree of a certain kind of skill goes into the preparation and performance of swing is undeniable. Crude as that special manifestation is, the expert at swing must be a natural musician; he must have inventiveness and what, for lack of a better word, may be called imagination. And he must be adroit with lips or fingers. Your swing musician, or your ordinary jazz player, for that matter, can do things with trumpets and trombones which a symphony orchestra virtuoso would have once declared impossible. And for him, likely as not, they would be.

From the musical point of view—and swing has about as much to do with music as its weird vocabulary has with English—the most interesting item in the first half of the programme, all that your thin-skinned, tender-eared reviewer would endure, was the playing of the trio composed of Teddy Wilson, pianist; Dave Tough, drummer, and the mild appearing, scholarly looking Mr. Goodman, with his clarinet. Mr. Tough, who has succeeded Gene Krupa in this ensemble, is not only a rhythmico-percussive wizard, he is also a juggler of no mean ability. The audience, which would make the average assemblage of football fans look like a prayer meeting, liked him quite a lot.

This audience was, in a way, more interesting than the orchestra, which after all, is merely the sort of thing one finds in the dizzier night clubs, only more so. At a guess, not more than one per cent of it could have been over 25. Like mumbledy-peg and marbles, swing has its definite period of addiction. Therein, of course, lies the hope for the human race, in time they get over it.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MONDAY, MAY 2, 1938

Symphony Hall Is Scene of Boston's First 'Swing' Music Concert

33 ic Teachers'

N. Y.

ar.-APR - 1938

BEETHOVEN
V-15707 to
V-14711

SYMPHONY No. 6 IN F MAJOR (Opus 68). Played by the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arturo Toscanini. Five 12-inch records in Victor Musical Masterpiece Album No. 417.

Richard Strauss used to say that an orchestra was no better than its conductor. We have repeated proof of the validity of this statement in the miracles Arturo Toscanini performs with the men of whatever orchestra he directs, be it the Salzburg Festival Orchestra, or the New York Philharmonic.

Asked the secret of his power, Toscanini simply says he makes the men play what is written in the score. He makes them observe dynamics, note values and minutae that escape other conductors' notice. But is that all there is to it? Indeed not. Toscanini makes the orchestra enter directly and entirely into the spirit of the composer at white heat. Never for a moment does he relax in his search for all that the scores have to offer. He re-creates the music, a feat which represents the very summit of man's ability in the artistic world.

This glorious recording of Beethoven's Sixth by the British Broadcasting Company is another proof of Toscanini's unique gifts. Previous recordings have proven it and future recordings will again prove it, for Toscanini will never give his stamp of approval to the release of a recording by him unless he thinks it comes up to his exacting standards. The Victor Company can be proud of this album.

●

BACH, J. S.
V-14635 to
V-14644, and
V-14645 to
V-14652-S
and
V-14653 to
V-14661

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW, sung by the combined choirs of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, and played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. All under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Ten 12-inch discs in Victor Masterpiece Set M-411 (Volume I), eight 12-inch discs in Victor Masterpiece Set M-412 (Volume II), and nine 12-inch discs in Victor Masterpiece Set M-413 (Volume III).

Of the five Passions that Bach is said to have written, only the St. John and the more magnificent St. Matthew Passions have come to us as unquestioned works of the master. The St. Luke Passion is of doubtful authenticity. In its earliest form, the St. Matthew Passion was written in 1729 when Bach was 44 years of age. It was performed on the Good-Friday of that year in St. Thomas' Church, Leipsic, where Bach held the office of Cantor from 1723 until his death in 1750. The extended form of the Passion was probably not completed before 1740.

---

and Band Appear

B. Her. May 2/38

MUSIC

BENNY GOODMAN

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Benny Goodman and his swing orchestra gave a concert last night in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the Infants Hospital. There was a capacity audience present to listen to a program comprising selections from the repertoire of jazz, both new and old, adapted to the type of performance widely known and contemporarily popular as swing.

The dramatic and literary critics are better equipped, constantly rubbing shoulders as they do with vulgar productions in their respective arts, than are we, the music critics. We are perpetually in the clouds, so that it is as if a dramatic critic reviewed nothing but Shakespeare and Moliere, Ibsen and Racine. Thus, when Mr. Goodman triumphantly presents his forces at Symphony Hall and duplicates his recent success in Carnegie Hall, we are bewildered and secretly would prefer to retire into a corner and blaspheme.

Not so the audience. How they yelled and whistled; how, as the term in the racy vocabulary of swing goes, they "jittered!" If we may again borrow a word from that lexicon and once and for all define our own category as listener. what a spot for a "long underwear man" (classical musician)! In short, it was a function that invites the criticism of a student of sociology and one, incidentally, who is versed in the psychological reactions of the Holy Rollers. He, at least, would find a rich field for examination in the audience.

The New York critics, confronted with a precisely similar occasion, went to it with a high-minded determination to evaluate swing. They would pay it the compliment, which could hardly be withheld, of remarkable technical skill; but they would conclude that swing was a passing craze, like clock-golf or mah-jong. Such was the conclusion that we had privately reached; and the concert did but confirm it. The trouble is that swing or any other type of expression that may seem temporary is really a development of our contemporary mind and must be accepted as significant.

Mr. Goodman brings this type of music to a degree of proficiency that is probably best appreciated by the enthusiasts for swing. There are some people, odd as it may appear, who can find nothing of any interest or emotional appeal in swing. Such can readily understand the marvel of playing a clarinet or a trumpet or a saxophone at high speed and for a long time and as the spirit moves the soloist. On the other hand, we are compelled to ask if the enthusiasts are so competent. They, or at least those surrounding us, hardly bothered to listen and applauded whenever they felt like it.

In short they were stirred by rhythm alone. This is, of course, the most important element in music. Without it no music is effective. But when rhythm usurps all the other elements and so rules the roost that its reiterative insistence claims all the attention, may we not question whether this is music? The rhythm has to be so aggressive that there is no possibility of subtlety or variation. Schumann, for one, was capable of infinitely more variety in this department of music than any of these swing arrangements. And the business of technical cadenzas on a rhythmic and harmonic pedal point, as it were, can grow for some of us agonizingly tedious.

Experiments in the arts are good fun when they arouse violent disagreement. The fact that there are people who line up on one side or another of the swing fence is useful. Perhaps we can eventually come to grips with what we mean by good and bad music. Mr. Goodman and his band at any rate go about their business with perfect efficiency. They leave it to others to disturb the air with problems of aesthetics. It is theirs to give and the audience's to enjoy the product of their improvisation. A sensible man would instruct us to take it or leave it. And, were it not that the instinct of criticism is in us as strong as, for others, the urge of swing, we should have quickly, obeyed the latter part of his advice!

Many Dinners Precede Program By Benny Goodman's Orchestra

Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk, Mrs. Alfred Kidder, 2d, And Mrs. Morgan Harris Among Those Entertaining in Advance

By ALISON ARNOLD

Symphony Hall, usually the scene of highly intellectual concerts, went wild last evening when the syncopated strains of Benny Goodman's swing orchestra resounded throughout its chaste interior. Judging by the size of the audience, the enterprising committee were wise in choosing Boston's first "swing" concert as a means of swelling the funds of the Infants' Hospital, and certainly enthusiasm ran riot. The very first notes of the music started feet tapping, and soon the hall shook from its foundations to its very rafters with the rhythmic beat of thousands of stamping feet. The applause was simply deafening and was augmented with cheers, whistles and shrieks. Many in the audience were so affected by the overwhelming swing of the music that they literally threw themselves about in a perfect frenzy of delight, jumping up and down in their seats and throwing their arms about madly. The rear of the first balcony was the cynosure of all eyes, as there were several there who were making violent gesticulations in time to the music, and it was all rather like a bacchanalian orgy or an old-time revival meeting. At any rate, it looks as though "swing" were the thing, and that what one elderly member of the audience aptly described as an "extraordinarily exhilarating performance," is not a fad, but part of the life of the 1930's.

Naturally, before such a long-heralded event, there were many dinner parties, the hostesses bringing their guests on to the concert afterwards. Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk, chairman of the committee arranging the benefit, had as her dinner guests, her brother, Mr. S. Harry Fessenden, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Rogerson. Among those dining with Mrs. Alfred Kidder, 2nd, a member of the committee, were Mr. and Mrs. Richard King Thorndike, Jr. With her navy frock, Mrs. Kidder wore a silver fox crepe and a straw hat with a large blue bow, and Mrs. Thorndike was in navy with touches of white.

Gives Dinner

Dining with Mrs. Morgan Harris were Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Heard, Mr. and Mrs. John Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Peabody and Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Lapham. Entertaining at dinner at their Commonwealth Avenue home were Mr. and Mrs. Francis I. Amory, whose guests were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Blumer and Mr. Reginald Boardman, and still others giving dinner parties were Mr. and Mrs. Philip Stockton and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cunningham.

Miss Julia Barbour, who was a member of the committee, instead of raising her eyebrows at the "swing" version of "Loch Lomond", was listening intently, as she definitely proved her prowess as a "crooner" at the recent Vincent Club show, and is much interested in the various methods. Another committee member we noted was Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, who wore navy and pink, a combination of colors that is very popular this spring.

Mre. S. Huntingtou Wolcott, who confessed a desire to learn more about this thing called "swing," was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Charles Devens. Sitting nearby were Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth and her daughter, Miss Evelyn Hollingsworth. Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, her wine red gown threaded with gold, was apparently fascinated by the abandoned girations going on up in the balcony.

Mrs. George H. Swift, who topped her gown of lustrous black satin with a sable cape, kept putting her white-gloved hands up to her temples during the swingiest bits, and Mr. Swift, who accompanied her, seemed somewhat bewildered by it all. With them were their younger daughter, Miss Lucile Swift, in slim black, and Miss Dorothy Preston, her taffeta frock printed with tulips.

Sitting near the front was Mrs. John L. Grandin, who wore a chinchilla cape over her hyacinth blue gown, and with her was her daughter, Miss Isabella Grandin, in a red frock and an unusual feathered cape. Mrs. Austin B. Osgood looked very stunning in a deep wine red frock with which she wore a yellow bolero, and a cluster of wine red and yellow flowers atop her sleek black coiffure.

Attending together were Mr. and Mrs. W. Davis Taylor and Mr. and Mrs. James Hammond, Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Hammond both wearing gay prints. Also wearing a spring-like print was Mrs. Joseph W. Woods Miss Peggy Hardwick was enchanting in navy blue, with which she wore a silver fox scarf and a fetching little black bonnet that tied under her chin and was trimmed with lilies-of-the-valley.

Seen in Foyer

Strolling about the foyer during the intermission were Mr. and Mrs. John Yerxa, Mrs. Yerxa wearing sables with her black costume. Mrs. Nelson Aldrich wore her becoming military cape of French blue, and Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth, Jr., topped her print with a royal blue wrap on which was fastened a huge red rose. Mrs. George H. Lyman, Jr., was gowned in beige lace, and Mrs. Louis Curtis wore black splashed with clusters of chartreuse flowers.

Chatting together in the foyer were Miss Josephine Emery and Miss Mary Elizabeth Lowe. Arriving a bit late was Miss Patricia Phelan, wearing with her navy skirt and pleated blouse of shell pink, a tiny bonnet with a brim of the same delicate shade and a filmy veil sprinkled with tiny pink pin dots. Mrs. Karl Adams wore turquoise blue, and Mrs. Marshal Fabyan, Jr., was in navy blue with an off-the-face hat adorned with a navy and pink bow.

There were mny debutantes and sub-debutantes present. One of the cunningest of the new crop was piquant Miss Polly Blodgett, who wore a corsage of spring flowers with her navy blue frock and tiny white bonnet. Sitting together were Miss Elizabeth Motley, wrapped in a cape of pink ostrich feathers, and Miss Katharine Putnam, in black and white, both debutantes of the season just over. Up in the balcony were two of their sister debutantes, Miss Nancy Nye and Miss Evelyn Lilly.

Hurrying in just before the concert began was Miss Lucy Pope, in

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
MIRROR

MAY 4 - 1938

Music

By JON BYRON

Serge Koussevitzky, Nathan Milstein and Colette D'Arville are among those sailing today on the Normandie...The concert tomorrow night at Town Hall, for the benefit of the Social Workers Organization, will feature Reed Lawton, well-known baritone...Helen Alexander, radio soprano, makes her operatic debut this Saturday night in "Rigoletto" at the Hippodrome.

Make a note of the following dates of the Young People's Concerts in Carnegie next season: Nov. 19, Dec. 17, Jan. 14 and 28, Feb. 18 and March 18. Ernest Schelling will conduct...Kirsten Flagstad will tour Australia and New Zealand for three months—June to September. This will be her first visit to these countries ...Gene Raymond of the movies, who is making a personal appearance at the Paramount starting May 11, composes ballads in his spare time.

An all-German program will be presented by the Inter-Scholastic German Glee Club at Carnegie this Sunday afternoon, for the benefit of German and Austrian refugees

---

B. Globe May 2/38

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Benny Goodman's Orchestra

"Swing" reigned at Symphony Hall last night, when Benny Goodman and his orchestra gave a concert for the benefit of the Infants' Hospital. The hall was filled, and extra seats had to be placed upon the stage. This enormous audience, mostly of young people—whose cheering and whistling oftentimes broke in upon a conspicuously displayful detail of "swing"—showed by their terrific applause the public's esteem for this popular music favorite of the day. Heads bobbed and feet tapped in rhythm from beginning to end of the concert.

"Swing," as Irving Kolodin's well-written program notes pointed out, is free improvisation added to jazz. That is, an imaginative and technically gifted player simply adds his own rhythmic or melodic decorations to the tune in hand; when a first-rate popular orchestra composed of such capable players joins in this sort of decoration, the result is first-class "swing." As Mr. Kolodin further emphasizes, the essential nature of "swing" cannot be put down in printed music; it is a matter of performance at a given moment.

The emphasis of Benny Goldman's orchestra is upon brass instruments, and their style of popular music is distinctly on the noisy side, at least to one brought up on Bach, Beethoven and a little Paul Whiteman. There are some technical virtuosos in this orchestra, witness the extremely high notes produced consistently upon trumpets and other instruments, and, primarily, upon the clarinet by Mr. Goodman himself.

It was a study in rhythm when the Goodman Trio (Mr. Goodman, Teddy Wilson, piano, and Lionel Hampton, drums) joined in a melange of "hot" tunes rendered hotter still by the spirited style of these three. From "Sweet Sue," the program traversed "Sometimes I'm Happy," "King Porter Stomp," the "Sensation Rag," "I'm Comin' Virginia (with solo by Bobby Hackett), "Don't Be That Way" and other hit tunes of the present and immediate past, together with a few numbers which have enjoyed unusually long life in a field where short and snappy popularity is the rule. Subsequently Martha Tilton joined in a vocal refrain or two, and Dave Tough, drummer, joined with Messrs. Goodman, Wilson and Hampton in various items.

C. W. D.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

MAY 6 - 1938

Koussevitzky Visits Canaan Music Hall

Canaan — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the musical festival the second season at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., in August, was on a tour of inspection at the music hall one day this week.

The grounds have been seeded and paths laid out. New roads leading to the hall are being constructed and landscaped. The builders now are putting on the sound-proof siding of the hall which will be inaugurated on Aug. 4 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and prominent soloists will appear with the orchestra for the inauguration.

THE BOSTON HERALD, MO[illegible] MAY 2, 1938

Symphony Hall Is Scene of Boston's First 'Swing' Music Concert and Band Appear

Music Teachers'
Review
B'klyn. N. Y.

Mar.-APR - 1938

BEETHOVEN
V-15707 to
V-14711

SYMPHONY No. 6 IN F MAJOR (Opus 68). Played by the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arturo Toscanini. Five 12-inch records in Victor Musical Masterpiece Album No. 417.

Richard Strauss used to say that an orchestra was no better than its conductor. We have repeated proof of the validity of this statement in the miracles Arturo Toscanini performs with the men of whatever orchestra he directs, be it the Salzburg Festival Orchestra, or the New York Philharmonic.

Asked the secret of his power, Toscanini simply says he makes the men play what is written in the score. He makes them observe dynamics, note values and minutae that escape other conductors' notice. But is that all there is to it? Indeed not. Toscanini makes the orchestra enter directly and entirely into the spirit of the composer at white heat. Never for a moment does he relax in his search for all that the scores have to offer. He re-creates the music, a feat which represents the very summit of man's ability in the artistic world.

This glorious recording of Beethoven's Sixth by the British Broadcasting Company is another proof of Toscanini's unique gifts. Previous recordings have proven it and future recordings will again prove it, for Toscanini will never give his stamp of approval to the release of a recording by him unless he thinks it comes up to his exacting standards. The Victor Company can be proud of this album.

●

BACH, J. S.
V-14635 to
V-14644, and
V-14645 to
V-14652-S
and
V-14653 to
V-14661

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW, sung by the combined choirs of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, and played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. All under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Ten 12-inch discs in Victor Masterpiece Set M-411 (Volume I), eight 12-inch discs in Victor Masterpiece Set M-412 (Volume II), and nine 12-inch discs in Victor Masterpiece Set M-413 (Volume III).

Of the five Passions that Bach is said to have written, only the St. John and the more magnificent St. Matthew Passions have come to us as unquestioned works of the master. The St. Luke Passion is of doubtful authenticity. In its earliest form, the St. Matthew Passion was written in 1729 when Bach was 44 years of age. It was performed on the Good-Friday of that year in St. Thomas' Church, Leipsic, where Bach held the office of Cantor from 1723 until his death in 1750. The extended form of the Passion was probably not completed before 1740.

B. Her.
May 2/38

MUSIC

BENNY GOODMAN

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

Benny Goodman and his swing orchestra gave a concert last night in Symphony Hall for the benefit of the Infants Hospital. There was a capacity audience present to listen to a program comprising selections from the repertoire of jazz, both new and old, adapted to the type of performance widely known and contemporarily popular as swing.

The dramatic and literary critics are better equipped, constantly rubbing shoulders as they do with vulgar productions in their respective arts, than are we, the music critics. We are perpetually in the clouds, so that it is as if a dramatic critic reviewed nothing but Shakespeare and Moliere, Ibsen and Racine. Thus, when Mr. Goodman triumphantly presents his forces at Symphony Hall and duplicates his recent success in Carnegie Hall, we are bewildered and secretly would prefer to retire into a corner and blaspheme.

Not so the audience. How they yelled and whistled; how, as the term in the racy vocabulary of swing goes, they "jittered!" If we may again borrow a word from that lexicon and once and for all define our own category as listener, what a spot for a "long underwear man" (classical musician)! In short, it was a function that invites the criticism of a student of sociology and one, incidentally, who is versed in the psychological reactions of the Holy Rollers. He, at least, would find a rich field for examination in the audience.

The New York critics, confronted with a precisely similar occasion, went to it with a high-minded determination to evaluate swing. They would pay it the compliment, which could hardly be withheld, of remarkable technical skill; but they would conclude that swing was a passing craze, like clock-golf or mah-jong. Such was the conclusion that we had privately reached; and the concert did but confirm it. The trouble is that swing or any other type of expression that may seem temporary is really a development of our contemporary mind and must be accepted as significant.

Mr. Goodman brings this type of music to a degree of proficiency that is probably best appreciated by the enthusiasts for swing. There are some people, odd as it may appear, who can find nothing of any interest or emotional appeal in swing. Such can readily understand the marvel of playing a clarinet or a trumpet or a saxophone at high speed and for a long time and as the spirit moves the soloist. On the other hand, we are compelled to ask if the enthusiasts are so competent. They, or at least those surrounding us, hardly bothered to listen and applauded whenever they felt like it.

In short they were stirred by rhythm alone. This is, of course, the most important element in music. Without it no music is effective. But when rhythm usurps all the other elements and so rules the roost that its reiterative insistence claims all the attention, may we not question whether this is music? The rhythm has to be so aggressive that there is no possibility of subtlety or variation. Schumann, for one, was capable of infinitely more variety in this department of music than any of these swing arrangements. And the business of technical cadenzas on a rhythmic and harmonic pedal point, as it were, can grow for some of us agonizingly tedious.

Experiments in the arts are good fun when they arouse violent disagreement. The fact that there are people who line up on one side or another of the swing fence is useful. Perhaps we can eventually come to grips with what we mean by good and bad music. Mr. Goodman and his band at any rate go about their business with perfect efficiency. They leave it to others to disturb the air with problems of aesthetics. It is theirs to give and the audience's to enjoy the product of their improvisations. A sensible man would instruct us to take it or leave it. And, were it not that the instinct of criticism is in us as strong as, for others, the urge of swing, we should have quickly obeyed the latter part of his advice!

Many Dinners Precede Program By Benny Goodman's Orchestra

Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk, Mrs. Alfred Kidder, 2d, And Mrs. Morgan Harris Among Those Entertaining in Advance

By ALISON ARNOLD

Symphony Hall, usually the scene of highly intellectual concerts, went wild last evening when the syncopated strains of Benny Goodman's swing orchestra resounded throughout its chaste interior. Judging by the size of the audience, the enterprising committee were wise in choosing Boston's first "swing" concert as a means of swelling the funds of the Infants' Hospital, and certainly enthusiasm ran riot. The very first notes of the music started feet tapping, and soon the hall shook from its foundations to its very rafters with the rhythmic beat of thousands of stamping feet. The applause was simply deafening and was augmented with cheers, whistles and shrieks. Many in the audience were so affected by the overwhelming swing of the music that they literally threw themselves about in a perfect frenzy of delight, jumping up and down in their seats and throwing their arms about madly. The rear of the first balcony was the cynosure of all eyes, as there were several there who were making violent gesticulations in time to the music, and it was all rather like a bacchanalian orgy or an old-time revival meeting. At any rate, it looks as though "swing" were the thing, and that what one elderly member of the audience aptly described as an "extraordinarily exhilarating performance," is not a fad, but part of the life of the 1930's.

Naturally, before such a long-heralded event, there were many dinner parties, the hostesses bringing their guests on to the concert afterwards. Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk, chairman of the committee arranging the benefit, had as her dinner guests, her brother, Mr. S. Harry Fessenden, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Rogerson. Among those dining with Mrs. Alfred Kidder, 2nd, a member of the committee, were Mr. and Mrs. Richard King Thorndike, Jr. With her navy frock, Mrs. Kidder wore a silver fox crepe and a straw hat with a large blue bow, and Mrs. Thorndike was in navy with touches of white.

Gives Dinner

Dining with Mrs. Morgan Harris were Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Heard, Mr. and Mrs. John Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Peabody and Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Lapham. Entertaining at dinner at their Commonwealth Avenue home were Mr. and Mrs. Francis I. Amory, whose guests were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Blumer and Mr. Reginald Boardman, and still others giving dinner parties were Mr. and Mrs. Philip Stockton and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cunningham.

Miss Julia Barbour, who was a member of the committee, instead of raising her eyebrows at the "swing" version of "Loch Lomond", was listening intently, as she definitely proved her prowess as a "crooner" at the recent Vincent Club show, and is much interested in the various methods. Another committee member we noted was Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, who wore navy and pink, a combination of colors that is [illegible] popular this spring.

Mrs. S. Huntington W[illegible], who confessed a desire to learn more about this thing called "swing," was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Charles Devens. Sitting nearby were Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth and her daughter, Miss Evelyn Hollingsworth. Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, her wine red gown threaded with gold, was apparently fascinated by the abandoned girations going on up in the balcony.

Mrs. George H. Swift, who topped her gown of lustrous black satin with a sable cape, kept putting her white-gloved hands up to her temples during the swingiest bits, and Mr. Swift, who accompanied her, seemed somewhat bewildered by it all. With them were their younger daughter, Miss Lucile Swift, in slim black, and Miss Dorothy Preston, her taffeta frock printed with tulips.

Sitting near the front was Mrs. John L. Grandin, who wore a chinchilla cape over her hyacinth blue gown, and with her was her daughter, Miss Isabella Grandin, in a red frock and an unusual feathered cape. Mrs. Austin B. Osgood looked very stunning in a deep wine red frock with which she wore a yellow bolero, and a cluster of wine red and yellow flowers atop her sleek black coiffure.

Attending together were Mr. and Mrs. W. Davis Taylor and Mr. and Mrs. James Hammond, Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Hammond both wearing gay prints. Also wearing a spring-like print was Mrs. Joseph W. Woods. Miss Peggy Hardwick was enchanting in navy blue, with which she wore a silver fox scarf and a fetching little black bonnet that tied under her chin and was trimmed with lilies-of-the-valley.

Seen in Foyer

Strolling about the foyer during the intermission were Mr. and Mrs. John Yerxa, Mrs. Yerxa wearing sables with her black costume. Mrs. Nelson Aldrich wore her becoming military cape of French blue, and Mrs. Amor Hollingsworth, Jr., topped her print with a royal blue wrap on which was fastened a huge red rose. Mrs. George H. Lyman, Jr., was gowned in beige lace, and Mrs. Louis Curtis wore black splashed with clusters of chartreuse flowers.

Chatting together in the foyer were Miss Josephine Emery and Miss Mary Elisabeth Lowe. Arriving a bit late was Miss Patricia Phelan, wearing with her navy skirt and pleated blouse of shell pink, a tiny bonnet with a brim of the same delicate shade and a filmy veil sprinkled with tiny pink pin dots. Mrs. Karl Adams wore turquoise blue, and Mrs. Marshal Fabyan, Jr., was in navy blue with an off-the-face hat adorned with a navy and pink bow.

There were mny debutantes and sub-debutantes present. One of the cunningest of the new crop was piquant Miss Polly Blodgett, who wore a corsage of spring flowers with her navy blue frock and tiny white bonnet. Sitting together were Miss Elizabeth Motley, wrapped in a cape of pink ostrich feathers, and Miss Katharine Putnam, in black and white, both debutantes of the season just over. Up in the balcony were two of their sister debutantes, Miss Nancy Nye and Miss Evelyn Lilly.

Hurrying in just before the concert began was Miss Lucy Pope, in

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
MIRROR
MAY 4 - 1938

Music

—By JON BYRON—

Serge Koussevitzky, Nathan Milstein and Colette D'Arville are among those sailing today on the Normandie. . . The concert tomorrow night at Town Hall, for the benefit of the Social Workers Organization, will feature Reed Lawton, well-known baritone. . . Helen Alexander, radio soprano, makes her operatic debut this Saturday night in "Rigoletto" at the Hippodrome.

Make a note of the following dates of the Young People's Concerts in Carnegie next season: Nov. 19, Dec. 17, Jan. 14 and 28, Feb. 18 and March 18. Ernest Schelling will conduct. . . Kirsten Flagstad will tour Australia and New Zealand for three months—June to September. This will be her first visit to these countries . . . Gene Raymond of the movies, who is making a personal appearance at the Paramount starting May 11, composes ballads in his spare time.

An all-German program will be presented by the Inter-Scholastic German Glee Club at Carnegie this Sunday afternoon, for the benefit of German and Austrian refugees

---

3 3

B. Globe May 2/38

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Benny Goodman's Orchestra

"Swing" reigned at Symphony Hall last night, when Benny Goodman and his orchestra gave a concert for the benefit of the Infants' Hospital. The hall was filled, and extra seats had to be placed upon the stage. This enormous audience, mostly of young people—whose cheering and whistling oftentimes broke in upon a conspicuously displayful detail of "swing"—showed by their terrific applause the public's esteem for this popular music favorite of the day. Heads bobbed and feet tapped in rhythm from beginning to end of the concert.

"Swing," as Irving Kolodin's well-written program notes pointed out, is free improvisation added to jazz. That is, an imaginative and technically gifted player simply adds his own rhythmic or melodic decorations to the tune in hand; when a first-rate popular orchestra composed of such capable players joins in this sort of decoration, the result is first-class "swing." As Mr. Kolodin further emphasizes, the essential nature of "swing" cannot be put down in printed music; it is a matter of performance at a given moment.

The emphasis of Benny Goldman's orchestra is upon brass instruments, and their style of popular music is distinctly on the noisy side, at least to one brought up on Bach, Beethoven and a little Paul Whiteman. There are some technical virtuosos in this orchestra, witness the extremely high notes produced consistently upon trumpets and other instruments, and, primarily, upon the clarinet by Mr. Goodman himself.

It was a study in rhythm when the Goodman Trio (Mr. Goodman, Teddy Wilson, piano, and Lionel Hampton, drums) joined in a melange of "hot" tunes rendered hotter still by the spirited style of these three. From "Sweet Sue," the program traversed "Sometimes I'm Happy," "King Porter Stomp," the "Sensation Rag," "I'm Comin' Virginia (with solo by Bobby Hackett), "Don't Be That Way" and other hit tunes of the present and immediate past, together with a few numbers which have enjoyed unusually long life in a field where short and snappy popularity is the rule. Subsequently Martha Tilton joined in a vocal refrain or two, and Dave Tough, drummer, joined with Messrs. Goodman, Wilson and Hampton in various items.

C. W. D.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
MAY 6 - 1938

Koussevitzky Visits Canaan Music Hall

Canaan — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the musical festival the second season at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., in August, was on a tour of inspection at the music hall one day this week.

The grounds have been seeded and paths laid out. New roads leading to the hall are being constructed and landscaped. The builders now are putting on the sound-proof siding of the hall which will be inaugurated on Aug. 4 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and prominent soloists will appear with the orchestra for the inauguration.

May 2/38 MONDAY, THE BOSTON HERALD

(34)

Shades of Mozart Sway to Swing As Benny Goodman Goes to Town

Staid Symphony Hall, long the stronghold of the compositions of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms and other classicists, succumbed to the rythmic god of the younger generation last night and opened its sacrosanct portals to "swing," in the person of Benny Goodman and his orchestra.

While there was no frenzied dancing in the aisles as at Mr. Goodman's concerts in New York, the capacity crowd of more than 4000 vigorously applauded the "jam session."

Tapping feet, nodding heads and the synchronized hunching of shoulders testified to the audience's approval of "sweet swing," "Dixieland swing," and plain "hot swingaroos."

Several of the younger persons in the audience thumped their knees with open palms in an abandoned, sub-conscious imitation of Lionel Hampden, Negro member of the Benny Goodman trio, who did a whirling dervish act on the drums during a rendition of "After You've Gone."

Old as well as young noisily approved the band's efforts in tracing the history of modern jazz from "Sensation Rag," an original Dixieland Band composition, to "Shine," a Louis Armstrong piece published in 1929.

At only one time during the entire performance did the swing enthusiasts lose their sense of propriety. Several hats sailed from the balconies and not a few cowboy whoops sliced the conservative air after the playing of "Sing, Sing, Sing," an improvised "jam" featuring a cannibalistic tom-tom solo by Davie Tough.

But most of the youngsters merely watched in rapt admiration as trumpeter Harry Jones, trombonist Vernon Brown or clarinetist Benny Goodman, himself, obliged the fans with a "hot break."

Several tuxedos and evening dresses dotted the large crowd, but the bulk of the addicts kept to the informality of the evening by wearing street clothes.

During the intermission the corridors of the hall were filled with officious groups discussing in technical swing terms the abilities and performances of the individual members of the band.

Swing fans and symphony patrons had their taste of a "swing concert" and all appeared satisfied.

SWEET SWING, SWEET CHARITY

Benny Goodman presenting Mrs. F. Wadsworth Busk, chairman of the entertainment committee of the Ladies Aid of the Infants' Hospital, with a check for the hospital during intermission at the swing concert in Symphony Hall last night.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 2 - 1938

Koussevitzky Has First Glimpse of Tanglewood Shed

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had his first glimpse of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood today and was delighted. He and the orchestra will appear at the shed in August.

Arrives at Noon

The conductor arrived in Pittsfield on the noon train accompanied by Edward T. Taft, Henry B. Sawyer, trustees of the orchestra; George E. Judd, the manager; Dr. Archibald T. Davison of Harvard University, and professor Richard B. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the shed. After luncheon at the Wendell Hotel, the party accompanied by several members of the Festival board of trustees motored to Tanglewood.

Later this afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky and Dr. Davison were scheduled to talk to subchairmen at Red Lion Inn. Indications pointed to a record turnout for this meeting. It was expected that the membership total will have reached 1000 by this afternoon's meeting.

Many Visitors

A constant stream of visitors appeared at Tanglewood yesterday to view the construction. Joseph Franz, trustee, and engineer in charge of construction, estimated that nearly 1000 automobiles were parked during the day on the grounds.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

MAY 1 - 1938

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

Mr. Goehr's accompaniment is on the whole well proportioned and well timed. The orchestral enunciation of the opening theme of the second movement is quite a bit too slow, but Mr. Petri corrects the pacing with the entrance of the piano. From the mechanical aspect the recording is admirable.

The Mozart B flat Divertimento was among the recordings recently released by Victor in co-operation with the New Friends of Music, and while Richard Burgin, the first violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who plays the solo part therein, is not featured as is Mr. Szigeti in Columbia's set, his tone emerges with greater warmth and roundness than the Hungarian violinist's and the playing of Arthur Fiedler's ensemble of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is immeasurably superior to that of Mr. Goberman's group. Columbia's recording, is however, remarkably smooth and free from surface noises.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

MAY 3 - 1938

Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, visited Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, the site of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, yesterday, and later met community chairmen of subscriptions for the Festival at a tea at the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge. Dr. Koussevitsky sailed today for a vacation in Europe. He said that he expected to be back in this country by June 15.

The complete program which the Boston Symphony will play at the Festival has been arranged as follows:

Thursday evening, Aug. 4: Chorus from the canta "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" No. 80, Bach; Chorale from the cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott"; and Beethoven's Ninth symphony, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Arthur Fiedler and the Cecilia society of Boston will sing the final chorus.

Saturday evening, Aug. 6: Symphony in E flat No. 99, Haydn; "La Mer," three symphonic sketches Debussey; Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Sibelius.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 7: "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra, Mozart; Symphony in E minor No. 4, Op. 8, Brahms; Music for the Theater, Copeland; "Ma Mere l'Oye" (Mother Goose) five childrens' pieces, Ravel; Symphonic poem, "The Pines of Rome," Resjhigi.

Thursday evening, Aug. 11: An all-Wagner program, including Introduction to Act III "Die Walkyrie," "Ride of the Walkyries"; Final scene of Act III "Die Walkyrie"; Act III "Siegfried," with soloists taking the parts of Wanderer (Wotan), Erda, Siegfried, and Bruennhilde.

Saturday evening, Aug. 13: Symphony No, 6 in F major, Op. 68, "Pastoral," Beethoven; Andante tranquillo from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor, Henry Hadley; Symphony No. 6 in B minor, "Pathetique," Op. 74, Tschainkovsky.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14: Symphony in B flat, No. 1, Op. 38, Schumann; "Tapiola," a tone poem for orchestra, Sibelius; Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73, Brahms.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

MAY 3 - 1938

Beethoven Work To Open Festival

Serge Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with choral finale for the inauguration of the Berkshire Symphonic festival's music shed at Tanglewood August 4. The Cecilia society chorus of Boston and four vocal soloists will appear with the orchestra on this occasion.

At the concert August 11 which opens the second series of the festival, scenes from music dramas of Wagner will be presented in concert form with soloists. The program will include the last scene from "Die Walkure" and the complete third act of "Siegfried."

Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, performed last year and at once closely associated with the beautiful natural setting at Tanglewood, will again be played. Other symphonies will include the First of Sibelius, the Second of Brahms, Tchaikovsky's Sixth (Pathetique).

Among shorter works will be the Brahms-Haydn Variations; "Tapiola" by Sibelius; "La Mer" by Debussy; "Ma mere l'oye" by Ravel; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Caprice espagnole"; Respighi's "Pines of Rome"; "Kije" Suite by Prokofiev.

A work by Henry Hadley will be played in memory of the first conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic festival. Other American composers to be represented will be Aaron Copeland with his "Music for the Theatre," and Walter Piston with his Concerto for Orchestra.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 4 - 1938

Ocean Travelers

Passengers sailing for Europe today on the French liner Normandie include Baron Silvercruys, Belgian Minister to Canada; Count de Montale, Consul General for Albania in New York, with Countess Montale; Dr. Alexander Silverman and Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon Whitehouse.

Others are Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor; Cecil Smith, president of the British Chamber of Commerce; Mr. and Mrs. Emile Mathis, Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Bellamore, Dean William F. Russell of Teachers College, Arde Bulova, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Patrick Donaldson, Lieut. Col. Joseph H. Levey and Count and Countess Rene de Chambrun.

The stage and screen will be represented on the Normandie by Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, Madeleine Carroll, Alexander Korda, producer; Bert Wheeler, Tilly Losch, Val Gielgud, Leon Leonidoff and Irving Asher.

The list of the Washington of the United States Lines, leaving for the Channel ports, includes Dr. Leopold Godowsky, composer and pianist; Mr. and Mrs. George Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. A. Parker Bryant.

Others are Mrs. LaMotte T. Cohu, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Kennedy, Mrs. Henry Brinton Coxe, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Janssen and the Most Rev. J. J. Cantwell, Archbishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Los Angeles.

Among those booked to sail for Ireland and Scotland on the Cameronia of the Anchor Line are Mrs. Catherine Downie, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Roeskin and Daniel Thornton.

The Bergensfjord of the Norwegian America Line, departing for Bergen and Oslo, will have among her passengers Christoffer Hannevig Jr., Einar Berger, Mrs. Walter Fletcher and Mrs. Astrid Thomassen.

Aboard the Munson liner Southern Cross, returning from East Coast ports of South America, are Admiral Henry B. Wilson, U. S. N., retired, formerly Commander in Chief of the United States Atlantic Fleet, accompanied by Mrs. Wilson; Mr. and Mrs. Harvey M. Thorndike and Mr. and Mrs. Willard Sulley.

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

APR 4 - 1938

When the Harvard Glee Club comes to town to present its extraordinary program of classical music at Emery Auditorium at half after eight on the evening of Wednesday, April 6, Cincinnati will listen to a collegiate glee club that has been heralded for many successive years as has probably no other amateur institution of its kind in the world today!

Not only has it been received with acclaim in this country, both on its native heath—Harvard University and its contiguous territory—and en tour through the United States, but moreover in Europe—even in France, where music is a part of every educated person's curriculum, encomiums unrestrained were showered upon these gifted, well-schooled songsters from Harvard University.

In France, Paris authorities went so far as to insist that a similar distinction should be given, by training of the glee clubs and other singing societies of that cultured country, in order that the youth of France might in time show the same musical strength as that displayed by the singing cohorts of the Harvard Glee Club.

THE EMINENT DR. MUCH.

It is illuminating to know that even as long ago as 1917 the Harvard Glee Club was invited by Dr. Carl Much, one of the most famous symphony orchestra directors of his day, to sing the Brahms Schicksalslied and a Bach Cantata with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, over which at that time this preeminent conductor presided. The Radcliffe Choral Society joined forces on that famous occasion, this memorable event being an historic one musically in the annals of these two educational institutions.

MAJOR CLASSICS.

Since that time the Harvard Glee Club has annually sung with the Boston Symphony and the Choral Society of Radcliffe such works as Beethoven's unforgettable Missa Solennis and the Ninth Symphony—major classics which the Cincinnati May Festival Chorus has often interpreted in this city's glamorous biennial feasts of song in Music Hall.

To such Harvard Glee Club successes there have long been added Brahms's "German Requiem," Bach's B Minor Mass, and the Saint Matthew Passion—which was repeated last year, the entire work being recorded on 20 records by Victor.

Cincinnati remembers these same superb choral works as among Cincinnati's May Music Festival successes, such as have been presented here almost from the inception—half a century ago—of that organization, and continued ever since in this same classical tradition.

MOST MEMORABLE.

It was following one of these concerts presented by the Harvard Glee Club that such a preeminent critic as Mr. H. T. Parker wrote in the Boston Transcript (which funny man once declared was "the Bible of the Bostonian") that:

"Then began the most memorable concert that Boston has known in 20 years, and a performance of Brahms's "German Requiem" that outbids still longer memories.

"Through two hours the audience had dwelt in the rarest of experiences in a Boston concert hall—the pleasure of and the admiration, the wonder and the transport that choral music such as this "Requiem" and choral singing as by these choirs may evoke. To the end these sensations were sustained. In the progress they were also intensified."

But that is not all!

The Harvard Glee Club has given two performances of Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," one with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, and one with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Stokowsky!

Fame can no farther go in the realm of the Singing Society!

Added to the list of reservations already announced, over the week end the following smart and interesting names have augmented this brilliant array, that promises to bring out a record throng at Emery Auditorium on Wednesday at half after eight o'clock:

Among those who will occupy boxes for this occasion are:

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wyman, who will have as their guests Mr. and Mrs. John Hoffman and Miss Bertha Baur.

Mr. and Mrs. Abbott Thayer, who will be accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Thurston Merrell, Mr. Merrell being President of the Harvard Club in Cincinnati.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Wulsin, Mr. and Mrs. Murray Seasongood, Mr. Charles H. Stephens, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Erastus Allen, Mr. Harry A. Freiberg, and Mr. and Mrs. John J. Rowe.

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
Club in 80 yr, 1938
APR 2 - 1938

THE long-anticipated arrival of the Harvard Glee Club, on April 6, at Emery Auditorium, approaches its appogee, for with the passing of recent weeks the coming of these collegiate singers—(considered the best in their genre in America and in Europe) has been heralded far and near.

As a matter of fact, the Harvard Glee Club, which will be so enthusiastically welcomed at Emery Auditorium on April 6, has built up in the space of 19 years an enviable, artistic reputation in both the United States and in Europe. It is therefore recognized as one of the ablest choral organizations of its type in this country, if not in the world.

GOOD MUSIC.

This Glee Club's programs are devoted entirely to what the elect term "good music"—ancient and modern, such as the church scores of Palestrina, Lotti, Vittoria, or Bach, followed by compositions of Gluck, Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Brahms, as well as those of the modern French, Russian, and American composers. Then, possibly, there will be a group of folk songs and a chorus by Handel, Wagner, or of Beethoven for the final number, or else a chorus from Gilbert and Sullivan.

The success of the Glee Club in its chosen field can be traced directly to the efforts of one man, Dr Archibald T. Davison, of the Harvard Music Department. By his winning personality and inspiring leadership he has instilled with his chorus—drawn not from trained singers, but from men of ordinary musical ability—a love for good music. Mr. G. Wallace Woodworth, his successor, certainly deserves the same honor, all agree. His men sing for recreation, but gladly undergo a great deal of hard work that the quality of their singing may not fall short of the music.

In addition to an annual tour including the larger musical centers of the East and Middle West, the Glee Club gives each year a joint concert with the Radcliffe Choral Society in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, as well as performances in nearby cities, schools, and colleges. It has sung with the Boston, Philadelphia, and Cleveland Symphony Orchestra on their regular programs and on special occasions.

HISTORY.

In 1919, solely upon the initiative of its undergraduate officers, the Harvard Glee Club, founded in 1858, resolved to devote itself entirely to good music, receiving in this the highest commendation of the music loving public and of the press. At this time the Club threw aside the pleasant, but essentially conventional and commonplace, music which college glee clubs have always sung; divorced itself from the banjo and mandolin clubs of the college, undertook the enterpiment of the singing of first-rate music, classical and modern, and suddenly came into prominence as one of the outstanding men's choruses of the United States.

When asked to coach the Glee Club in 1912, Dr. Davison readily agreed to do so, and in the years that followed gradually revealed to his men the fascination of really fine choral works, showing them that they could aim higher than the "Bulldog on the Bank" type of music without being stigmatized as "highbrow." It was due to this gradual education in "fine music" that the officers of the Glee Club finally decided to make the move which placed the Harvard Glee Club in its present position in the musical world, and which has won recognition of the highest type from world-famous critics.

With its adoption of "fine music," the club expanded from seventy-five men to its present membership of two hundred men. The mere fact that such an expansion could, and did, take place gives ample evidence that not only was the move sanctioned by the world of music, but was given the wholehearted support of the undergraduates.

Within the last ten years such artists as Mary Garden, Nikolai Orloff, Pablo Casals, Frieda Hempel, Fritz Kreisler, and Harold Bauer have appeared as assisting artists with this Glee Club.

Dr. Davison retired in 1934 as conductor of the club, and was succeeded by Mr. G. Wallace Woodworth, under whose direction the club carries on its aims and successes with the largest enrollment in its history.

MR WOODWORTH.

In G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, Dr. Davison felt that he had found an exceptionally capable substitute in whom he had full confidence. Mr. Woodworth has already proved that this confidence was well placed and that he is most competent to carry on the work of the Club and maintain the high standards which have been set. For several years he was the accompanist for the Glee Club, and four seasons ago acted as assistant conductor. He is now an assistant in the Division of Music at Harvard, and also director of the Radcliffe Choral Society.

He has won much praise in successfully training those collegiate organizations, for their performance of major works with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, at the same time preparing long programmes for the Glee Club's own twenty-odd concerts.

THE PRESS COMMENT!

The Boston Transcript—(H. T. Parker) has this to say: "—Mr. Woodworth is as assiduous as Dr. Davison for the moulded and shaded phrase, the euphonies of the inter-playing voices, the finesse of coloring and contrast, undulating line, clean-marked rhythm, the mood upon the matter of the music."

A. R. M. REMARKS.

"The conducting of Mr. Woodworth throughout the afternoon deserves a special word of praise. He is always in command of his forces—ahead of them, not following them as is sometimes the case with conductors who merely "also conduct." There was no hesitation in beat or in expression of intention. And his conception of his music was always a thoroughly matured one, both plastic and well-considered. For once a full choral concert with full orchestra accompanist and no ragged edges, the heavens be praised!"

Boston Herald—(Philip Hale): "Mr. Woodworth, who prepared the chorus, is to be heartily complimented and congratulated."

The Boston Post—(Warren S. Smith): "The performance yesterday was in many respects the finest of the three which Dr. Koussevitzky has given us. The present choir, trained this year by G. Wallace Woodworth, approaches more nearly the standard of a professional body of singers than did any of its predecessors. The tonal quality yesterday in all departments was excellent. Passages that would be difficult for a solo voice were sung with ease and accuracy by the various choirs."

The officers of the Harvard Glee Club include Messrs:

Edward L. Barnes, '38....President
Ernest Sachs, Jr., '38. Vice President
George W. Phillips, '39.....Secretary
Leonard Unger, '39........Manager
A. Llewellyn Jennings, '40......
Assistant Manager
Donald P. Todd, '40.......Librarian
Irving G. Fine, I. G...Accompanist
William W. Austin, '39..Accompanist

CHORAL MUSIC'S INFLUENCE.

When the officers of the Harvard Glee Club decided in 1919 that complete reorganization was necessary, and resolved to include in its programs good music only, they met, naturally, with a good deal of opposition on the part of the general public. The friends of the club, however, who thought that they knew its possibilities, had great confidence in Dr. Davison's ability as a conductor and "inspirer," and not only predicted a great success but also expressed their belief that other organizations would soon follow the Glee Club example.

This prediction has been fulfilled, as is testified by the number of inquiries received by the club for information regarding policies, rules, the form of organization, and the make-up of the programs. The demand for compositions sung by the club has been so great as to inspire Dr. Davison and Mr. Woodworth to publish a number of their arrangements, thus making available to other men's choruses music which they had prepared for the Harvard Glee Club.

The Harvard University Glee Club series of four volumes, published by E. C. Schirmer Music Company, containing a large number of the shorter works sung by the Glee Club, is now beyond the half-million mark, and the fifth volume is still on the press!

The publishers assure Harvard that "most libraries, public and private, are installing the collection in this form as a permanent reference for the best collection of male-voice choral music ever produced!"

The Harvard Glee Club's visit to Europe in 1921 aroused the greatest interest in choral singing there, and thus aided those who wished to found a large chorus in Paris. This organization, the "Chorale Francaise," is now well launched, and has met with great success. In further witness to the effect of this European tour, the "Petit Parisian" of July 31, 1921, declared:

"It seems that under the inspiration of the recent triumphal visit of the Harvard Glee Club the students of the University of Paris have determined upon the formation of a similar organization. Even certain schools have been spurred on in this way. The day when, not only in Paris, but also in our other great cities, all the schools can realize such a program, France will be ready to become a 'singing France, and truly artistic!"

MEMBERSHIP.

Many have remarked that it would seem to be impossible that an organization like the Harvard Glee Club, whose membership must necessarily undergo a change each season, can nevertheless maintain a high standard of performance, and even improve from year to year! However, this has not been difficult to accomplish, for competition for membership in the club is tremendous.

It is interesting to know that every year more men at Harvard try out for the Glee Club than for the football team!

Out of the three hundred and fifty candidates who report in the autumn about three hundred are retained for further training after they have passed a preliminary voice trial. These are the men from all departments of Harvard University, about two-thirds of them undergraduates, the rest, students from the various graduate schools. Few of them have nad serious musical training.

The men, thus provisionally retained, are rehearsed by Mr. Woodworth three times a week for about a month and then are given the real test—quartet trials, at which each man is given a numerical grade based on tone, time, accuracy of pitch, and technique. Those who have not improved sufficiently are suspended, and thus the membership is cut down to about two hundred. As a general rule this number is too large to permit all members to sing in every concert, or at all the out of town appearances of the Glee Club. About sixty of the best singers are chosen on the basis of attendance at quartet trial groups, attendance at rehearsal and dependability.

The graduate officers of the Harvard Glee Club are: The conductor —The Graduate Treasurer, — and Graduate Manager. The undergraduate officers are: The Manager, the First Assistant Manager, the Second Assistant Manager—The President, the Vice President, and the Secretary. The last three are elected, the first three are selected by competition.

RESERVATIONS.

Thus it is easily seen why the Harvard Glee Club has built up a unique prestige, one that even Europe — notably France which "knows its music" as part of its general education—wishes to follow in the wake, and adopt the training, that Harvard students receive through that alma maters' superbly constructive resourcefulness.

There is a reason, therefore, why Mr. William E. Stillwell, Jr., at his office at the Cincinnati Gas Company, at Fourth and Main Streets, is one of the busiest of people, in his leisure moments, as he doles out tickets to eager purchasers of seats for the famous Harvard Glee Club's maximum concert on April 6, at Emery Auditorium. This fact may well give pause to belated Harvardians and other citizens, desirous of being present on this occasion de gala.

For tickets promise soon to be at a premium. And none may anathamatize the powers that be in the Cincinnati Harvard Club, if there are no "good seats" left by Wednesday. "A word to the wise"—you—know!- Right-o! Then take the pencil, the pen, or the telephone in hand, and let Mr. Stillwell know the needs of Harvard men, of their families and their "cousins and their aunts"—not to mention the rather (s-h-u-s-s-h!) envious Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth and other collegians—whose glee clubs may some day likewise bring forth such encomiums as have been heaped upon Harvard's world-famous singing society, by professional, very difficult-to-please, musical critics! So its off to Mr. Stillwell's office—"in the morning." Eh? What?

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
MAY 4 - 1938

Booked to sail on the French liner Normandie are Baron Silvercruys, Belgian Minister to Canada; Alfred Lunt, and Lynn Fontanne; Madeleine Carroll, Tilly Losch, Alexander Korda, Arthur Hays Sulzberger, publisher of "The New York Times"; Cecil Smith, president of the British Empire Chamber of Commerce, and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
MAY 5 - 1938

SHED IS APPROVED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Being Erected for Berkshire Music Festival

AT TANGLEWOOD

Structure Will be Inaugurated Thursday Evening, August 4th, With Chorus and Chorale.

Before sailing for France yesterday for his annual vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, approved the new shed that has been erected at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge for the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

The shed, whose construction Dr. Koussevitzky viewed during his Berkshire visit, will be inaugurated Thursday evening August 4 at 8.30 with the chorus and the chorale from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott", and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in D Minor. The audience will be invited to join with the chorus in singing of the second verse of the Bach cantata. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston, of which Arthur Fiedler is conductor, will join with the orchestra in this inaugural program.

Debussy's "La Mer", whose performance by Dr. Koussevitzky and orchestra has won acclaim from many critics, will be on the program August 6.

An all-Wagner program with soloists will be presented Thursday evening of the second week. The program will include scenes from "Die Walkyrie" and Act III of "Siegfried" with soloists.

The program August 13 will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will perform the andante tranquillo from Dr. Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, Opus 60.

The Festival will close Sunday, August 14 with Schumann's Symphony in B Flat No. 1, Sibelius' "Tapiola", and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

There are already more than 1,000 memberships according to the Festival office. Members assure themselves of admission at the minimum, rate, secure preferred seats, and will have the privilege of attending a rehearsal of the orchestra at Tangewood at no charge. Memberships are priced at $5 for either series of concerts for one or two persons and $10 for six concerts for one or two persons. There is a slight additional charge for reserved seats. The membership list closes May 15. Complete information may be obtained from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME
MAY 4 - 1938

Boston Pop Concerts Will Begin Tonight

BOSTON, May 4. (U.P.)—With an advance sale of 25,000 seats, the 53rd season of the Pops open tonight at Symphony Hall.

The Pops are concerts at which popular classics are presented by a large group of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians under conductor Arthur Fiedler.

A feature of the opening program will be "Swing Stuff," composed by Robert McBride of Bennington (Vt.) College.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD
MAY 5 - 1938

MUSIC FESTIVAL PLANS COMPLETED

"Ein Feste Burg" to Inaugurate New Shed

Before sailing for France yesterday for his annual vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, announced the complete programs to be performed at Tanglewood for the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival in August.

The new shed, the construction of which Dr. Koussevitzky viewed during his Berkshire visit, will be inaugurated Thursday evening, August 4 at 8:30 with the chorus and the chorale from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in D minor. The audience will be invited to join with the chorus in singing of the second verse of the Bach cantata. The Cecilia Society chorus of Boston, of which Arthur Fiedler is conductor, will join with the orchestra in this inaugural program.

Debussy's "La Mer," the performance of which by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra has won acclaim from many critics, will be on the program August 6.

An all-Wagner program with soloists will be presented Thursday evening of the second week. The program will include scenes from "Die Walkyrie" and Act III of "Siegfried" with soloists.

Hadley Program

The program August 13 will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the festival. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will perform the andante tranquillo from Dr. Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B minor, Opus. 60.

The festival will close Sunday August 14 with Schumann's Symphony in B Flat No. 1, Sibelius' "Tapiola," and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D major.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
MAY 3 - 1938

ADVISORY BOARD OF BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL MET

A meeting of the advisory board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., was held yesterday afternoon at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Mass. Mrs. George Edman, of Pittsfield, Mass., executive vice president, presided. Reports were given by various members of the advisory board. Mrs. Edman stated that James E. Leath, president of the Columbia County Historical Society, had mailed to the membership of the society with the last issue of the Bulletin, the quarterly publication of the society, a circular explaining the work of the Berkshire Symphonic Society.

Mrs. Edman answered many questions, after which brief reports were given by George Edman, clerk, and by Henry W. Dwight, treasurer.

At the close of the meeting tea was served, with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, who sails tomorrow for a few weeks in Europe, as guest of honor. Mrs. Henry A. Francis, of Pittsfield, Mass., a member of the board of trustees, presided at the tea table.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston, Mass., who, with her sister, gave the estate "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., as a permanent place for the holding of the concerts of the festival, was among those present at the meeting and tea, as were Archibald Davidson, head of the music department of Harvard University; Professor Fay, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Henry E. Sawyer, vice president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and George H. Judd, manager of the orchestra. Among those from this vicinity were Miss Annabelle Terrell of Chatham, James E. Leath of Kinderhook, and his guests, Mr and Mrs Charles Messer Stow, of New York City, Mrs. Pauline Avery of West Taghkanic, and Mrs. O. H. Bradley and Gerald Bliss of this city.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

26

MAY 3 - 1938

Koussevitzky Looks Music Shed Over

Henry B. Sawyer, left, one of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees, the maestro, Dr Koussevitzky, center, and Joseph Franz, the engineer in charge of the construction. The maestro, together with engineers and acoustic experts gave the new shed, which will have a seating capacity of more than 500, a thorough "going over" prior to sailing for Europe. In background is the tuning shed.

Stockbridge, May 2—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, today paid his first visit to the Symphonic Festival music shed at Tanglewood and was pleased with the new structure. Tests of the acoustics of the structure were made and proved satisfactory.

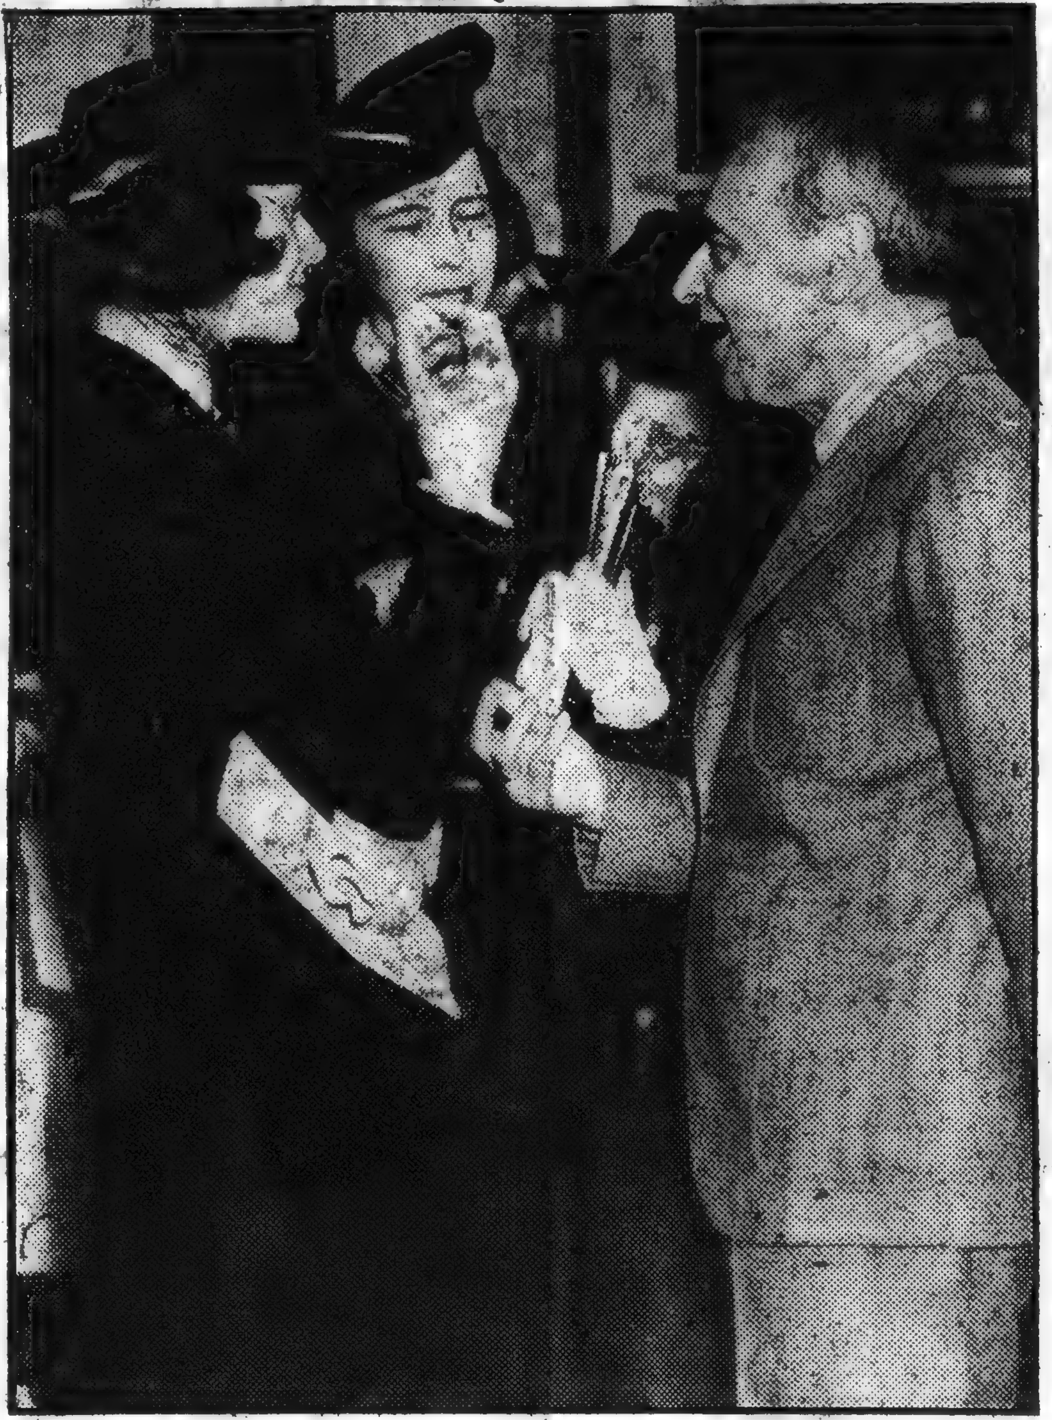
The conductor arrived in Pittsfield by train, accompanied by Edward T. Taft and Henry B. Sawyer, trustees of the orchestra; George E. Judd, the manager; Dr Archibald T. Davison of Harvard university and Prof Richard B. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the shed. After luncheon at the Wendell hotel, the party accompanied by several members of the festival board of trustees motored to Tanglewood.

Later in the afternoon the conductor and his party attended a tea at the Red Lion inn, where he spoke briefly to members of the advisory board and committee workers. Soon after he left for New York and will sail Wednesday for Europe.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 3 - 1938

Koussevitzky in Lenox



Don Jose Browning Photo

LENOX, May 2—Every one pauses—when the maestro speaks! as witness this candid scene made at the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge today, when members of the advisory committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival met for tea and an informal talk by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct the Fifth Annual Festival in the new permanent music shed, now nearing completion at Tanglewood. Pictured at left is Mrs. Hollis Carlisle of Springfield, with Mrs. Charles Munsell, also of Springfield and also on the committee for the festival, and the maestro, Dr. Koussevitzky. Accompanying the famous conductor were Edward T. Taft and Henry B. Sawyer, trustees of the orchestra; Dr. Archibald T. Davison of Harvard and Richard B. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant for the shed.

Musical Novelties Scheduled As Pops Make Debut for 1938

Monitor May 4/38

When the dapper Arthur Fiedler bows his appreciation of the applause welcoming him back for the 53rd season of the Pops, and raises his baton to swing into the opening number at Symphony Hall this evening, "first nighters" may settle back to enjoy two musical "firsts."

The 90-odd musicians will evoke smiles with their reading of a "Fantasy on Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," done by Peter Bodge from the Churchill score, and this smile will widen at Robert McBride's "Swing Stuff," a hilarious parody on swing music. An elaborate solo for the clarinet will be played by Manuel Valerio, first clarinetist of the Pops orchestra.

Pops fans will recall McBride's "Fugato on a Well Known Theme," skillfully wrought score for a large orchestra in which the ditty, "There she goes; there she goes; all dressed up in her Sunday clothes . . ." was given an amusing musical treatment. This composition was introduced by Mr. Fiedler who now has in store another McBride number, "Design for a Killer Diller." A killer-diller in "swing" means a very popular swing tune.

The popular conductor is entering his ninth season this summer. During his tenure of office he has maintained the traditional character of the Pops repertoire yet has been able to introduce a wealth of new material, classical and popular. In the 57 concerts last summer he introduced 60 new compositions. Of this number 19 were heard as encore numbers.

Another number added to his library is Max Schoenherr's "Austrian Peasant Dances," whose score sounds like the familiar gone-but-not-forgotten "liddle Cherman band" of street corner fame in the 90's.

Patrons at the tables and in the balconies will have the opportunity to evaluate tonight another important introduction, "Dances of Galanta," by Zoltan Kodaly, eminent Hungarian composer. On Sunday, he will present for the first time a work of the noted Austrian composer, Ernst Toch.

Later—in store with other good things—will be played a ballet written especially for the Pops by Walter Piston, Chairman of the music faculty at Harvard.

May 4/38 LOWELL COURIER-CITIZEN,

MOMENTS MUSICAL

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

To Whom Announcements and Communications on Musical Matters May Be Addressed at This Office.

Symphony Season Ends.

With the concerts of last week the Boston Symphony orchestra's season came to an end. Dr. Koussevitzky sails today from New York on the Normandie for a vacation and possible engagements abroad, but will return earlier than usual because of the Berkshire Festival which opens on Aug. 4. Before he left this week he made a visit to Tanglewood where he inspected the new music shed, seating 5000, in which the programs will be given this summer with more protection from stormy weather than has been available hitherto. On Monday this week he met the advisory board and committee workers at the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, going from there directly to New York.

The summary of the Boston Symphony's 57th season shows that 86 works by 40 composers were played. The great symphonies of the 18th and 19th centuries of course figured in the list. The 20th century which already has its classics, was well represented, Ravel heading the list because of the memorial programs as a result of his recent death. Prokofieff, who directed in person, took second place with eight compositions played. Beethoven and Sibelius were each represented by six works.

Among the American composers represented on the programs were Walter Piston, Edward Burlinghame Hill, Leo Sowerby. The programs also included works by Malpiero and Pizetti of Italy, Starokadonsky of Russia and Enesco and Alessandresco of Rumania. Hindemith played his Viola Concerto and Menuhin introduced the newly discovered Violin Concerto of Schumann. Choral works presented included the Beethoven Missa of Solemnis; Psalm 47, by Florent Schmitt and the Requiem of Faure, the latter of which the distinguished French musician, Nadia Boulanger, conducted; two works of Sibelius in which the Helsingfors male chorus assisted.

The programs of the supplementary concerts on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons each month were drawn largely from the same sources, although the patrons of these enjoyed hearing some solo artists who did not appear in the regular subscription series. Guest conductors during the season were Daniele Amfitheatrof, Nadia Boulanger, Georges Enesco, Sergei Prokofieff and Walter Piston.

The Pops.

Tonight in Symphony hall, Boston the Pop concerts begin for the 53rd season, the ninth under the conductorship of Arthur Fiedler who has become as popular as the programs. There is always a pleasant informality about the music, as well as on the floor, with tables set so that good fellows and the girls, too, can get together. The customary light refreshments will be available as usual. And on the floor, at least, there is no rule against smoking. Resumption of the Pops is a sign that summer is coming in. And Mr. Fiedler may be depended upon to include seasonable novelties as well as old favorites in his program. He even promises some samples of swing, possibly stirred by the recent visit of Benny Goodman to the hall. By report the Wednesday night programs or part of them will be broadcast through the two-months season.

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

APR 30 1938

Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, Mass., April 29. — Serge Koussevitzky has chosen Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with choral finale for the inauguration of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival music shed at Tanglewood on August 4. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and four vocal soloists will appear with the orchestra on this occasion.

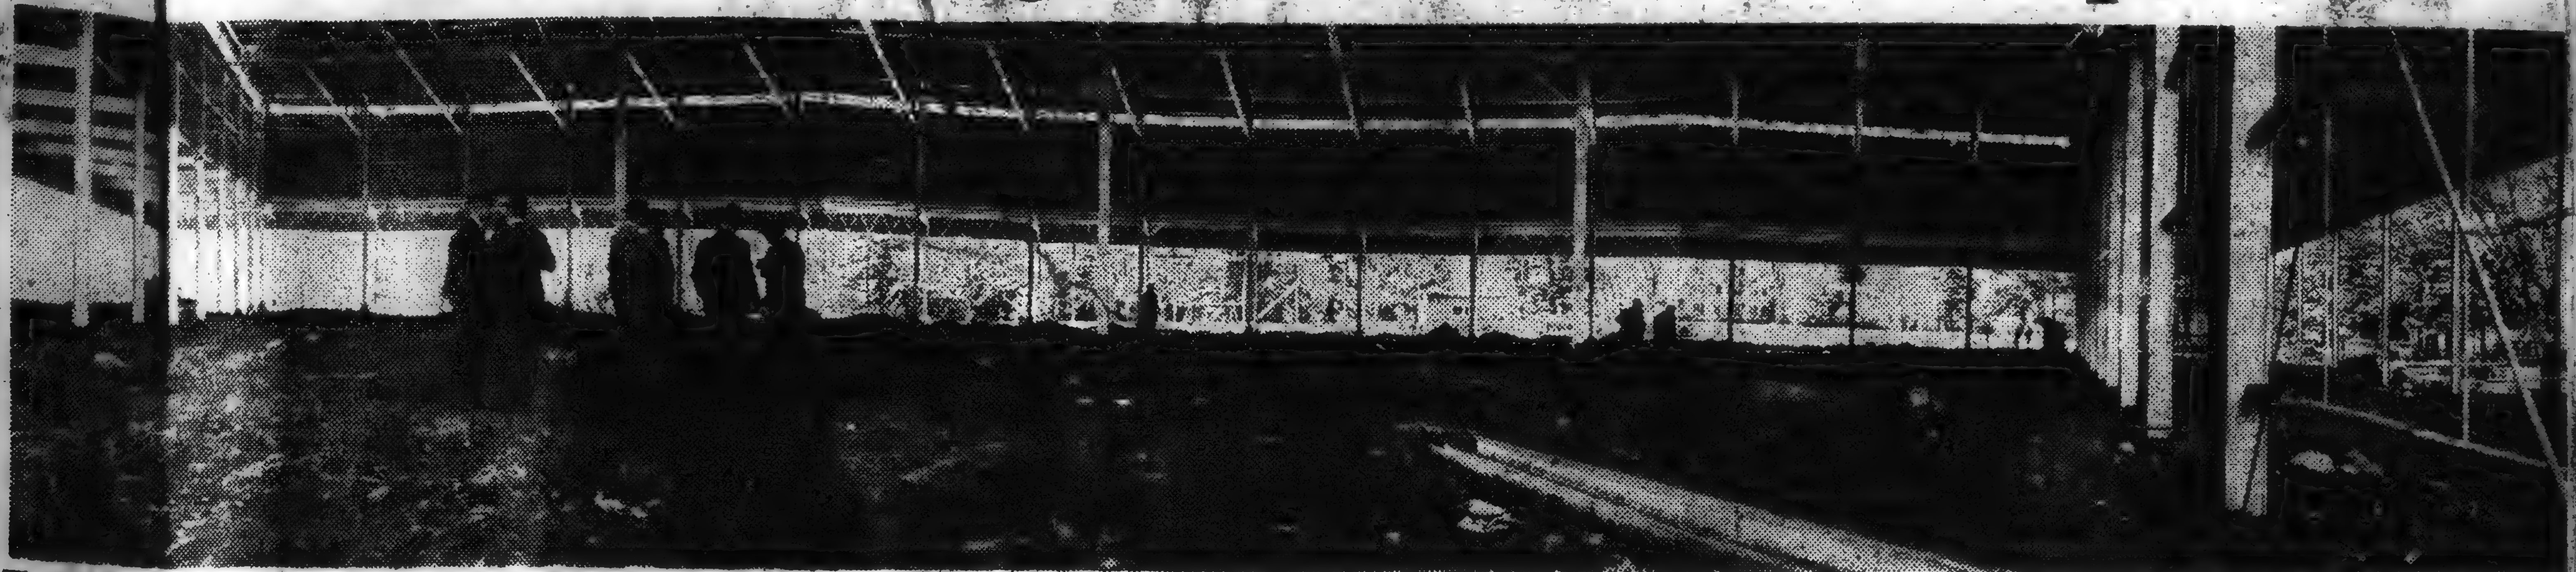
At the concert on August 11 which opens the second series of the Festival, scenes from music dramas of Wagner will be presented in concert form with soloists. The programme will include the last scene from "Die Walkure" and the complete third act of "Siegfried."

Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony, performed last year and at once closely associated with the beautiful natural setting at Tanglewood, will again be played. Other symphonies will include the First of Sibelius, the Second of Brahms and Tchaikovsky's Sixth. Among shorter works will be the Brahms-Haydn Variations; "Tapiola" by Sibelius, "La Mer" by Debussy, "Ma mere l'oye" by Ravel, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Caprice Espagnole," Respighi's "Pines of Rome," and the "Kije" Suite by Prokofieff.

37

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAY 3 - 1938

Music Shed at Tanglewood Nears Completion



The Eagle camera man took three pictures to obtain this one view of the interior of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood. The roof is on, the walls are now being built, tractors and men are at work grading the floor. Rapidly the construction is approaching the stage that it will be in for the concerts in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Many details will not be completed this year, such as installation of the ceiling, encasing of the pillars of the colonnade and the floor.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, drops in for tea at the meeting of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's subchairmen at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge.

Dr. Archibald T. Davison of Harvard University, Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, meet at Tanglewood. Mrs. Brooks gave Tanglewood as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Koussevitzky Takes View of Construction

More Than 1000 Memberships Reported

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra inspected Tanglewood yesterday afternoon, obtaining the first glimpse of the new shed where he and his orchestra will perform for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

Hour at Tanglewood

After spending more than an hour at Tanglewood, Dr. Koussevitzky went to the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge where sub-chairmen from many towns and cities within a wide radius were meeting and submitting reports in the annual membership campaign. He learned that already more than 1000 memberships have been secured for the six concerts, and that 117 boxes have been sold. There were about 70 sub-chairmen and committee workers at the Stockbridge meeting.

Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfield and Mrs. John C. Lynch of Stockbridge, Festival trustees, poured at the tea.

Accompanying Dr. Koussevitzky to Tanglewood were Edward Taft and Henry B. Sawyer, trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and George E. Judd, the manager; Professor Archibald T. Davison, head of the music department of Harvard University; Professor Richard Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, acoustics consultant; trustees of the Festival and friends who have been active in raising funds for the shed.

Mr. and Mrs. Brooks There

At Tanglewood were Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks who continued on to the meeting at Stockbridge. Mrs. Brooks is the donor of the property.

Dr. Koussevitzky inspected details of the construction, inspected the tuning room which will be headquarters for the 100 members of the orchestra. Then arm in arm he walked about the spacious grounds of the 200-acre estate with Dr. Davison.

Membership Privileges

Sub-chairmen were reminded that the membership campaign closes May 15 and urged to make every effort to see that all music lovers are given the opportunity to join before the deadline. Members are assured of admission at a minimum rate, preferred seats and the privilege of attend a rehearsal of the orchestra at no charge.

New chairmen announced yesterday included representatives from Torrington, Conn., New Haven, Conn., Hazardville, Conn., Bangor, Me., Woodstock, N. Y., Bennington, Vt., Bennington College, Greenfield, Holyoke, Albany, N. Y., Quebec and several places in Florida.

The final report meeting for the membership will come about May 13 when it is hoped more than 2000 members will have been enrolled. Last year the membership total was 1770.

Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Judd boarded a train for New York at Pittsfield last night and tomorrow the conductor will sail for Europe aboard the Normandie for a month's vacation.

Dr. Koussevitzky Announces Complete Festival Programs

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky last night announced the complete programs to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the ~~fifth annual~~ Berkshire Symphony Festival at Tanglewood in August. The inauguration of the new music shed will be featured by the chorus and chorale from the cantata from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," with chorus and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The audience will be invited to join with the chorus in singing the second verse of the Bach chorale. The Cecilia Chorus of Boston of which Arthur Fiedler is conductor, and outstanding soloists will appear with the orchestra at the opening concert. Soloists also will appear Aug. 11.

Tribute to Hadley

The program Aug. 13 will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival, and Dr. Koussevitzky has included on the program, one of Dr. Hadley's works, Andante Tranquillo from the Symphony No. 3 in B Minor Opus 60.

The complete program follows:

Thursday Evening, Aug. 4, at 8.30

Chorus from cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," No. 80 .... Bach
Chorale from the cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." (The audience to join with the chorus in the singing of the second verse) .... Bach
Symphony No. 9 in D Minor with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Beethoven
Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, and soloists.

Saturday Evening, Aug. 6, at 8.30

Symphony in E Flat, No. 99, (B. & H. No. 3) .... Haydn
"La Mer," three symphonic sketches, Debussy
Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39, Sibelius

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 7, at 3.30

"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," "Serenade for String Orchestra" .... Mozart
Symphony in E Minor, No. 4, Opus 98, Brahms
Music for the Theatre .... Copeland
"Ma Mere l'Oye" ("Mother Goose"). Five children's pieces .... Ravel
Symphonic Poem, "The Pines of Rome," Respighi

Thursday Evening, Aug. 11 at 8.30

"Die Walkyrie" .... Wagner
Introduction to Act III, "The Ride of the Valkyries."
Act III, Final Scene.
Act II, "Siegfried" .... Wagner
The Wanderer (Wotan).
Erda.
Siegfried.
Bruennhilde.
—Soloists.

Saturday Evening, Aug. 13, at 8.30

Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Op. 68, "Pastoral" .... Beethoven
Andante tranquillo from the Symphony No 3, in B Minor, Opus 60. Henry Hadley
Symphony No 6 in B Minor, "Pathetic," Op. 74 .... Tchaikovsky

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 14, at 3.30

Symphony in B Flat, No. 1, Op. 38, Schumann
"Tapiola," a Tone Poem for Orchestra, Sibelius
Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 73, Brahms

Boston Symphony Orch. Broadcasts 'Pops' Tonight

B. Trans. May 4/38

Ronald Graham Sings on Grace Moore's Program

By Ted Hobbs

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fieddler, will inaugurate its fifty-third consecutive season of "Pop" concerts with a one-hour broadcast from Symphony Hall this evening over the NBC-Blue Network. The concerts, which have been broadcast by NBC each season since 1931, will be heard weekly at the same time. Fiedler has programed the "Marche Joyeuse" by Chabrier to open the concert, followed by Kodlay's "Dances of Galanta." The "Delirien" Waltzes by Josef Strauss and Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture," will complete the broadcast. (WBZ—9.30 P.M.)

ARTHUR FIEDLER
inaugurates series of weekly "Pops" concerts this evening over WBZ.

TONIGHT'S RADIO RAREBITS

1.00—WORL—Boston Transcript News Bulletin

7.30—WBZ—Rose Marie, vocalist
WNAC—James Melton, tenor

8.00—WEEI—Cavalcade of America

8.30—WEEI—Ben Bernie; Lew Lehr, Buddy Clark

9.00—WEEI—Chesterfield presents Grace Moore, Ronald Graham and Andre Kostelanetz's Orchestra
WNAC—Town Hall Tonight; Fred Allen

9.30—WBZ—Boston Pops Concert, Arthur Fiedler

REDUCTION

RATIO

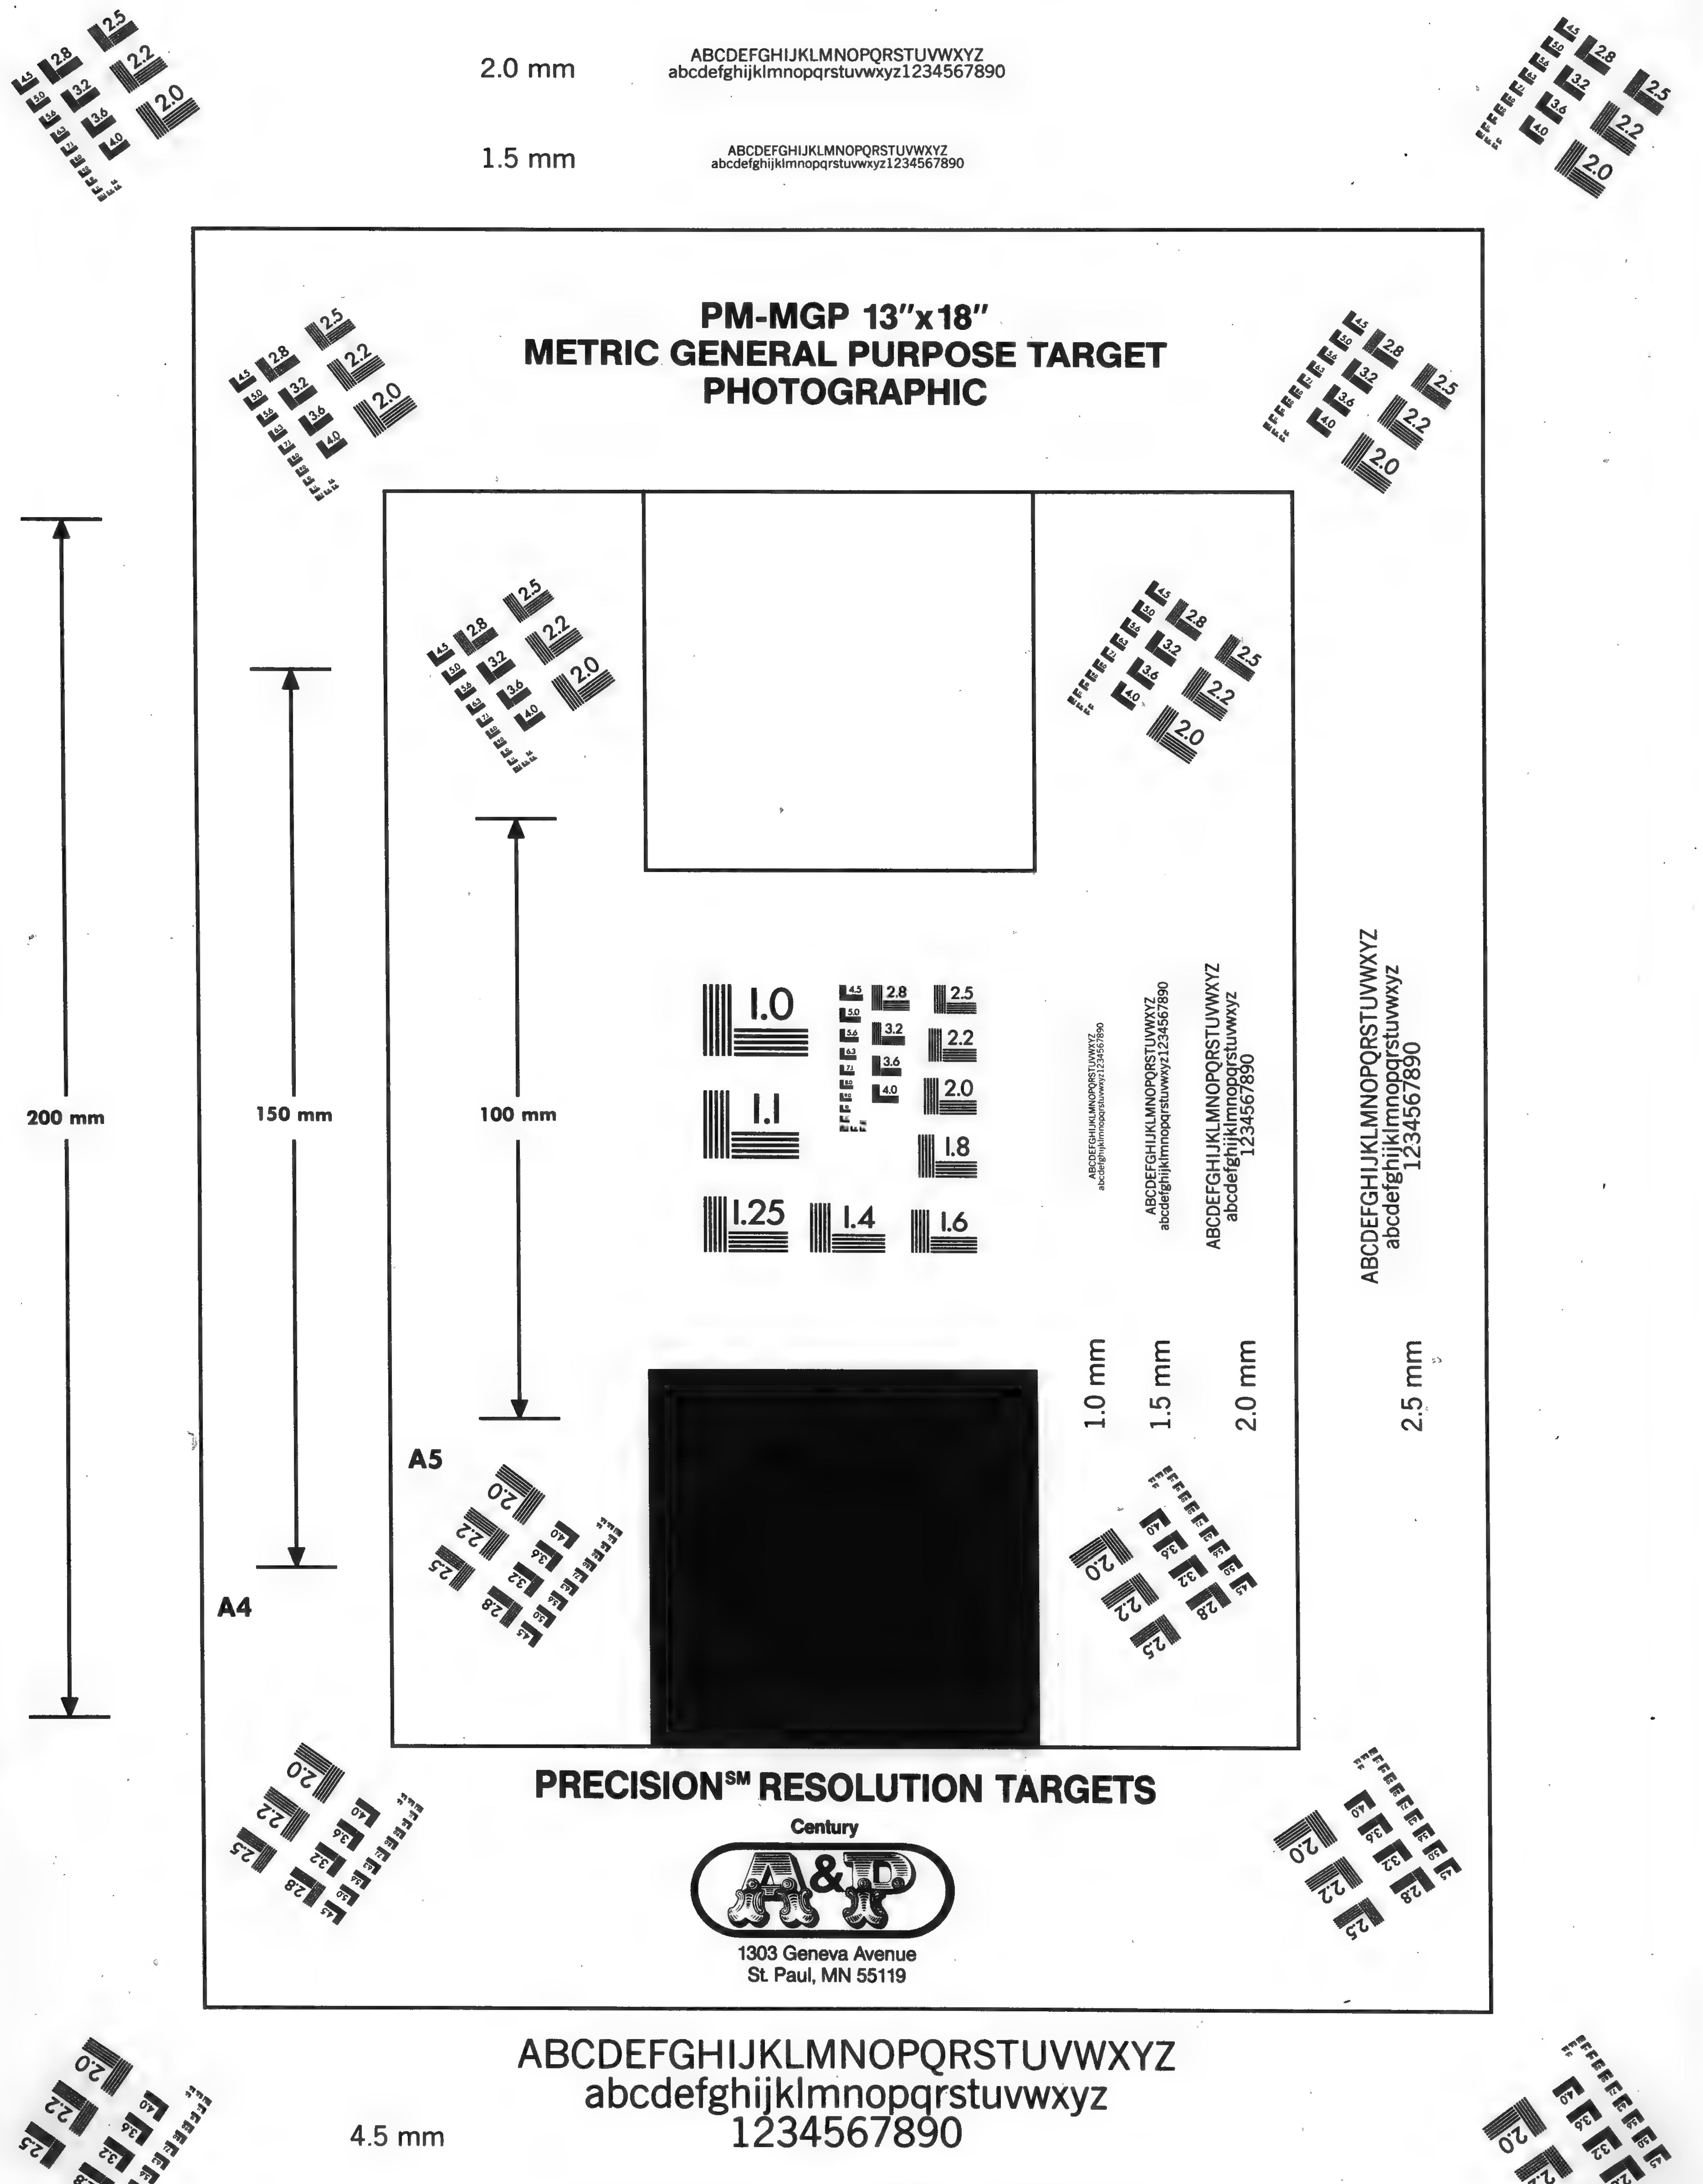
17x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

BETTY ALDEN May 5/38

On Beacon Hill

Pops Premiere Holds Spotlight

By BETTY ALDEN

BENNY GOODMAN'S invasion of Symphony Hall has left its mark . . . and swing is evidently there to stay . . . At least until the regular classic symphony concerts begin again in the fall . . .

Director Arthur Fiedler included a series of numbers called "Swing Stuff" on the program of the first POP (ular) concert of the season, held in Symphony Hall last evening . . . much to the enjoyment of the May School students and recent graduates and their boy friends . . .

The first concert of the Pops' 53rd season benefited the scholarship fund of the May School and a block of seats was also taken by the directors of the Baldwinsville Hospital, as well as Belmont Women's Club . . . so naturally there were many supporters of the three charities in the audience . . .

Among the new debs, whose diplomas from the May School in the first week of June will be like visaed passports to the best debutantes parties, were Priscilla Brett and Anne Pearmain who were in a merry party with Norman Pierce, and his cousin, Janet Pierce . . . Anne's summery gowns was of pale blue chiffon with a band of shirring making an effective outline to the square neck and puffed sleeves . . . "Cilla's" choice was a black gown with touches of white and Janet set off her beautiful complexion and blonde hair with an Alice blue lace gown . . .

In this same group, Helene Harlow enjoyed the august feeling of being the elderly member of the party which was seated around one of Symphony's newly painted tables . . . She graduated from May last June and has been attending deb parties for a whole year! . . .

Pops Fans

Society Joins In Welcome

FRANCES SEAVER ROSAMOND EMERSON

Frances Seaver and Rosamond Emerson were two of the many younger music lovers who enjoyed the opening of the Pops 53d season in Symphony Hall last evening. If we could show you more of their table you would see their escorts, David Garrison and Frederick Hitchcock, Jr. Boston Evening American Photo

Symphony Festival

B. Adv. May 5/38

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

ANOTHER Boston Symphony season finished, it is not too early to begin thinking about the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" in August—subscriptions for which have already begun pouring in.

Just before sailing for his annual trip to Europe, Dr. Koussevitzky outlined the program for the six concerts to be given on August 4, 6 and 7, and for the following week on August 11, 13 and 14

This year's Festival, inaugurating the new music shed, marks the realization of but one of the ambitious projects which have been contemplated since Dr. Koussevitzky first accepted the engagement to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at "Tanglewood" two years ago.

The other buildings—the opera house, the Greek amphitheater, etc.—these find their only existence so far in architect's prints. The music shed which will be completed in time for the festival this summer—thus mercifully doing away with the vagaries of acoustics native to the former tent arrangement—is described as a steel structure, shaped like a half-open fan, with a seating capacity of 5000.

• • •

THE desirability of its situation has been extolled sufficiently, perhaps. It is true, however, that the vistas of sloping lawns, aromatic pines, formal gardens, mountains and lake make it a delightful setting.

As to the programs. The opening performance will open with a chorus and chorale from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." By way of novelty the audience will be invited to join the chorus in the singing of the second verse of the Bach cantata. The assisting chorus, in this, as in the Beethoven Ninth Symphony to which the remainder of the program wil be devoted, will be the Cecilia Society.

Debussy's "La Mer" is indicated for the second program on August 6. As is Haydn's Symphony in E flat, No. 99, and Sibelius' First Symphony in E minor.

There will be an all-Wagner program on Thursday of the second week. That of Friday evening, August 13, will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival. To mark the occasion the Andante tranquillo from Dr. Hadley's Third Symphony in B minor will be performed.

For the closing program on Sunday, August 14, Schumann's First Symphony in B flat, Brahms' Second in D major, and Sibelius' "Tapiola" have been announced.

Information regarding memberships—to which special privileges attach—may be obtained from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass. (The membership list closes May 15).

• • •

IN THE meantime you will no doubt be entertaining yourself with the Pops, which enter their second week today under the direction of Arthur Fiedler in Symphony Hall.

These concerts will continue through May and June nightly, including Sundays during the month of May.

Gay Program Opens Pops

By RUTH MARSTERS

Dashing, debonair, conductor Arthur Fiedler was warmly applauded by the delighted audience which gathered in Symphony Hall last evening for the opening of another season of the Pops.

On its 53rd birthday, the now venerable institution was found to maintain its earliest traditions with an easy nonchalance.

The program, by custom necessarily light in vein, eschewed banality at every possible turn.

The orchestra was in fine form. Which means that everybody sounded gay together.

There was the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windor" (Nicolai), and a piece for string orchestra by Grieg called "Spring." There were waltzes by Josef Strauss and Tchaikovsky's "Overture Solennelle, 1812." These among other things.

Of novelties there were two, a fantasy arranged for the Pops Orchestra on Churchill's music for "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" by Peter Bodge, and "Swing Stuff," likewise especially prepared by Robert McBride, clarinetist and professor of music at Bennington College.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

MAY 6 - 1938

A GOOD YARN EVEN IF SOMEWHAT OVERDRAWN

Mme. Olga Samaroff-Stokowski, the talented pianist and former wife of the much publicized Leopold Stokowski, tells a story about two famous conductors.

The place is the Philadelphia Academy of Music, the scene a concert by the visiting Boston Symphony orchestra, the time many years ago. Mme. Samaroff-Stokowski reports this conversation by a Fat Lady and a Thin Lady seated behind her:

F. L.: "Oh, what a relief to see a great conductor using the score as he leads!"

T. L.: "Yes. So different from that upstart Stokowski."

F. L.: "Well, my dear, surely you know why he doesn't use his notes."

T. L.: "No. Why?"

F. L.: "He doesn't use notes because he can't read music."

Swing and 'Snow White' at Po

Monitor — May 5/38

The combined influences of Benny Goodman, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," and Ray Scott descended upon Symphony Hall last night as Arthur Fiedler and his musicians opened the fifty-third season of the Pop Concerts. Mr. Goodman is by now no stranger to these classic surroundings. After last Sunday's concert he is a formidable figure at least at the box office.

The Goodman influence was felt obliquely in the first performance of an amusing satirical number called "Swing Stuff," by Robert McBride, whose "Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" ("There she goes, There she goes, All dressed up in her Sunday clothes") was introduced to Pops audiences last year. Mr. McBride expanded "Swing Stuff" from his composition for piano and clarinet, "Design for a Killer-Diller." The program notes innocently define a "killer-diller" as a clarinetist. Actually, the word means an excessively violent and well-liked swing number, one that "sends" the "jitterbugs," "cats," "alligators," et al. Aside from the clink of glasses and the buzz of chatter, last night's Symphony audience was a model of restraint.

Which does not by any means bespeak the failure of "Swing Stuff." It is a clever bit of jazz writing, but so much more intricate and richly scored than any swing band ever plays that it misses the mark slightly as satire on "swing" music. The swing band, after all, is composed of drums, a piano, four brasses, four reeds, a string bass, guitar or banjo. The insistency of rhythms are its outstanding characteristic; while cleverly conceived, the rhythms of "Swing Stuff" seemed involved rather than than insistent. Manuel Valerio played in a masterful manner the clarinet solo, which was fast, furious and sounded extremely difficult.

Mr. Fiedler's program which was warmly applauded by the large audience, included the Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches," by Ippolitov-Ivanov, Grieg's "Sring" (for string orchestra), "Joyeuse Marche," by Chabrier, waltzes by Josef Strauss, the "1812" Overture, and Kodály's "Dances of Galanta."

The "Snow White" fantasia, arranged by Peter Bodge, will probably become a favorite of the Pops season, especially with the new orchestration of these sentimental tunes. Nor must one forget Scott's slightly dissonant "The Toy Trumpet," which, judging from the enthusiasm it inspired last evening, will probably occupy the position of popularity held by "Strike Up the Band," a season or two ago. The program closed with Brahms's First Hungarian Dance.

J. D. B.

Pops Opens Its 53d Season

B. Trns. May 5/38

The 53rd season of Pops opened last evening at Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler again in the conductor's stand. Mr. Fiedler knows what his Pops audiences want. And last evening's capacity audience thoroughly approved his program, which ranged from "Swing Stuff" to "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," on to "Dances of Galanta."

We mention these three numbers, because they are significant innovations, musically speaking. The first, and still musically, the most important was the Kodaly suite of "Dances of Galanta." This excellent contemporary Hungarian composer has written other music that may well rank as the best choral work of his generation. In this suite he has formed, with consummate skill and no lapse from taste, a music that is at once easily appreciated and good. The suite is not easy to play, and the orchestra consequently deserve praise for handling it with the virtuosity which is the result of its training.

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" was bound to contribute something to the Pops season, and Peter Bodge has made an admirable fantasia from the principal tunes.

Next to the concluding number was "Swing Stuff," a parody of the current craze. This is by a talented American composer, Robert McBride, who has made his point, with wit and ingenuity. For one thing he has shown up the poverty of the conventional swing orchestra, in that he has used a full string section, together with oboes and flutes and [illegible] instruments foreign to the new genre. By these larger means has managed to construct a deft piece of burlesque that never relapses into the jargon of the original. It is suggestive parody rather than direct slapstick. Mr. Valerio acquitted himself admirably in what one might call the title role of the clarinet. Previously Mr. Voison earned much applause for his playing in a piece called "The Toy Trumpet," which was anything but toy in execution.

RADIO DIAL
CINCINNATI, O.

MAY 6 - 1938

BOSTON POP CONCERTS TO BEGIN SUMMER SEASON

Music Lovers To Hear Special Broadcasts Beginning May 4

The Boston Pop Concerts, long a feature of musical life in the Bay State capital during spring and summer, return to the air over NBC, including WCKY and WLS, Wednesday, May 4, at 8:30 p. m. (E.S.T.).

The broadcasts, to be heard each Wednesday for nine weeks, will be directed by Arthur Fiedler, the first native Bostonian ever to conduct the Pop concerts.

This year will be the 53rd that musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given a spring season of light and semi-classical works and the more popular classics, at popular prices. It will be the eighth year that NBC has broadcast these concerts.

The orchestra strives to reach the widest possible audience among music lovers, and the atmosphere of the concerts is one of easy informality.

Fiedler has programmed the "Marche Joyeuse," by Crabrier, to open the concert, followed by Kodaly's "Dances of Galanta." The "Delirien" Waltzes by Joseph Strauss and Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture" will complete the broadcast.

Gay Program Opens Pops

B. Am. May 5/38

By RUTH MARSTERS

Dashing, debonair, conductor Arthur Fiedler was warmly applauded by the delighted audience which gathered in Symphony Hall last evening for the opening of another season of the Pops.

On its 53rd birthday, the now venerable institution was found to maintain its earliest traditions with an easy nonchalance.

The program, by custom necessarily light in vein, eschewed banality at every possible turn.

The orchestra was in fine form. Which means that everybody sounded gay together.

There was the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windor" (Nicolai), and a piece for string orchestra by Grieg called "Spring." There were waltzes by Josef Strauss and Tchaikovsky's "Overture Solennelle, 1812." These among other things.

Of novelties there were two, a fantasy arranged for the Pops Orchestra on Churchill's music for "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" by Peter Bodge, and "Swing Stuff," likewise especially prepared by Robert McBride, clarinetist and professor of music at Bennington College.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

APR 2 9 1938

Tulsa Girl Sings With Symphony

Miss Charlotte Holway, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Holway, was among the 150 Radcliffe college students who, as members of the Radcliffe Choral society, joined the Harvard glee club in singing with the Boston Symphony orchestra, Tuesday.

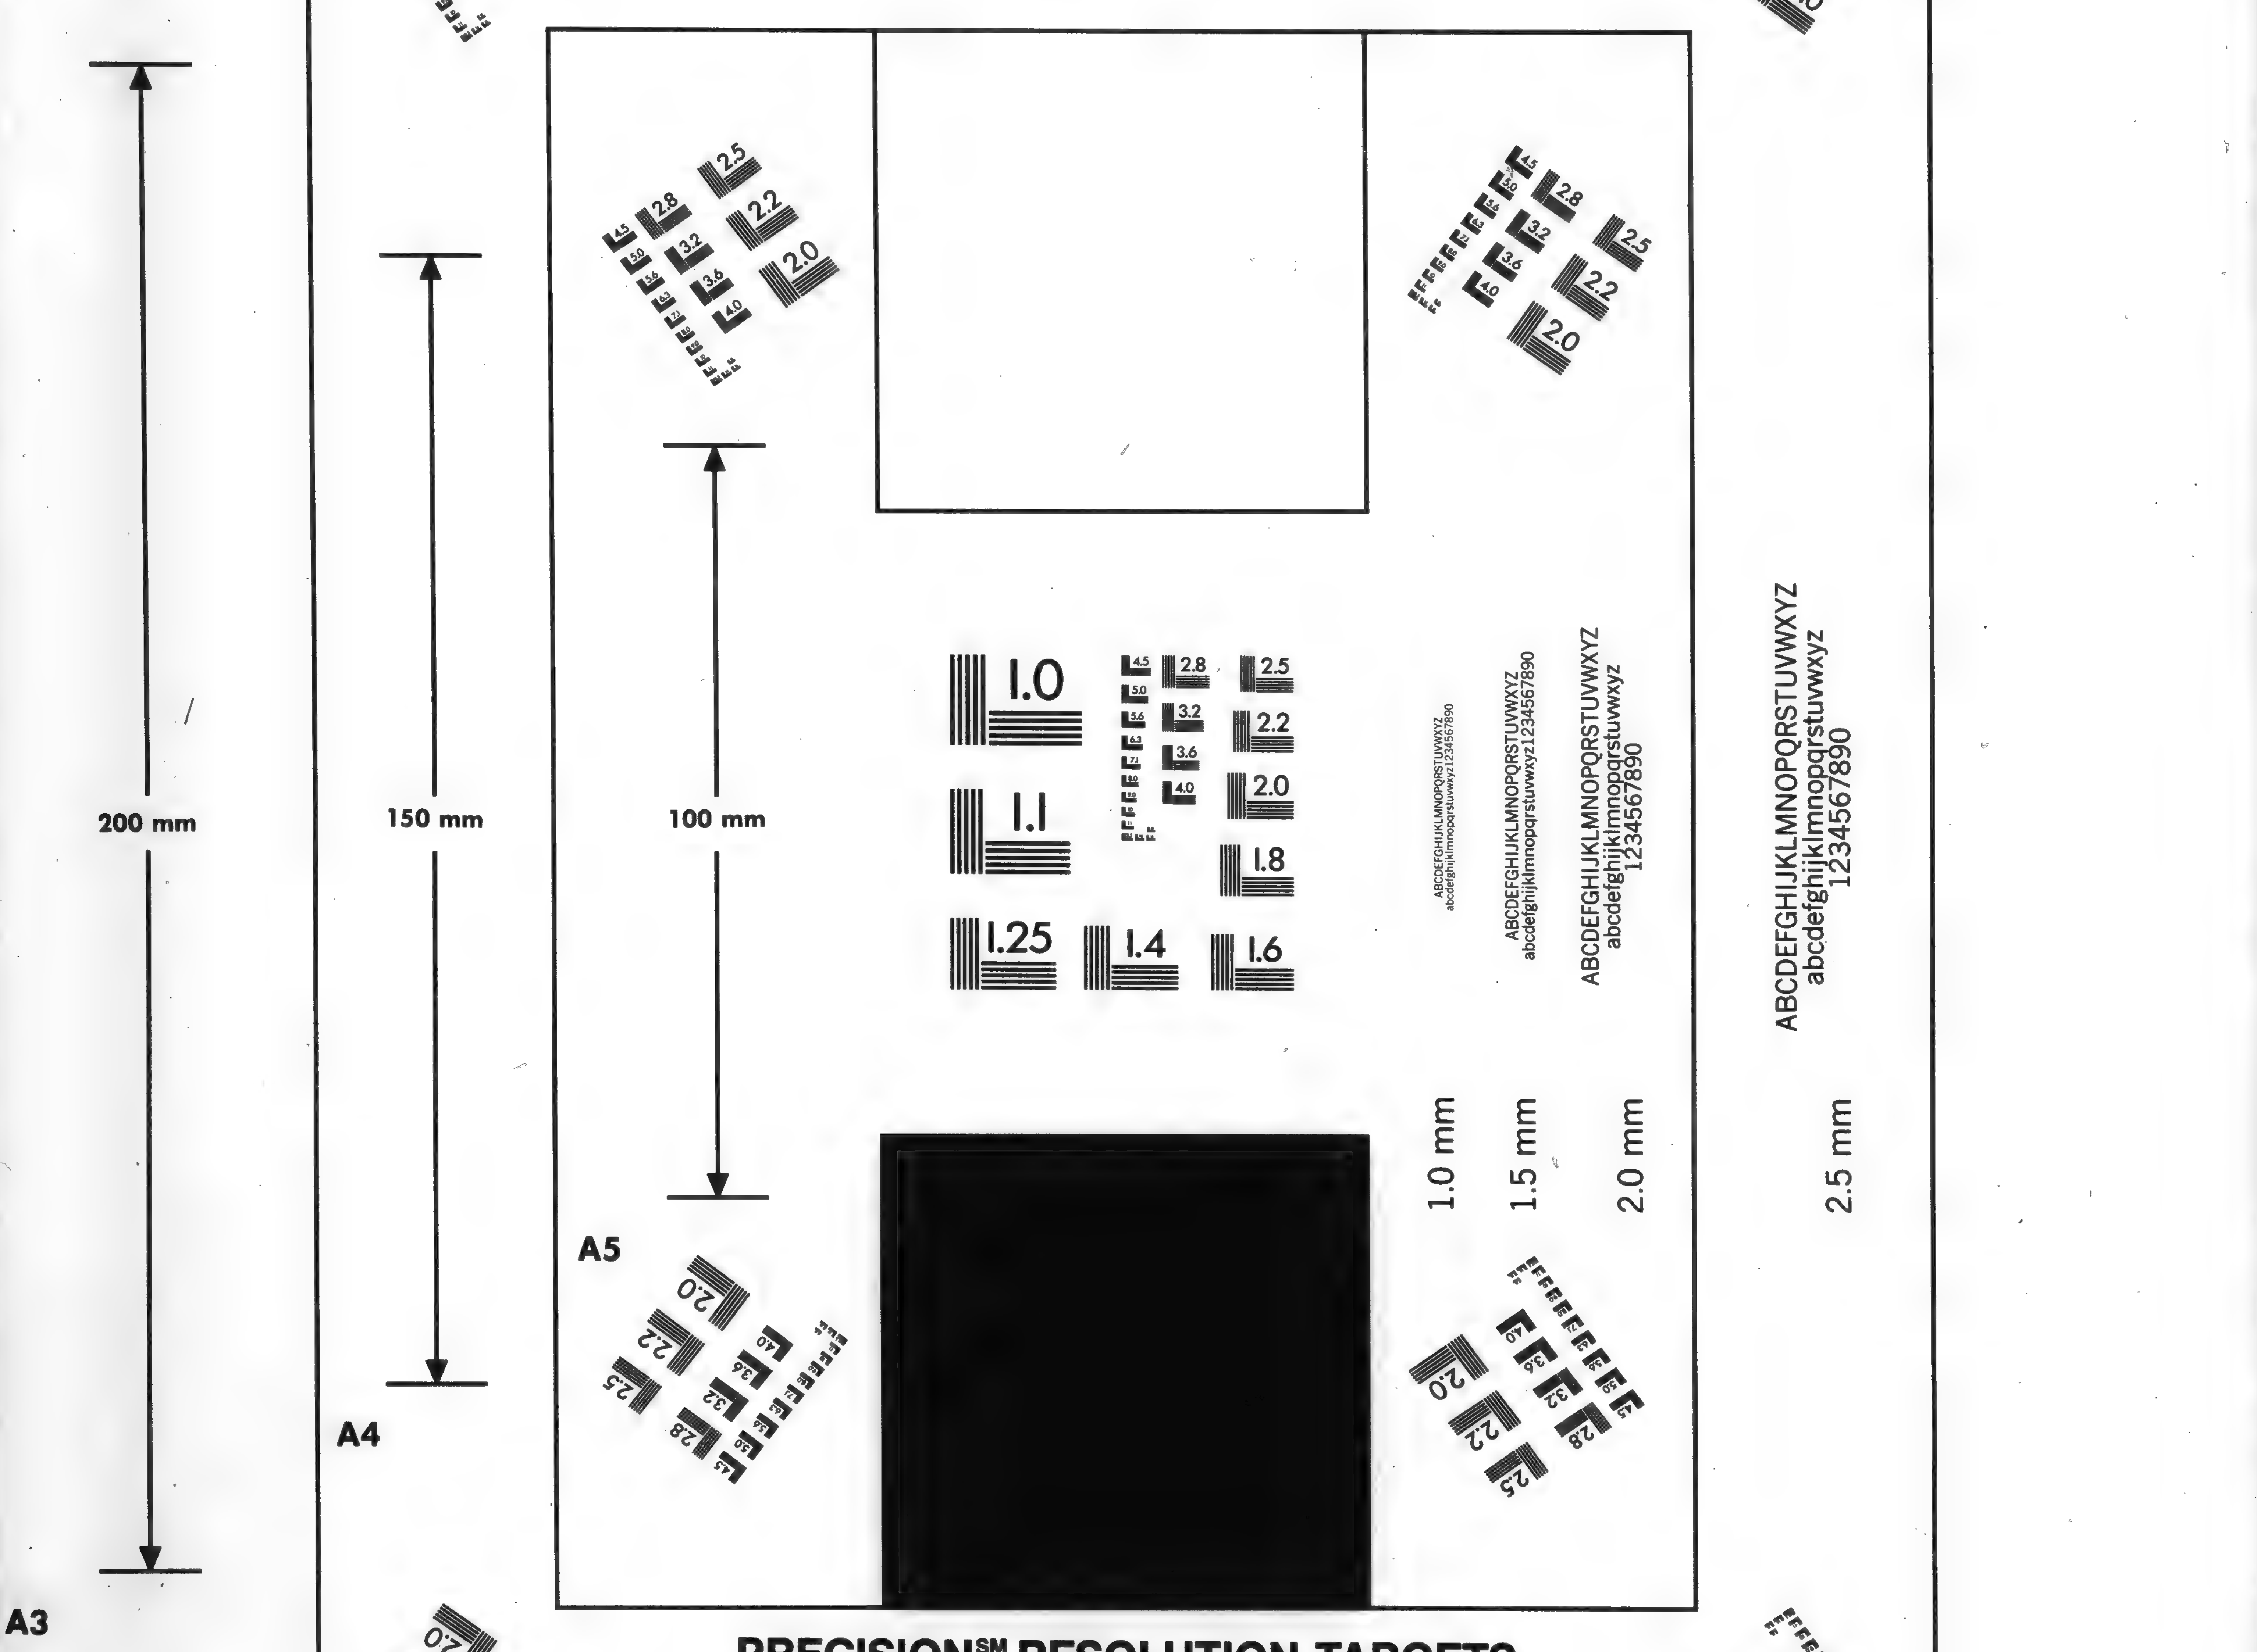
They sang under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky in a performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," at Symphony hall in Boston. For 13 years the Harvard and Radcliffe choral groups have sung annually with this orchestra.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

BETTY ALDEN May 5/38 278

On Beacon Hill

Pops Premiere Holds Spotlight

By BETTY ALDEN

BENNY GOODMAN'S invasion of Symphony Hall has left its mark . . . and swing is evidently there to stay . . . At least until the regular classic symphony concerts begin again in the fall . . .

Director Arthur Fiedler included a series of numbers called "Swing Stuff" on the program of the first POP (ular) concert of the season, held in Symphony Hall last evening . . . much to the enjoyment of the May School students and recent graduates and their boy friends . . .

The first concert of the Pops' 53rd season benefited the scholarship fund of the May School and a block of seats was also taken by the directors of the Baldwinsville Hospital, as well as Belmont Women's Club . . . so naturally there were many supporters of the three charities in the audience . . .

Among the new debs, whose diplomas from the May School in the first week of June will be like visaed passports to the best debutantes parties, were Priscilla Brett and Anne Pearmain who were in a merry party with Norman Pierce, and his cousin, Janet Pierce . . . Anne's summery gowns was of pale blue chiffon with a band of shirring making an effective outline to the square neck and puffed sleeves . . . "Cilla's" choice was a black gown with touches of white and Janet set off her beautiful complexion and blonde hair with an Alice blue lace gown . . .

In this same group, Helene Harlow enjoyed the august feeling of being the elderly member of the party which was seated around one of Symphony's newly painted tables . . . She graduated from May last June and has been attending deb parties for a whole year! . . .

Pops Fans

Society Joins In Welcome

FRANCES SEAVER ROSAMOND EMERSON

Frances Seaver and Rosamond Emerson were two of the many younger music lovers who enjoyed the opening of the Pops 53d season in Symphony Hall last evening. If we could show you more of their table you would see their escorts, David Garrison and Frederick Hitchcock, Jr. Boston Evening American Photo

---

Symphony Festival

B. Adv. May 8/38

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

ANOTHER Boston Symphony season finished, it is not too early to begin thinking about the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood" in August—subscriptions for which have already begun pouring in.

Just before sailing for his annual trip to Europe, Dr. Koussevitzky outlined the program for the six concerts to be given on August 4, 6 and 7, and for the following week on August 11, 13 and 14.

This year's Festival, inaugurating the new music shed, marks the realization of but one of the ambitious projects which have been contemplated since Dr. Koussevitzky first accepted the engagement to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at "Tanglewood" two years ago.

The other buildings—the opera house, the Greek amphitheater, etc.—these find their only existence so far in architect's prints. The music shed which will be completed in time for the festival this summer—thus mercifully doing away with the vagaries of acoustics native to the former tent arrangement—is described as a steel structure, shaped like a half-open fan, with a seating capacity of 5000.

* * *

THE desirability of its situation has been extolled sufficiently, perhaps. It is true, however, that the vistas of sloping lawns, aromatic pines, formal gardens, mountains and lake make it a delightful setting.

As to the programs. The opening performance will open with a chorus and chorale from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." By way of novelty the audience will be invited to join the chorus in the singing of the second verse of the Bach cantata. The assisting chorus, in this, as in the Beethoven Ninth Symphony to which the remainder of the program wil be devoted, will be the Cecilia Society.

Debussy's "La Mer" is indicated for the second program on August 6. As is Haydn's Symphony in E flat, No. 99, and Sibelius' First Symphony in E minor.

There will be an all-Wagner program on Thursday of the second week. That of Friday evening, August 13, will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival. To mark the occasion the Andante tranquillo from Dr. Hadley's Third Symphony in B minor will be performed.

For the closing program on Sunday, August 14, Schumann's First Symphony in B flat, Brahms' Second in D major, and Sibelius' "Tapiola" have been announced.

Information regarding memberships—to which special privileges attach—may be obtained from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass. (The membership list closes May 15).

* * *

IN THE meantime you will no doubt be entertaining yourself with the Pops, which enter their second week today under the direction of Arthur Fiedler in Symphony Hall.

These concerts will continue through May and June nightly, including Sundays during the month of May.

Gay Program Opens Pops

By RUTH MARSTERS

Dashing, debonair, conductor Arthur Fiedler was warmly applauded by the delighted audience which gathered in Symphony Hall last evening for the opening of another season of the Pops.

On its 53rd birthday, the now venerable institution was found to maintain its earliest traditions with an easy nonchalance.

The program, by custom necessarily light in vein, eschewed banality at every possible turn.

The orchestra was in fine form. Which means that everybody sounded gay together.

There was the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windor" (Nicolai), and a piece for string orchestra by Grieg called "Spring." There were waltzes by Josef Strauss and Tchaikovsky's "Overture Solennelle, 1812." These among other things.

Of novelties there were two, a fantasy arranged for the Pops Orchestra on Churchill's music for "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" by Peter Bodge, and "Swing Stuff," likewise especially prepared by Robert McBride, clarinetist and professor of music at Bennington College.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

MAY 6 - 1938

A GOOD YARN EVEN IF SOMEWHAT OVERDRAWN

Mme. Olga Samaroff-Stokowski, the talented pianist and former wife of the much publicized Leopold Stokowski, tells a story about two famous conductors.

The place is the Philadelphia Academy of Music, the scene a concert by the visiting Boston Symphony orchestra, the time many years ago. Mme. Samaroff-Stokowski reports this conversation by a Fat Lady and a Thin Lady seated behind her:

F. L.: "Oh, what a relief to see a great conductor using the score as he leads!"

T. L.: "Yes. So different from that upstart Stokowski."

F. L.: "Well, my dear, surely you know why he doesn't use his notes."

T. L.: "No. Why?"

F. L.: "He doesn't use notes because he can't read music."

Swing and 'Snow White' at Po

May 5/38

The combined influences of Benny Goodman, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," and Ray Scott descended upon Symphony Hall last night as Arthur Fiedler and his musicians opened the fifty-third season of the Pop Concerts. Mr. Goodman is by now no stranger to these classic surroundings. After last Sunday's concert he is a formidable figure at least at the box office.

The Goodman influence was felt obliquely in the first performance of an amusing satirical number called "Swing Stuff," by Robert McBride, whose "Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" ("There she goes, There she goes, All dressed up in her Sunday clothes") was introduced to Pops audiences last year. Mr. McBride expanded "Swing Stuff" from his composition for piano and clarinet, "Design for a Killer-Diller." The program notes innocently define a "killer-diller" as a clarinetist. Actually, the word means an excessively violent and well-liked swing number, one that "sends" the "jitterbugs," "cats," "alligators," et al. Aside from the clink of glasses and the buzz of chatter, last night's Symphony audience was a model of restraint.

Which does not by any means bespeak the failure of "Swing Stuff." It is a clever bit of jazz writing, but so much more intricate and richly scored than any swing band ever plays that it misses the mark slightly as satire on "swing" music. The swing band, after all, is composed of drums, a piano, four brasses, four reeds, a string bass, guitar or banjo. The insistency of rhythms are its outstanding characteristic; while cleverly conceived, the rhythms of "Swing Stuff" seemed involved rather than than insistent. Manuel Valerio played in a masterful manner the clarinet solo, which was fast, furious and sounded extremely difficult.

Mr. Fiedler's program which was warmly applauded by the large audience, included the Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches," by Ippolitov-Ivanov, Grieg's "Sring" (for string orchestra), "Joyeuse Marche," by Chabrier, waltzes by Josef Strauss, the "1812" Overture, and Kodály's "Dances of Galanta."

The "Snow White" fantasia, arranged by Peter Bodge, will probably become a favorite of the Pops season, especially with the new orchestration of these sentimental tunes. Nor must one forget Scott's slightly dissonant "The Toy Trumpet," which, judging from the enthusiasm it inspired last evening, will probably occupy the position of popularity held by "Strike Up the Band," a season or two ago. The program closed with Brahms's First Hungarian Dance.

J. D. B.

Pops Opens Its 53d Season

B. Tns. May 5/38

The 53rd season of Pops opened last evening at Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler again in the conductor's stand. Mr. Fiedler knows what his Pops audiences want. And last evening's capacity audience thoroughly approved his program, which ranged from "Swing Stuff" to "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," on to "Dances of Galanta."

We mention these three numbers, because they are significant innovations, musically speaking. The first, and still musically, the most important was the Kodaly suite of "Dances of Galanta." This excellent contemporary Hungarian composer has written other music that may well rank as the best choral work of his generation. In this suite he has formed, with consummate skill and no lapse from taste, a music that is at once easily appreciated and good. The suite is not easy to play, and the orchestra consequently deserve praise for handling it with the virtuosity which is the result of its training.

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" was bound to contribute something to the Pops season, and Peter Bodge has made an admirable fantasia from the principal tunes.

Next to the concluding number was "Swing Stuff," a parody of the current craze. This is by a talented American composer, Robert McBride, who has made his point, with wit and ingenuity. For one thing he has shown up the poverty of the conventional swing orchestra, in that he has used a full string section, together with oboes and flutes and [illegible] instruments foreign to the new genre. By these larger means has managed to construct a deft piece of burlesque that never relapses into the jargon of the original. It is suggestive parody rather than direct slapstick. Mr. Valerio acquitted himself admirably in what one might call the title role of the clarinet. Previously Mr. Voison earned much applause for his playing in a piece called "The Toy Trumpet," which was anything but toy in execution.

RADIO DIAL
CINCINNATI, O.

MAY 6 - 1938

BOSTON POP CONCERTS TO BE

Music Lovers To Hear Special Broadcasts Beginning May 4

The Boston Pop Concerts, long a feature of musical life in the Bay State capital during spring and summer, return to the air over NBC, including WCKY and WLS, Wednesday, May 4, at 8:30 p. m. (E.S.T.).

The broadcasts, to be heard each Wednesday for nine weeks, will be directed by Arthur Fiedler, the first native Bostonian ever to conduct the Pop concerts.

This year will be the 53rd that musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given a spring season of light and semi-classical works and the more popular classics, at popular prices. It will be the eighth year that NBC has broadcast these concerts.

The orchestra strives to reach the widest possible audience among music lovers, and the atmosphere of the concerts is one of easy informality.

Fiedler has programmed the "Marche Joyeuse," by Crabrier, to open the concert, followed by Kodaly's "Dances of Galanta." The "Delirien" Waltzes by Joseph Strauss and Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture" will complete the broadcast.

Gay Program Opens Pops

B. Am. May 5/38

By RUTH MARSTERS

Dashing, debonair, conductor Arthur Fiedler was warmly applauded by the delighted audience which gathered in Symphony Hall last evening for the opening of another season of the Pops.

On its 53rd birthday, the now venerable institution was found to maintain its earliest traditions with an easy nonchalance.

The program, by custom necessarily light in vein, eschewed banality at every possible turn.

The orchestra was in fine form. Which means that everybody sounded gay together.

There was the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windor" (Nicolai), and a piece for string orchestra by Grieg called "Spring." There were waltzes by Josef Strauss and Tchaikovsky's "Overture Solennelle, 1812." These among other things.

Of novelties there were two, a fantasy arranged for the Pops Orchestra on Churchill's music for "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" by Peter Bodge, and "Swing Stuff," likewise especially prepared by Robert McBride, clarinetist and professor of music at Bennington College.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

APR 29 1938

Tulsa Girl Sings With Symphony

Miss Charlotte Holway, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Holway, was among the 150 Radcliffe college students who, as members of the Radcliffe Choral society, joined the Harvard glee club in singing with the Boston Symphony orchestra, Tuesday.

They sang under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky in a performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," at Symphony hall in Boston. For 13 years the Harvard and Radcliffe choral groups have sung annually with this orchestra.

New England's Greatest Evening N

Pops Fans

Society Joins In Welcome

AVER ROSAMOND EMERSON

Rosamond Emerson were two of the many s who enjoyed the opening of the Pops 53d Hall last evening. If we could show you you would see their escorts, David Garri- Hitchcock, Jr. Boston Evening American Photo

Gay Program Opens Pops

By RUTH MARSTERS

Dashing, debonair, conductor Arthur Fiedler was warmly applauded by the delighted audience which gathered in Symphony Hall last evening for the opening of another season of the Pops.

On its 53rd birthday, the now venerable institution was found to maintain its earliest traditions with an easy nonchalance.

The program, by custom necessarily light in vein, eschewed banality at every possible turn.

The orchestra was in fine form. Which means that everybody sounded gay together.

There was the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windor" (Nicolai), and a piece for string orchestra by Grieg called "Spring." There were waltzes by Josef Strauss and Tchaikovsky's "Overture Solennelle. 1812." These among other things.

Of novelties there were two, a fantasy arranged for the Pops Orchestra on Churchill's music for "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" by Peter Bodge, and "Swing Stuff," likewise especially prepared by Robert McBride, clarinetist and professor of music at Bennington College.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

MAY 6 - 1938

A GOOD YARN EVEN IF SOMEWHAT OVERDRAWN

Mme. Olga Samaroff-Stokowski, the talented pianist and former wife of the much publicized Leopold Stokowski, tells a story about two famous conductors.

The place is the Philadelphia Academy of Music, the scene a concert by the visiting Boston Symphony orchestra, the time many years ago. Mme. Samaroff-Stokowski reports this conversation by a Fat Lady and a Thin Lady seated behind her:

F. L.: "Oh, what a relief to see a great conductor using the score as he leads!"

T. L.: "Yes. So different from that upstart Stokowski."

F. L.: "Well, my dear, surely you know why he doesn't use his notes."

T. L.: "No. Why?"

F. L.: "He doesn't use notes because he can't read music."

Swing and 'Snow White' at Po

[illegible] May 5/38

The combined influences of Benny Goodman, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," and Ray Scott descended upon Symphony Hall last night as Arthur Fiedler and his musicians opened the fifty-third season of the Pop Concerts. Mr. Goodman is by now no stranger to these classic surroundings. After last Sunday's concert he is a formidable figure at least at the box office.

The Goodman influence was felt obliquely in the first performance of an amusing satirical number called "Swing Stuff," by Robert McBride, whose "Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" ("There she goes, There she goes, All dressed up in her Sunday clothes") was introduced to Pops audiences last year. Mr. McBride expanded "Swing Stuff" from his composition for piano and clarinet, "Design for a Killer-Diller." The program notes innocently define a "killer-diller" as a clarinetist. Actually, the word means an excessively violent and well-liked swing number, one that "sends" the "jitterbugs," "cats," "alligators," et al. Aside from the clink of glasses and the buzz of chatter, last night's Symphony audience was a model of restraint.

Which does not by any means bespeak the failure of "Swing Stuff." It is a clever bit of jazz writing, but so much more intricate and richly scored than any swing band ever plays that it misses the mark slightly as satire on "swing" music. The swing band, after all, is composed of drums, a piano, four brasses, four reeds, a string bass, guitar or banjo. The insistency of rhythms are its outstanding characteristic; while cleverly conceived, the rhythms of "Swing Stuff" seemed involved rather than than insistent. Manuel Valerio played in a masterful manner the clarinet solo, which was fast, furious and sounded extremely difficult.

Mr. Fiedler's program which was warmly applauded by the large audience, included the Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches," by Ippolitov-Ivanov, Grieg's "Sring" (for string orchestra), "Joyeuse Marche," by Chabrier, waltzes by Josef Strauss, the "1812" Overture, and Kodály's "Dances of Galanta."

The "Snow White" fantasia, arranged by Peter Bodge, will probably become a favorite of the Pops season, especially with the new orchestration of these sentimental tunes. Nor must one forget Scott's slightly dissonant "The Toy Trumpet," which, judging from the enthusiasm it inspired last evening, will probably occupy the position of popularity held by "Strike Up the Band," a season or two ago. The program closed with Brahms's First Hungarian Dance.

J. D. B.

Pops Opens Its 53d Season

B. Trav. May 5/38

The 53rd season of Pops opened last evening at Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler again in the conductor's stand. Mr. Fiedler knows what his Pops audiences want. And last evening's capacity audience thoroughly approved his program, which ranged from "Swing Stuff" to "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," on to "Dances of Galanta."

We mention these three numbers, because they are significant innovations, musically speaking. The first, and still musically, the most important was the Kodaly suite of "Dances of Galanta." This excellent contemporary Hungarian composer has written other music that may well rank as the best choral work of his generation. In this suite he has formed, with consummate skill and no lapse from taste, a music that is at once easily appreciated and good. The suite is not easy to play, and the orchestra consequently deserve praise for handling it with the virtuosity which is the result of its training.

"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" was bound to contribute something to the Pops season, and Peter Bodge has made an admirable fantasia from the principal tunes.

Next to the concluding number was "Swing Stuff," a parody of the current craze. This is by a talented American composer, Robert McBride, who has made his point, with wit and ingenuity. For one thing he has shown up the poverty of the conventional swing orchestra, in that he has used a full string section, together with oboes and flutes and [illegible] instruments foreign to the new genre. By these larger means has managed to construct a deft piece of burlesque that never relapses into the jargon of the original. It is suggestive parody rather than direct slapstick. Mr. Valerio acquitted himself admirably in what one might call the title role of the clarinet. Previously Mr. Voison earned much applause for his playing in a piece called "The Toy Trumpet," which was anything but toy in execution.

RADIO DIAL
CINCINNATI, O.

MAY 6 - 1938

BOSTON POP CONCERTS TO BEGIN SUMMER SEASON

Music Lovers To Hear Special Broadcasts Beginning May 4

The Boston Pop Concerts, long a feature of musical life in the Bay State capital during spring and summer, return to the air over NBC, including WCKY and WLS, Wednesday, May 4, at 8:30 p. m. (E.S.T.).

The broadcasts, to be heard each Wednesday for nine weeks, will be directed by Arthur Fiedler, the first native Bostonian ever to conduct the Pop concerts.

This year will be the 53rd that musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given a spring season of light and semi-classical works and the more popular classics, at popular prices. It will be the eighth year that NBC has broadcast these concerts.

The orchestra strives to reach the widest possible audience among music lovers, and the atmosphere of the concerts is one of easy informality.

Fiedler has programmed the "Marche Joyeuse," by Crabrier, to open the concert, followed by Kodaly's "Dances of Galanta." The "Delirien" Waltzes by Joseph Strauss and Tschaikowsky's "1812 Overture" will complete the broadcast.

Gay Program Opens Pops

B. Am. May 5/38

By RUTH MARSTERS

Dashing, debonair, conductor Arthur Fiedler was warmly applauded by the delighted audience which gathered in Symphony Hall last evening for the opening of another season of the Pops.

On its 53rd birthday, the now venerable institution was found to maintain its earliest traditions with an easy nonchalance.

The program, by custom necessarily light in vein, eschewed banality at every possible turn.

The orchestra was in fine form. Which means that everybody sounded gay together.

There was the overture to "The Merry Wives of Windor" (Nicolai), and a piece for string orchestra by Grieg called "Spring." There were waltzes by Josef Strauss and Tchaikovsky's "Overture Solennelle, 1812." These among other things.

Of novelties there were two, a fantasy arranged for the Pops Orchestra on Churchill's music for "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" by Peter Bodge, and "Swing Stuff," likewise especially prepared by Robert McBride, clarinetist and professor of music at Bennington College.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

APR 2 9 1938

Tulsa Girl Sings With Symphony

Miss Charlotte Holway, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Holway, was among the 150 Radcliffe college students who, as members of the Radcliffe Choral society, joined the Harvard glee club in singing with the Boston Symphony orchestra, Tuesday.

They sang under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky in a performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," at Symphony hall in Boston. For 13 years the Harvard and Radcliffe choral groups have sung annually with this orchestra.

39

Return of the Pops Concerts

Arthur Fiedler Presents Characteristic Program Before Audience Filling Symphony Hall

B. Trans. By MOSES SMITH May 5/38

Once a year it becomes the privilege of the music reviewer to write a weather story, turning on the coincidence of the Bostonian spring and the Pops concerts. It is now axiomatic that, regardless of calendar or thermometer, spring in the Hub of the Universe comes in with the first Pop concert on Wednesday evening of the first week in May and goes out with the final program on the Saturday before Independence Day.

And indeed you can now predict with the accuracy of an astronomer the phenomena attending the beginning of our spring —something that you cannot do at any other time of year. At 8.30 in the evening you may be sure that in Symphony Hall, situate at the junction of Huntington and Massachusetts avenues, an assemblage of some two thousand persons will be seated in every available place in the balconies and at tables on the floor of that auditorium, waiting for the conductor to come out to direct most of the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are seated at more or less their customary places on a stage somewhat ornamented and refurbished for the season, as is the floor of the hall. In recent years that conductor has been Arthur Fiedler, who is on his way to being almost as much of an institution as the Pops concerts themselves.

Calculations were not upset last night. At the appointed time Mr. Fiedler appeared, to be greeted warmly by the audience and to take the musicians promptly through the opening number, the Georgian March from Ippolitov-Ivanov's "Caucasian Sketches." Thereafter routine, which no-one would want changed, was followed with customary precision. As one number succeeded another the freely applauding audience was rewarded at periodic intervals with extra pieces. Last night even one of the extras had to be partly replayed—again a not unusual procedure.

The program of the present occasion tended to lightness, which may or may not be a sign of the times. The most ponderous item was the familiar battlehorse, Tchaikovsky's "1812" Overture. There was a touch of modernist spice and rather more of Straussian (Richard) flavor in Kodaly's "Dances of Galanta"; and a little more acidity, as well as deference to a current folkway, in McBride's "Swing Stuff," the first performance of which enlisted the able clarinet solo of Manuel Valerio. The conductor reminded us that there was more than one Strauss composer of waltzes by presenting Josef Strauss's "Delirien." For another gesture in the direction of timeliness, Mr. Fiedler and his musicians set forth a fantasy by Peter Bodge on the music of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," an over-elaborate affair which did not improve on the charm of the original. For the rest there were familiar pieces by Nicolai, Grieg, Saint-Saens, Chabrier and Brahms.

The audience conducted itself in customary fashion, which is to say with conviviality. One listened intently or lightly to the music as one chose. One divided one's attention to the music, if one liked, with such things as a glass of beer and pretzels, a cigarette and genteel conversation. In short, one partook of the gayety of Pops, a manifestation peculiar to Boston.

At Pops Tonight

Arthur Fiedler will lead the Symphony Hall Pops Orchestra through the following program this evening:

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Overture to "Sakuntala" .... Goldmark
Turkish March .... Mozart
"Espana," Rhapsody .... Chabrier
Suite from the Ballet "Nutcracker" Tschaikowsky
Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner
Divertissement .... Ibert
"Roses from the South," Waltzes Strauss
Malaguena .... Lecuona
Strike Up the Band............Gershwin

Socially Prominent at Pops Concert

B. Record - May 5/38

Vinton Freedley, Jr., Harvard student and "leading lady" in recent Hasty Pudding show; Eleanor Coolidge of Beverly Farms, Hunt Hammill of Harvard, and Evelyn Lilly of Manchester, l. to r., pictured at first night of Pops concert in Symphony Hall last night.

Swing and Classic At Pops Opening

At Symphony Hall last night the famous Pop concerts started their 53d season in the customary gala style, with Arthur Fiedler leading the orchestra of 90 symphony men and with a full house there to enjoy the usual light music and the refreshments. A good many numbers on the long program were Pops favorites, notably Tchaikovsky's exciting "1812" overture, but there were equally popular novelties.

A first performace at the Pops was scored for McBride's up-to-date "Swing Stuff," with Manuel Valerio playing the clarinet solo a la Benny Goodman. This piece promises to be added to the list of Pop concert favorites. The Churchill-Bodge fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," arranged from the music Frank Churchill wrote for the big Walt Disney picture hit, is another number that will frequently be heard. For the old Viennese classics always liked by Pop fans there were the "Delirien" waltzes by Josef Strauss.

It was a sell-out—and a grand entertainment all around.

The program for tonight includes a selection from Wagner's "Tannhauser," Goldmark's "Sakuntala" overture, Mozart's "Turkish March," Chabrier's "Espana," Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker" ballet suite, the prize song from "Die Meistersinger," Ibert's "Divertissement," Strauss' "Roses from the South" waltzes, Lecuona's "Malaguena" and Gershwin's "Strike Up the Band."

---

parishioners' protests over the fact the minister left his church last Sunday, engaging a supply pastor to replace him, and went fishing. He caught eigh fish and attended services in another church.

"When I look back over the day," he declared, "I feel that I spent a Christian Sunday."

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

B. Globe - May 8/38

Review of Boston Symphony Season

The general course of the Boston Symphony concerts is from year to year fairly constant and prescribed. The repertory must necessarily consist in greater part of "standard" compositions, because audiences today live on proved music of the past, with new pieces and revivals of less familiar old music for occasional filip. Yet within these essential limits, each season invariably has elements of novelty that set it apart from the one previous and those to follow.

The orchestra's 57th season, ended with the concerts of April 29 and 30, was notable for the presence of more guest conductors than usual. Heretofore Dr. Koussevitzky departed in mid-Winter for two weeks of rest; this year he enjoyed a second absence in the Spring. Beyond all doubt, the finest guest leader was Georges Enesco, that consummate and versatile musician endowed with creative as well as executant genius. Daniele Amfitheatrof, who appeared in mid-Winter, impressed more by youthful energy than technical finesse or interpretive discernment. Nadia Boulanger, the eminent French teacher of music, made an excellent impression when she conducted the Requiem of Faure, a work of merit yet understandably neglected in concert performance. The Russian composer, Serge Prokofieff, proved a competent leader of his own music. The same may be said of Walter Piston of Harvard, who led the first performances of his own First Symphony. Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony's able concert master, again directed his usual pair of concerts in the Autumn and a pair in the Monday and Tuesday series. Including Mr. Burgin, the guest list this season rose to six.

Statistics are dull reading, and there is no reason for exact tabulation of first performances and the like. It is rather more interesting to observe that in the season of 1937-38 there were more performances of music by Sibelius than in either of the two seasons previous; less of Bach; more Beethoven than last season and yet less than in 1935-36; less Brahms and the same amount of Wagner; a little more Haydn and a little less of Mozart; consistently the same amount of Debussy and Mendelssohn for three seasons running. For two seasons there has been no Schubert on the Friday and Saturday programs, but the amount of Schumann has slightly increased. Richard Strauss continues without gain or loss. Two years ago Stravinsky and Respighi had two performances, one last season and none at all in 1937-38. Ravel has continued in popularity; the memorial concerts last January when two separate programs of his music were played actually raised his total to nine performances for this season. These comparisons are based upon the Friday-Saturday programs.

In this column's honors list may be placed the humorous "Lieut. Kije" Suite of Prokofieff and his "Peter and the Wolf;" the Soviet Starokadomsky's firmly constructed orchestral Concerto; Rachmaninoff's Rhapsody On a Theme of Paganini; Sibelius' choral score "The Origin of Fire," whose advent was spectacularly accompanied by the presence of the Helsinki Chorus from Finland, and radio transmission from Germany of missing string parts. In the list also belongs the Schumann Violin Concerto, which proved a work of fundamental substance, poor in development yet worthy of more than one hearing; Enesco's Second Suite for orchestra, not new music but hitherto unheard in Boston; the exuberant Organ Concerto of Leo Sowerby. All these compositions were new either to Boston or the United States, and some were performed for the first time anywhere. This list touches only upon those which seemed of highest importance. The Third Symphony of E. B. Hill and the First Symphony of Walter Piston were notably well contrived, but derivative in style. Of the other new music not mentioned above let nothing further be said.

A major achievement of Dr. Koussevitzky was revival and subsequent repetition of the Fifth Symphony by Gustav Mahler, a large and unjustly neglected work. Another was the recent performance, for the orchestra's pension fund, of the colossal "Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven, unheard here for 11 years. There were 13 soloists in the Friday and Saturday series, six pianists, two violinists and two singers, a cellist, an organist and a violist, the latter having been Paul Hindemith, the composer. A pianist, a cellist and a violinist appeared in the Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon series, the programs for which were identical this season. The Tuesday concerts were distinctly freshened by combination with the Monday programs. In these programs, as in those for the "regular" series, Dr. Koussevitzky's exceptional skill at selection and contrast continued unabated.

San Carlo Opera May 16

Fortune Gallo's San Carlo Opera Company will come to the Boston Opera House for a week's engagement beginning Monday night, May 16. The engagement is announced to benefit the Forest Hills General Hospital. Among the leading singers will be Norma Jean Erdmann, Boston soprano, who will appear in the title role of "Madame Butterfly" and as Micaela in "Carmen." The roster will include Norina Greco, 20-year-old soprano; Maru Castagna, mezzo-soprano; Enrico Mancinelli, tenor, and Stephano Ballarini, baritone, a newcomer to the San Carlo forces. The repertory will be as follows:

Monday evening, May 16, "La Traviata," by Verdi; Tuesday evening, Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," followed by "I Pagliacci," by Leoncavallo; Wednesday evening, "Madame Butterfly," by Puccini; Thursday afternoon, Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" (sung in English), followed by a one-act ballet, "Viennese Life"; Thursday evening, Verdi's "Rigoletto"; Friday evening, "Aida," by Verdi; Saturday afternoon, "Carmen," by Bizet; Saturday evening, Verdi's "Il Trovatore."

The Symphony Hall Pops Begin Second Week Tonight

The Pop concerts at Symphony Hall will enter their second week tonight when Arthur Fiedler and his orchestra of 90 Boston Symphony men present the first Sunday program of the season. This program will include the first Boston performance of Ernst Toch's "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture," and Jesus Maria Sanroma, Boston's admirable pianist, will be soloist in the Rachmaninoff Second Piano Concerto.

The concerts begin at 8:30. Complete programs for the week will be as follows:

Tonight—Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; "Pinocchio," A Merry Overture (first performance in Boston), Toch; "The Girl with the Flaxen Hair," Debussy; Third Movement (Allegro molto Vivace), "Pathetic" Symphony, Tchaikovsky; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18; soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Rachmaninoff; "Tales from the Vienna Woods" waltzes, Moto Perpetuo, March from "The Gypsy Baron," Strauss.

Monday—Coronation March from "The Prophet," Meyerbeer; "Poet and Peasant" Overture, Suppe; Country Gardens, Grainger; Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni; Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner; Marche Slave, Tchaikovsky; Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Churchill-Bodge; "Espana" Waltzes, Waldteufel; March, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

Tuesday—Marche Militaire, Schubert; Overture to "Egmont," Beethoven; Liebestraum, Liszt-Herbert; "Aida," Fantasia, Verdi; Austrian Peasant Dances, Schonherr; Meditation from "Thais," Massenet; Bolero, Ravel; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube" waltzes, Strauss; "Night and Day," Porter; American Patrol, Meacham.

Wednesday. March, "Flag of Victory," Blon; overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Mozart; largo from "Xerxes," Handel; overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; French Military March from the "Algerian" suite, Saint-Saens; Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; "Where the Citrons Bloom," waltzes, Strauss; divertissement, Ibert; "On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" suite, Grofe; "Turkey in the Straw," arranged by Guion; torch dance from "Henry VIII," German.

Thursday. Procession of the Sardar from the "Caucasian Sketches," Ippolitov-Ivanov; overture to "Mignon," Thomas; prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," Debussy; fifth Hungarian dance, Brahms; "Peer Gynt," Suite No. 1, Grieg; Londonderry Air, arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty; finale (allegro con fuoco), Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; "The Chocolate Soldier," selection, Oscar Straus; "The Old Refrain," Kreisler; march, "Indigo," Johann Strauss.

Friday — Wedding March, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla," Glinka; Andante from the "Surprise" Symphony, No. 94, Haydn; Finale from the Suite, "Cinderella," Eric Coates; March of the Smugglers, and Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet; Overture to "Tannhauser," Wagner; Orphean Club of Lasell Junior College; "Estudiantina," Waltzes, Waldteufel; The Toy Trumpet, Scott; Czardas from "Coppelia," Delibes.

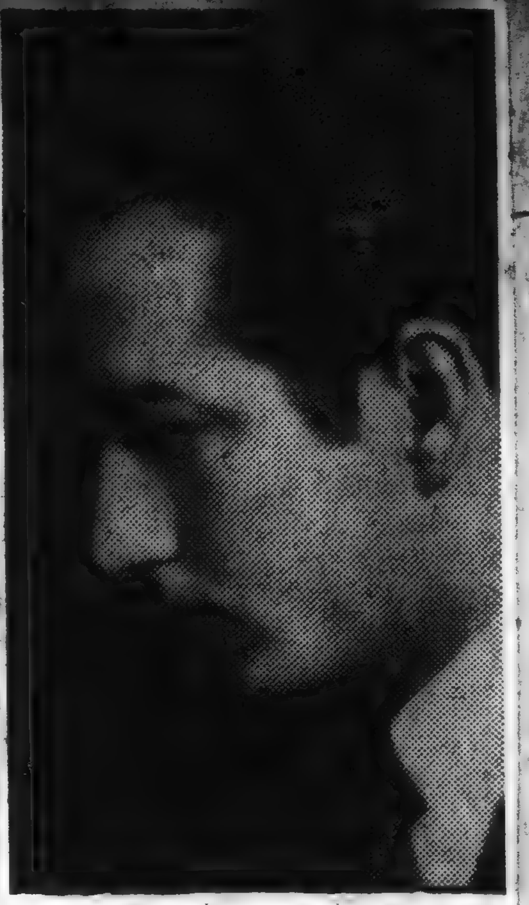
Saturday—March, "El Capitan," Sousa; Overture to "Stradella," Flotow; "Panis Angelicus," Franck; Irish Rhapsody, Herbert; "New Vienna," Waltzes, Strauss; Ave Maria, Schubert-Wilhelmj; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Victor Herbert Favorites, Arranged by Sanford; "La Camparsa" (Cuban Carnival Procession), Lecuona-Gould; Old Time Favorites.

Music News and Comment

The complete programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at "Tanglewood," are at hand. The festival—and the new music shed now approaching completion—will actually be inaugurated Aug. 4 with music of Bach and Beethoven—a chorus and chorale from the former's cantata, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," and the latter's Ninth Symphony. The chorus will be the Cecilia Society of Boston, trained by Arthur Fiedler. The soloists for the Ninth Symphony have yet to be announced, together with those for the Wagner program of Aug. 11, which will consist of the closing scene from "Die Walkuere," and the third act of "Siegfried." The other programs will be as follows:

Aug. 6—Haydn: Symphony in E-flat, No. 99; Debussy: "La Mer"; Sibelius: First Symphony. Aug. 7—Mozart: "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; Brahms: Fourth Symphony; Copland: "Music for the Theatre"; Ravel: "Mother Goose" Suite; Respighi: "The Pines of Rome." Aug. 13—Beethoven: "Pastoral" Symphony; Henry Hadley: Andante from Third Symphony (in memory

---



Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will play Rachmaninoff's Second Concerto at the first of the Sunday Pop concerts to be given this evening at Symphony Hall.

B. Her. May 8/38

2d Week of Pops; Sanroma Soloist This Evening

The Pop concerts enter the second week of their 53rd season in Symphony Hall tonight when Arthur Fiedler, their skilled conductor, presents the first Sunday concert of the season. These concerts, which owe their popularity partly to their festive and sociable atmosphere as refreshments are served at the tables which cover the floor of Symphony Hall, are, of course, also an unexampled musical treat, for such a splendid Symphony orchestra under such a conductor, presenting such a variety of delightful music, is to be found nowhere else.

Mr. Fiedler announces the following programs for the second week:

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 8

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
"Pinocchio," a merry overture........Toch
(First performance in Boston)
"The Girl with the Flaxen Hair".Debussy
Third Movement "Pathetic" Symphony Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Oberon"..............Weber
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18 ....Rachmaninoff
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," waltzes Strauss
Moto Perpetuo ....Strauss
March from "The Gypsy Baron"...Strauss

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 9

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
"Poet and Peasant," overture......Suppe
Country Gardens ....Grainger
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana".Mascagni
Prelude to "Lohengrin"..........Wagner
Marche Slave ....Tchaikovsky
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ....Churchill-Bodge
"Espana," waltzes ....Waldteufel
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" Sousa

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 10

Marche Militaire ....Schubert
Overture to "Egmont"..........Beethoven
Liebestraum ....Liszt-Herbert
"Aida" Fantasia ....Verdi
Austrian Peasant Dances ....Schonherr
Meditation from "Thais" ....Massenet
Bolero ....Ravel
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes ....Strauss
"Night and Day" ....Porter
American Patrol ....Meacham

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 11

March, "Flag of Victory"................Blon
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Largo from "Xerxes"...............Handel
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..Tchaikovsky
French Military March, from the "Algerian" Suite ....Saint-Saens
Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"..Berlioz
"Where the Citrons Bloom," waltzes Strauss
Divertissement ....Ibert
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite ....Grofe
"Turkey in the Straw".Arranged by Guion
Torch Dance from "Henry VIII"...German

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 12

Procession of the Sardar from the "Caucasian Sketches" ....Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Mignon"...............Thomas
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" Debussy
Fifth Hungarian Dance ....Brahms
"Peer Gynt," Suite No. 1.............Grieg
Londonderry Air
Arranged by Sir Hamilton Harty
Finale (Allegro con fuoco), Fourth Symphony ....Tchaikovsky
"The Chocolate Soldier," selection Oscar Strauss
"The Old Refrain" ....Kreisler
March, "Indigo" ....Johann Strauss

FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 13

Wedding March, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ....Mendelssohn
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla"
Andante from "Surprise" Symphony No. 94 ....Haydn
Glinka
Finale from the Suite, "Cinderella" Eric Coates
March of the Smugglers, and Gypsy Dance from "Carmen" ....Bizet
Overture to "Tannhauser" ....Wagner
Orphean Club of Lasell Junior College
"Estudiantina," waltzes ......Waldteufel
The Toy Trumpet ....Scott
Czardas fro m"Coppelia"..........Delibes

SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 14

March, "El Capitan" ....Sousa
Overture to "Stradella" ....Flotow
"Panis Angelicus" ....Franck
Irish Rhapsody ....Herbert
"New Vienna," waltzes ....Strauss
Ave Maria ....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Overture to "William Tell" ....Rossini
Victor Herbert Favorites
Arranged by Sanford
"La Camparsa" (Cuban Carnival Procession) ....Lecuona-Gould
Old Time Favorites

Prevalence of Contemporary Music a Marked Feature of the

W

Symphonic Retrospect

Assaying the Repertory and the Performers of a Stimulating Year of Concerts

By MOSES SMITH

The fifty-seventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was eventful and exciting. If there were any need it would have established the orchestra's series of concerts as perhaps the finest in the world on the basis of the several elements involved—the quality of orchestral playing, the musical sincerity and persuasiveness of the conductor and the artistic standard and scope of the programs. In the specific manifestation of one or another of these elements at a given time one might have taken exception, preferred the condition elsewhere. But one bases a judgment on the complex, and over a period of time. For the purposes of the present article, we may take conductor and orchestra for granted and concentrate on the programs and certain exceptional features of the concert season.

The most vigorous battle Dr. Koussevitzky has had to fight in Boston — and there have been others—has been on behalf of contemporary music. If many had suspected that in recent seasons the conductor was beginning to give up the fight, a survey of the present season is instructive (due allowance being made for the contributions of guest conductors). Of the eighty-six compositions that appeared on the twenty-four programs for Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings not less than thirty-two were written by living composers. Granted that some of this music was not entirely contemporary in spirit, even though bearing a twentieth century dateline. Set against this fact, on the other hand, an additional nine compositions by Ravel and another by Roussel, both deceased within the year. Add items like two works by Debussy and one by Scriabin and it is seen that half of the repertory for the season came out of music written in the present century. This is not only an extraordinary record; it is a commendable one. It cannot be said too often that if the art of music is to be alive it must not rest on past laurels. Similarly listeners must hear new music if they are not to become stultified.

Statistics and Opinion

Among the more recent composers Ravel was most handsomely represented. In fact, his nine constituted the greatest single entry for any, new or old, a fact for which the two separate (and exceptional) memorial programs were responsible. Next came Prokofiev, whose total of eight was due largely to the program of his own music for which he was conductor and pianist as well. Sibelius, with six, was next—and his popularity, now on a par with the masters of the past, was sufficient explanation. Of the other "moderns" only Debussy and Enesco, with a pair each, were represented by more than a single composition. The most significant negative item was the complete omission of music by Stravinsky, still regarded by many as the most forceful and original creative musician of our time.

Of the four compositions given first performance at these concerts three were significantly American. The other, Hartmann's 'Cello Concerto, was of importance merely as a vehicle for the exceptional talents of Paul Tortelier. Professor E. B. Hill's Third Symphony revealed him in more robust vein than did his previous works. Walter Piston's First Symphony impressed the present writer as an important American composition; and similarly, though with some reservation, the Organ Concerto of Leo Sowerby.

Of the other works new to the symphony concerts, and in most instances new to Boston as well, probably the most successful was Prokofiev's Second Violin Concerto, which this writer was unable to hear. In different veins, his "Kije" Suite and "Peter and the Wolf" were both delightful fare; the First Piano Concerto was a curiosity, and the Second Suite from "Romeo and Juliet" substantially a failure. There was stimulating or ingratiating quality in such works as Hindemith's "Kammermusik" for viola and orchestra, Malipiero's "Elegiaca" Symphony, Rachmaninov's "Paganini" Rhapsody, Starokadomsky's Concerto, Enesco's Suite, Pizzetti's "Concerto dell' Estate" and Marcel Poot's Symphony. With the exception of Amfitheatrov's "American Panorama" none of the unfamiliar music was quite a waste of time.

Visitors

In addition to Walter Piston, who conducted the first performances of his Symphony, and Richard Burgin, who presented one program, there were four conductors sharing the baton with Dr. Koussevitzky. Nadia Boulanger's presentation of the Faure Requiem was a notable experience. Both Georges, Ensecb and Prokofiev, each in his own way, made the symphonic season more vital by their appearances. The same could not be said of the two weeks during which Daniele Amfitheatrov presided over the Orchestra. He is a young man, perhaps with talent; but it is not easy to see why that talent should be culivated at the expense of the patrons of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And before leaving the subject of guest-conductors reference may be made to a correspondent, who pleads for the re-engagement of Enesco and invitation to Bruno Walter, now an honored exile, for next season. The present writer is in hearty agreement in both instances.

Heifetz seemed to have been the best-liked of the soloists. But Gieseking, Menuhin and Rachmaninov were not far behind. Hindemith, in a different way, of course, was remarkably interesting, as was Prokofiev. And in some respects the outstanding "soloist" was the Helsinki chorus of Finland, come to expound the choral music of Sibelius.

In Sum

It is not possible here to do more than skim the surface. But one must at least mention certain other features. There was the Schumann Concerto, an uneven but frequently moving work, which would almost undoubtedly have fared better with musicians if it had not been blown up so much in advance. There was the revival, repeated later in the season, of Mahler's Fifth Symphony, magnificiently played under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. The Ravel programs displayed conductor and orchestra at their best. Here and there the conductor's imagination and canny skill in program-building seemed to serve him less than well. But to expect him to pick a winner every time is unfair. It is the average that counts, and his average during the past season

Leaning to Gravity

JESUS MARIA SANROMA
Soloist in the Rachmaninov C Minor Piano Concerto at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening

Berkshire Festival Program Detailed

Serge Koussevitzky, now on the high seas bound for France and vacation, stopped at Stockbridge the other day long enough to inspect the new "shed" in Tanglewood that will be occupied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August; to meet with the local committee, and to release the definitive programs for the six concerts. The list is substantially the same as printed in these columns some time ago, but is offered herewith for the sake of the record:

On Thursday evening, Aug. 4, the program will consist of a chorus and chorale from Bach's cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. On Saturday evening, Aug. 6, Haydn's Symphony in E-flat (B & H No. 3), Debussy's "La mer" and Sibelius's First Symphony will be played. Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," Brahms's Fourth Symphony, Copland's "Music for the Theater," Ravel's "Mother Goose" and Respighi's "Pines of Rome" will comprise the program for Sunday afternoon, Aug. 7.

A Wagner program, consisting of the introduction to the third act and the final scene of "Die Walkuere" and the entire third act of "Siegfried" will be given on Thursday evening, Aug. 11. Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony (repeated from last season), the slow movement from Henry Hadley's B minor Symphony and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony will be played on Saturday evening, Aug. 13. The closing concert on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, will be devoted to Schumann's B-flat Symphony, "Tapiola" by Sibelius and the Second Symphony of Brahms.

The opening concerts of each week, containing choral and operatic music, are a beginning in the direction of a more comprehensive festival in the future. The suggestion, thrown out in these columns some time ago, that the recent disturbances in Austria might reasonably be seized as an opportunity for such expansion immediately, gains some substance from a note from the Festival Committee to this department. It is to the effect that several persons will come from Toronto, Canada, to the Berkshire Festival instead of going to European festivals this summer, the assigned reason being the "existing chaos" in Europe and the desire to "support a festival in America free from political implications."

Programs for Pop Concerts

Jesus Maria Sanroma, Boston pianist intimately associated with the Pops Concerts for many years, will make his first solo appearance of the season in tomorrow's first Sunday night concert, playing the Second Concerto of Rachmaninov. The programs for next week will be prevailingly light, emphasizing a familiar side of an institution more than half a century old. The lists for the week, including that of tonight, follow:

Tonight

Military Polonaise.......Chopin-Glazounov
Largo, from the "New World" Symphony .... Dvorak
Entrance of the Little Fauns......Pierne
Waltz of the Flowers, from the "Nutcracker" Suite...........Tschaikowsky
"The Prince and the Princess" from "Scheherazade" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
Violin solo: Julius Theodorowicz
Bolero .... Ravel
College Medley by the Regis College Glee Club
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ....Churchill-Bodge
March, "Pomp and Circumstance"..Elgar

Sunday Evening

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
"Pinocchio," a Merry Overture......Toch
"The Girl with the Flaxen Hair".Debussy
Third Movement (Allegro molto Vivace) "Pathetic" Symphony....Tschaikowsky
Overture to "Oberon"............Weber
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in D-minor, Op. 18............Rachmaninov
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes Strauss
Moto Perpetuo.....................Strauss
March from "The Gypsy Baron"..Strauss

Monday Evening

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
"Poet and Peasant," Overture....Suppe
Country Gardens .... Grainger
Fantasia, "Cavalleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill-Bodge
"Espana" Waltzes .... Waldteufel
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever".Sousa

Tuesday Evening

Marche Militaire .... Schubert
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Liebestraum .... Liszt-Herbert
"Aida," Fantasia .... Verdi
Austrian Peasant Dances......Schoenherr
Meditation from "Thais" ..... Massenet
Bolero .... Ravel
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube" Waltzes .... Strauss
"Night and Day" .... Porter
American Patrol .... Meacham

Wednesday Evening

March, "Flag of Victory"......... Blon
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Largo from "Xerxes" .... Handel
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812".Tchaikovsky
French Military March, from the "Algerian" Suite .... Saint-Saens
Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini"..Berlioz
"Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes Strauss
Divertissement .... Ibert
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon Suite .... Grofe
Turkey in the Straw...... Arr. by Guion
Torch Dance from "Henry VIII"..German

Thursday Evening

Procession of the Sardar from the "Caucasian Sketches"..Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Mignon"..........Thomas
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" Debussy
Fifth Hungarian Dance..........Brahms
"Peer Gynt," Suite No. 1..........Grieg
Londonderry Air Arr. by Sir Hamilton Harty
Finale (Allegro con fuoco), Fourth Symphony .... Tchaikovsky
"The Chocolate Soldier," Selection Oscar Strauss
"The Old Refrain" .... Kreisler
March, "Indigo" .... Johann Strauss

Friday Evening

Wedding March, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" .... Mendelssohn
Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla" Glinka
Andante from the "Surprise" Symphony .... Haydn
Finale from the Suite, "Cinderella" Eric Coates
March of the Smugglers, and Gypsy Dance from "Carmen" .... Bizet
Overture to "Tannhaeuser"..... Wagner
Orphean Club of Lasell Junior College
"Estudiantina," Waltzes .... Waldteufel
The Toy Trumpet...................Scott
Czardas from "Coppelia"........Delibes

Saturday Evening

March, "El Capitan" .... Sousa
Overture to "Stradella" .... Flotow
Panis Angelicus .... Franck
Irish Rhapsody .... Herbert
"New Vienna," Waltzes .... Strauss
Ave Maria .... Schubert-Wilhelmj
Overture to "William Tell".... Rossini
Victor Herbert Favorites..Arr. by Sanford
La Camparsa (Cuban Carnival Procession) .... Lecuona-Gould
Old Time Favorites

Pops Going Into Its Second Week

B. Post
May 8/38

The Pop concerts enter the second week of their 53d season in Symphony Hall tomorrow night, when Arthur Fiedler, their skilled conductor, presents the first Sunday concert of the season. These concerts which owe their popularity to their festive and sociable atmosphere as refreshments are served at the tables which cover the floor of Symphony Hall, are, of course, also an unexampled musical treat, for such a splendid symphony orchestra under such a conductor, presenting such a variety of delightful music, is to be found nowhere else.

Mr. Fiedler announces the following programs for tonight and tomorrow night:

TONIGHT

Military Polonaise ..... Chopin-Glazounov
Largo, from the "New World" Symphony Dvorak
Entrance of the Little Fauns .... Pierne
Waltz of the Flowers, from the "Nutcracker" Suite .... Tchaikovsky
"The Prince and the Princess," from "Scheherazade" ...... Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
Bolero .... Ravel
College Medley by the Regis College Glee Club
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill-Bodge
March, "Pomp and Circumstance"..Elgar

SUNDAY EVENING

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
"Pinocchio," A Merry Overture ......Toch
"The Girl with the Flaxen Hair"..Debussy
Third Movement "Pathetic" Symphony Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Oberon" ....Weber
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in D minor, Rachmaninoff
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes Strauss
Moto Perpetuo .... Strauss
March from "The Gypsy Baron"..Strauss

Boston Orchestra's Concerts

Part Three

Monitor, May 11, 1938

—Boston News—

In Boston Today

(Continued from Page 9)

cities and by John H. Mahoney of Worcester, representative of the Massachusetts Federation of Taxpayers Associations, who said that Norman MacDonald, Executive Director of the Federation, has been informed by the Bureau of Public Roads that such use of highway fund money would be approved by it.

The distribution would mean, Mayor Tobin declared, possible reduction of the Boston tax rate by $1.24.

In arguing for the other bill, that the great majority of users of the East Boston tunnel are not residents of Boston, and that the tunnel is an integral part of the State highway system so it properly should be financed by the State, the Mayor declared the provision in the city budget of $450,000 for the tunnel deficit this year meant about 30 cents in the tax rate.

Check at Tunnel

In a 10-hour day, he reported, a recent check of cars using the tunnel showed that 2,163 owned by Boston residents passed through it, and 27,511 from other communities.

If the tunnel could be taken over by the State now, he continued, Boston probably would save $280,290 for the remainder of the year. Under his plan the State would pay the deficit—caused mainly by the $830,000 a year interest on the bonds issued for its construction, and the City would continue to operate it—unless the State preferred to do that also.

Tunnel tolls, he reported, now pay about 66 per cent of the cost of operation.

Robert I. Hunniman of the Boston Real Estate Exchange, stated Boston pays about 25 per cent of the State tax and receives in return only about 5 per cent.

Among representatives of other cities supporting the measures was Mayor William E. Kane of Woburn, who rose briefly to announce that the Woburn tax rate is $46.90—highest in the State.

'Largo' Scheduled At Pops Tonight

When Handel's "Largo" is played tonight by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Pops Orchestra, for the first time this (fifty-third) season, it will have been before the public 200 years, three weeks and five days. Handel first presented it in London, April 15, 1738.

"Largo" has not missed a season at the Pops. In the annual balloting for the Request Program, it always polls one of the highest votes.

When played in a regular Boston Symphony program in 1884, the year before the Pops opened, the audience tried to have it repeated immediately. Is there any modern popular tune with such a record?

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

MAY 4 - 1938

The Melting Pot

By C. R. ROSEBERRY

FROM A BRIDGE

BEAUTIFUL night maternal, hover here on a thousand thresholds, cover these sleeping places, lean thou over the small, shut faces.

Remember, remember how the blind sank in the streets, how dream hands find the same cold corners sharpened with wind and a cup to hold.

Remember, remember how dreams unbar
the married mind and the fastened door, how old loves lie where they lay before in springs gone by.

Remember, remember how streets that slumber are peopled with children again, no stronger than dreams, nor wiser; now hatred is hunger and fear is the miser.

Beautiful night maternal, pity
this unguarded, marauded city.

—EDITH HENRICH, in The Phoenix.

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, being of Russian descent, is in no danger of an offer to conduct at Salzburg this summer. Indeed, it appears that the Salzburg Festival people have decided they can get along very nicely without foreign attendance, which is a philosophical attitude to take.

Mozart was not born in Massachusetts, but this trifling oversight on the part of destiny does not militate against the fact that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is assuming greater magnitude this year because of what has befallen Austria.

A birth certificate will not be a prerequisite for admission to the new music shed which will be inaugurated on the storied Tanglewood Estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote. Even members of the German-American Bund will be admitted, providing they leave their uniforms at home.

THE reorganized Salzburg outfit is abandoning the field of international tourist competition, according to a triumphant cackle that comes from the Vienna newspaper, "Echo":

"Let us rejoice over the new Salzburg. It will—for the first time—belong to us Germans alone. And if we invite foreigners, let them regard themselves as guests, not as masters of the house."

Singers and actors from abroad must submit proof of Aryan ancestry before they are eligible for Salzburg, and offers to several Americans, including Metropolitan Opera artists, were held up pending investigation of their heritage, according to the Vienna correspondent of The Associated Press. Thousands of expensive festival prospectuses were scrapped when the Nazis came into power in Austria.

IT MAY come as something of a shock to Salzburg patrons of past years to know what their hosts really thought of them (as interpreted by "Echo"). The Hitler-controlled newspaper snipes away at "half-naked Parisiennes, Viennese Jewesses and flaxen-haired Englishwomen," and says:

"Who used to be in the audience? Who stood at the director's podium? Foreign Jews! Who staged Goethe, conducted Mozart, played the roles of German heroes? Jewish emigrants!

"Remember, we German Austrians were wall flowers at our own Salzburg Festival. We arrived there afoot, on bicycles, or third class on railroads, and they stuck the sign, 'Sold out!' before our noses."

THE fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held the first two weekends in August. Again the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assemble its illustrious personnel for concerts under the baton of its incomparable leader, Serge Koussevitzky. An auditorium with a seating capacity of 5,000 will be initiated at Tanglewood. Visitors are welcome.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR

MAY 2 - 1938

Moment Musicale

By MAUD WELIN

THE Scotia Civic Chorus, Gordon Mason conducting, will offer its Spring Concert, May 13 at 8:30 p. m., in the Scotia M. E. Church.

An opening group of religious numbers will include the cheerful hymn of rejoicing, "In Thee Is Gladness," by Whitehead. Tosti's "Serenade," and Bantock's "Requiem," "Night Has a Thousand Eyes," by Nobel Cain, will also be featured. Among old favorites will be "Deep River," Negro Spiritual, and "Rollin' Down to Rio," the poem by Kipling, set to music by Edward German. A Russian dance song, "Dance My Comrades," Arthur Sullivan's "The Long Day Closes," the "Merry Widow" waltz and "Come to the Fair," will be included.

Royal Hamblet, tenor, of Albany, will be the soloist. Mr. Hamblet has appeared frequently in concert in his home City and in Schenectady and Scotia, where he formerly lived.

The committee in charge of arrangements for the concert includes Edgar Cottrel, business manager; Mrs. G. B. Cole, Miss Mildred Picard and Mr. Mason, music, and Harvey Hoyt, Treasurer, sale of tickets.

Mrs. L. A. Bishop will serve as chairman of the reception committee, assisted by Mrs. S. E. Percy, Mrs. G. F. Mason, Mrs. G. B. Cole and Mrs. L. O. Dunn.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, after conducting the closing concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 57th season at Symphony Hall in Boston Saturday, visited "Tanglewood," in the Berkshire Hills, where he and the orchestra will perform six concerts in August. He sails from New York on the Normandie Wednesday.

At Tanglewood, permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., there is rapidly taking form a huge music shed with a seating capacity of more than 5,000 persons. Funds for this development have come from music lovers in all parts of America, ranging from modest bits to substantial donations.

The orchestra will inaugurate the shed August 4 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Also appearing with the orchestra that evening will be the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and prominent soloists. The other concerts will be August 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

Today at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Dr. Koussevitzky consulted with more than 50 members of the advisory board and committee workers who have been largely responsible for the success of the Festival to date. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, President of the Festival, sailed for Europe this week, and in her absence Mrs. Alice Gould Edman of Pittsfield, executive Vice-President, presided.

Accompanying Dr. Koussevitzky today were Bentley W. Warren, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees; Henry B. Sawyer, a member of the orchestra's board; Professor Richard B. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, consultant on acoustics for the new shed, and Dr. Archibald Davison of Harvard University.

THE Etude Club will meet at the home of Mrs. C. C. Whelchel Thursday afternoon. Discussion of Programs for next season will be featured. The nominating committee will report. The usual musical program will be omitted, owing to an accumulation of business.

DOROTHY BAKER, soprano, who will be guest artist at the final Schubert Club concert, Wednesday night in Union College Chapel, will include in her program "Chanson des Bijoux," from Gounod's opera, "Faust," and "Inflammatus et Accensus," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

"Chanson des Bijoux," or the "Jewel Song," appears in the third act of the opera. Mephistopheles has placed a casket of jewels near Siebel's boquet. The tempter knows the heart of woman-flowers against gems? Marguerite enters the garden and discovers the casket and the flowers. She cannot resist the temptation to see what is in the casket. Jewels! To resist their lure would be to resist nature. She hesitates, then begins to deck herself with them. Looking at herself and the sparkling gems in the handglass that came with the casket she bursts into the brilliant "Jewel Song."

"Inflammatus et Accensus," is the climax of Rossini's "Stabat Mater." The brilliant soprano obligato will be sung by Miss Baker, with a powerful choral accompaniment. The solo requires a voice of exceptional range, power and flexibility. The full effect is intensely dramatic, and particularly fascinating by the manner i which the solo is set off against th choral background. The combinatio of this effective solo with the voic of the Schubert Club should provid a splendid climax for the program

A NATION-WIDE talent hunt to discover new American composers under way under the auspices of th American Music Department of th National Federation of Music Club The search is divided into two classifications. One applies to composer who have never had composition bought or published. The other to secure new compositions by already established composers. Th search will be conducted throug State contests under the direction o the various State Federations. Th first contest is open to club member who write music, but who have no had their compositions published an the composition sought is a solo fo medium voice with piano accompaniment.

The remaining contests are "fre for alls," open to any composer. The are for a piano solo composition, fo a violin solo with piano accompaniment and for selections for any sol instrument, for two pianos and strin orchestra or for piano or violin an full orchestra.

Mrs. Ralph E. Good of Patton Pennsylvania, is chairman of th Composition Contests Committee and will be assisted by Mrs. W. Carruth Jones of Baton Rouge, Louisiana Chairman of American Music, an Mr. A. Walter Kramer, former edito of "Musical America," now presiden of the Galaxy Music Corporation.

The contests will close January 1 1939. Winning compositions in the various states must be in the hand of the chairman by February 1, 1939 The intention is to present some of the outstanding compositions on the program for the 21st biennial convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs to be held in Baltimore May 16-23, 1939.

TWO major ballet companies, the World-Art Ballet, under the direction of Leonide Massine and the de Basil Ballet Russe, have joined forces, forming one of the strongest unions of the ballet forces in the world today. The new company will be called the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo and annual seasons will be held in the United States, London and Monte Carlo.

The organizational structure of the ballet company, which will make its American debut at the Metropolitan Opera House for an extended engagement beginning October 12, is unique in the field. Heretofore, similar organizations were subsidized either by governments or individuals, or conducted for private gain. A board of governors will concern itself with matters of general policy, an executive committee will supervise administration affairs and an artistic council pass upon artistic problems in the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo. Financing has been provided by a body of stockholders interested in the advancement of the ballet art.

The tour of the merged companies will be under the auspices of S. Hurok, who has managed in turn the de Basil organization and the World-Art Ballet. There will be a total of 110 productions in its repertoire, a company of 80 dancers of whom 14 will have the rank of first dancers and a staff of three orchestra conductors of which Efrem Kurtz will be the musical director.

The company will include on its tour engagements with the symphony orchestras of Philadelphia, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Minneapolis, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle.

THE Octavo Singers are opening a membership drive Monday for their Fall concert which will begin their fifth season. Mrs. James R. Herron is chairman of the membership committee and extends a cordial invitation to any singer desiring to become a member of this mixed choral group. The chorus, under the direction of Gordon F. Mason, aims to study all types of music; religious, secular and classical—compositions of the early masters and those of the present day. Miss Jeannette Odasz is accompanist.

The Executive Committee has announced that the Chorus treasury will be able to assume a sizeable part of the cost of the music for this coming concert. Rehearsals are held Monday nights at 6 Mynderse Street from 8 to 10 p. m. with a half hour intermission. The few rehearsals at this season enable the chorus to present an early Fall concert. Anyone interested will be welcome at the Monday rehearsal. Additional information may be obtained from Mrs. Herron, 4-5077, the director, or the Executive Committee; Herbert Neander, William Grams, Ella Doring, Elizabeth Burmester, Naomi Grams, Catherine Schauber and Otto Samulovitch.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

MAY 5 - 1938

UNIQUE LIBRARY GIFT

A small library collected by the late Philip Hale of Boston has been given by his widow to Smith College and will be known as the Philip Hale Memorial Library. A donation of this size (it consists of only about two thousand books) might ordinarily attract little attention, but in this instance it has importance because of its exceptional character.

Philip Hale was one of the outstanding critics of music and drama in this country, as well as one of the most graceful of whimsical columnists. In all his writing he revealed himself as a figure of intellectual and cultural force, and at any time within the past 30 years it would have been taken for granted that books collected and prized by him would have special values.

Naturally, the majority of the volumes assembled by him have to do with music and the theatre, and many of these are written in French and are now out of print. Other books in the collection deal with the lives of musicians and actors and with criticism and the texts of plays. There are also bound volumes of the program notes which Mr. Hale wrote for the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a period of 20 years, a mine of erudite comment in themselves.

The miscellaneous works in this library include a considerable number of rare first editions. The collection as a whole is of unusual interest not only as bibliography of music and drama but as a reflection of the discriminating taste of a distinguished man who in his time exerted a pronounced influence on the cultural life of a large part of New England. Smith College is fortunate in the acquisition of such a treasure.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

MAY 6 - 1938

Symphony Program Is Announced

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has announced the programs which will be given this August during the fifth annual Berkshire Symphony festival at Tanglewood. Six concerts are to be given in the open-air auditorium which seats 5000. The concerts will be heard on August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13, and 14.

The inauguration will be featured by the chorus and chorale from the cantata of Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The audience will be invited to join with the chorus in singing the second verse of the Bach chorale. The Cecilia Chorus of Boston, of which Arthur Fiedler is conductor, and outstanding solosits will appear with the orchestra at the opening concert. Soloists also will appear August 11.

The program, August 13, will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival, and Dr. Koussevitsky has included on the program one of Dr. Hadley's works, Andante Tranquillo, from the Symphony number 3 in B minor Opus 60.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

MAY 6 - 1938

CHADWICK'S PLACE IN AMERICAN MUSIC

Hearing an instrumental work, written by the late George W. Chadwick, in a radio program recently reminded us again quite forcibly that he was one of this country's leading composers. The score performed was "Jubilee," styled symphonic sketches, and its deftness of tonal mixtures and apparent spontaneity, were ample evidence of Chadwick's sound musicianship and fertility of melodic invention.

Though born in Lowell, Mr. Chadwick lived and followed his profession in this city in early life before moving to Boston. From there he went to Germany, where he studied under some of the leading instructors, including Rheinberger. For many years he was dean of the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. The local Chadwick club was organized in his honor and a number of years ago he visited this city to attend some of its functions.

As a composer George W. Chadwick ranks high in American music, embracing varied instrumental and vocal works. His larger scores have been performed by the Boston Symphony and other major orchestras of the country.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

MAY 7 - 1938

Programs Set For Symphony Festival

Before sailing for France this week for his annual vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced the complete programs to be performed at Tanglewood for the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

The new shed, whose construction Dr. Koussevitzky viewed during his Berkshire visit, will be inaugurated Thursday evening, Aug. 4, at 8:30 p. m., with the chorus and chorale from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in D Minor. The audience will be invited to join with the chorus in singing of the second verse of the Bach cantata. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston, of which Arthur Fiedler is conductor, will join with the orchestra in this inaugural program.

Dubussy's "La Mer," whose performance by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra has won acclaim from many critics, will be on the program Aug. 6.

An all-Wagner program with soloists will be presented Thursday evening of the second week. The program will include scenes from "Die Walkyrie" and Act III of "Siegfried" with soloists.

The program Aug. 13 will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the festival. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will perform the andante tranquillo from Dr. Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, Opus 60.

The festival will close Sun. ay, Aug. 14, with Schumann's Symphony in B Flat No. 1, Sibelius' "Tapiola," and Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D Major.

WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN

MAY 9 - 1938

Mrs. Bertrand Peck, chairman for Torrington and Winsted for the Berkshire symphonic festival, today reminded all music-lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky that membership lists close May 15.

week. The prize-winners in the poster contest conducted in conjunction with the observance of Air Mail week will also be selected this week and the successful contestants will receive their prizes Air Mail week.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
MAY 7 - 1938

The New Records

Two Versions of a Mozart Divertimento—The Schnabels—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Usually when two versions of an extended work by a great composer appear simultaneously from two different companies, something more than a coincidence may be suspected. But in the instance of the B flat Divertimento of Mozart (Koechel No. 287) now available in versions from Columbia and Victor, this writer is in a position to know that the projects were conceived independently, and actually approach the work from two separate viewpoints.

The Victor version, played by Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Orchestra, and a string and horn quintet of his colleagues, reproduces the score in the chamber music dimensions specified by the composer. The Columbia version, which presents Joseph Szigeti and a chamber orchestra led by Max Goberman, accepts the soloistic implications of the first violin part, and treats the score as a specie of chamber concerto. Remarkably enough, both views of the score are musically valid, especcially when a musician of Szigeti's taste and discrimination assumes the responsibilities of the more brilliant, virtuoso approach.

The Two Performances.

It is a major misfortune, however, that this first important album to be made by Szigeti in America had not more fortunate results. His own performance is a model of that ardent, vibrant participation in the composer's thought which marks his art at its best, and the string players are competent. However, the recording is distressingly poor, lacking depth and resonance, with the solo violin much out of balance with the ensemble, and the horn players unequal to the difficulties of their part.

Though the Victor set (one of its New Friends of Music series) cannot offer a performance of the first violin part to match Szigeti's, the brilliance and fullness of the reproduction and the splendid capability of all the associated players (including, of course, the two excellent horns from the Boston Orchestra) present a heavy balance of merit in its favor. Moreover, Burgin's playing of the important first part is excellent fiddling in its own right, which would not be overshadowed by any effort less exceptional than Szigeti's. To this taste, the background of hall resonance (the recording was made in Symphony Hall) is an asset.

The Two Schnabels.

Also a New Friends of Music release are the two albums of music by Schubert for piano fourhands, played by the Schnabels, father and son. Half of the sixteen sides of the first album are given over to a delicate and finely turned performance of the lengthy "Divertissement a la Hongroise," which has not been recorded previously. This is music that is more enjoyable to play than to listen to, and the interruptions necessitated by a phonographic performance do not enhance its qualities. Nevertheless, there are some remarkable and original ideas in it that are finely revealed by the Schnabels. This album also contains the B minor "Andantino Varie," and the following Marches: Nos. 1, 2, and 3 of opus 51, and Nos. 2 and 3 of opus 40. The second album (four records) presents the A major Rondo and the "Lebensstuerme" allegro (opus 144). This will be reviewed at a later date. Both the recording and the playing of the first album maintain an excellent average quality.

Also for Two Pianists.

Timely also contributes an album of sonatas for two pianists, but here they operate on separate instruments. 'They'' are Grace Castagneta and Milton Kaye, performing the D major sonata of Mozart and the first two of Muzio Clementi's sonatas for two pianos, both in B flat. Heresy though it may be, the Clementi is more interesting and ingratiating music, lively in thought and finely detailed in its writing. The playing is deft and musical, but there is much that is wanting in dynamic shading and tonal variation. Timely's reproduction of the piano is acceptable, but the surface material could be much improved.

The Lighter Side.

The news of the week for swing fans is the appearance of two disks by the new Gene Krupa orchestra, with two of the sides offering the first vocal choruses by Helen Ward (of Goodman fame) in almost a year. Brunswick is the sponsor, No. 8124 offering the staple "I Know That You Know" and a tasty arrangement of "Grandfather's Clock," and No. 8123 concerned with the current commercials "Feeling High and Happy" and "One More Dream." Whether it was advisable for so new a band to put itself on record may be questioned, for all of the sides are marked by a tension which will probably be overcome in time. To this taste, "Grandfather's Clock" is the ablest job, a good idea well executed. However, "I Know That You Know" is over loud and too fast, distinguished only by some good solo work by tenorman Vido Musso, when he can be heard above the background; and the two commercials are routine. Krupa's tremendous vitality is basic in all these, but his drumming is too prominent to give the band the lift it should.

Admirers of the talented Bobby Hackett will find some of his best work on Vocalian 4062, where a group that includes George Wettling on drums, Joe Marsala on clarinet, Art Shapiro on bass, Pete Brown (alto) and Joe Bushkin (piano) offer jam versions of "Elementine" and an item titled "Jammin' the Waltz." The second of these is really a slow blues with a waltz flavor, in which the ponderable feat of swinging a waltz is attempted. It doesn't impress these ears as a waltz, but this is merely a pedantic point; for Hackett's fine horn playing is the major attraction here. On the reverse, Shapiro's bass playing and Wettling's drumming are also above the average.

HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER
MAY 10 1938

MEMBERSHIP LISTS CLOSE ON MAY 15

Mrs. Otis W. Bradley, chairman for Hudson, for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, today reminded all music lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at "Tanglewood" between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, that membership lists close May 15.

Mrs. Bradley points out that district privileges are extended to members including a substantial saving in the cost of admission, preference in the assignment of reserved seats and free admission to a rehearsal by the orchestra. Of added interest this year will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 500. Although a number of details will not be completed this summer, there will be ample protection from sun and storm. The Cecilias Chorus of Boston and distinguished soloists will be heard with the orchestra the opening night in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and Beethovan's Ninth Symphony. Soloist also will be heard the opening night of the second week in the all Wagner program which will feature portions of "Die Walkyrie" and "Siegfried."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
MAY 8 1938

FESTIVAL NOTES

THE Westchester Music Festival Association has announced the complete program for the junior concert which will open the fourteenth annual Westchester Music Festival at the County Center, in White Plains, on Friday night, May 13. Lowell Beveridge, associate professor of music at Columbia University, and Harwood Simmosn, conductor of the Columbia University Band, will conduct a chorus and band, including nearly four hundred high school students. The Columbia University Band also will take part in next Friday's program.

The program is as follows:

Invitation to the Dance	Weber
Peasants' march; adagio; Huntsman's Chorus from "Der Freischuetz"	Weber
March, Invercargill	Lithgow
County Student Band
Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring	Bach
Heavenly Light	Kopylow
Hear My Prayer	Arkhangelsky
Psalm 150	Franck
County Student Chorus
The Sorcerer's Apprentice	Dukas
Columbia University Band
Echo Song	Lassus
The Nightingale	Tchaikovsky
Listen to the Lambs	Dett
County Chorus
Intermezzo from "L'Arlesienne"	Bizet
Sinfonia from "Orfeo"	Monteverdi
Prelude, Op. 28, No. 20	Chopin
Allegro from Organ Sonata, Op. 65, No. 2	Mendelssohn
County Band
Hallelujah Chorus from "Messiah"	Handel

The student participants, representing eleven school systems of the county, have been rehearsing for several weeks. The chorus and band include pupils from Ardsley, Bronxville, Eastchester, Elmsford, New Rochelle, North Tarrytown, Tarrytown, Scarsdale, White Plains and Port Chester.

The second event of the festival will be a concert by the Philadelphia Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy's direction, on Friday night, May 20. Hugh Ross, conductor of the Schola Cantorum, in his third season as musical director of the Westchester festival, will direct the senior county chorus and the Philadelphia Orchestra for the closing program on Saturday night, May 21. The principal numbers in this concert will be R. Nathaniel Dett's oratorio, "The Ordering of Moses"; Sibelius's "The Origin of Fire" and parts of Bach's B minor mass. The soloists will be Dorothy Barker, New York, soprano; Ellen Repp, New Rochelle, contralto; Donald Rogers, Scarsdale, tenor, and Mack Harrell, barytone.

Jubilee Program Thursday

The annual Westchester spring choral jubilee program of Negro spirituals will be held at the County Center next Thursday night, May 12, under the auspices of the county's recreation commission. The chorus of more than three hundred singers has been rehearsing in Tarrytown, White Plains, Yonkers, Ossining and Tuckahoe under the direction of Leviticus Lyon and Arsel Emmanuel. Besides conducting next Thursday's concert, Mr. Lyon also will take part in the program as a senior soloist.

Berkshire Programs

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction this summer in the new music shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., will begin Thursday evening, August 4, with excerpts from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg" and Beethoven's ninth symphony, with the Cecilia Society of Boston, trained by Arthur Fiedler, as the assisting chorus. The audience will be invited to join in the singing of a verse from the cantata.

The other five Berkshire Festival programs are:

Saturday, August 6, 8:30

Symphony in E flat, No. 99	Haydn
La Mer	Debussy
Symphony No. 1	Sibelius

Sunday, August 7, 3:30

Eine kleine Nachtmusik	Mozart
Symphony No. 4	Brahms
Music for the Theater	Copland
Ma Mere l'Oye	Ravel
Pines of Rome	Respighi

Thursday, August 11, 8:30

Ride of the Valkyries and final scene from "Die Walkuere," Act III	Wagner
"Siegfried," Act III (with four soloists)	Wagner

Saturday, August 13, 8:30

Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral)	Beethoven
Andante from Symphony No. 3	Hadley
Symphony No. 6 (Pathetic)	Tchaikovsky

Sunday, August 14, 8:30

Symphony in B flat, No. 1	Schumann
Tapiola	Sibelius
Symphony No. 2	Brahms

The andante from Henry Hadley's third symphony will be played in memory of its composer, who conducted the first two Berkshire Festivals in 1934 and 1935. The membership list closes May 15. Members obtain admission at a minimum rate, have a preferential choice of seats and can attend a rehearsal at Tanglewood without charge. Complete information may be obtained from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
POST - STANDARD

MAY 8 - 1938

New Phonograph Recordings

BY WILLIAM HENRY TUCKLEY

Considering the magnitude of the work and the large number of persons and instruments involved in its presentation, the successful recording of the Bach "St. Matthew Passion" is an achievement of which the Victor company and its technical staff may well be proud.

The recording was made at a public performance on Good Friday afternoon and evening, March 26, last year, and the third and final album of the set was released, quite appropriately, around Easter this year.

Serge Koussevitzky was the conductor and the Boston Symphony orchestra was assisted by the Harvard Glee club, the Radcliffe Choral society, and the following soloists: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Kathryn Meisle, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Keith Faulkner and Fritz Lechner, bass; Dr. V. Ernst Wolff, harpischord, and Carl Weinrich, organ.

In addition there were solo violins, viola de gamba, flute, English horns and oboi d'amore.

It would be superfluous to comment upon the fine work of orchestra, chorus and soloists; they rank among the highest in their respective fields. The only unusual feature is that such an array of talent could be assembled for a single performance.

It is pertinent to state that the inspiration and exultation of the Bach score, ideally interpreted under the able direction of Mr. Koussevitzky, has been faithfully recorded on some 27 discs and the reproduction is as perfect as could be expected had the performance taken place in a specially equipped studio.

The complete work is incorporated in three Musical Masterpiece albums, 411, 412 and 413.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 9 - 1938

TWO LOCAL WOMEN FESTIVAL COCHAIRMEN

Mrs Reynolds Clark and Mrs Hollis Carlisle Act for Berkshire Event

Mrs Reynolds Clark and Mrs Hollis Carlisle, cochairmen for Springfield for the Berkshire Symphonic festival, yesterday reminded all music lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at "Tanglewood," by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, that membership lists close the 15th. They point out the distinct privileges extended to members including a substantial saving in the cost of admission, preference in assignment of reserved seats and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

The Cecilia chorus of Boston, directed by Arthur Fiedler, and distinguished soloists will be heard with the orchestra the opening night in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Soloists also will appear the opening night of the second week in the all-Wagner program which include portions of "Die Walkyrie" and "Siegfried."

Many other activities are being planned in the Berkshires during the festival weeks. Olin Downes, critic, will give four lectures at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield on the principal works to be played by the orchestra. The lectures this year will be at 3 in the afternoon instead of in the morning. They will be given August 4 and 6 and August 11 and 13.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perform at their West Becket studio, Director William Miles has promised two outstanding plays at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, there will be chamber music at South Mountain in Pittsfield on Friday afternoons at 4 the two weeks of the festival; there also will be chamber music at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., Cummington and at Alexander Bloch's in Hillsdale, N. Y.

43

WASHINGTON, D. C.
HERALD

MAY 9 - 1938

Stravinsky's Concerto Given Premiere Here

By GLENN DILLARD GUNN

The world premiere of Igor Stravinsky's "Dumbarton Oaks" concerto for small orchestra took place last night in the famous mansion for which it is named. The artists engaged in its presentation are renowned, the audience that heard it was made up in large part of celebrities, and the work developed elements of originality and clarity that oblige the most serious consideration.

Stravinsky is the first of the Russian modernists to gain world recognition, after Scriabine, and he brought to the art a greater technical resource than his eminent predecessor and a more practical imagination. He asked no impossible tasks of music; but in the height of his dissonant career he offered his listeners problems in cacophony that seemed to them quite unsolvable. As he turned from his ballets, with their dramatic programs, to the absolute forms of the art that exist for music alone, his idiom grew clearer.

This concerto, composed during 1937-38, is the most attractive modern page that a season filled with interesting new music has brought us.

Its three movements are rich in ideas of rhythm and sound that stimulate attention and excite the imagination. He has by no means abandoned dissonance; but he has grown more expert in defining it.

Beauty of Pattern

His themes have the value of mental concepts rather than of emotional images. They have the beauty of pattern rather than of expression. They are developed in a contrapuntal texture that takes its color from conflicting tonalities rather than from the denial of tonality.

This music needs no program. There is drama in the irregular rhythms. There is adventure in the themes that wander simultaneously in different keys. The trained ear follows its logic with ever-growing satisfaction and even the lover of the art whose responses are entirely of the senses and whose reactions derive from emotional stimuli only, found it exciting.

The performance was notable for its taste and understanding. Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, the gifted French musician who made history this year as the first woman to appear as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and who has done many things in Europe which she doubtless believes to be equally important, conducted. Her chamber orchestra was built around the celebrated Pro Musica String Quartet.

Dushkin at Violin

One of the three violins is Samuel Dushkin, who has been Stravinsky's associate in his American tours. The score called for one flute, one oboe, one clarinet, one bassoon, two French horns, three violins, three violas, two celli and two basses.

Another Stravinsky work on the program new to most of the listeners was the Duo Concertante for violin and piano, presented on this occasion by Dushkin and Beveredge Webster. It falls into the same category as to rhythmic interest and formal symmetry, developing its patterns in sound and sensation without any superimposed implication as to feeling. This, too, was brilliantly set forth.

Mlle. Boulanger offered excerpts from nine of the Bach cantatas, which were presented by Hughes Cueno and Doda Conrad of her vocal ensemble and instrumental ensemble, the conductor adding harpsichord parts at the piano. These, likewise, were beautifully presented and the contrast was instructive.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 4 - 1938

Koussevitzky Visits Canaan Music Hall

Special to The Hartford Times

Canaan—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the musical festival the second season at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., in August, was on a tour of inspection at the music hall Monday.

The grounds have been seeded and paths laid out. New roads leading to the hall are being constructed and landscaped. The builders now are putting on the sound-proof siding of the hall which will be inaugurated on Aug. 4 with Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia Society chorus of Boston and prominent soloists will appear with the orchestra for the inauguration.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
MAY 8 - 1938

Koussevitzky Announces Festival Program Lists

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra announced the complete programs to be presented at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, for the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival in August before sailing last week for his annual vacation.

The new shed, whose construction Dr Koussevitzky viewed during his Berkshire visit, will be inaugurated Thursday night, August 4, at 8.30 with the chorus and the chorale from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg is unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth symphony. The audience will be invited to join with the chorus in the singing of the Bach cantata. The Cecelia Society chorus of Boston, of which Arthur Fiedler is conductor, will join with the orchestra in this inaugural program.

Debussy's "La Mer," whose performance by Dr Koussevitzky and the orchestra has won acclaim from many critics, will be on the program of August 6. An all-Wagner program with soloists will be presented Thursday night of the second week, including scenes from "Die Walkuere" and the third act of "Siegfried" with soloists.

The program of August 13 will be dedicated to the late Dr Henry Hadley, first conductor of the festival. At this time the orchestra will perform the Andante Tranquillo from Dr Hadley's Symphony No 3 in B-minor, Op 60.

The festival will close on Sunday, August 14, with Schumann's symphony in B-flat, No 1, Sibelius's "Tapiola" and Brahms's symphony No 2 in D-major.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

MAY 12 1938

1,300 Enroll for Six Concerts

The membership campaign for the fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky's direction, will clo[illegible]unday. The final campaign meeting will be held tomorrow afternoon at the festival site, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. According to an announcement yesterday from the festival office at Stockbridge, 1,300 members have been enrolled and 127 boxes taken for the six concerts in August. It is hoped to have an enrollment of 2,000 members when the campaign closes. Last year's total was 1,750.

OWOSSO, MICH.
ARGUS PRESS
MAY 6 - 1938

Do I feel heart-broken over the loss of my music? No. On the contrary, I now feel I am giving the people something fundamental, and I am happy. —Frederic Fradkin, former concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose doctors ordered "No music," and who has gone into the restaurant business.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE
MAY 10 1938

Reception Held For Institute's New President

Ingersoll Gives Official Greeting to McDonald at Academy Meeting

James G. McDonald, recently elected president of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, was officially greeted by Borough President Ingersoll, for many years an ardent supporter of the Institute's cultural activities, at an informal reception held yesterday afternoon in the ballroom of the Academy of Music.

Edward C. Blum, chairman of the board of trustees, greeted Mr. and Mrs. McDonald in behalf of the institute, while members of the board, the official staff and representatives of the institute's advisory bodies took turns in welcoming Mr. McDonald on his assumption of office. Some 75 persons prominent in cultural, social and many other circles attended the reception.

Foreign Affairs Authority

Mr. McDonald, recognized as an authority on foreign affairs and a former member of the editorial staff of the New York Times, was selected for the newly created post of president of the institute by the board of trustees at the board's annual meeting April 14. Considered one of the country's most responsible posts in adult education, the office provides for a chief executive in charge of the general supervision of the institute as a whole.

The annual program of the institute is conducted at four centers, namely the Academy of Music, the Brooklyn Museum, the Brooklyn Children's Museum and the Brooklyn Botanic Garden. During the 1936-1937 season the attendance at the four centers approximated nearly 3,000,000.

Other Trustees Present

In addition to Mr. Blum, trustees present at the reception included Walter H. Crittenden, Miss Hilda Loines, Robert Alfred Shaw, Mrs. William H. Good, Mrs. Dean C. Osborne, Miss Mary E. Dillon, Dr. Edwin G. Warner, Dr. Bernard H. Smith, John C. Parker, Henry A. Ingraham, Robert E. Blum, Walter Hammitt, Dr. John H. Denbigh, Francis T. Christy, Charles Pratt and Alfred E. Mudge.

The four centers were represented by Dr. C. Stuart Gager, director of the Botanic Garden; Miss Irene Miles, acting director of the department of education, which presents an annual program of concerts, lectures and classes at the Academy of Music; Laurence P. Roberts, acting director of the museums, and Mrs. William Lloyd Garrison 3d, curator-in-chief of the Children's Museum, and their official staffs.

Represent Education Council

The council of the department of education was represented by Dr. Edward Howard Griggs, president; Stansbury Hagar, secretary; Miss Isabel N. Tuthill, Charles W. Elmer, Arne Dehli, Walter T. Voege, Howard W. Vernon, Frank L. Bryant, Miss Amy Bonner, Walter E. Owen, F. T. Forster, Dr. Ernest R. von Nardroff, L. T. Brush and Dr. John T. Knudson.

Others attending the reception included Mrs. Edward C. Blum of the executive board of the Brooklyn Committee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts; Mrs. Glentworth Reeve Butler and Mrs. Henry J. Davenport of the Women's Auxiliary of the Botanic Garden, Mrs. John B. Clark and Mrs. Floyd S. Neeley of the auxiliary of the Children's Museum, Lloyd R. McDonald, assistant treasurer of the institute; H. P. Schoenberner, auditor; Delmer D. Martin, manager of the mortgage department; Herbert T. Swin, managing superintendent of the building department; Mrs. Evelyn W. Allen, Dr. John J. Loftus, William Slater and Alfred A. Tausk of the extension school's advisory committee and C. R. Jenkins, representing Park Commissioner Moses.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
MAY 9 - 1938

MEMBERSHIP LIST CLOSES MAY 15TH

For Boston Symphony Concerts at Tanglewood

FOR THIS SEASON

Many Other Activities Besides Concerts Planned for Berkshires During Festival Weeks.

Mrs. Shelley W. Potter, chairman for North Adams for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, today reminded all music lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at "Tanglewood" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, that membership lists close May 15. Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett and Mrs. James Cashin are co-chairmen for Adams.

Mrs. Potter points out that distinct privileges are extended to members including a substantial saving in the cost of admission, preference in assignment of reserved seats and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra. Of added interest this year will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 5000. Although many details such as a permanent floor, encased pillars and permanent platform will be lacking, there will be protection from sun and storm. The Cecilia Chorus of Boston directed by Arthur Fiedler and distinguished soloists will be heard with the orchestra the opening night in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Soloists also will appear the opening night of the second week in the all-Wagner program which includes portions of "Die Walkyrie" and "Siegfried".

Many other activities are being planned in the Berkshires during the Festival weeks. Olin Downes, well known critic, will give four lectures at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on the principal works to be played by the orchestra. The lectures this year will be at 3 in the afternoon instead of in the morning. They will be given Aug. 4, anl 6; Aug. 11 and 13.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perform at their West Becket studio, Director William Miles has promised two outstanding plays at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, there will be chamber music at South Mountain in Pittsfield on Friday afternoons at 4 the two weeks of the Festival; there also will be chamber music at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., Cummington and at Alexander Bloch's in Hillsdale, N. Y.

Mrs. Potter, Mrs. Plunkett and Mrs. Cashin will be pleased to answer inquiries about the Festival or persons interested may communicate directly with Stockbridge. Charles L. Stafford is the chairman in Williamstown. Under the membership plan it is possible to have the more expensive seats or to secure admission for either series or for all six concerts at 83 1-3 cents per concert.

Other community chairmen in Western Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire include the following: Becket, Miss Esther McCormick; Bennington, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Smith; Burlington, Harlie E. Wilson; Chatham, Miss Annabelle Terrell; Dalton, Mrs. Bruce Crane; Dublin, Mrs. Edward T. Shaw; Great Barrington, Mrs. George L. Taylor; Greenfield, Mrs. Mary Robbins Champney; Hillsdale, Mrs. Alexander Bloch; Hinsdale, Miss Alma Haydock; Housatonic, Mrs. Charles Giddings; Hudson, Mrs. Otis Bradley; Kinderhook, Mrs. Frederick B. Downing; Lakeville, and Salisbury, Mrs. Maurice M. Firuski; Lanesboro, Berkshire and Cheshire, Miss Margery Whiting; Lebanon Valley, Mrs. Harry Adams; Lee, Mrs. James T. Owens; Lenox, Miss Estelle Hutchinson and Lester Roberts; Middlebury, Professor Lewis J. Hathaway; Monterey, Mrs. Earle Stafford; New Boston, Mrs. Norton Perkins; Keene, Mrs. Gorham Brooks; New Haven, Mrs. William W. Walcott; Norfolk, Mrs. David Goodnow; Northampton, Miss Dorothy M. Bement; Pittsfield, Miss Elizabeth Gamwell and Mrs. Louise E. Underwood; Poughkeepsie, Miss Rebecca H. Rider and Professor George Dickinson; Richmond, Miss Inez Eldridge; Schenectady, Mrs. Dudley Diggs; Springfield, Mrs. Reynolds Clark and Mrs. Hollis Carlisle; Stockbridge, Mrs. John C. Lynch; Torrington, Mrs. Bertrand Peck; Troy, Miss Betsy Polk; Tyringham, Mrs. Harry C. Holloway; Westboro, Mrs. Noah Nason; Westfield, Mrs. Paul Mackie; Williamstown, Charles

---

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 10 1938

Miss Dorothy Bement Is Chairman Here for Berkshire Festival

Membership Lists Close May 15. Distinct Privileges Extended to Members

Miss Dorothy M. Bement, chairman in Northampton for the Berkshire Symphonic festival, today reminded all music lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at "Tanglewood" by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, that membership lists close Sunday, May 15.

She pointed out that distinct privileges are extended to members, including a substantial saving in the cost of admission, preference in assignment of reserved seats and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra. Of added interest this year will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 5,000. Although many details such as a permanent floor, encased pillars and permanent platform will be lacking, there will be protection from sun and storm. The Cecilia chorus of Boston, directed by Arthur Fiedler, and distinguished soloists will be heard with the orchestra the opening night in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Soloists also will appear the opening night of the second week in the all-Wagner program which includes portions of "Die Walkyrie" and "Siegfried."

Many other activities are being planned in Berkshires during the festival week. Olin Downes, well known critic, will give four lectures at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield on the principal works to be played by the orchestra. The lectures this year will be at 3 in the afternoon instead of in the morning. They will be given Aug. 4, 6. 11 and 13.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perform at their West Becket studio. Director William Miles has promised two outstanding plays at the Berkshire playhouse in Stockbridge. There will be chamber music at South mountain in Pittsfield on Friday afternoons at 4 the two weeks of the festival. There also will be chamber music at Music mountain in Falls Village, Ct., Cummington and at Alexander Bloch's in Hillsdale, N. Y.

Miss Bement, principal of the Northampton School for Girls, will be pleased to answer inquiries about the festival or persons interested may communicate directly with Stockbridge. Under the membership plan it is possible to have the most expensive seats or to secure admission for either series or for all six concerts.

Times. May 8/38

Berkshire Programs

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction this summer in the new music shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., will begin Thursday evening, August 4, with excerpts from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg" and Beethoven's ninth symphony, with the Cecilia Society of Boston, trained by Arthur Fiedler, as the assisting chorus. The audience will be invited to join in the singing of a verse from the cantata.

The other five Berkshire Festival programs are:

Saturday, August 6, 8:30

Symphony in E flat, No. 99........Haydn
La Mer........Debussy
Symphony No. 1........Sibelius

Sunday, August 7, 3:30

Eine kleine Nachtmusik........Mozart
Symphony No. 4........Brahms
Music for the Theater........Copland
Ma Mere l'Oye........Ravel
Pines of Rome........Respighi

Thursday, August 11, 8:30

Ride of the Valkyries and final scene from "Die Walkuere," Act III..Wagner
"Siegfried," Act III (with four soloists)........Wagner

Saturday, August 13, 8:30

Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral)....Beethoven
Andante from Symphony No. 3....Hadley
Symphony No. 6 (Pathetic)....Tchaikovsky

Sunday, August 14, 8:30

Symphony in B flat, No. 1........Schumann
Tapiola........Sibelius
Symphony No. 2........Brahms

The andante from Henry Hadley's third symphony will be played in memory of its composer, who conducted the first two Berkshire Festivals in 1934 and 1935. The membership list closes May 15. Members obtain admission at a minimum rate, have a preferential choice of seats and can attend a rehearsal at Tanglewood without charge. Complete information may be obtained from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Renewing the Discussion Of Symphonic Programs

4

B. Trans. May 14/38

Facts, Figures and Reflections as Disclosed by a Recent Survey Here and Afield

By MOSES SMITH

Examination of the programs of the recently completed fifty-seventh season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a subject with which this space was occupied last week, recalls the article in which, some weeks ago, Drs. John H. Mueller and Kate Herner of Indiana University stated some illuminating conclusions derived from their careful survey of programs of the principal American orchestras over more than half a century. The matter is even more interesting if one examines the charts which the authors prepared and which, because of considerations of space and for other reasons, it was impossible to publish at that time. Each of the charts furnishes a ready comparison between the Boston Orchestra and seven other symphony orchestras of this country.

On one of the charts the relative preponderance of music by Beethoven, Wagner and Sibelius on orchestral programs is indicated. Beginning in the late seventies and early eighties, cent of the programs consisted of Beethoven's music, there was a sharp but evenly spaced drop for about fifteen years, at the end of which time the percentage had fallen to about thirteen. From then until the period '31-'35, which is the last one considered by the authors, the decline was more gradual to about ten per cent. There are more jagged peaks naturally in the case of the Boston Symphony Orchestra than in the case of the average taken from seven other orchestra's repertories. But otherwise, the coincidence in the two curves is striking.

As for Wagner, for the first fifteen years the Boston Orchestra followed the trend of the others, dropping from about nine per cent to about five. Probably because of the stimulus of the first Bayreuth Festivals there was a rapid rise again almost to ten per cent for the other orchestras. The "curve" remained at about the same level for ten or fifteen years, shot up again to about twelve per cent at the turn of the century, and since then has declined gradually to a little more than five per cent. The Boston curve, meanwhile, shows on the whole, a surprisingly level tendency, with a more or less gradual decline to just under five per cent.

Sibelius does not appear at all, of course, until the late nineties. His music has shown a steady increase in popularity, the Boston programs showing a slightly higher percentage from the beginning. With the coming of Koussevitzky, fourteen years ago, the Boston curve is considerably higher than that of the other orchestras. In the period '31-'35 music by Sibelius represented about 2½ per cent of the music in the repertory of the seven orchestras; about 7 per cent of Boston's. The percentage was approximated during the season just past, when six works out of eighty-seven for the long subscription series were by Sibelius.

The second chart contains curves for German and American music. In both cases the programs of the Boston orchestras follows the tendencies displayed elsewhere. In the eighties about 60 per cent of the music played by American orchestras was German. There was a slight and gradual decline until the period of the World War, when the percentage dropped quickly to less than 40, where it has remained since. The last entries show Bostonians listening to a little more American and a little less German music than do the inhabitants of any of the other cities.

The last chart is concerned with modern music in the repertories since the quinquennial, '96-'00. Exactly how modern music is defined is not indicated. Presumably a modernist of the turn of the century is not so regarded by the authors now. At any rate, there has been a persistent rise from less than five per cent to more than twenty. Here again Boston soon took the lead, which it has maintained for thirty years. In the last period covered, the Boston percentage was almost thirty. The summary of the past season's programs, treated in last week's article, was strong confirmation, of course.

In sum, the Boston Orchestra's programs have tended, on the whole, to resemble those of other orchestras in significant traits, except that they have been a little more or less so. In the case of Beethoven we have followed the prevalent fashion (or it has followed us). We have persistently heard less Wagner than is heard in other cities, and somewhat more Sibelius. In modern music we have for years been a little in the van. In American and German music our curve is close to the average, except for a deficiency in German music during the Koussevitzky regime. That last condition has been, in the opinion of the present writer, a healthy one: not because of any defects in German music but because of the virtues of music that had previously been neglected.

The most surprising single conclusion, for many, will be not Koussevitzky's variation from the norm but his closeness to it. Under his regime and that of his predecessor, Pierre Monteux, the ratio of modern music has risen steadily and has disgruntled many a subscriber. But the same thing, to a lesser degree, it is true, has been happening elsewhere. For better or (as some may say) worse, the old "comfortable" days in the concert-hall have departed. The notion, so prevalent in the nineteenth century, that the art of music had arrived at some sort of perfection, has been happily outmoded. We have begun to realize that an art which consists of rearranging the word-order of familiar sentences is not an art at all, but a species of game. Without growth and change (and consequent discomfort) there is no vitality. Without vitality there is certainly no art.

HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

MAY 12 1938

Hoffmann Plans Summer Stay In East

Ernst Hoffmann, conductor of the Houston Symphony orchestra, left Wednesday for New York and Boston, where he will spend the summer in work and study. He will return to Houston Sept. 1.

While in the East, Mr. Hoffmann will conduct a popular concert for the Boston Symphony orchestra. He also will engage players for several recently-created vacancies in the Houston organization.

Mr. Hoffmann and the orchestra will play a larger number of out-of-town concerts during the 1938-39 season, Walter H. Walne, president of the Houston Symphony society said Wednesday.

The Houston Symphony orchestra made only two appearances last season outside of Houston—in Beaumont and Galveston, but several other South Texas cities will very likely be visited next fall. A contract has already been signed for a concert in San Antonio for late October, and negotiations are under way for additional engagements elsewhere.

"Now that such excellent progress has been made in assembling a really fine orchestra," said Mr. Walne, "one of the very serious problems encountered is to find enough work to keep it busy."

Mr. Walne said that with a small increase in its budget, the orchestra could play 50 concerts each season as easily as it has played 20 during the season just closed.

In a financial report mailed to directors of the society this week, Mr. Walne reported that the organization closed the 1937-38 season with a cash balance of $1,257.56. The new budget will provide $33,000 for salaries to the musicians, and a much stronger orchestra is in prospect. Several excellent players have already been obtained for positions where they were badly needed, and two or three others are under consideration.

Study of Music at Harvard

Methods and Results of System That Stresses the Academic in the Pursuit of an Art

B. Trans. May 14/38

The emergence of several Harvard students of music as performers of considerable ability during the course of the past season has done much to make the interested observer wonder just how "academic" the study of music is at our local seat of learning. The frequent performances of the work of Walter Piston, to say nothing of younger Harvard graduates like Randall Thompson and Elliott Carter, has long since made us realize that whatever method is pursued at Harvard, its results are certainly not all of the same stamp or overly conventional. One's curiosity is also attracted by those Harvardians still members of the student body who seem well able to combine instrumental playing with their scholastic pursuits.

What makes these public performances so remarkable is that the division of music at Harvard is one of the few places for the advanced study of music which cannot be classified under the heading of conservatory. Many Harvard students who take music as their field of special study have no interest in playing an instrument in any professional way—nor does the department intend that they should. Music at Harvard is taught more as a "facet of culture" than anything else. The long list of Harvard musicians who have made their mark as composers, teachers and musicologists stands in testimony to the worth of the system, even if the latter does not always produce excellent oboists.

What are the advantages of studying music at Harvard? What are the students like, and why do they choose Harvard rather than a conventional conservatory? One of the great assets of the division is its comparatively small size. There are approximately thirty undergraduates and twenty graduate students in the field. Membership in the department is limited, with the natural result that there is more personal contact between faculty and students and a more informal atmosphere than is possible in some of the larger departments.

The obvious musical advantages of Boston, with its abundance of concerts, are well utilized by the young men of Harvard. The average music student is no supercilious specialist who declines to visit a concert hall from one year's end to the other. The many local recitals and chamber music programs, and the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra provide a valuable part of their education. (Where is there a better opportunity to study orchestration than in the superlative performances of the Boston Orchestra?) Constant concert-going is urged by the faculty, and the division even provides tickets for many Boston events. It also sponsors a multitude of free concerts in Cambridge, often through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. Hindemith's recital in Cambridge, the concerts by the Helsinki Chorus, the Stradivarius Quartet, and the Fiedel Trio are only a few of those organized under the auspices of the division.

It would be a difficult task to give a cross-section of the music students at Harvard without falling into the errors of overgeneralization. It would be safe to say, however, that the majority plan to go on with music in some way after they finish their studies. In general, the preferences of the undergraduates tend toward teaching, composing or performing, while many of the graduate students are immersed in musical research under such noted musicologists as Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt and Dr. Willi Appel. The more ambitious aim for the John Knowles Paine fellowship for study abroad, although they are by no means blind to the advantages of continuing to work right at Harvard.

It is worthwhile to mention the names of few music "concentrators" who should be more than just names before long. Raphael Silverman, graduate student, is already known hereabouts as a violinist and a member of the faculty of the Longy School; he recently played with the State Symphony Orchestra in Prokofiev's First Concerto. Leonard Bernstein, pianist and composer, has likewise appeared with the W P A orchestra in Ravel's Concerto. Others of distinction are Gail Kubik, whose compositions are not unknown to Boston audiences; students now working abroad, like Everett Helm and Arthur Berger, formerly of the music department of the Transcript; Grovenor Cooper, now a member of the faculty; Jan La Rue, promising clarinettist; Arnold Hartmann and Irving Fine, pianists, and Frank Green, prolific undergraduate composer.

The typical student is not so precious or prejudiced in his musical tastes as he is popularly supposed to be. He is outstandingly open-minded to almost all modern music. Hindemith is his current god. Stravinsky declines in favor, while Malipiero and Prokofiev are increasingly popular. The student does not sneer at the nineteenth century, although he is still a little wary of it. He even finds much to admire in Tschaikovsky, composer now in least repute with the musically well-dressed.

A reflection of the tastes of the mass of the young musicians is found in the institution of the Harvard Music Club, organized entirely by students. The majority of the members of the department, in addition to some members of the faculty and interested outsiders, make up the membership. Meetings, held once a month, are informal, with programs of music which find infrequent performance elsewhere. A public concert is given every spring—this year on May 25.

It goes without saying that the distinguished members of the Harvard music faculty are held in the highest esteem by their pupils. Professors Hill, Ballantine, Piston and Merritt could find no stronger supporters than their students. The friendly spirit which exists between guiders and guided is as much responsible for this as is the exceptional instruction.

JEANNETTE EYRE
RICHARD BEATTY

Pops' Prospects

B. Trans. May 12/38

The Pops concerts in Symphony Hall, which have thus far in the season pursued a more or less uneventful course, will take on considerable excitement during next week. On Sunday night eight of the solo players of the orchestra will play Mozart's Octet for oboes, clarinets, bassoons and French horns in pairs. Among the other numbers of the most pretentious program of the season thus far are Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Ravel's "Bolero."

Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist on two successive evenings, playing George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" on Tuesday and the Rachmaninov C minor Piano Concerto on Wednesday. An exceptional evening at the Pops will be that of Sunday, May 22, when Fritz Mahler, Viennese conductor now living in this country, will be the guest leader of a program consisting of excerpts from "Die Walkuere." The soloists will be Margaret Halstead, Hazel Hayes, Colin O'More and Raymond Lutz. The selections will be the Introduction, Siegmund's Narrative and Love Duet from Act I; Introduction and Bruennhilde's Shout from Act II, ad the Ride of the Valkyries, Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music from Act III.

The following evening there will be three guest conductors for the annual "Harvard Night," each of them a Harvard graduate. Ernst Hoffman, of the class of '18, was a familiar figure here for some time in the Federal Music Project; more recently he has been conducting the Houston (Tex.) Symphony Orchestra. G. Wallace Woodworth, of the class of '24, is of course principally known as conductor of the Harvard Glee Club, which will share in the proceedings. Leroy Anderson, of the class of '29, is now living in New York city.

At Pops Tonight

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra will present the following program in Symphony Hall this evening:

Procession of the Sardar from the "Caucasian Sketches" . . Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Mignon" . . . . Thomas
Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun" Debussy
Fifth Hungarian Dance . . . . Brahms
"Peer Gynt," Suite No. 1 . . . . Grieg
Londonderry Air Arr. by Sir Hamilton Harty
Finale (Allegro con fuoco), Fourth Symphony . . . . Tchaikovsky
"The Chocolate Soldier," Selection Oscar Strauss
"The Old Refrain" . . . . Kreisler
March, "Indigo" . . . . Johann Strauss

—In the rear of Alexander Stephens's home at Crawfordville, Ga., is a burial ground where fifteen of the statesman's dogs are buried.

WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

MAY 8 - 1938

MUSIC AND

By IRWIN F

Popularizing Music

Boston's annual "Pop" concerts started last Wednesday night, and for the next nine weeks the good people of the "Bean" city will be treated to good music that is, at the same time, not necessarily high-brow nor essentially long-haired, as many consider the strictest of symphony music to be. This will be the fifty-third season that musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have given a spring season of light and semi-classical works, liberally sprinkled with the more popular classics, at popular prices.

This year the orchestra will be under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, the first native Bostonian ever to conduct the "Pop" concerts.

The orchestra strives to reach the widest possible audience among music lovers. The atmosphere of the concerts is one of easy informality. The audience is seated at tables, where soft drinks and other light refreshments are available, and listens to the gayest of good music played by a full-sized orchestra comprising some of the country's outstanding artists.

Fiedler, a virtuoso of the piano, violin and viola, studied in Europe until the World War interrupted his training, and then continued his studies in the United States. He has been associated with the Boston Symphony for many years.

45

Numerous Soloists Dot the Course of the Pops Concerts

Complete Pops Programs for the Week

Mozart's Octet for oboes, clarinets, bassoons and French horns in pairs will constitute an exceptional item on the Pops program for tomorrow evening. The list will also contain Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, Ravel's "Bolero" and other pieces. Appearances on successive evenings by Jesus Maria Sanroma will further mark the week at Pops, while a week from tomorrow Fritz Mahler, as guest, will direct a program of excerpts from "Die Walkuere" by Wagner.

The complete programs for the week as well as that for this evening follow:

Tonight

March, "El Capitan" ....Sousa
Overture to "Stradella"..........Flotow
Panis Angelicus ....Franck
Irish Rhapsody ....Herbert
"New Vienna" Waltzes ....Strauss
Ave Maria ....Schubert-Wilhelmj
Overture to "William Tell"..........Rossini
Victor Herbert Favorites.Arr. by Sanford
La Camparsa (Cuban Carnival Procession) ....Lecuona-Gould
Old Time Favorites.

Sunday Evening

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro." Mozart
Symphony in C minor ....Beethoven
Serenade for Eight Wind Instruments (K. No. 388) ....Mozart
Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes; Manuel Valerio and Rosario Mazzeo, clarinets; Raymond Allard and Ernst Panenka, bassoons; Willem Valkenier and Walter MacDonald, French horns.
Norwegian Melodies, for string orchestra ....Grieg
Bolero ....Ravel
Reve Angelique ("Kammenoi Ostrow"). Rubinstein
The Old Refrain ....Kreisler
Tambourin Chinois ....Kreisler

Monday Evening

March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar
First Movement, "Unfinished Symphony" ....Schubert
Song to the Evening Star, "Tannhaeuser" ....Wagner
Finlandia ....Sibelius
Waltz Scene from "Faust"..........Gounod
The Lost Chord ....Sullivan
Trumpet solo, Roger Voisin
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812".Tchaikovsky
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ....Strauss
Hora Staccato (Roumanian).Dinicu-Heifetz
Procession of the Sardar, from the "Caucasian Sketches".Ippolitov-Ivanov

Tuesday Evening

March, "Washington Post"..........Sousa
Overture to "Raymond" ....Thomas
Allegretto from Second Symphony.Brahms
Fantasia, "Mme. Butterfly"..........Puccini
Legend from "Indian Suite".MacDowell
Largo from "Xerxes" ....Handel
Rhapsody in Blue ....Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Jolly Fellows" Waltzes..........Vollstedt
Sophisticated Lady..........Ellington-McBride
"Tritsch-Tratsch," Polka ....Strauss

Wednesday Evening

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy"..........Berlioz
Fantasy, "Zion" ....Phillipson
Mazurka from "A Life for the Czar," Glinka
"Carmen," Fantasia ....Bizet
Overture to "The Impresario"..........Mozart
Prelude to Act III, "Die Meistersinger" ....Wagner
Piano Concerto in C minor .Rachmaninov
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Briar Rose," Waltz from "The Sleeping Beauty" ....Tchaikovsky
Song of Volga Bargemen...Arr. Jacchia
Sixth Hungarian Dance..........Brahms

Thursday Evening

"Tannhaeuser," Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg..........Wagner
Scherzo from the "Eroica" Symphony. Beethoven
Sandman's Song and Evening Prayer from "Hansel and Gretel".Humperdinck
Seventh Slavonic Dance..........Dvorak
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ....Liszt
Pavane for a Dead Infanta..........Ravel
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"..Wagner
"Wine, Woman and Song" Waltzes. Strauss
Deep River ....Arr. by Jacchia
"Up the Street," March ....Morse

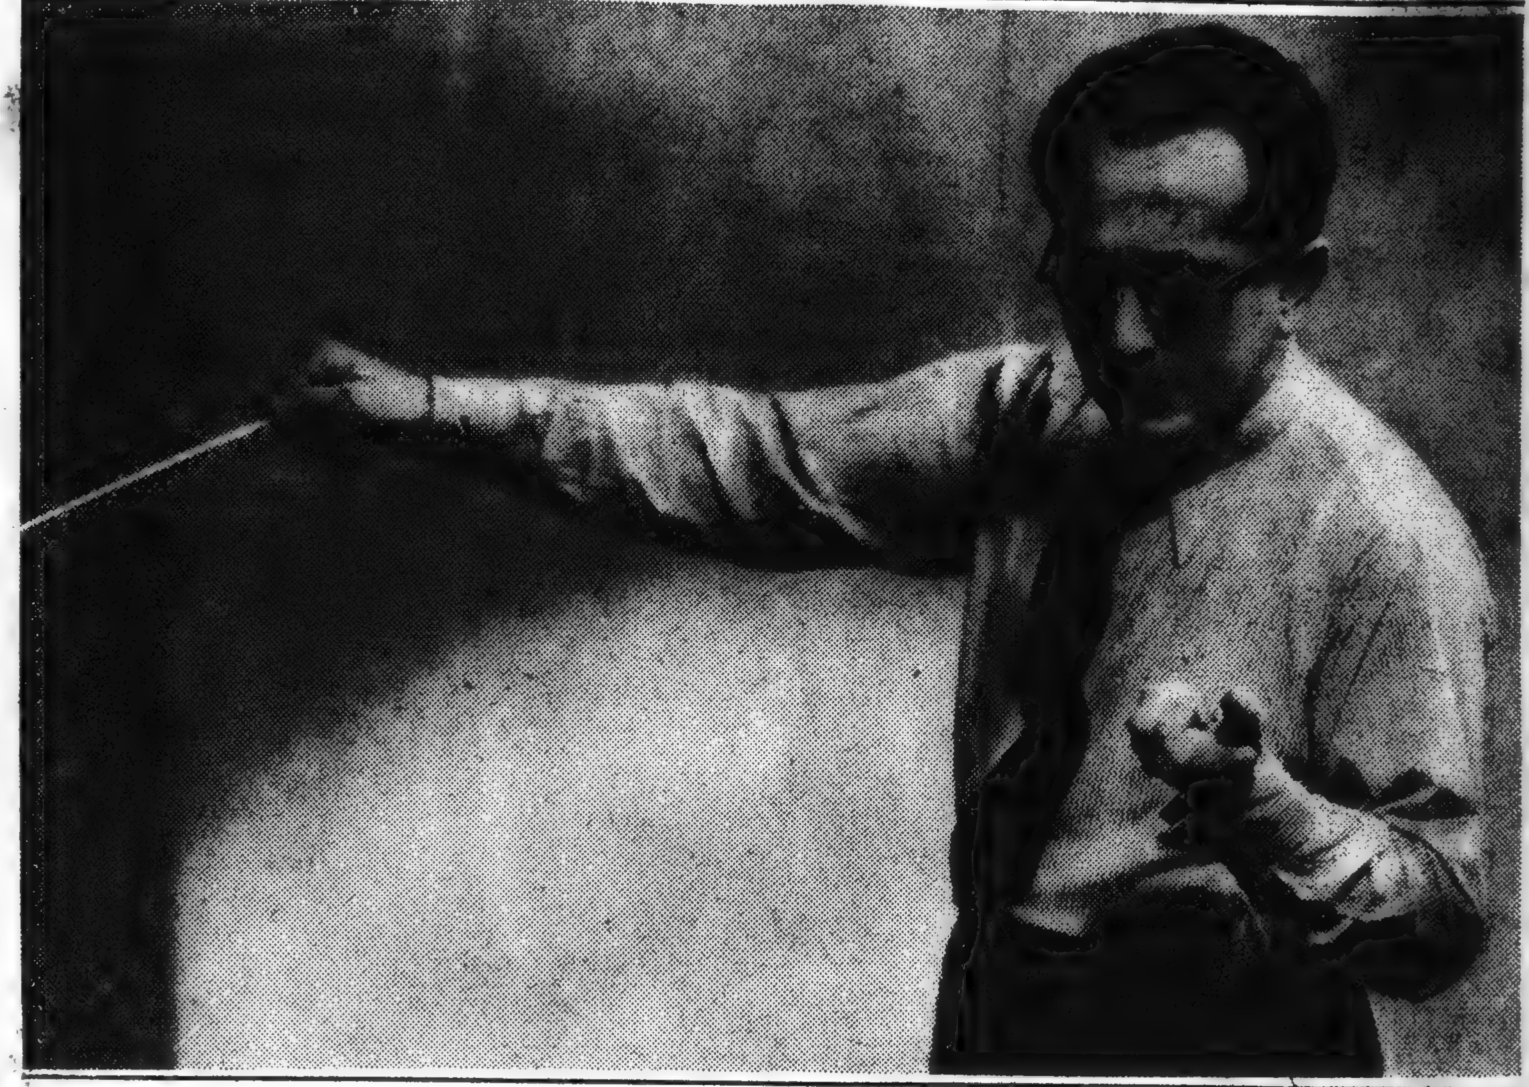
Friday Evening

March, "Old Roxbury" ....Zach
Academic Festival Overture..........Brahms
Hopak from "The Fair at Sorotchintzy" ....Moussorgsky
"Espana," Rhapsody ....Chabrier
Joyeuse Marche ....Chabrier
The Animals' Carnival..........Saint-Saens
Violoncello, J. Langendoen; pianos, J. M. Sanroma, L. Litwin
Bolero ....Ravel
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ....Churchill-Bodge
Night and Day ....Porter
"Semper Fidelis," March ....Sousa

Saturday Evening

Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" ....Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades." Offenbach
Minuet ....Bolzoni
Soviet Iron Works..........Mossolov
"La Source," Ballet Suite..........Delibes
Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" ....Mascagni
Overture to "Rienzi" ....Wagner
"Of Thee I Sing," Selection.....Gershwin
Malaguena ....Lecuona
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy".Gliere

Fire That Springs from Conviction



FRITZ MAHLER

Former Viennese conductor, now resident in America, who will be guest-leader of the Boston Pops Orchestra in a program of excerpts from "Die Walkuere," by Wagner, at Symphony Hall, on Sunday evening, May 22.

Pop Concerts Begin Third Week

Trans
May 14/38

The third week of the Pop concert in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, begins tomorrow. Coming soloists next week include eight individual players on tomorrow evening: Jesus Maria Sanroma in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" on Tuesday evening, and Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto on Wednesday evening; and four Wagner singers in the Wagner program which is to be presented on Sunday, May 22, which date marks the 125th anniversary of the composer's birth. In this, a Pension Fund concert, Fritz Mahler, the nephew of the famous Austrian composer, will make his first appearance in Boston as guest conductor. The anual Harvard night will take place on the day following—Monday, May 23.

The program for tonight and tomorrow night follow:

March, "El Capitan"..........Sousa
Overture to "Stradella"..........Flotow
"Panis Angelicus"..........Franck
Irish Rhapsody..........Herbert
"New Vienna," Waltzes..........Strauss
Ave Maria..........Schubert-Wilhelmj
Oveture to "William Tell"..........Rossini
Victor Herbert Favorites Arranged by Sanford
"La Camparsa" (Cuban Carnival Procession) .... Lecuona-Gould
Old Time Favorites

SUNDAY EVENING

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Symphony No. 5 in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
Serenade for Eight Wind Instruments (K. No. 388)..........Mozart
Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes; Manuel Valerio and Rosario Mazzeo, clarinets; Raymond Allard and Ernest Panenka, bassoons; Willem Valkenier and Walter MacDonald. French horns
Norwegian Melodies, for string orchestra Grieg
Bolero .... Ravel
Reve Angelique (Kammenoi Ostrow) Rubenstein
The Old Refrain..........Kreisler
Tambourin Chinois..........Kreisler

FRIDAY THE 13TH NOTE

Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops, declares the No. 13 a lucky one for him, and also finds it harmlessly associated with himself in several ways.

There are 13 letters in his full name.

He was the 13th aspirant in a list of 54 to compete for a scholarship in the Royal Academy, Berlin. He was successful, and received his first instruction in conducting while in the academy, thus laying the foundation for his future career.

There are 13 letters in the words "Pop programmes."

Pops Soloist

Margaret Halstead, soprano, who will appear in the Pops all-Wagner program for the pension fund, Sunday evening, May 22. She will sing the role of Bruennhilde in excerpts from "Die Walkuere." Fritz Mahler will be guest conductor.

DRIVE-IN-THEATER

William Powell in, "My Man Godfrey" opens at the Drive-in-theater, Weymouth, South Shore, Route 3-A to Nantasket, on Saturday, May 14, continuing through Tuesday, May 17. The supporting cast includes: Alice Brady, Gail Patrick, Jean Dixon and Alan Mowbray.

OGDEN, UTAH
STANDARD EXAMINER

MAY 11 1938

Boston Symphony In Second Recital

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the second broadcast of the series tonight from six-thirty to seven-thirty o'clock over KLO and the NBC-Blue network.

Fiedler has programmed the French Military March from Saint-Saens' "Algerian" suite to open the program, followed by the Overture to Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 13 1938

XAVIER REITER DIES

Valhalla, N. Y., May 12—(AP)—Xavier Reiter, 82, former symphony French horn player, died at his home here today. He had played with the Boston Symphony orchestra, the New York Philharmonic and the Metropolitan Opera orchestra.

Amusements

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
TONIGHT 8:30
TOMORROW 8:30
MOZART, Serenade with 8 Soloists
BEETHOVEN, 5th Symphony—RAVEL, Bolero
POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
TUESDAY, MAY 17—8:30
RHAPSODY in BLUE
Soloist—SANROMA
SUNDAY, MAY 22
PENSION FUND CONCERT
WAGNER PROGRAM
FRITZ MAHLER, Guest Conductor
Tickets .50, .75, $1.00, $1.50
MONDAY, MAY 23
HARVARD NIGHT
TICKETS AT ALL PRICES 2 Weeks in Advance: .25, .50, .75, $1.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO

British Symphony Conductor To Radiocast at New York

May 14/38

The Week-End Radio

Symphonic music as it might be heard in England over the "wireless," will come tonight over the NBC-Red network to WNAC hookup at 10 p. m. when Sir Adrian Boult, music director of the British Broadcasting Corporation and conductor of its symphony orchestra, steps to the podium in New York City for the first of two concerts with the NBC Symphony Orchestra. The English and American orchestras are both "house" orchestras with the exception that the B. B. C. is government-owned whereas the NBC is a private corporation.

Sir Adrian's program includes Busoni's "Comedy Overture"; Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A major; William Walton Concerto for Viola and Orchestra, with William Primrose, first chair violist of the NBC Orchestra, soloist; and Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico."

Juan Sanroma

Jesus Maria Sanroma

Pianist, Who Will Air Rachmaninoff's Second Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in a Pops Radiocast, Wednesday, May 18, at 9:30 p. m., Over WBZ

Drama:
"The Yankee Art," NBC-Blue to WBZ, 8:30 p. m., which will try to prove that "hoss" trading has not gone out of New England—even in the age of automobiles.

Popular:
Saturday Night Swing Session, CBS to WEEI, 8 p. m., to present Gene Krupa, drummer; Buddy Frank, youthful clarinetist; and Clay Boland, college song writer, in program from Philadelphia.

Sunday

Serious music:
Sibelius's Fifth Syphony, feature item in Radio City Symphony Orchestra concert, NBC-Blue to WBZ, 12:30 p. m., with Bach Prelude, Chorale and Fugue to open; aria from Korngold's "The Dead City" and Straus's "Liebeswaltzer," by Viola Philo, soprano.
Northfield Schools sacred concert, NBC-Red to WNAC, 2:30 p. m., featuring annual "sing" of the combined Northfield Seminary (girls) and Mount Hermon School (boys') choirs at East Northfield, Mass.
"Everybody's Music," CBS to WEEI, 3 p. m., return of annual summer period replacing Philharmonic programs, with orchestra conducted by Howard Barlow and Henry M. Neely, commentator. Program: Lalo's Overture to "Le Roi d'Ys"; Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Sibelius's Symphony No. 7.
Bruna Castagna, contralto, in Sunday Evening Hour, CBS to WEEI, 9 p. m., singing aria from Gounod's "Sappho" and "Habanera" from "Carmen," also popular ballads by Hagemann, Tchaikovsky and Bizet; Nicolai's Overture to "Merry Wives of Windsor," Debussy's "Petite Suite," and Overture to Strauss's Die Fledermaus," by orchestra.

Drama:
Love story of Robert Emmet and Sarah Curran and Irish revolution of 1803 in "There Was a Woman," NBC-Blue to WBZ, 8 p. m.
"I, Gregory Orlov," with Tyrone Power as "Gregory," and Constance Bennett as "Catherine the Great," portrayal of historical Russian romance, NBC-Blue to WBZ, 9 p. m.

Monday

Special event:
Listeners may get an idea of how radiocasting might be used in war when residents of Farmingdale, L. I., are instructed over air to "black out" every light in the city in preparation for a mock air raid, CBS to WEEI, NBC-Blue to WBZ, 10:30 p. m.

In Advance

Mid-week listeners may care to note that Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be heard playing the Rachmaninoff Second Concerto for Piano and Orchestra from the Pops Wednesday evening, May 18, at 9:30 p. m., over the NBC-Blue to WBZ combination.

A. D. H.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

MAY 11 1938

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in the second Pop concert broadcast of the series at 7:30 P. M. He has programmed the "French Military March" from Saint-Saens' "Algerian Suite", the Overture to Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" and "Where the Citrons Bloom" by Strauss. The broadcast originates in Symphony hall, Boston.

N. Y. Tribune – May 15/38

THE ORCHESTRAS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

WHILE Boston's music lovers have their nightly "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall, those of New York must content themselves with reminiscence and anticipation, so far as orchestral concerts under private sponsorship are concerned, during the seven weeks between the last regular Carnegie Hall event of this kind and the opening Stadium concert on June 23. The three resident orchestras of the Federal Music Project are, however, pursuing an intensive schedule, and the radio continues to offer a considerable variety of symphonic programs.

With the restoration of four of the six weeks which were taken from the Philharmonic-Symphony schedule two years ago, the total number of concerts given here by large orchestras under private sponsorship shows an increase of fourteen concerts during the season which closed this month, 152 events, as compared with 138 in 1936-'37. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra gave 105 concerts, and also took part in a benefit concert for the Henry Hadley Foundation and in the World's Fair preview concert of May 1. The Philadelphia Orchestra gave its usual ten subscription concerts in Carnegie Hall and an extra benefit program. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, as before, gave ten concerts in Carnegie Hall and five in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The New York Women's Symphony, in its fourth season, gave four concerts. The National Orchestral Association gave six concerts in its Monday night series, and four in its cello concerto series with Emanuel Feuermann as soloist.

The N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra emerged from the National Broadcasting Company's largest studio to give three benefit concerts in Carnegie Hall, two under Arturo Toscanini and one under Artur Rodzinski. Joseph Hofmann's jubilee concert on November 28 and a Spanish Loyalist benefit concert under Leon Barzin on December 12 complete the list. The 1937-'38 total is less than the 171 concerts of 1935-'36, when the Philharmonic-Symphony was in session for thirty weeks, but the activities of the W. P. A. orchestras undoubtedly make this season's total larger even than that of seasons in the 1920's, when there were three resident concert orchestras in active session.

In a reminiscent survey of the orchestral season of 1937-'38, the principal landmark for most of us probably is the return of Mr. Toscanini last December to conduct the new orchestra organized by the National Broadcasting Company, but the record of its first season can better be considered separately after its close in June. Apart from this, a prominent feature of the local orchestral season was its programmatic diversity; the total number of composers represented and of works performed exceeds that of any season since the Philharmonic-Symphony amalgamation in 1928, except for 1929-'30. Three orchestras offered the first three symphonies of Brahms, but otherwise there was little programmatic duplication; Wagner and Beethoven, the most represented composers in the Philharmonic programs, had relatively few performances in the Carnegie Hall concerts of the other orchestras.

Only seven works received five or more performances. Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz" was played seven times and Brahms's second symphony six times. Brahms's first symphony, the Franck symphony, Schumann's fourth symphony, Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and Weber's overture to "Oberon" were played five times each. Ten years ago fourteen works were played more than five times each and the "Meistersinger" prelude was heard fourteen times. If this represents a trend toward more programmatic variety and away from coincidental or competitive concentration of familiar favorites, it is an encouraging sign.

The differences in this season's representation of composers, as compared with 1936-'37, do not seem to represent any particularly significant trends. The heavy loss in Mozart's total can hardly mean anything more than that the conductors happened to give less of his music this season; the falling off in Stravinsky's representation is due to the fact that he did not pay us a return visit. In the comparison with ten years ago the most significant item is probably the increased attention paid to Sibelius, to whose music conductors have been as solicitous in recent years as they were neglectful in the 1920's.

The 1937-'38 Novelties

Thirty-four works, five less than in 1936-'37, were played for the first time in New York. Of these, seventeen were played by the Philharmonic-Symphony; the others were introduced as follows:

By the National Orchestral Association:

Dupuis, *Overture to "Hermann and Dorothea"; Fuleihan, Piano Concerto; Schoenberg, Cello Concerto (after clavicembalo concerto by G. M. Monn); McBride, Fugato on a well known theme; Bilotti, Piano Concerto; Toch, Concerto for cello and chamber orchestra; Giorni, Symphony in D minor.

By the Boston Symphony:

Prokofieff, suite from "Lieutenant Kije" and ballet suite, "Romeo and Juliet"; Sibelius, the Captive Queen.

By the Philadelphia Orchestra:

McBride, Music to a Ballet; Still, Symphony in G minor; Stokowski, (arr.) Two Ancient Liturgical Melodies; Wagenaar, Concerto for flute, harp and cello; McDonald, Symphony No. 4.

By the New York Women's Symphony: James, Song of the Night.

In the Hadley Foundation concert:

Hadley, A Summer Idyll.

One asterisk refers to a first performance in this country; two to a first performance anywhere. There were nine world premieres during the last season. The list might also include several new transcriptions of works originally in other musical mediums, such as those of Leopold Stokowski and Lucien Cailliet in the Philadelphian repertoire; first performances in orchestral form, such as those of Schumann's violin concerto and Jacob Weinberg's "Gettysburg Address," and first concert performances of excerpts from operas and ballets.

Twenty-nine works by twenty-eight American composers were played this season, as compared with nineteen works by eighteen composers in 1936-'37 and twenty-one works by the same number of composers in 1935-'36. Twelve American works were played by the Philharmonic-Symphony; the National Orchestral Association and the Philadelphia Orchestra played six each; the Women's Symphony played James's "Song of the Night," which had won its American Composers' prize, and six works by concerto for flute, harp and cello aroused more than usual interest, especially in its emphasis upon the special characteristics in tone and style of the three solo instruments. Most of the new works introduced were relatively conservative in style and harmonies. This might be interpreted as indicating an avoidance by conductors of the more radically minded composers here and abroad (with an eye, perhaps, to the susceptibilities of their audiences) or as reflecting a turning away from music of an overtly innovating character on the part of many contemporary creative musicians.

Meanwhile, despite the catholicity of the programs, a second season has passed without offering anything by Anton Burckner in a New York concert by a privately sponsored major orchestra.

Philharmonic Finances

In the annual meeting of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society last week, Marshall Field, its president, announced that the present privately raised maintenance fund should, with careful management, be sufficient to meet the deficits of the next two seasons and possibly part of a third (1940-'41)—assuming, of course, that the attendance remains on its present level. The directors, he added, preferred the plan of raising a large endowment fund to afford the society a permanent financial basis, rather than to continue the present method of raising a maintenance fund every few years, and a campaign for such a fund may be expected at some time before the society reaches its centenary in 1942. In raising this fund, the society will undoubtedly look to its radio listeners as well as to its friends and patrons here.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 12 1938

LEE

Lee, May 11—Mrs James T. Owens, chairman of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, has announced that as the time for closing of the drive for membership is May 15, those intending to become members for 1938 are reminded to do so this week. After May 15 there is an increase in the price. Application blanks or information may be obtained from Mrs Owens or members of the committee who are: Mrs Frank J. Diamond, Miss Catherine Lippincott, Miss Magdaline Tracy, Miss Julie Owens. In addition to receiving the advantage of reduced costs of admission to the concerts, members will have the privilege of attending a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood and preference in assignment of reserved seats.

The annual banquet of the Lee Brotherhood Bowling league will be held at St George's parish house tomorrow night. During the turkey supper which will be held from 6.30 to 7.30 an entertainment will be witnessed. After the supper there will be a sleight-of-hand performance. Members of winning teams, both men and women, will receive prizes. The remainder of the evening will be devoted to bowling.

Mrs Albert N. Nettleton, worthy matron of Morning Star chapter, Order of Eastern Star, and Mrs R. Henry Barnes are in Boston attending the grand chapter session.

United States Commissioner Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield was the guest speaker at the weekly luncheon of the Lee Rotary club held yesterday at the East Lee inn.

Marriage intentions have been filed with Town Clerk Edward J. Maloney by Miss Emma Bertelli of Lois street and Carl Albert McDarby of Pleasant street. The wedding will take place in St Mary's church Saturday May 21.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

MAY 10 1938

Music Festival Plans Revealed

Boston Symphony and Cecilia Chorus Slated for Opening Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by the Cecilia Chorus of Boston, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, will give Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the opening concert of the Berkshire festival this season.

Mrs. Dudley M. Diggs, Schenectady chairman for the Berkshire festival this season.

Mrs. Dudley M. Diggs, Schenectady chairman for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, has announced membership lists will close Sunday, May 15. The concerts to be held in the new auditorium at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, will be in two series, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, August 4, 6 and 7, and Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, August 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts are held at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon. There is a considerable reduction in the price of seats for members who join early in the season, as well as preference in the assignment of reserved seats and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

Of added interest this year will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 5,000. Although a number of details will have to wait for completion, there will be protection from sun and storm.

The Cecilia Chorus and distinguished soloists will be heard with the orchestra the opening night in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Soloists also will be heard the opening night of the second week in the all-Wagner program featuring portions of "Die Walkyrie" and "Siegfried."

Mrs. Diggs will answer inquiries concerning the festival or anyone interested may write to the festival office at Stockbridge.

Many other activities are on the calendar festival time. Olin Downes, well known critic, will give four lectures on the important music to be presented by the orchestra. These lectures will be given August 4, 6, 11 and 13 at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield at 3 p. m. Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perform at their West Becket studio. There will be chamber music at South Mountain in Pittsfield, Music Mountain in Fa Village, Conn., at Alexander Bloc in Hillsdale and Cummingt Director William Miles of the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge has promised two outstanding plays with Broadway stars the two weeks of the festival.

The chairman for Troy is Miss Betsy Polk and the chairman for Albany and vicinity is Mrs. Ronald Kinnear.

Complete Recording of Bach's St. Matthew Passion

B. Her. May 15/38

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

About a year after the memorable performance of the St. Matthew Passion by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Harvard and Radcliffe choruses and soloists, both instrumental and vocal, under Dr. Koussevitzky, the records taken at the time have been issued. The experiment was considered to be hazardous, since there could be no retakes. Everything had to function smoothly, the audience had to co-operate, and the experts from the RCA Victor Company had to be constantly on their toes to see that the records ended logically.

Some doubts were expressed at the time and have since been repeated in one or two critical reviews of the completed records as to whether a really satisfactory result could be obtained from the experiment. These doubts, we feel, have been exaggerated. The value of the undertaking, of actually transscribing for posterity a good performance of a long and difficult masterpiece is so great that the pauses at the beginning of many records before the music begins and the several inconvenient breaks at the end can readily be discounted.

What is more important is that the music is heard with remarkable clarity. The soloists and the instrumentation are heard to excellent advantage, and the chorus sounds less massive than it appeared to do in Symphony Hall. It has always been one of the complaints of Bach scholars that the modern custom of large choruses has been everywhere retained to the disadvantage of the highly significant orchestra voices. On the records the size and vigor of the chorus is somehow less objectionable.

Much depends in any performance of the St. Matthew Passion on the skill of the soloists. Dr. Koussevitzky had at his command three first-rate singers: Mr. Priebe, who had the exceedingly hard task of singing the recitatives of the Evangelist; Miss Vreeland and Mr. Falkner, who were both eminently trustworthy in this tpye of work. Miss Meisle, the alto soloist, was at the least adequate. Mr. Lechner was handicapped by his odd English diction.

The greatest reason for minimizing occasional, and in such a work inevitable, faults in the performance and recording of the St. Matthew Passion is, of course, its tremendous stature as a work of art. There is no choral work by any other composer which can touch it for purity of spirit, for the combination of the devout and the dramatic. It is the greatest musical account of the profoundest experience of Christianity, the Passion and Crucifixion of Our Lord. No pains, therefore, should be spared for the transmission of a full and reasonably authentic and vital production of such a work.

It is easy and very possibly healthy for scholars to take issue with various points about the interpretation of Bach's larger works and indicates their vitality in the musical life of today. The achievement of the RCA Victor Company has been a marvel of scientific ingenuity. The work of the forces under Dr. Koussevitzky, subject to one or two reservations, also is superb accomplishment. Even the audience, whose right to cough and leave concerts early is held to sacred, refrained entirely from the latter privilege and only rarely indulged in the former. As a matter of fact the unavoidable shortcomings in timing on the records, without the benefit of studio conditions, gives one the not disagreeable impression of being present at a real performance. There is something less smugly mechanical as a result.

The records are issued in three large volumes whose price, naturally, is high. Accompanying them is a pamphlet offering the text, an introduction by Mr. G. H. L. Smith describing the conditions under which the recording was made and an explanatory essay by Dr. Archibald T. Davison. The text is further embellished with Arabic numerals referring to the ordinary piano score and Roman numerals indicating the end of each record. Thus the owner of a set can dip accurately into any part of the St. Matthew Passion. This process, which we have recently enjoyed, is fascinating. You find yourself going on and on, playing just one more, until you realize that you might just as well have started at the beginning and gone right through to the end and then stopped, according to the recommendation of the King of Hearts at the trial. It is, all things considered, a fine piece of work and an interesting step in the processes of recording.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 9 - 1938

Berkshire Festival Membership List to Close; Downes to Lecture

Mrs. Reynolds Clark and Mrs. Hollis Carlisle, cochairmen in Springfield for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, remind all music lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, that membership lists close May 15.

They point out that distinct privileges are extended to members including a substantial saving in the cost of admission, preference in assignment of reserved seats, and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra. Of added interest this year will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 5000. Although many details such as a permanent floor, encased pillars and permanent platform will be lacking, there will be protection from sun and storm.

Many other activities are being planned in the Berkshires during the Festival weeks. Olin Downes, well known critic will give four lectures at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on the principal works to be played by the orchestra. The lectures this year will be at 3 in the afternoon instead of in the morning. They will be given Aug. 4 and 6; Aug. 11 and 13.

Other community chairmen in Western New England include the following: Adams, Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett and Mrs. James Cashin; Becket, Miss Esther McCormic; Bennington, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Smith; Burlington, Harlie E. Wilson; Chatham, Miss Annabelle Terrell; Dalton, Mrs. Bruce Crane; Great Barrington, Mrs. George L. Taylor; Greenfield, Mrs. Mary Robbins Champney; Hillsdale, Mrs. Alexander Bloch; Hinsdale, Miss Alma Haydock; Housatonic, Mrs. Charles Giddings; Hudson, Mrs. Otis Bradley; Keene, Mrs. Gorham Brooks; Lanesboro, Berkshire, and Cheshire, Miss Margery Whiting; Lee, Mrs. James T. Owens; Lenox, Miss Estelle Hutchinson and Lester Roberts; Middlebury, Prof. Lewis J. Hathaway; Monterey, Mrs. Earle Stafford; New Boston, Mrs. David Goodnow; North Adams, Mrs. Shelley W. Potter; Northampton, Miss Dorothy M. Bement; Pittsfield, Miss Elizabeth Gamwell and Mrs. Louise E. Underwood; Richmond, Miss Inez Eldridge; Stockbridge, Mrs. John C. Lynch; Tyringham, Mrs. Harry C. Holloway; Westboro, Mrs. Noah Nason; Westfield, Mrs. Paul Mackie; Williamstown, Charles Safford and Roderick Danaher; Windsor, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller; Worcester, Mrs. Frank C. Smith and Mrs. Frederick Williams; Woodstock, Mrs. Frank London.

N. Y. Tribune May 15/38

THE ORCHESTRAS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

WHILE Boston's music lovers have their nightly "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall, those of New York must content themselves with reminiscence and anticipation, so far as orchestral concerts under private sponsorship are concerned, during the seven weeks between the last regular Carnegie Hall event of this kind and the opening Stadium concert on June 23. The three resident orchestras of the Federal Music Project are, however, pursuing an intensive schedule, and the radio continues to offer a considerable variety of symphonic programs.

With the restoration of four of the six weeks which were taken from the Philharmonic-Symphony schedule two years ago, the total number of concerts given here by large orchestras under private sponsorship shows an increase of fourteen concerts during the season which closed this month, 152 events, as compared with 138 in 1936-'37. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra gave 105 concerts, and also took part in a benefit concert for the Henry Hadley Foundation and in the World's Fair preview concert of May 1. The Philadelphia Orchestra gave its usual ten subscription concerts in Carnegie Hall and an extra benefit program. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, as before, gave ten concerts in Carnegie Hall and five in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The New York Women's Symphony, in its fourth season, gave four concerts. The National Orchestral Association gave six concerts in its Monday night series, and four in its cello concerto series with Emanuel Feuermann as soloist.

The N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra emerged from the National Broadcasting Company's largest studio to give three benefit concerts in Carnegie Hall, two under Arturo Toscanini and one under Artur Rodzinski. Joseph Hofmann's jubilee concert on November 28 and a Spanish Loyalist benefit concert under Leon Barzin on December 12 complete the list. The 1937-'38 total is less than the 171 concerts of 1935-'36, when the Philharmonic-Symphony was in session for thirty weeks, but the activities of the W. P. A. orchestras undoubtedly make this season's total larger even than that of seasons in the 1920's, when there were three resident concert orchestras in active session.

In a reminiscent survey of the orchestral season of 1937-'38, the principal landmark for most of us probably is the return of Mr. Toscanini last December to conduct the new orchestra organized by the National Broadcasting Company, but the record of its first season can better be considered separately after its close in June. Apart from this, a prominent feature of the local orchestral season was its programmatic diversity; the total number of composers represented and of works performed exceeds that of any season since the Philharmonic-Symphony amalgamation in 1928, except for 1929-'30. Three orchestras offered the first three symphonies of Brahms, but otherwise there was little programmatic duplication; Wagner and Beethoven, the most represented composers in the Philharmonic programs, had relatively few performances in the Carnegie Hall concerts of the other orchestras.

Only seven works received five or more performances. Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz" was played seven times and Brahms's second symphony six times. Brahms's first symphony, the Franck symphony, Schumann's fourth symphony, Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and Weber's overture to "Oberon" were played five times each. Ten years ago fourteen works were played more than five times each and the "Meistersinger" prelude was heard fourteen times. If this represents a trend toward more programmatic variety and away from coincidental or competitive concentration of familiar favorites, it is an encouraging sign.

The differences in this season's representation of composers, as compared with 1936-'37, do not seem to represent any particularly significant trends. The heavy loss in Mozart's total can hardly mean anything more than that the conductors happened to give less of his music this season; the falling off in Stravinsky's representation is due to the fact that he did not pay us a return visit. In the comparison with ten years ago the most significant item is probably the increased attention paid to Sibelius, to whose music conductors have been as solicitous in recent years as they were neglectful in the 1920's.

The 1937-'38 Novelties

Thirty-four works, five less than in 1936-'37, were played for the first time in New York. Of these, seventeen were played by the Philharmonic-Symphony; the others were introduced as follows:

By the National Orchestral Association:

Dupuis, *Overture to "Hermann and Dorothea"; Fuleihan, Piano Concerto; Schoenberg, Cello Concerto (after clavicembalo concerto by G. M. Monn); McBride, Fugato on a well known theme; Bilotti, Piano Concerto; Toch, Concerto for cello and chamber orchestra; Giorni, Symphony in D minor.

By the Boston Symphony:

Prokofieff, suite from "Lieutenant Kije" and ballet suite, "Romeo and Juliet"; Sibelius, the Captive Queen.

By the Philadelphia Orchestra:

McBride, Music to a Ballet; Still, Symphony in G minor; Stokowski, (arr.) Two Ancient Liturgical Melodies; Wagenaar, Concerto for flute, harp and cello; McDonald, Symphony No. 4.

By the New York Women's Symphony: James, Song of the Night.

In the Hadley Foundation concert: Hadley, A Summer Idyll.

One asterisk refers to a first performance in this country; two to a first performance anywhere. There were nine world premieres during the last season. The list might also include several new transcriptions of works originally in other musical mediums, such as those of Leopold Stokowski and Lucien Cailliet in the Philadelphian repertoire; first performances in orchestral form, such as those of Schumann's violin concerto and Jacob Weinberg's "Gettysburg Address," and first concert performances of excerpts from operas and ballets.

Twenty-nine works by twenty-eight American composers were played this season, as compared with nineteen works by eighteen composers in 1936-'37 and twenty-one works by the same number of composers in 1935-'36. Twelve American works were played by the Philharmonic-Symphony; the National Orchestral Association and the Philadelphia Orchestra played six each; the Women's Symphony played James's "Song of the Night," which had won its American Composers' prize, and six works by Henry Hadley were played in the Hadley Foundation benefit program.

Few Modernistic Works

As in the case of the Philharmonic's novelties, few of those presented by the other orchestras seemed likely to enter the regular repertoire, although Mr. Wagenaar's concerto for flute, harp and cello aroused more than usual interest, especially in its emphasis upon the special characteristics in tone and style of the three solo instruments. Most of the new works introduced were relatively conservative in style and harmonies. This might be interpreted as indicating an avoidance by conductors of the more radically minded composers here and abroad (with an eye, perhaps, to the susceptibilities of their audiences) or as reflecting a turning away from music of an overtly innovating character on the part of many contemporary creative musicians.

Meanwhile, despite the catholicity of the programs, a second season has passed without offering anything by Anton Burckner in a New York concert by a privately sponsored major orchestra.

Philharmonic Finances

In the annual meeting of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society last week, Marshall Field, its president, announced that the present privately raised maintenance fund should, with careful management, be sufficient to meet the deficits of the next two seasons and possibly part of a third (1940-'41)—assuming, of course, that the attendance remains on its present level. The directors, he added, preferred the plan of raising a large endowment fund to afford the society a permanent financial basis, rather than to continue the present method of raising a maintenance fund every few years, and a campaign for such a fund may be expected at some time before the society reaches its centenary in 1942. In raising this fund, the society will undoubtedly look to its radio listeners as well as to its friends and patrons here.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

MAY 1 0 1938

Music Festival Plans Revealed

Boston Symphony and Cecilia Chorus Slated for Opening Concert

The Boston Symphony orchestra, assisted by the Cecilia Chorus of Boston, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, will give Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the opening concert of the Berkshire festival this season.

Mrs. Dudley M. Diggs, Schenectady chairman for the Berkshire festival this season.

Mrs. Dudley M. Diggs, Schenectady chairman for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, has announced membership lists will close Sunday, May 15. The concerts to be held in the new auditorium at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, will be in two series, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, August 4, 6 and 7, and Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, August 11, 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts are held at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon. There is a considerable reduction in the price of seats for members who join early in the season, as well as preference in the assignment of reserved seats and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra.

Of added interest this year will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 5,000. Although a number of details will have to wait for completion, there will be protection from sun and storm.

The Cecilia Chorus and distinguished soloists will be heard with the orchestra the opening night in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Soloists also will be heard the opening night of the second week in the all-Wagner program featuring portions of "Die Walkyrie" and "Siegfried."

Mrs. Diggs will answer inquiries concerning the festival or anyone interested may write to the festival office at Stockbridge.

Many other activities are on the calendar festival time. Olin Downes, well known critic, will give four

YS

Complete Recording of Bach's St. Matthew Passion

B. Her.

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

May 15/38

About a year after the memorable performance of the St. Matthew Passion by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Harvard and Radcliffe choruses and soloists, both instrumental and vocal, under Dr. Koussevitzky, the records taken at the time have been issued. The experiment was considered to be hazardous, since there could be no retakes. Everything had to function smoothly, the audience had to co-operate, and the experts from the RCA Victor Company had to be constantly on their toes to see that the records ended logically.

Some doubts were expressed at the time and have since been repeated in one or two critical reviews of the completed records as to whether a really satisfactory result could be obtained from the experiment. These doubts, we feel, have been exaggerated. The value of the undertaking, of actually transscribing for posterity a good performance of a long and difficult masterpiece is so great that the pauses at the beginning of many records before the music begins and the several inconvenient breaks at the end can readily be discounted.

What is more important is that the music is heard with remarkable clarity. The soloists and the instrumentation are heard to excellent advantage, and the chorus sounds less massive than it appeared to do in Symphony Hall. It has always been one of the complaints of Bach scholars that the modern custom of large choruses has been everywhere retained to the disadvantage of the highly significant orchestra voices. On the records the size and vigor of the chorus is somehow less objectionable.

Much depends in any performance of the St. Matthew Passion on the skill of the soloists. Dr. Koussevitzky had at his command three first-rate singers: Mr. Priebe, who had the exceedingly hard task of singing the recitatives of the Evangelist; Miss Vreeland and Mr. Falkner, who were both eminently trustworthy in this tpye of work. Miss Meisle, the alto soloist, was at the least adequate. Mr. Lechner was handicapped by his odd English diction.

The greatest reason for minimizing occasional, and in such a work inevitable, faults in the performance and recording of the St. Matthew Passion is, of course, its tremendous stature as a work of art. There is no choral work by any other composer which can touch it for purity of spirit, for the combination of the devout and the dramatic. It is the greatest musical account of the profoundest experience of Christianity, the Passion and Crucifixion of Our Lord. No pains, therefore, should be spared for the transmission of a full and reasonably authentic and vital production of such a work.

It is easy and very possibly healthy for scholars to take issue with various points about the interpretation of Bach's larger works and indicates their vitality in the musical life of today. The achievement of the RCA Victor Company has been a marvel of scientific ingenuity. The work of the forces under Dr. Koussevitzky, subject to one or two reservations, also is superb accomplishment. Even the audience, whose right to cough and leave concerts early is held to sacred, refrained entirely from the latter privilege and only rarely indulged in the former. As a matter of fact the unavoidable shortcomings in timing on the records, without the benefit of studio conditions, gives one the not disagreeable impression of being present at a real performance. There is something less smugly mechanical as a result.

The records are issued in three large volumes whose price, naturally, is high. Accompanying them is a pamphlet offering the text, an introduction by Mr. G. H. L. Smith describing the conditions under which the recording was made and an explanatory essay by Dr. Archibald T. Davison. The text is further embellished with Arabic numerals referring to the ordinary piano score and Roman numerals indicating the end of each record. Thus the owner of a set can dip accurately into any part of the St. Matthew Passion. This process, which we have recently enjoyed, is fascinating. You find yourself going on and on, playing just one more, until you realize that you might just as well have started at the beginning and gone right through to the end and then stopped, according to the recommendation of the King of Hearts at the trial. It is, all things considered, a fine piece of work and an interesting step in the processes of recording.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 1 2 1938

LEE

Lee, May 11—Mrs James T. Owens, chairman of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, has announced that as the time for closing of the drive for membership is May 15, those intending to become members for 1938 are reminded to do so this week. After May 15 there is an increase in the price. Application blanks or information may be obtained from Mrs Owens or members of the committee who are: Mrs Frank J. Diamond, Miss Catherine Lippincott, Miss Magdaline Tracy, Miss Julie Owens. In addition to receiving the advantage of reduced costs of admission to the concerts, members will have the privilege of attending a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood and preference in assignment of reserved seats.

The annual banquet of the Lee Brotherhood Bowling league will be held at St George's parish house tomorrow night. During the turkey supper which will be held from 6.30 to 7.30 an entertainment will be witnessed. After the supper there will be a sleight-of-hand performance. Members of winning teams, both men and women, will receive prizes. The remainder of the evening will be devoted to bowling.

Mrs Albert N. Nettleton, worthy matron of Morning Star chapter, Order of Eastern Star, and Mrs R. Henry Barnes are in Boston attending the grand chapter session.

United States Commissioner Milton B. Warner of Pittsfield was the guest speaker at the weekly luncheon of the Lee Rotary club held yesterday at the East Lee inn.

Marriage intentions have been filed with Town Clerk Edward J. Maloney by Miss Emma Bertelli of Lois street and Carl Albert McDarby of Pleasant street. The wedding will take place in St Mary's church Saturday May 21.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 9- 1938

Berkshire Festival Membership List to Close; Downes to Lecture

Mrs. Reynolds Clark and Mrs. Hollis Carlisle, cochairmen in Springfield for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, remind all music lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at "Tanglewood" between Lenox and Stockbridge by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, that membership lists close May 15.

They point out that distinct privileges are extended to members including a substantial saving in the cost of admission, preference in assignment of reserved seats, and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra. Of added interest this year will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 5000. Although many details such as a permanent floor, encased pillars and permanent platform will be lacking, there will be protection from sun and storm.

Many other activities are being planned in the Berkshires during the Festival weeks. Olin Downes, well known critic will give four lectures at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on the principal works to be played by the orchestra. The lectures this year will be at 3 in the afternoon instead of in the morning. They will be given Aug. 4 and 6; Aug. 11 and 13.

Other community chairmen in Western New England include the following: Adams, Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett and Mrs. James Cashin; Becket, Miss Esther McCormic; Bennington, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Smith; Burlington, Harlie E. Wilson; Chatham, Miss Annabelle Terrell; Dalton, Mrs. Bruce Crane; Great Barrington, Mrs. George L. Taylor; Greenfield, Mrs. Mary Robbins Champney; Hillsdale, Mrs. Alexander Bloch; Hinsdale, Miss Alma Haydock; Housatonic, Mrs. Charles Giddings; Hudson, Mrs. Otis Bradley; Keene, Mrs. Gorham Brooks; Lanesboro, Berkshire, and Cheshire, Miss Margery Whiting; Lee, Mrs. James T. Owens; Lenox, Miss Estelle Hutchinson and Lester Roberts; Middlebury, Prof. Lewis J. Hathaway; Monterey, Mrs. Earle Stafford; New Boston, Mrs. David Goodnow; North Adams, Mrs. Shelley W. Potter; Northampton, Miss Dorothy M. Bement; Pittsfield, Miss Elizabeth Gamwell and Mrs. Louise E. Underwood; Richmond, Miss Inez Eldridge; Stockbridge, Mrs. John C. Lynch; Tyringham, Mrs. Harry C. Holloway; Westboro, Mrs. Noah Nason; Westfield, Mrs. Paul Mackie; Williamstown, Charles Safford and Roderick Danaher; Windsor, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller; Worcester, Mrs. Frank C. Smith and Mrs. Frederick Williams; Woodstock, Mrs. Frank London.

47

Sanroma Pops Soloist Tuesday

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES

MAY 9- 1938

Stravinsky Concert Pleases Audience

By WILLIAM NEWMAN

Igor Stravinsky, most important of modern Russian composers, was represented yesterday afternoon by the world premiere of his most recent composition, a concerto for the small orchestra entitled "Dumbarton Oaks." The performance took place in that famous mansion in Georgetown.

The conductor is Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, first of her sex to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Her orchestra was composed of musicians of note, among them Samuel Dushkin, who has assisted Stravinsky in his American tours, and the celebrated members of the Pro Musica String Quartet.

The new concerto gives the clearest and liveliest definition of the composer's personality that has yet come from his pen. Those who admire him for his sentimental "Fire Bird" ballet, his dramatic "Petrouchka," or his brutal and realistic "Rites of Spring" will find in this almost mathematical study in rhythmic complexity and formal simplicity an exposition of his artistic purposes and methods that is fascinating and exciting.

Its beauties appeal to the mind rather than to the senses. They are concerned more with invention than with expression; with clean-cut contrasts in opposed tonalities used simultaneously; with patterns developed with the logic and precision of geometrical design. There is a new kind of stimulus in this music that reaches the casual music lover almost as quickly and definitely as the technically trained listener.

The distinguished audience that heard it yesterday liked it enormously. They liked the quality of the performance which took on so much authority from Mlle. Boulanger's insight and understanding, and so much finish from the executive art of the participants.

Stravinsky's Duo Concertant for violin and piano, also an unfamiliar example of his art, found place on this program. It was presented by Samuel Dushkin and Beveridge Webster Mlle. Boulanger called on two members of her vocal ensemble, Hughes Cueno and Doda Conrad, to present excerpts from several of Bach's sacred cantatas, the voices supported by the small orchestra and the gifted conductor adding harpsichord parts on the piano.

HOUSTON, TEX.
PRESS

MAY 1 0 1938

City to Get Bigger Symphony Orchestra

Walter Walne, President, Reports Favorable Financial Status; Expansion Planned

By LLEWELLYN GARDINER

With only a small balance owing for last season's operations, the Houston Symphony Orchestra is being organized for the 1938-39 season—to be the largest in its history.

According to the financial statement issued to the board of directors by Walter H. Walne, president, the remaining income from unpaid donations, ticket sales and advertising accounts, necessary to carry the orchestra through the summer and clear off last season's debts, will soon be collected.

Of next year's $50,000 budget, tickets already sold amount to $21,288 and donations, $15,500. remaining is $5000 in additional ticket sales and about $7000 to be raised through donations.

Last season, the orchestra was better organized, contained better musical talent and gave more concerts than it has since it made its first appearance in 1913. Concerts included 20 by the entire group, five by the woodwind section in Sunday serenade concerts in Houston and one in Galveston, and two appearances of 50 orchestra members during the Texas State Saengerfest, May 2 and 3.

Without increasing the budget, the orchestra could play 50 concerts a season as easily as it could 20. Concerts have already been arranged for next year in San Antonio, and are assured in Beaumont and Galveston. Active negotiations are on for other out-of-town engagements.

Personnel of next season's orchestra has almost been completed by Conductor Ernst Hoffmann. J. Lukatsky, first oboe player, has been permanently employed by Serge Koussevitzky, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Austin Dedwith, first bassoon player, has refused a contract with a large orchestra to return to the Houston orchestra for another season. Several substitutions have been made and others which have been needed for some time are under consideration, it was said.

Total receipts for last season, ending April 30, were $45,147.65. This includes ticket sales, $17,355.13; donations, $16,938; single admissions to all concerts, $7296.62; program advertising, 1937-38, $2780.80; program advertising 1936-37, $306.39 and miscellaneous items, $470.71.

Total disbursements have been $43,890.09. Included are salaries of musicians and conductor, $32,363.41; guest artists, $950; office salaries and publicity writers, $2599 and incidentals, $7967.

Cash on hand and to be collected is $2562.56. This includes cash on hand, $1257.56; due on unpaid donations, $685; due from season ticket sales, $159.50, and due from program advertising ,$460.50.

Pops in 3d Week; Sanroma Soloist; Wagner Program

The third week of the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, is here announced. Coming soloists include eight individual players this evening; Jesus Maria Sanroma in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" on Tuesday evening, and Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto on Wednesday evening; and four Wagner singers in the Wagner program which is to be presented on Sunday, May 22, which date marks the 125th anniversary of the composer's birth. In this, a Pension Fund concert, Fritz Mahler, the nephew of the famous Austrian composer, will make his first appearance in Boston as guest conductor. The annual Harvard night will follow Monday, May 23.

The program of the week follow:

Sunday Evening, May 15

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Symphony No. 5 in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
Serenade for Eight Wind Instruments (K. No. 388)..................Mozart
Louis Speyer and Jean Devergie, oboes.
Manuel Valerio and Rosario Mazzeo, clarinets.
Raymond Allard and Ernst Panenka, bassoons.
William Valkenier and Walter MacDonald, French horns.
Norwegian Melodies, for string orchestra Grieg
Bolero ....Ravel
Reve Angelique ("Kammenoi Ostrow") Rubinstein
The Old Refrain...................Kreisler
Tambourin Chinois...................Kreisler

Monday Evening, May 16

March, "Pomp and Circumstance"...Elgar
First Movement (Allegro moderato) "Unfinished Symphony"..............Schubert
Song of the Evening Star, "Tannhaeuser" Wagner
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem.....Sibelius
Waltz Scene from "Faust".........Gounod
The Lost Chord...................Sullivan
Trumpet solo, Roger Voisin
Ouverture Solennelle "1812"...Tchaikovsky
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes Strauss
Hora Staccato (Roumanian)..Dinicu-Heifetz
Procession of the Sardar, from the "Caucasian Sketches"...Ippolitov-Ivanov

Tuesday Evening, May 17

March, "Washington Post"..........Sousa
Overture to "Raymond"...........Thomas
Allegretto from the Second Symphony Brahms
Fantasia, "Madame Butterfly".....Puccini
Legend from the "Indian Suite".MacDowell
Largo from "Xerxes"..............Handel
Rhapsody in Blue..............Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Jolly Fellows," Waltzes.........Vollstedt
"Sophisticated Lady"....Ellington-McBride
"Tritsch-Tratsch," Polka..........Strauss

Wednesday Evening, May 18

Hungarian March, "Racockzy".....Berlioz
Fantasy, "Zion".................Phillipson
Mazurka from "A Life for the Czar..Glinka
"Carmen," Fantasia..................Bizet
Overture to "The Impresario"......Mozart
Prelude to Act III, "Die Meistersinger" ....Wagner
Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, op. 18, Rachmaninoff
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Briar Rose," waltz from "The Sleeping Beauty"................Tchaikovsky
Song of the Volga Bargemen, arr by Jacchia
Sixth Hungarian Dance............Brahms

Thursday Evening, May 19

"Tannhauser," Entrance of the Guests Into the Wartburg...............Wagner
Scherzo from the "Eroica" Symphony, No. 3.....................Beethoven
Sandman's Song and Evening Prayer, from "Hansel and Gretel"..Humperdinck
Seventh Slavonic Dance............Dvorak
Second Hungarian Rhapsody..........Liszt
Pavane for a Dead Infanta..........Ravel
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" ....Wagner
"Wine, Woman, and Song," waltzes.Strauss
"Deep River"...............arr. by Jacchia
"Up the Street," march.............Morse

Friday Evening, May 20

March, "Old Roxbury"...............Zach
Academic Festival Overture........Brahms
Hopak from "The Fair at Sorotchintzy," Moussorgsky
"Espana," rhapsody..............Chabrier
Joyeuse Marche..................Chabrier
"The Animals' Carnival," grand zoological fantasy.............Saint-Saens
Violoncello, J. Langendoen; pianos, J. Mª Sanroma-L. Litwin.
Bolero ....Ravel
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ....Churchill-Bodge
Night and Day.....................Porter
"Semper Fidelis," march............Sousa

Saturday Evening, May 21

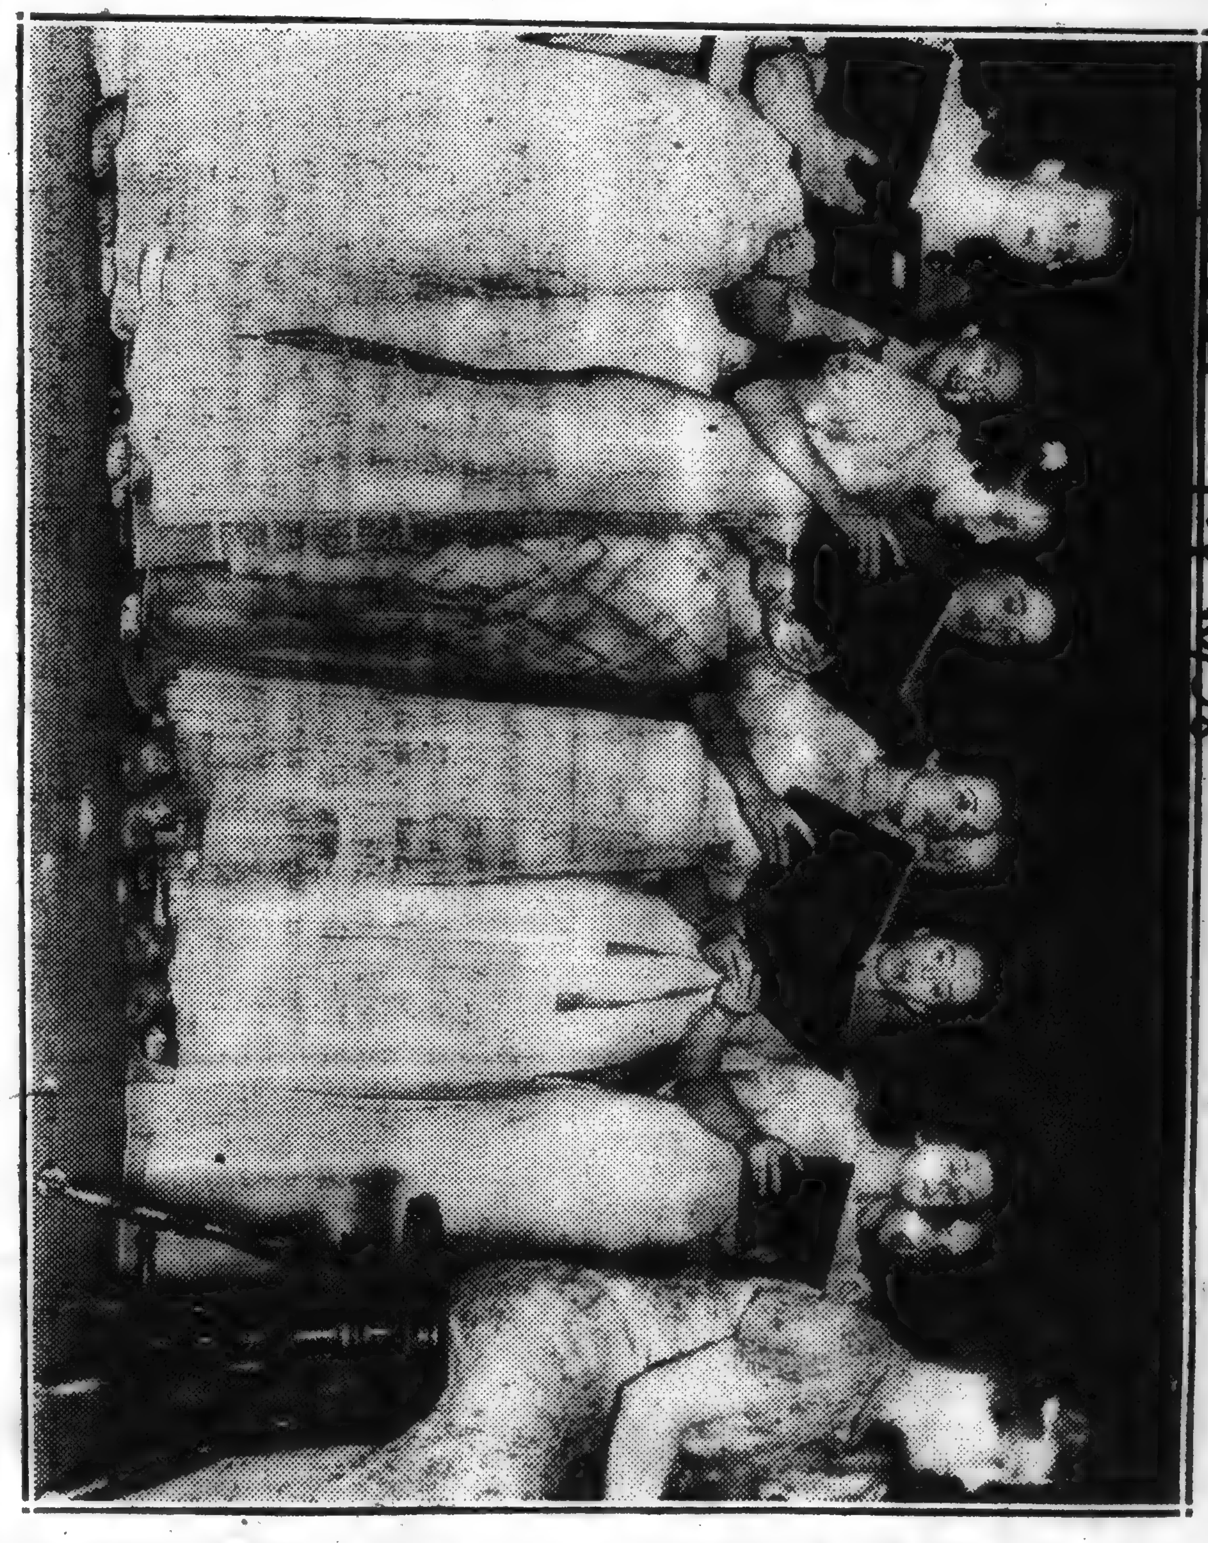
Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" ....Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades"..Offenbach
Minuet ....Bolzoni
Soviet Iron Works.................Mossolov
"La Source," ballet suite.........Delibes
Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni
Overture to "Rienzi"..............Wagner
"Of Thee I Sing," selection......Gershwin
Malaguena ....Lecuona
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"...Gliere

Sunday Evening, May 22
WAGNER PROGRAMME
Fritz Mahler, Guest Conductor.
Soloists: Margaret Halstead, Soprano
Hazel Hayes, Soprano
Colin O'More, Tenor
Raymond Lutz, Bass
Excerpts from "Die Walkure" (in concert form).

Fritz Mahler, who will conduct the Pension Fund Pop Concert to be given at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, May 22, the program consisting entirely of Wagnerian selections. Mr. Mahler is the nephew of the celebrated Austrian composer, Gustav Mahler.

TALENTED NURSES SING AT POPS

B. Post - May 10/38



Nurses shown singing at Pops concert last night sponsored by Massachusetts General Hospital Nurses Alumnae Association. The gifted singing of the attractive young women brought forth long applause from the large audience.

DAILY WORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAY 1 3 1938

Music

Freiheit Gezang Concert; New Bach Recordings

By Martin McCall

The St. Matthew Passion of Bach has finally been issued in its entirety by the Victor Co. There are three Albums (411, 412, 413) including a total of 27 records. The records were made at an actual performance at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Koussevitzky, participated; other participants besides the soloists were the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. Not all is perfect with this set: the work is sung in English, for example, which is shocking. Bach thought penetratingly in terms of the vivid German text. The soloists are only fair. There are technical fluctuations in volume.

On the other hand, the choral portions are fine and often exceptional. At any rate, the complete work is finally available, and the entire text accompanies the records.

Also by Bach is the bright Concerto in C major for two claviers or pianos (Victor Album M-357), played clearly by the Schnabels, father and son. The London Symphony Orchestra, under Adrian Boult, accompanies.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

18

MAY 10 1938

Concert List Closes May 15

Last Chance to Secure Special Privileges in Connection With Fall Symphony

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Smith, co-chairmen for Bennington for the Berkshire Symphonic festival, today reminded all music lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at "Tanglewood" by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, that membership lists close May 15.

They point out that distinct privileges are extended to members including a substantial saving in the cost of admission, preference in assignment of reserved seats and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra. Of added interest this year will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 5000. Although many details such as a permanent floor, encased pillars and permanent platform will be lacking, there will be protection from sun and storm. The Cecilia chorus of Boston directed by Arthur Fielder and distinguished soloists will be heard with the orchestra the opening night in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Soloists also will appear the opening night of the second week in the all-Wagner program which includes portions of "Die Walkyrie" and "Siegfried."

Many other activities are being planned in the Berkshires during the Festival weeks. Olin Downes, well known critic will give four lectures at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on the principal works to be played by the orchestra. The lectures this year will be at 3 in the afternoon instead of in the morning. They will be given Aug. 4 and 6, Aug. 11 ad 13. Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perform at their West Becket studio, Director William Miles has promised two outstanding plays at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, there will be chamber music at South Mountain in Pittsfield on Friday afternoons at 4 o'clock the two weeks of the Festival; there also will be chamber music at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., Cummington and at Alexander Blooh's in Hillsdale, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith will be pleased to answer inquiries about the Festival or persons interested may communicate directly with Stockbridge. Under the membership plan it is possible to have the more expensive seats or to secure admission for either series or for all six concerts at 83 1-3 cents per concert.

Other community chairmen in Vermont include: Harlie E. Wilson, Burlington, Professor Lewis Hathaway, Middlebury, Vt.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST - GAZETTE

MAY 14 1938

Outstanding Music Stars Coming Here

According to Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., president of the Orchestra Association, the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, with Eugene Ormandy conducting, will open the association's season with a pair of concerts on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, November 5 and 6, at Syria Mosque.

The Boston Symphony, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will come to Pittsburgh for a similar pair of concerts on December 10 and 11. The series will end with the return of the Philadelphia orchestra on April 18.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

MAY 10 1938

Boston Symphony Again Listed In Concert Series at Rutgers

Again in the 1938-1939 school year Rutgers University will bring to this city noted figures in the musical world through its University Concert Series. With the Boston Symphony Orchestra again included on the schedule, a program of five concerts has been arranged by Professor Howard D. McKinney, music department head.

John Charles Thomas, baritone, is the first artist on next year's list ,to be heard November 14. The second concert in December will bring to the campus for the first time Yehudi Menuhin, young violinist, who will return to the stage after resting since 1935, when he concluded a spectacular career as a child genius.

The Boston Symphony, again to be heard under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will appear February 7. Walter Gieseking, pianist, will be heard March 1.

There is an unusual program scheduled for the last concert on March 21. Josephine Antoine, soprano, will be heard with a male chorus of 200 voices, members of the Rutgers, Princeton and Lafayette glee clubs. It will be the first time such a program has ever been heard here.

John Charles Thomas is famous as a Metropolitan Opera star, having made his debut here in February, 1934, in "La Traviata."

Starting New Tour

Menuhin terminated in 1935 a remarkable 'round-the-world tour covering 110 concerts in 73 cities and 13 countries. After that he retired to his ranch at Los Gatos, in the Santa Cruz Mountains of California. Now a young man of 21, he will be appearing here in one of the first concerts of his new tour.

In bringing back to the campus the Boston Symphony, under its famed conductor, Professor McKinney was arranging for another visit by the musical organization by far most popular here. The Rutgers music department head hopes that it may be possible to hold a music festival here, with the Boston Symphony staying for a period of two days and presenting perhaps three concerts. That could not be arranged this year, but it is a definite possibility in the future.

Miss Antoine's concert is expected to be of particular interest in that her lark-like, warbling voice should blend particularly well with those of the undergraduate chorus.

Gieseking will be making his first visit to North America this winter since 1935. The German pianist has received great acclaim since his Aeolian Hall debut in 1926.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 11 1938

'AMHERST

Tanglewood Shelter Nears Completion

Local Committee for Berkshire Festival Hears Plans Being Prepared for Gala Celebration

Amherst, May 11.—According to information received by Mrs. Stowell Goding and Prof. Vincent Morgan, local co-chairmen of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival board ,the construction on the shell for the orchestra and the shelter for the audience at Tanglewood is rapidly going forward and the plans are completed for a gala celebration on this occasion of the fifth annual festival.

Festival Membership Campaign

A most unusual opportunity for music lovers is being presented this summer, when the sustaining members of the festival are to be admitted to the concert rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. The Boston Symphony is to present a series of six concerts in the open air shelter at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, on the first and second week-ends of August. Those persons who secure their membership cards for the concerts before May 15 will be privileged to attend the orchestra's rehearsals and to see the famous maestro, Koussevitzky, during the working hours generally denied the public.

Membership cards for the season are transferable and may be used by a different person at each concert. There will be a large section of reserved seats at slightly higher prices. To secure one's membership before May 15 means a substantial savings in cost. Application blanks for membership may be secured at Miss Cutler's Gift Shop, at Amherst college from Prof. Morgan and at State college from Prof. Goding. Copies of the programs to be presented may also be seen at these places. Further information will be gladly supplied by Mrs. Goding.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

MAY 13 1938

Music Notes

Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, and Anna Kaskas, contralto, have been engaged as soloists for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in the first concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass., on Thursday night, August 4.

Portrait of Pushkin—A concert to raise funds for the acquisition of Vladimir Ivanoff's portrait of Alexanader Pushkin for the Russian division of the New York Public Library will be held tonight at the Master Institute Theater, 310 Riverside Drive. The participants include Leonid Bolotine, violinist; N. Dinger, cellist; Vladimir Padwa, pianist; Ariadna Mikeshina, pianist-composer, and Max Panteleeff, barytone. There also will be a demonstration of Leon Theremin's electric cello.

THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

MAY 13 1938

Along the Atlantic Seaboard

By CASPAR WEINBERGER

BOSTON, MAY 11, 1938.

The Boston Pops Concerts, final and conclusive proof that spring is in full sway, opened last week. Every night now until the middle of summer some eighty-five members of the regular Boston Symphony will play before crowds gathered in historic old Symphony Hall. What distinguishes the "Pops" from ordinary concerts is the type of music selected, for the orchestra plays nothing but tried and true favorites of everyone.

Another reason for the enormous popularity of these concerts is the gay, carefree atmosphere in which they are played. Symphony Hall is completely transformed until it resembles an old German beer garden brought indoors, if such a thing can be imagined. Tables and chairs are substituted for the rows of uncomfortable seats on the main floor, and refreshments are served and consumed during the music. All in all, the "Pops" constitute one of the best-known and best-loved features of Boston life.

PORTLAND, ME.
NEWS

MAY 12 1938

Orchestra And Choristers Win Ovation At City Hall Concert

By J. Daniel MacDonald

A concert program that has rarely been equalled in the long musical history of Portland that was given in City Hall Auditorium last evening, by the combined forces of the Immaculate Conception Choristers, under the direction of the Rev. Henry Boltz, and the State Symphony Orchestra of Boston, under the direction of Alexander Thiede. Music of the highest type, orchestral and choral, was performed in such expert fashion as to hold the rapt attention of one of the largest audiences of the present season. The concert was presented under the auspices of the Works Progress Administration, Federal Music Project of Massachusetts, and was sponsored locally by the Portland Council, Knights of Columbus.

The work of the Cathedral Choristers under the guidance of Father Boltz is always something to anticipate. These young singers occupy a position in our musical life all their own, with none to challenge them in their particular field of choral singing. Father Boltz is past master in handling young voices and his musicianship was evidenced in his masterly direction of the fine numbers sung by the Choristers. Good tone color, precision, and accurate pitch were but a few features of the Choristers performance.

Opening their part of the program, the young singers were heard in six selections of a religious character, nearly all sung without accompaniment. The first three were from the Liturgy of the Church and were sung in the traditional Latin. This difficult music, with its interlocking parts was skillfully welded together by Father Boltz, and sung with ardent fervor by the Choristers. The last three numbers in this group were from the music of the Russian Church, sung in English, and of these the best work was done in the anthem, The Day of Judgment, by Arkangelsky. This sombre, compelling music was splendidly harmonized by the boys and Father Boltz achieved a strikingly dramatic interpretation.

In its second group, the Choristers had six short songs of great popular appeal and these were sung with infectious abandon by the Choristers. Of particular appeal were the numbers, Soldier, Soldier, a Virginia folk song, and An Annapolis Lullaby, by Klenim. The first was an intricate marching song, given with precise rhythmic effects and the Lullaby was notable for fine vocal quality. Other things in this group included Bragging Dan, a Norwegian folk song, the Negro Spiritual, the Battle of Jericho, a charming ballad, Pretense and the Russian, Carillon of Kharkov, by Arensfy. Prolonged applause greeted both groups of numbers but Father Boltz declined an encore until the close of the program.

The work of the State Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Alexander Thiede, was little short of sensational and will be long remembered by those fortunate enough to have attended last night's concert. Mr. Thiede proved to be one of the finest conductors ever to appear on a platform in Portland, and he had a magnificent orchestra of expert players to work with. He is spectacular in directing and has all the graces of the virtuoso conductor, leading his players by sheer force of personality through the mazes of the music. He is of the stuff that makes great conductors, being sensitive and temperamental to a degree. His readings of the works performed were notable for keen musicianship and individual interpretation.

In its first appearance the orchestra played the magnificent 4th Symphony, by Tschaiowsky, and it was a privilege to hear such a splendid performance of this master work. It was given an inspired reading by Mr. Thiede and an impeccable rendition by the orchestra. That the merit of the performance was fully appreciated by the audience was manifested in the prolonged ovation which greeted the conclusion of the work.

For its second appearance the orchestra was heard in the striking Carneval Overture, by Dvorak, and this was notable for a wide range of dynamics and fine orchestral

---

GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

MAY 13 1938

Anna Kaskas Will Sing At Berkshire Fete

Former Bridgeport Girl Is Now Metropolitan Opera Contralto

Anna Kaskas, glamorous contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, native of Bridgeport, and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, nationally known in the concert field, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at "Tanglewood" August 4.

Miss Kaskas and Miss Vreeland will be two of the four soloists at the opening concert of the fifth annual Festival. Appearing also the opening night with the orchestra will be the well known Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston. The program will consist of the chorus and the chorale from the Bach cantata, "Ein feste burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. At the opening concert the following week, Miss Kaskas will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried."

From stenographer to radio contest winner to Metropolitan Opera and concert stage—that is the spectacular story of Miss Kaskas. Born in Bridgeport of Lithuanian parents, she moved to Hartford when a girl with her family. There she studied in the conservatory. To pay for her lessons she found a position as stenographer. Her ability caught the interest of a music lover who financed a trip to [illegible]a. There she remained in [illegible] for a year after which the [illegible]lan government sent her [illegible] for two years' study. She returned to America and for four years was soloist in the Catholic Cathedral at Hartford. During this time she made two trips a week to New York driving herself in all kinds of weather in a borrowed car to study with Enrico Rosati, teacher of Gigli, Lauri-Volpi and Rosa Tentoni.

She entered the Metropolitan Opera audition contest the spring before last and was awarded first place over all contestants. Seven hundred voices were heard out of which 48 were chosen for the contest. Nine reached the semi-finals and two were finally selected for appearances in the Metropolitan's spring season. In Miss Kaskas's capable hands were placed the roles of Maddalena in "Rigoletto" and Lola in "Cavalleria Rusticana" as well as the title role in the ng-heralded revival of Gluck's rpheus and Euridice." Her ex- ence won her a contract to ap- in leading roles in the Metro- n's regular winter season. pring Miss Kaskas toured Metropolitan, was soloist New York Philharmonic y under Rodzinski r's "King David," sa Detroit Civic Opera mmunity Concert eng

---

PITTS

Anna
Vreel

INFORMATION OBSCURED

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

118

MAY 10 1938

Concert List Closes May 15

Last Chance to Secure Special Privileges in Connection With Fall Symphony

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Smith, co-chairmen for Bennington for the Berkshire Symphonic festival, today reminded all music lovers who wish to attend the concerts this summer at "Tanglewood" by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, that membership lists close May 15.

They point out that distinct privileges are extended to members including a substantial saving in the cost of admission, preference in assignment of reserved seats and free admission to a rehearsal of the orchestra. Of added interest this year, will be the inauguration of the new shed which will have a seating capacity of more than 5000. Although many details such as a permanent floor, encased pillars and permanent platform will be lacking, there will be protection from sun and storm. The Cecilia chorus of Boston directed by Arthur Fielder and distinguished soloists will be heard with the orchestra the opening night in Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. Soloists also will appear the opening night of the second week in the all-Wagner program which includes portions of "Die Walkyrie" and "Siegfried."

Many other activities are being planned in the Berkshires during the Festival weeks. Olin Downes, well known critic will give four lectures at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield on the principal works to be played by the orchestra. The lectures this year will be at 3 in the afternoon instead of in the morning. They will be given Aug. 4 and 6, Aug. 11 ad 13. Ted Shawn and his men dancers will perform at their West Becket studio. Director William Miles has promised two outstanding plays at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, there will be chamber music at South Mountain in Pittsfield on Friday afternoons at 4 o'clock the two weeks of the Festival; there also will be chamber music at Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., Cummington and at Alexander Bloch's in Hillsdale, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith will be pleased to answer inquiries about the Festival or persons interested may communicate directly with Stockbridge. Under the membership plan it is possible to have the more expensive seats or to secure admission for either series or for all six concerts at 83 1-3 cents per concert.

Other community chairmen in Vermont include: Harlie E. Wilson, Burlington, Professor Lewis Hathaway, Middlebury, Vt.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE

MAY 14 1938

Outstanding Music Stars Coming Here

According to Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., president of the Orchestra Association, the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, with Eugene Ormandy conducting, will open the association's season with a pair of concerts on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, November 5 and 6, at Syria Mosque.

The Boston Symphony, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will come to Pittsburgh for a similar pair of concerts on December 10 and 11. The series will end with the return of the Philadelphia orchestra on April 18.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
HOME NEWS

MAY 10 1938

Boston Symphony Again Listed In Concert Series at Rutgers

Again in the 1938-1939 school year Rutgers University will bring to this city noted figures in the musical world through its University Concert Series. With the Boston Symphony Orchestra again included on the schedule, a program of five concerts has been arranged by Professor Howard D. McKinney, music department head.

John Charles Thomas, baritone, is the first artist on next year's list to be heard November 14. The second concert in December will bring to the campus for the first time Yehudi Menuhin, young violinist, who will return to the stage after resting since 1935, when he concluded a spectacular career as a child genius.

The Boston Symphony, again to be heard under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will appear February 7. Walter Gieseking, pianist, will be heard March 1.

There is an unusual program scheduled for the last concert on March 21. Josephine Antoine, soprano, will be heard with a male chorus of 200 voices, members of the Rutgers, Princeton and Lafayette glee clubs. It will be the first time such a program has ever been heard here.

John Charles Thomas is famous as a Metropolitan Opera star, having made his debut here in February, 1934, in "La Traviata."

Starting New Tour

Menuhin terminated in 1935 a remarkable 'round-the-world tour covering 110 concerts in 73 cities and 13 countries. After that he retired to his ranch at Los Gatos, in the Santa Cruz Mountains of California. Now a young man of 21, he will be appearing here in one of the first concerts of his new tour.

In bringing back to the campus the Boston Symphony, under its famed conductor, Professor McKinney was arranging for another visit by the musical organization by far most popular here. The Rutgers music department head hopes that it may be possible to hold a music festival here, with the Boston Symphony staying for a period of two days and presenting perhaps three concerts. That could not be arranged this year, but it is a definite possibility in the future.

Miss Antoine's concert is expected to be of particular interest in that her lark-like, warbling voice should blend particularly well with those of the undergraduate chorus.

Giesking will be making his first visit to North America this winter since 1935. The German pianist has received great acclaim since his Aeolian Hall debut in 1926.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 11 1938

AMHERST

Tanglewood Shelter Nears Completion

Local Committee for Berkshire Festival Hears Plans Being Prepared for Gala Celebration

Amherst, May 11.—According to information received by Mrs. Stowell Goding and Prof. Vincent Morgan, local co-chairmen of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival board ;the construction on the shell for the orchestra and the shelter for the audience at Tanglewood is rapidly going forward and the plans are completed for a gala celebration on this occasion of the fifth annual festival.

Festival Membership Campaign

A most unusual opportunity for music lovers is being presented this summer, when the sustaining members of the festival are to be admitted to the concert rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. The Boston Symphony is to present a series of six concerts in the open air shelter at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, on the first and second week-ends of August. Those persons who secure their membership cards for the concerts before May 15 will be privileged to attend the orchestra's rehearsals and to see the famous maestro, Koussevitzky, during the working hours generally denied the public.

Membership cards for the season are transferable and may be used by a different person at each concert. There will be a large section of reserved seats at slightly higher prices. To secure one's membership before May 15 means a substantial savings in cost. Application blanks for membership may be secured at Miss Cutler's Gift Shop, at Amherst college from Prof. Morgan and at State college from Prof. Goding. Copies of the programs to be presented may also be seen at these places. Further information will be gladly supplied by Mrs. Goding.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

MAY 13 1938

Music Notes

Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, and Anna Kaskas, contralto, have been engaged as soloists for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in the first concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass., on Thursday night, August 4.

Portrait of Pushkin—A concert to raise funds for the acquisition of Vladimir Ivanoff's portrait of Alexanader Pushkin for the Russian division of the New York Public Library will be held tonight [illegible] Master Institute Theater, 310 Riverside Drive. The participants include Leonid Bolotine, violinist; N. Dinger, cellist; Vladimir Padwa, pianist; Ariadna Mikeshina, pianist-composer, and Max Panteleeff, barytone. There also will be a demonstration of Leon Theremin's electric cello.

THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

MAY 13 1938

Along the Atlantic Seaboard

By CASPAR WEINBERGER

BOSTON, MAY 11, 1938.

The Boston Pops Concerts, final and conclusive proof that spring is in full sway, opened last week. Every night now until the middle of summer some eighty-five members of the regular Boston Symphony will play before crowds gathered in historic old Symphony Hall. What distinguishes the "Pops" from ordinary concerts is the type of music selected, for the orchestra plays nothing but tried and true favorites of everyone.

Another reason for the enormous popularity of these concerts is the gay, carefree atmosphere in which they are played. Symphony Hall is completely transformed until it resembles an old German beer garden brought indoors, if such a thing can be imagined. Tables and chairs are substituted for the rows of uncomfortable seats on the main floor, and refreshments are served and consumed during the music. All in all, the "Pops" constitute one of the best known and best-loved features of Boston life.

PORTLAND, ME.
NEWS

MAY 12 1938

Orchestra And Choristers Win Ovation At City Hall Concert

By J. Daniel MacDonald

A concert program that has rarely been equalled in the long musical history of Portland that was given in City Hall Auditorium last evening, by the combined forces of the Immaculate Conception Choristers, under the direction of the Rev. Henry Boltz, and the State Symphony Orchestra of Boston, under the direction of Alexander Thiede. Music of the highest type, orchestral and choral, was performed in such expert fashion as to hold the rapt attention of one of the largest audiences of the present season. The concert was presented under the auspices of the Works Progress Administration, Federal Music Project of Massachusetts, and was sponsored locally by the Portland Council, Knights of Columbus.

The work of the Cathedral Choristers under the guidance of Father Boltz is always something to anticipate. These young singers occupy a position in our musical life all their own, with none to challenge them in their particular field of choral singing. Father Boltz is past master in handling young voices and his musicianship was evidenced in his masterly direction of the fine numbers sung by the Choristers. Good tone color, precision, and accurate pitch were but a few features of the Choristers performance.

Opening their part of the program, the young singers were heard in six selections of a religious character, nearly all sung without accompaniment. The first three were from the Liturgy of the Church and were sung in the traditional Latin. This difficult music, with its interlocking parts was skillfully welded together by Father Boltz, and sung with ardent fervor by the Choristers. The last three numbers in this group were from the music of the Russian Church, sung in English, and of these the best work was done in the anthem, The Day of Judgment, by Arkangelsky. This sombre, compelling music, was splendidly harmonized by the boys and Father Boltz achieved a strikingly dramatic interpretation.

In its second group, the Choristers had six short songs of great popular appeal and these were sung with infectious abandon by the Choristers. Of particular appeal were the numbers, Soldier, Soldier, a Virginia folk song, and An Annapolis Lullaby, by Klenim. The first was an intricate marching song, given with precise rhythmic effects and the Lullaby was notable for fine vocal quality. Other things in this group included Bragging Dan, a Norwegian folk song, the Negro Spiritual, the Battle of Jericho, a charming ballad, Pretense and the Russian Carillon of Kharkov, by Arensky. Prolonged applause greeted both groups of numbers but Father Boltz declined an encore until the close of the program.

The work of the State Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Alexander Thiede, was little short of sensational and will be long remembered by those fortunate enough to have attended last night's concert. Mr. Thiede proved to be one of the finest conductors ever to appear on a platform in Portland, and he had a magnificent orchestra of expert players to work with. He is spectacular in directing and has all the graces of the virtuoso conductor, leading his players by sheer force of personality through the mazes of the music. He is of the stuff that makes great conductors, being sensitive and temperamental to a degree. His readings of the works performed were notable for keen musicianship and individual interpretation.

In its first appearance the orchestra played the magnificent 4th Symphony, by Tschaiowsky, and it was a privilege to hear such a splendid performance of this master work. It was given an inspired reading by Mr. Thiede and an impeccable rendition by the orchestra. That the merit of the performance was fully appreciated by the audience was manifested in the prolonged ovation which greeted the conclusion of the work.

For its second appearance the orchestra was heard in the striking Carneval Overture by Dvorak, and this was notable for a wide range of dynamics and fine orchestral

---

GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

MAY 13 1938

Anna Kaskas Will Sing At Berkshire Fete

Former Bridgeport Girl Is Now Metropolitan Opera Contralto

Anna Kaskas, glamorous contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, native of Bridgeport, and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, nationally known in the concert field, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at "Tanglewood" August 4.

Miss Kaskas and Miss Vreeland will be two of the four soloists at the opening concert of the fifth annual Festival. Appearing also the opening night with the orchestra will be the well known Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston. The program will consist of the chorus and the chorale from the Bach cantata, "Ein feste burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. At the opening concert the following week, Miss Kaskas will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried."

From stenographer to radio contest winner to Metropolitan Opera and concert stage—that is the spectacular story of Miss Kaskas. Born in Bridgeport of Lithuanian parents, she moved to Hartford when a girl with her family. There she studied in the conservatory. To pay for her lessons she found a position as stenographer. Her ability caught the interest of a [illegible] who financed a trip to [illegible]. There she remained in [illegible] for a year after which the [illegible] government sent her [illegible] for two years' study. She returned to America and for four years was soloist in the Catholic Cathedral at Hartford. During this time she made two trips a week to New York driving herself in all kinds of weather in a borrowed car to study with Enrico Rosati, teacher of Gigli, Lauri-Volpi and Rosa Tentoni.

She entered the Metropolitan Opera audition contest the spring before last and was awarded first place over all contestants. Seven hundred voices were heard out of which 48 were chosen for the contest. Nine reached the semi-finals and two were finally selected for appearances in the Metropolitan's

PASTE OVER

219

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 1 2 1938

Anna Kaskas and Jeannette Vreeland To Sing at Festival

Anna Kaskas

Jeannette Vreeland

Anna Kaskas, glamorous contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, native of Bridgeport, Conn., and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, nationally known in the concert field, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at "Tanglewood" Aug. 4.

Miss Kaskas and Miss Vreeland will be two of the four soloists at the opening concert of the fifth annual Festival. Appearing also the opening night with the orchestra will be the well known Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston. The program will consist of the chorus and chorale from the Bach cantata, "Ein feste burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. At the opening concert the following week, Miss Kaskas will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried."

Spectacular Career

From stenographer to radio contest winner to Metropolitan Opera and concert stage—that is the spectacular story of Miss Kaska. Born in Bridgeport, of Lithuanian parents, she moved to Hartford when a girl with her parents. There she studied in the conservatory. To pay for her lessons she found a position as stenographer. Her ability caught the interest of a music lover who financed a trip to Lithuania. There she remained in Kovno for a year after which the Lithuanian government sent her to Milan for two years' study. She returned to America and for four years was soloist in the Catholic Cathedral in Hartford.

Drove Borrowed Car

During this time she made two trips a week to New York driving herself in all kinds of weather in a borrowed car to study with Enrico Rosati, teacher of Gigli, Lauri-Volpi and Rosa Tentoni. She entered the Metropolitan Opera audition contest the spring before last and was awarded first place over all contestants. Seven hundred voices were heard out of which 48 were chosen for the contest. Nine reached the semi-finals and two were finally selected for appearances in the Metropolitan's spring season. In Miss Kaskas's capable hands were placed the roles of Maddalena in "Rigoletto" and Lola in "Cavalleria Rusticana" as well as the title role in the long heralded revival of Gluck's "Orpheus and Euridice." Her excellence won her a contract to appear in leading roles in the Metropolitan's regular winter season. Last spring Miss Kaskas toured with the Metropolitan, was soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under Artur Rodzinski in Honegger's "King David," sang with the Detroit Civic Opera and filled Community Concert engagements.

Native of Denver

Miss Vreeland is a native of Denver, Col. Percy Rector Stephens, voice teacher in New York heard her sing, was impressed, and urged her to come to New York to study. She married her teacher (Mr. Stephens) and in 1922 made her first professional appearance. She has appeared repeatedly at festivals throughout the country and often has sung in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and other great works. She appeared in the premiere of Ernst Krenek's "Triumph der Empfindsamkeit," with the New York Philharmonic and in the American premiere of Schoenberg's "Gurreleider" with the Philadelphia Orchestra. Her latest appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra was last month. She appeared in Pittsfield with the Berkshire Musical Association under Horace Hunt's direction in 1935 and 1936.

Campaign Ends Sunday

Memberships for the Festival will be available through Sunday. Those wishing them may communicate with local chairmen or write directly to the office at Stockbridge. Reservations bearing the May 15 postmark will be honored.

Local chairmen in Berkshire and vicinity include the following: Pittsfield, Miss Elizabeth Gamwell (telephone Miss Julia Ellen Kinney after Friday); Lenox, Miss Estelle G. Hutchinson and Lester Roberts; Stockbridge, Mrs. John C. Lynch; Lee, Mrs. J. T. Owens; Great Barrington, Mrs. George L. Taylor; Lanesboro, Berkshire and Cheshire, Miss Margery Whiting; Dalton, Mrs. Bruce Crane; Becket, Miss Esther McCormick; Chatham, Miss Annabelle Terrell; Hillsdale, Mrs. Alexander Bloch; Hinsdale, Miss Alma Haydock; Housatonic, Mrs. Charles Giddings; Lebanon Valley, Mrs. Harry Adams; Monterey, Mrs. Earle Stafford; New Boston, Mrs. Norton Perkins; Richmond, Miss Inez Eldridge; Tyringham, Mrs. Harry C. Holloway; Williamstown, Charles L. Safford and Roderick Danaher; Windsor, Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller.

Mrs. Louise E. Underwood is co-chairman with Miss Gamwell for Pittsfield and will be in charge of the subscription campaign.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

MAY 1 7 1938

To Entertain in Providence

Mrs. Henry D. Sharpe Giving Tea for 'Friends of Boston Symphony'

Special to the Herald Tribune

PROVIDENCE, May 16.—Mrs. Henry Dexter Sharpe will give a large tea at her home Wednesday for the group known as "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra." Mrs. Gilbert Maurice Congdon and Mrs. Royal Little will preside at the tea table.

Mrs. Arthur B. Lisle departed today for Washington, where she will be the guest of her cousin, Miss Bertha A. Noyes. Mrs. Lisle will represent Rhode Island at the annual meeting tomorrow of the National Cathedral Association, of which she is the honorary chairman for the Rhode Island committee.

Mrs. Thomas H. West jr. has arrived at her country estate at Woods Hole, Mass., for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Rush Sturges and family will go to their country estate, Shepherd's Run, in Wakefield on Tuesday of next week.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

MAY 1 8 1938

Music Notes

Plans for the summer concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium are making rapid headway, according to an announcement from Mrs. Charles S. Guggenheimer, chairman. On Monday evening, July 11, the first anniversary of the death of George Gershwin, a program will be given in his memory. Paul Whiteman will conduct the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, augmented by musicians from his own band.

Alexander Smallens, one of the batonists to appear during the course of the series, has prepared a Stravinsky Festival program, which will include a first Stadium performance of "Les Noces," the "Symphony of Psalms" and the "Firebird" suite, to take place on Thursday, August 11. Mr. Smallens is also scheduled to conduct two performances of "Carmen," with Bruna Castagna in the title role.

* * *

At the opening concert of the fifth annual Berkshire Symponic Festival on August 4, Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan contralto, and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, will assist in the inaugural of the festival's new music shed at "Tanglewood." Appearing also in the opening program will be the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston, and, of course, the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

The music to be offered on that occasion will consist of the ninth symphony of Beethoven and the chorus and chorale from Bach's cantata, "Ein fester burg ist unser Gott."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 1 3 1938

Stockbridge to Hear Kaskas With Koussevitzky Directing

ANNA KASKAS

Boston Symphony Will Appear for Inaugural Of New Music Shed

Anna Kaskas, Hartford's member of the Metropolitan Opera, will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed in Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4.

The young contralto, who has won a firm place in the affections of music lovers with her voice and her unspoiled naturalness, will sing the role of Erda when the Boston Symphony performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried" at Tanglewood, the week following the opening of the new shed.

She also will be one of the soloists at the opening concert Aug. 4, when the Cecelia Society Chorus of Boston will appear with the orchestra. Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, nationally known on the concert stage, also will be a soloist at this performance. The program will consist of the chorus and chorale from the Bach cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 1 3 1938

Noted Artists To Sing At Berkshire Festival

Anna Kaskas, Contralto, of Metropolitan Opera Company, a Native of Bridgeport, Ct., and Jeannette Vreeland, Soprano, Will Appear With Berkshire Symphony Orchestra at "Tanglewood" Inaugural on June 4—Well Known Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston Will Also Be Heard on Opening Night—Two Other Soloists Listed For Opening Program.

Anna Kaskas, glamorous contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, native of Bridgeport, Ct., and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, nationally known in the concert field, will appear with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, August 4.

Miss Kaskas and Miss Vreeland will be two of the four soloists at the opening concert of the fifth annual Festival. Appearing also the opening night with the orchestra will be the well known Cecilia Society chorus of Boston. The program will consist of the chorus and chorale from the Bach cantata, "Ein feste burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. At the opening concert the following week, Miss Kaskas will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried."

From stenographer to radio contest winner to Metropolitan Opera and concert stage—that is the spectacular story of Miss Kaskas. Born in Bridgeport of Lithuanian parents, she moved to Hartford when a girl with her family. There she studied in the conservatory. To pay for her lessons she found a position as stenographer. Her ability caught the interest of a music lover who financed a trip to Lithuania. There she remained in Kovno for a year after which the Lithuanian government sent her to Milan for two years' study. She returned to America and for four years was soloist in the Catholic Cathedral at Hartford. During this time she made two trips a week to New York driving herself in all kinds of weather in a borrowed car to study with Enrico Rosati, teacher of Gigli, Lauri-Volpi and Rosa Tentoni.

She entered the Metropolitan Opera audition contest the spring before last and was awarded first place over all contestants. Seven hundred voices were heard out of which 48 were chosen for the contest. Nine reached the semi-finals and two were finally selected for appearances in the Metropolitan's spring season. In Miss Kaskas' capable hands were placed the roles of Maddalena in "Rigoletto" and Lola in "Cavalleria Rusticana" as well as the title role in the long-heralded revival of Gluck's "Orpheus and Euridice." Her excellence won her a contract to appear in leading roles in the Metropolitan's regular winter season. Last spring Miss Kaskas toured with the Metropolitan, was soloist with the New York Philharmonic Symphony under Artur Rodzinski in Honegger's "King David," sang with the Detroit Civic Opera and filled community concert engagements.

Miss Vreeland is a native of Denver, Colorado. Percy Rector Stephens, voice teacher in New York, heard her sing, was impressed and urged her to come to New York to study. She married her teacher and in 1922 made her first professional appearance. She has appeared repeatedly at festivals throughout the country and often has sung in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and other great works. She appeared in the premiere of Ernst Krenek's "Triumph der Empfindsamkeit," with the New York Philharmonic and in the American premiere of Schoenberg's "Gurreleider" with the Philadelphia orchestra. Her latest appearance with the Boston Symphony orchestra was last month..

Complete program details of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival may be obtained by writing to the office at Stockbridge, Mass. The Festival's membership campaign closes May 15.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 1 3 1938

Opera and Concert Stars to Sing

ANNA KASKAS

JEANNETTE VREELAND

STOCKBRIDGE, May 12 — Anna Kaskas, glamorous contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, nationally known in the concert field, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at "Tanglewood" Aug. 4.

Miss Kaskas and Miss Vreeland will be two of the four soloists at the opening concert of the fifth annual festival. Appearing also the opening night with the orchestra will be the well-known Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston. The program will consist of the chorus and chorale from the Bach cantata, "Ein feste burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. At the opening concert the following week, Miss Kaskas will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried."

From stenographer to radio contest winner to Metropolitan Opera and concert stage — that is the spectacular story of Miss Kaskas. Born in Bridgeport of Lithuanian parents, she moved to Hartford when a girl with her family. There she studied in the conservatory. To pay for her lessons she found a position as stenographer. Her ability caught the interest of a music lover who financed a trip to Lithuania. There she remained in Kovno for a year after which the Lithuanian government sent her to Milan for two years' study. She returned to America and for four years was soloist in the Catholic Cathedral in Hartford. During this time she made two trips a week to New York driving herself in all kinds of weather in a borrowed car to study with Enrico Rosati, teacher of Gigli, Lauri-Volpi and Rosa Tentoni.

She entered the Metropolitan Opera audition contest the spring before last and was awarded first place over all contestants.

Miss Vreeland is a native of Denver, Colo. Percy Rector Stephens, voice teacher in New York heard her sing, was impressed and urged her to come to New York to study. She married her teacher and in 1922 made her first professional appearance.

The festival's membership campaign closes Sunday.

50

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

MAY 14 1938

Berkshire Festival Programme Announced by Koussevitzky

Before sailing for France recently for his annual vacation, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced the complete programmes to be performed at Tanglewood for the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

The new building whose construction Dr. Koussevitzky viewed during his Berkshire visit, will be inaugurated Thursday evening, August 4 at 8.30 with the chorus and the chorale from Bach's "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in D Minor. The audience will be invited to join with the chorus in singing of the second verse of the Bach cantata. The Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston, of which Arthur Fielder is conductor, will be heard with the orchestra in this inaugural programme.

Debussy's "La Mer," whose performance by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra has won acclaim from many critics, will be on the programme for August 6.

An all-Wagner programme will be presented Thursday evening of the second week. The programme will include scenes from "Die Walkyrie" and Act III of "Siegfried" with soloists.

The programme on August 13 will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra will perform the andante tranquillo from Dr. Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, Opus 60.

The full programme for the Festival with dates of performance follows: Thursday evening, August 4, at 8.30—Chorus from the cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" No. 80 (Bach); Chorale from the cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" (Bach); Symphony No. 9 in D Minor with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125 (Beethoven); Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler, conductor and soloists.

Saturday evening, August 6, at 8.30—Symphony in E Flat No. 99 (Haydn); "La Mer," three symphonic sketches (Debussy); Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39 (Sibelius).

Sunday afternoon, August 7, at 3.30—"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Serenade for string orchestra (Mozart); Symphony in E Minor No. 4, Op. 98 (Brahms); Music for the Theatre (Copeland); "Ma Mere l'Oye" ("Mother Goose") Five children's pieces (Ravel); Symphonic Poem, "The Pines of Rome" (Respighi).

Thursday evening, August 11, at 8.30—"Die Walkyrie" Introduction to Act III, "The Ride of the Valkyries." Act III, Final Scene. Act III., "Siegfried" (Wagner).

Saturday evening, August 13, at 8.30—Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Op. 68, "Pastoral." Andante tranquillo from the Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, Op. 60. (Hadley); Symphony No. 6 in B Minor "Pathetic," Op. 74 (Tchaikowsky).

Sunday afternoon, August 14, at 3.30—Symphony in B. Flat, No. 1, Op. 38. (Schuman); "Tapiola," a Tone Poem for Orchestra. (Sibelius); Symphony No. 2 in D. Major, Op. 73. (Brahms).

Several music lovers from Toronto, Canada, will attend the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, August 4-14, instead of attending one of the well known festivals in Europe, according to information received this week by the Berkshire Festival. The woman writing for tickets for all six concerts stated she had attended the European festival for many years, but because of existing chaos she preferred to support a Festival in America which is free from political implications.

FREDERICKSBURG, VA.
FREE LANCE - STAR

MAY 14 1938

'Round the Radio Dial

WITH

Ernest D. McIver, Jr.

Sir Adrian Boult, music director of the British Broadcasting Corporation and distinguished conductor of the BBC Symphony Orchestra in London, has arrived in New York to conduct the NBC Symphony Orchestra's broadcasts tonight and next Saturday.

A great record of achievement places Sir Adrian among the foremost music personalities of England. After many years of orchestral training he was, in 1932, placed in charge of the music department of the BBC, and as director of the BBC Symphony Orchestra his contributions to the advancement of music culture have won him worldwide recognition. For these notable services he was knighted in 1937.

For his broadcast tonight (WEAF-9) with the NBC Symphony, Sir Adrian has chosen a program of international contrasts.

SELECTIONS LISTED

First on the list to be offered is Ferruccio Busoni's "Comedy Overture," Opus 38, a work which the Italian-German composer wrote in 1897 and revised in 1904. This Overture, somewhat Mozartian in character, was dedicated to Wilhelm Gericke, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1884 to 1889 and from 1898 to 1906.

The symphony will be Beethoven's Seventh, the A Major, Opus 92, which Berlioz labelled "the apotheosis of the dance."

Following the Beethoven symphony Sir Adrian has programmed a work by one of England's outstanding contemporary composers, William Walton's Concerto for Viola and Orchestra, with the famous viola virtuoso, William Primrose, as soloist. Primrose, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, known internationally as a soloist and violinist of the celebrated London String Quartet until its disbandment, is now a first-desk violist of the NBC Symphony.

A work by Aaron Copeland, a gifted young New York composer, "El Salon Mexico," will conclude the program. Copeland wrote this in Mexico two years ago. Carlos Chaves immediately gave it its premiere performance in Mexico City. Sir Adrian has already played it in England.

British Director

Sir Adrian Boult, distinguished conductor of the BBC Symphony Orchestra and music director of the British Broadcasting Corporation, who is directing the NBC Symphony concert tonight and next Saturday.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 15 1938

CONDUCTOR DISCUSSES HIS ART

By OLIN DOWNES

IN an address made recently before the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, in Boston, and here quoted with the Academy's permission, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made pertinent and provocative observations upon the art of interpretation as affecting music and poetry.

Both these arts were considered by Dr. Koussevitzky in the interpretative connection, because "in remote times they existed in a united and indivisible tonal art * * * one may follow the rise of poetry out of music or consider the inverse: the birth of music from poetry. Both modern philology and modern musical research agree that once poetry and music formed one art and dwelt in the midst of one united element."

* * *

The relationship, the "passionate attraction" between music and poetry is the more evident if a comparison is made between their harmonious attributes and the character of other arts. Thus "one cannot, on a sound basis, consider painting as the mother of poetry, or affirm that literature gave birth to architecture. To admit that would seem, if not an obvious absurdity, in any case a great paradox." Whereas, "if we make a parallel between poetry and music, the situation changes."

"Poetry is silent music. * * * Music is the singing voice of poetry."

"This is the real reciprocal relation between poetry and music. * * * As much as they attract each other before their incarnation into form and images, so much do they repulse each other when taking a literary or tonal shape. This erotic union and disjunction (which reminds one of the Myth of Androgene) is like a symbol, eternally repeating and calling to remembrance the by-gone existing unity and the rapture which once occurred. * * *

"Music which does not sound appears to be a dead world and loses its significance; its meaning dwells only in the tonal realization. Verses which are not even read (let alone not pronounced) do not lose their active power, but keep in a mysterious manner the ascendancy of poetry. Goethe and Petrarch do not lose their power and strength, but are independent of the fact whether they are remembered and read. * * *

"As an auxiliary art, interpretation is, above all, most closely connected with music."

* * *

Now, Dr. Koussevitzky continues, "the realm of interpretation in music, and especially the realm of conducting, is still very young, when we think that Berlioz, Mendelssohn and Wagner, who appeared about the same time as the leading conductors of their epoch, were, indeed, the first conductor-interpreters. In fact, they founded a new school. As I said, at that time the art of interpretation in conducting was not known. The conductors were mostly 'time beaters' who did not even trouble to rehearse, letting the concertmaster rehearse in their stead. Hence originated the word 'concertmaster.' The performance consisted in playing in time, without any consideration of details or perfection. If there was in the orchestra a virtuoso player, and if he had a solo passage to play, he performed his musical phrase with the utmost individuality, disregarding the whole conception of the work, its general meaning or line.

"Wagner and Mendelssohn created a real revolution in the sphere of conducting. They no longer 'beat time'; they built up the musical phrase. (Yet this, of course, was far from the modern art of conducting!) The geniuses of Wagner and Mendelssohn were totally opposite: Wagner was essentially romantic; Mendelssohn essentially constructive.

"It is also interesting to mark the difference of their conceptions of musical compositions. The metronomic difference of their tempi in one and the same work reached, sometimes, 20 per cent, 30 per cent and more—Mendelssohn's tempi being generally the faster.

"Which of the two was right? We cannot say.

* * *

"Here we actually come to the problems of interpretation.

"Before the World War, interpretative art was strongly influenced by the romantic school. That is, the interpreter regarded a musical composition as an artist-painter would regard a landscape. To him it is a 'fragment of Nature.' He takes that 'fragment of Nature' and reflects it as he sees, feels and understands it. Therefore, one and the same landscape in the hands of two artists will have a different reflection. Also, the form of one and the same object will be given different lights and shadings.

"In all ages, artists were prophets of either the rise or downfall of a culture. In the pre-war period, leading artists introduced decadence into art before it manifested itself in the social and political life of the post-war period. Decadence in musical interpretation in some countries grew to such proportions that not only were the lights-and-shadings distorted, but the form itself was lost. At the same time, artists in other countries, also instinctively foreseeing that decline, attempted to straighten the distorted line of classical art."

What is interpretation? Dr. Koussevitzky goes far. "We have a great deal of evidence that musical performers have a right to interpret compositions freely. They hold that right from the composer.

"There was the case of the tempo in the trio of the scherzo of the Fourth symphony. I recall a personal experience with the most outstanding contemporary composer, Jean Sibelius. When I studied his Fourth symphony for a performance here, I found that the tempo of the last ninety-eight bars of the scherzo was marked twice as slow as the preceding tempo—and that, I could neither feel nor understand. I wrote to Sibelius asking for an explanation, thinking that it was a possible misprint and saying I did not feel that tempo. And Sibelius answered:

"'The right tempo is the one that the artist feels.' Where is, after all, the truth of interpretation, and how can an artist justify that truth? Personally, I believe that a composer, when creating a work, transfuses it not only with his musical creative power, but also with the entire meaning of his life—the essence of his being.

"That is why we can and we must find a central line in the creation of every composer. What is the central line of a composer? It is the meaning of his life and ideals, which he brings to us through the medium of his music.

"With Bach, his central line is religion. Bach came to glorify God. And we find in his entire life his praise of God, exaltation of Heaven and Divinity.

"If we analyze his creative work, we will find how free Mozart was of any outward influence: he believed in music for the sake of music; sound for sound, beauty for beauty. Let us take Beethoven. His central line is transcendentality: He reflects universal emotion in music. When Beethoven grieves, he grieves with the world; when Beethoven is joyful, it is universal joy; when he feels a tragedy, it is a world tragedy. We can well say that the central line of Beethoven's art is the unifying element of universality."

* * *

"Here emerges the truth of interpretative art. When the artist-interpreter is able to perceive the inner meaning, "the central line" of a composition, he will find in himself the right and illuminating emotion to perform it.

"A perfect interpretation may have two different aspects, equally faithful to the score of the composer. One may be called mechanically perfect. The other, organically perfect. The first gives the beauty of mathematical balance, symmetry and clarity. The second is an indivisible, living, pulsating 'élan vital' of the composition. One aims to present a beautified surface or reflection of the composition. In the other the composition—its central idea—lives as a reality. One may be compared to a perfectly symmetrical building. The other to a great Gothic cathedral, with its partly assymetrical yet organic order of unity.

"The one is always enjoyable, pleasant and delightful, but remains, like a beautiful scene, external to the listener. The other takes and carries him with the 'élan vital' of the work, merges him with the reality of its central meaning. Like a mystic experience, the organic interpretation puts the listener in direct touch with the absolute reality hidden in the great score. Approaching further the question of orchestral performance, I must say that at no time was the standard of musical performances set as high as it is in America today. This is not a mere verbal statement: facts speak for themselves. In Europe, even in the best old days, the symphony orchestras had not by far the same possibilities as we have here. Nor was there the same intensity of work and interest."

* * *

He spoke of America's musical life. "It is a mistake to think that musical life in America develops only because of America's wealth. This is wrong. Musical life in this country grows because there is the need for music.

"That need for music today has an explanation: men seek an outlet for their best and deeper emotions and they find it in music. For music is the recovered word of true feeling, liberated from the banality, hypocrisy and cruelty of life. Music is to help the soul of men. It is the pure language, regenerating, like the mountain air."

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN - TELEGRAPH

MAY 15 1938

Association Lists Five Concerts

Announcement was made yesterday by Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., president of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, of plans for the twenty-third season of visiting orchestra concerts.

A series of five concerts will be given at Syria Mosque by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, and the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor.

The opening concerts will bring the Philadelphia Orchestra on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, November 5 and 6. The Boston Symphony will be here for a pair of concerts on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, December 10 and 11. The fifth event will be a concert by the Philadelphia Orchestra, on Tuesday evening, April 18.

To avoid conflict with the Pittsburgh Symphony Society, the Orchestra Association, through its manager, May Beegle, has arranged to open its concerts two weeks in advance of the Symphony Society.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

MAY 15 1938

Forum to Present Boston Orchestra

The Philadelphia Forum announces an imposing musical program for next season.

Events scheduled include the only Philadelphia appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — under Serge Koussevitzky—Lawrence Tibbett, Jussi Bjoerling, new Metropolitan Opera tenor; Kathryn Meisle, Met contralto, and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, in joint recital; and Josef Hofmann playing two pianos, Fritz Reiner conducting.

Also, Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; the Wagnerian Singers; the Salzburg Trapp Choir, and Robert Casadesus, pianist. Argentinita and her Andalusian company of dancers will make their first and only appearance, and Trudi Schoop and her Dancing Comedians again will make their solo appearance.

57

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
MAY 15 1938

SYMPHONIC RECORD

THIS table includes the composers represented and the number of performances of their works in the Manhattan concerts of the Philharmonic-Symphony, Boston Symphony and Philadelphia Orchestras, New York Women's Symphony Orchestra and National Orchestral Association, in addition to five benefit concerts and the orchestral works in the Metropolitan Opera concerts.

Composer	No. Works Performed	Times Performed
Wagner	20	49
Beethoven	17	43
Strauss, R.	13	27
Brahms	7	25
Mozart	15	22
Sibelius	12	20
Ravel	8	17
Tchaikovsky	10	16
Mendelssohn	8	16
Berlioz	6	16
Weber	4	16
Strauss, J.	4	14
Bach	10	12
Elgar	5	12
Debussy	7	11
Delius	5	11
Schubert	5	11
Haydn	6	10
Schumann	3	10
Dvorak	5	9
Purcell	3	9
Franck	2	9
Rimsky-Korsakoff	5	8
Stravinsky	5	7
*Hadley	6	6
Handel	3	6
Saint-Saens	5	5
Verdi	4	5
Prokofieff	3	3

Two works: Albeniz, 2; C. P. E. Bach, 2; Bloch, 2; Chausson, 2; Enesco, 3; Faure, 4; Liszt, 4; Mahler, 2; Massenet, 2; *McBride, 2; Rachmaninoff, 5; Roger-Ducasse, 3; Rossini, 2; Rubinstein, 3.

One work: *Achron, 2; Alessandresco, 2; Andrico, 2; Balakireff, 3; *Barber, 2; Bax, 2; *Bilotti, Bizet, Bonporty, Boccherini, Borodin, Bruch, 2; Byrd, *Cadman, 2; *Chasins, 3; Chopin, Corelli, 3; *Dubensky, Dukas, Duparc, Dupuis, Flotow, *Foote, Frescobaldi, *Fuleihan, Gardiner, *Giorni, Glinka, 2; Gluck, 2; Golestan, Gomes, Goossens, 2; Grieg, Hindemith, Hofmann, Humperdinck, Ireland, *James, Kodaly, Lalo, 2; Liadoff, *MacDowell, *Maganini, 2; Malipiero, 2; *Malotte, *Mason, 3; *McDonald, Moussorgsky, Palestrina, *Piston, 2; *Porter, 2; Poulenc, 3; Rameau, *Read, 2; Respighi, 3; Rogalski, 2; Satie, Schoenberg, Shostakovitch, Sinigaglia, 4; Smetana, 4; *Stokowski, *Still, Tailleferre, Tansman, Tartini, *Taylor, 2; Toch, Thomas, Vieuxtemps, Vivaldi, 2; *Wagenaar, Walton, 4; *Weinberg, Weinberger, Wolf, Wolf-Ferrari, 3.

(*) American composer.

Difference in representation from 1936-'37: Wagner, 0; Beethoven, 1; Strauss, R., 4; Brahms, —4; Mozart, —18; Sibelius, 7; Ravel, 4; Tchaikovsky, 2; Mendelssohn, 9; Berlioz, 14; Weber, 1; Strauss, J., 14; Bach,—3; Elgar, 7; Debussy, —4; Delius, 9; Schubert, 5; Haydn, 0; Schumann; 6; Stravinsky, —13.

Difference in representation from ten years ago (1927-'28): Wagner, —33; Beethoven, —16; Brahms, —6; Mozart, —2; Sibelius, 17; Ravel, —6; Tchaikovsky, —8; Mendelssohn, 3; Berlioz, 3; Weber, 8; J. Strauss, 0; Bach, —9; Elgar, 5; Debussy, —12; Delius, 2; Schubert, 3; Haydn, —1; Schumann, 2; Rimsky-Korsakoff, —2; Stravinsky, 7; Saint-Saens, —7; Liszt, —11; Honegger, —10; Vivaldi, —8; Rossini, —11.

A figure not preceded by a minus sign means an increase in representation this season as compared with the one cited above. A zero means an unchanged total.

Number of composers represented, 121. In 1936-'37, 106; in 1935-'36, 112.

Number of Compositions performed, 310. In 1936-'37, 267; in 1935-'36, 285.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
DEC 15 1937

Hofmann Derides 'Temperamental' Fellow Musicians

"Unnecessary" is the term Josef Hofmann applies to the antics of his temperamental fellow musicians.

The world-famed pianist, who will appear tonight with the National Symphony Orchestra at Constitution Hall, has been playing for 50 years and never has walked off the stage in a huff.

"It really shouldn't be done," he said yesterday at the Mayflower. He was referring particularly to Sergei Koussevitzky's recent action in cutting short a concert because of late arrivals.

Hofmann concedes, however, that American audiences have a lot to learn when it comes to arriving at concerts on time. He suggests that music-lovers might wake up 15 minutes earlier the day of a concert, thus leaving themselves more leeway.

This year Hofmann celebrates the golden jubilee of his first performance in the United States. The first of music's "child prodigies," he made his American debut at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York at the age of 10.

One of his favorite compositions is one he has never played. It is Chopin's third concerto, which the composer dedicated to him.

"But Chopin played it so magnificently I've never dared try it myself," Hofmann says.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
MAY 15 1938

Forum Announces 1938-39 Season

Next season the Philadelphia Forum will present a distinguished musical program, including the only Philadelphia appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting; Lawrence Tibbett, baritone; Jussi Bjoerling, the new tenor of the Metropolitan; Kathryn Meisle, leading contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, and Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, in joint recital; Josef Hofmann, pianist, playing two concertos with the Curtis Symphony Orchestra, with Fritz Reiner conducting; Elisabeth Schumann, leading soprano of the Vienna State Opera; the Wagnerian Singers, an extraordinary European ensemble; the Salzburg Trapp Choir, and Robert Casadesus, pianist.

The Forum will also present the first and only appearance of Argentinita, Spanish dancer, and her Andalusian company, and Trudi Schoop and her dancing comedians again in their only Philadelphia performance. The musical events are in addition to a list of noted personalities in political, dramatic, scientific and other fields.

LEADER

Fritz Mahler, who is to be guest conductor of the Pops orchestra at the All-Waqner concert for the Symphony Orchestra pension fund, Sunday, May 22.

PEABODY PLAYHOUSE
Dance Recital
by LETITIA BRUGNANI
AND GROUP
Friday Even'g, May 20, 1938
TICKETS, .55; .85; $1.10

Post & Sun,
May 15/38

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
MAY 15 1938

THE ORCHESTRAS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

WHILE Boston's music lovers have their nightly "Pop" concerts in Symphony Hall, those of New York must content themselves with reminiscence and anticipation, so far as orchestral concerts under private sponsorship are concerned, during the seven weeks between the last regular Carnegie Hall event of this kind and the opening Stadium concert on June 23. The three resident orchestras of the Federal Music Project are, however, pursuing an intensive schedule, and the radio continues to offer a considerable variety of symphonic programs.

With the restoration of four of the six weeks which were taken from the Philharmonic-Symphony schedule two years ago, the total number of concerts given here by large orchestras under private sponsorship shows an increase of fourteen concerts during the season which closed this month, 152 events, as compared with 138 in 1936-'37. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra gave 105 concerts, and also took part in a benefit concert for the Henry Hadley Foundation and in the World's Fair preview concert of May 1. The Philadelphia Orchestra gave its usual ten subscription concerts in Carnegie Hall and an extra benefit program. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, as before, gave ten concerts in Carnegie Hall and five in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The New York Women's Symphony, in its fourth season, gave four concerts. The National Orchestral Association gave six concerts in its Monday night series, and four in its cello concerto series with Emanuel Feuermann as soloist.

The N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra emerged from the National Broadcasting Company's largest studio to give three benefit concerts in Carnegie Hall, two under Arturo Toscanini and one under Artur Rodzinski. Joseph Hofmann's jubilee concert on November 28 and a Spanish Loyalist benefit concert under Leon Barzin on December 12 complete the list. The 1937-'38 total is less than the 171 concerts of 1935-'36, when the Philharmonic-Symphony was in session for thirty weeks, but the activities of the W. P. A. orchestras undoubtedly make this season's total larger even than that of seasons in the 1920's, when there were three resident concert orchestras in active session.

In a reminiscent survey of the orchestral season of 1937-'38, the principal landmark for most of us probably is the return of Mr. Toscanini last December to conduct the new orchestra organized by the National Broadcasting Company, but the record of its first season can better be considered separately after its close in June. Apart from this, a prominent feature of the local orchestral season was its programmatic diversity; the total number of composers represented and of works performed exceeds that of any season since the Philharmonic-Symphony amalgamation in 1928, except for 1929-'30. Three orchestras offered the first three symphonies of Brahms, but otherwise there was little programmatic duplication; Wagner and Beethoven, the most represented composers in the Philharmonic programs, had relatively few performances in the Carnegie Hall concerts of the other orchestras.

Only seven works received five or more performances. Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz" was played seven times and Brahms's second symphony six times. Brahms's first symphony, the Franck symphony, Schumann's fourth symphony, Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and Weber's overture to "Oberon" were played five times each. Ten years ago fourteen works were played more than five times each and the "Meistersinger" prelude was heard fourteen times. If this represents a trend toward more programmatic variety and away from coincidental or competitive concentration of familiar favorites, it is an encouraging sign.

The differences in this season's representation of composers, as compared with 1936-'37, do not seem to represent any particularly significant trends. The heavy loss in Mozart's total can hardly mean anything more than that the conductors happened to give less of his music this season; the falling off in Stravinsky's representation is due to the fact that he did not pay us a return visit. In the comparison with ten years ago the most significant item is probably the increased attention paid to Sibelius, to whose music conductors have been as solicitous in recent years as they were neglectful in the 1920's.

(Continued from page six)

The 1937-'38 Novelties

Thirty-four works, five less than in 1936-'37, were played for the first time in New York. Of these, seventeen were played by the Philharmonic-Symphony; the others were introduced as follows:

By the National Orchestral Association:

Dupuis, *Overture to "Hermann and Dorothea"; Fuleihan, Piano Concerto; Schoenberg, Cello Concerto (after clavicembalo concerto by G. M. Monn); McBride, Fugato on a well known theme; Bilotti, Piano Concerto; Toch, Concerto for cello and chamber orchestra; Giorni, Symphony in D minor.

By the Boston Symphony:

Prokofieff, suite from "Lieutenant Kije" and ballet suite, "Romeo and Juliet"; Sibelius, the Captive Queen.

By the Philadelphia Orchestra:

McBride, Music to a Ballet; Still, Symphony in G minor; Stokowski, (arr.) Two Ancient Liturgical Melodies; Wagenaar, Concerto for flute, harp and cello; McDonald, Symphony No. 4.

By the New York Women's Symphony: James, Song of the Night.

In the Hadley Foundation concert:

Hadley, [illegible]

One asterisk refers to a first performance in this country; two to a first performance anywhere. There were nine world premieres during the last season. The list might also include several new transcriptions of works originally in other musical mediums, such as those of Leopold Stokowski and Lucien Cailliet in the Philadelphian repertoire; first performances in orchestral form, such as those of Schumann's violin concerto and Jacob Weinberg's "Gettysburg Address," and first concert performances of excerpts from operas and ballets.

Twenty-nine works by twenty-eight American composers were played this season, as compared with nineteen works by eighteen composers in 1936-'37 and twenty-one works by the same number of composers in 1935-'36. Twelve American works were played by the Philharmonic-Symphony; the National Orchestral Association and the Philadelphia Orchestra played six each; the Women's Symphony played James's "Song of the Night," which had won its American Composers' prize, and six works by Henry Hadley were played in the Hadley Foundation benefit program.

Few Modernistic Works

As in the case of the Philharmonic's novelties, few of those presented by the other orchestras seemed likely to enter the regular repertoire, although Mr. Wagenaar's concerto for flute, harp and cello aroused more than usual interest, especially in its emphasis upon the special characteristics in tone and style of the three solo instruments. Most of the new works introduced were relatively conservative in style and harmonies. This might be interpreted as indicating an avoidance by conductors of the more radically minded composers here and abroad (with an eye, perhaps, to the susceptibilities of their audiences) or as reflecting a turning away from music of an overtly innovating character on the part of many contemporary creative musicians.

Meanwhile, despite the catholicity of the programs, a second season has passed without offering anything by Anton Burckner in a New York concert by a privately sponsored major orchestra.

Philharmonic Finances

In the annual meeting of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society last week, Marshall Field, its president, announced that the present privately raised maintenance fund should, with careful management, be sufficient to meet the deficits of the next two seasons and possibly part of a third (1940-'41)—assuming, of course, that the attendance remains on its present level. The directors, he added, preferred the plan of raising a large endowment fund to afford the society a permanent financial basis, rather than to continue the present method of raising a maintenance fund every few years, and a campaign for such a fund may be expected at some time before the society reaches its centenary in 1942. In raising this fund, the society will undoubtedly look to its radio listeners as well as to its friends and patrons here.

Sprightly Mozart Varies Pops Fare

B. Trans.
May 16/38

Mozart's Serenade for eight wind instruments (K. 388), which was the exceptional item on last night's Pops program at Symphony Hall, was a happy choice. It is light music, clearly a desideratum for such a concert. Those who, noting the name of Mozart, automatically settle themselves into a mood of "serious" listening, make a sad mistake. For Mozart, like many of his contemporaries and predecessors, wrote great quantities of music designed primarily for entertainment purposes. He would scarcely understand the solemnity with which many a twentieth-century listener approaches such music.

Because the Serenade is entertainment music does not mean that it does not have more robust virtues. These were admirably displayed in last night's beautiful performance by eight of the Boston Symphony wind players under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. Impeccable intonation, splendid ensemble and sensitive phrasing were constantly to be noted. The rough-and-ready style, which inevitably must accompany presentation of many a piece in a daily Pop concert, was happily absent.

For the string section alone Mr. Fiedler selected three Norwegian Melodies, which were also finely presented in appropriate style, naturally much different from that accorded Mozart. The tone had warmth and resonance as well as precision and flexibility. The pieces themselves, of a sentimental cast, were similarly a good choice for a Pops program.

Mozart's "Figaro" Overture opened the concert, heard by the customary large and enthusiastic audience. The principal number was Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. Ravel's "Bolero" and pieces by Rubinstein and Kreisler brought up the rear.

M. S.

The Pops Tonight

Arthur Fiedler will lead the Boston Pops Orchestra in the following program at Symphony Hall this evening:

"Tannhaeuser," Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg .... Wagner
Scherzo from the "Eroica" Symphony. Beethoven
Sandman's Song and Evening Prayer from "Hansel and Gretel". Humperdinck
Seventh Slavonic Dance .... Dvorak
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ...... Liszt
Pavane for a Dead Infanta .... Ravel
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" .. Wagner
"Wine, Woman and Song" Waltzes. Strauss
Deep River .... Arr. by Jacchia
"Up the Street," March .... Morse

Trans. May 19

Pops Prospects

Considerable departure from routine marks the fourth week of the Pops, during which Arthur Fiedler will be assisted by several guest artists and conductors. On Sunday night a performance of excerpts from Wagner's "Die Walkuere" will be given in concert form under the direction of Fritz Mahler, with Margaret Halstead, soprano; Hazel Hayes, contralto; Colin O'Moore, tenor, and Raymond Lutz, baritone, assisting. Monday night will be "Harvard Night," and three guest-conductors, Ernst Hoffman, G. Wallace Woodworth and Leroy Anderson, Harvard alumni, will conduct, with the Harvard Glee Club assisting.

Other features of the week include Wheeler Beckett as guest-conductor in his own First Symphony on Thursday night and Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" on next Saturday night.

Another event on the immediate horizon will be the appearance of Hans Wiener and his Dance Group on Monday and Tuesday, May 30 and 31, in a new ballet by Walter Piston, "The Incredible Flutist."

Recent Phonograph Records

B. Trans May 17/38

By MOSES SMITH

Two Mozart Symphonies in G minor have been issued by Columbia. One is the most familiar of all the symphonies of Mozart. It is played by the London Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham, and the set (Columbia No. 316; three twelve-inch records) may be briefly dismissed because it is so good. It is an altogether unmannered presentation by a conductor who is something of a specialist in the Mozartean style and by an orchestra which, though lacking the virtuoso qualifications of the best American ensembles, is quite adequate to the present purpose and has stylistic excellences as well. Sir Thomas's deliberate tempos will come as a shock to those whom most contemporary performances have "conditioned" to faster pace, but it is the kind of shock which at each repetition yields increasing exhilaration. The recording is satisfactory.

The other G minor, of approximately the same length (Columbia Set No. 323; three 12-inch records), is a product of Mozart's Salzburg days, written in 1773. One is astonished not only by the mastery of the young genius but also by his dramatic fervor in expression. The first movement is prophetic of his later operatic masterpiece, "Don Giovanni," or even of the rougher-voiced Beethoven to come. Even the minuet is not one of your sprightly, namby-pamby affairs, but has considerable force. The last movement, again, is much more dramatic than the usual symphonic movement of Mozart. Some of the excitement, it must be guessed, is a little forced in the reading of Alfred Wallenstein, who here makes his phonograph debut with his Sinfonietta. But aside from this condition (which in the present instance is to be preferred to understatement) and to occasional roughness of tone proceeding therefrom, the performance is good. The recording is exceptional. The Symphony itself, it should be said, has never been previously issued on records.

Sibelius

A little late—but presumably better than never—mention is made of an album of two Sibelius Symphonies (Victor Set M-394; seven 12-inch records). The works in question are the Third and Seventh, both in C major. The Third, which in straightforward presentation by the London Symphony Orchestra under Robert Kajanus, emerges as a magnificent work, has been undeservedly neglected on concert programs in favor of the more familiar symphonies of the same composer. Its suberb advance in style and utterance come almost like another "Eroica" after the Second. The elegiac character of the slow movement provides an additional resemblance. The recording, though made several years ago, is still serviceable.

The Seventh Symphony is played by the B. B. C. Orchestra of London under Serge Koussevitzky. An orchestra which is comparable with the best in America projects the conductor's magnificent conception of the music. The recording is also good. This part of the album has, indeed, only one fault, but it is serious: the recording having been made from a concert-hall performance, the breaks are abrupt and very badly considered.

Other Records

Two twelve-inch records by the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler are timely. One (Victor 12159) contains a characteristic performance of Dvorak's Carneval Overture, leaning a little to the sentimental side in the middle section. The other (Victor 12160) contains brilliant performances, similarly recorded, of pieces from the Pops repertory — "Jalousie" by Gade and the "Ritual Dance of Fire" from de Falla's "Amor brujo."

Finally, there is the latest of the New Music Quarterly Recordings (No. 14), setting forth, on two sides of a twelve-inch record, Edgar Varese's "Octandre," the seven wind instruments and bass being conducted by the ubiquitous Nicolos Slonimsky. Here, in three brief movements, is an exceptionally discordant work — even for these times. It was employed for Hanya Holm's dance project, "Trend," and perhaps served its purpose there. But for straight listening it comes exceedingly hard, and after several hearings I find myself unable to proceed beyond the mere associational stage: Stravinsky, Debussy, Schoenberg, Honegger, the Morse code by radio, the grinding of steel against steel, and so forth.

She Will Play for the Newsboys

B. Trans — May 20/38

MISS PEGGY STUART

Conductor of the Junior League orchestra and composer for the Vincent Club shows, she will be soloist with the Pops orchestra Thursday at a benefit for the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation.

Mozart at the Pops

Monitor — May 1938

An octet of Boston Symphony men presented a Serenade for wind instruments by Mozart (K. No. 388) before a gathering of Simmons College women and their friends, and other people, at Symphony Hall last evening. Two oboes, two clarinets, two bassoons and two French horns, they were the equivalent of a boat crew on the river; and a hard-pulling, well-styled eight they were—Messrs. Speyer, Devergie, Valerio, Mazzeo, Allard, Panenka, Valkenier, and MacDonald, with Mr. Fiedler the steersman.

Wind instrument performance is liable to get out of hearing soon after the start, as a shell speeding in the course is apt to recede from sight. But any ear, even the most casual, could follow the serenaders for the first quarter (Allegro) and an attentive one could easily stay with them for the second (Andante). As for the third (Minuet) and the final (Allegro) they were another matter. The piece, though bearing a light title, was pretty serious, some persons might say, for the Pops, though worth the while of students, everyone would admit. For Mozart in all his tender charm and his mastery of wood and brass tone coloring was there for them to enjoy, especially in the Andante.

A Mozart work, too, opened the occasion—Overture to "Marriage of Figaro"—not to be heard in the opera houses so skillfully executed. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony succeeded the Overture, put on in good B. S. O. manner, notwithstanding a driving tempo from the baton. Ravel's "Bolero," in mid-program, got rather out of hand in respect of volume of sound; or noise, if anyone prefers to say so. The little work can be interpreted so that the listener scarcely realizes, until the end, that it is a study in crescendo—the old illusion of a band approaching from afar. It is a high refinement, truly, of that pleasant device; and accordingly the tapping of the drum should sound, at the beginning, as coming from miles, let us say, away; and at the conclusion, not much nearer than the next town. They tell of Eugene Goossens that soon after making the acquaintance of the "Bolero," he won a wager, whistling its wayward tune from first note to last. Perhaps conductors ought to whistle more, to keep their music from becoming in their imaginations too big and grandiose. W. P. T.

The Arts in Boston

Hazel Hayes

Soloist in the Performance of Excerpts From "Walküre," to Be Given on Wagner Night at the Symphony Hall Pop Concerts, Next Sunday composition, novel color scheme, dramatic mood.

Among pictures which claim attention for appealing qualities are those by Russell West, Prescott Jones, Philip von Saltza, Frank Carson, William Hazleton, Benjamin Katcoff, Leon Hovsepian, Vernon Smith. Among monotypes are attractive contributions from Joseph diGiusto, Gordon Ham, and Fritz Fuglister.

The print and drawing section, less prominent and commanding, contains some notable work. The admirable prints of Lawrence Kupferman add to his repertoire of portraits of houses deftly and feelingly depicted. Samuel Greene shows a special poetic gift in such scenes as "Joppa Flats." John Gregory continues his atmospheric portrayals of Provincetown. D. A.

Complete Pops Programs for the Week

B. Trans May 21/38

An exceptional innovation for the Symphony Hall Pops concerts will be tomorrow night's concert performance of considerable excerpts from "Die Walkuere" by Wagner, with Fritz Mahler as guest conductor and with the assistance of the following soloists: Margaret Halstead, Hazel Hayes, Colin O'More and Raymond Lutz. The performance will begin with the Introduction to the first act and proceed successively through the third scene of this act, the Introduction and the opening scene from the second act, and the Introduction and closing scene of the third act.

Three Harvard men, Ernst Hoffman, G. Wallace Woodworth and Leroy Anderson, will be the guest conductors at the annual Harvard Night on Monday. Wheeler Beckett will be guest conductor of his own First Symphony on Thursday. The programs, including that of tonight and Sunday week, follow in detail:

Tonight

Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" .... Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" . Offenbach
Minuet .... Bolzoni
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ... Sibelius
"La Source," Ballet Suite .... Delibes
Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" .... Mascagni
Overture to "Rienzi" .... Wagner
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill-Bodge
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite .... Grofe
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy" .. Gliere

Sunday Evening, May 22, at 8.30

"DIE WALKUERE"

(Excerpts in Concert Form)

Monday Evening

Harvard Night

Ernst Hoffman, '18, Guest Conductor
"Cruiser Harvard," March ......, Strube
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Three German Dances .... Mozart
Symphony No. 5, "From the New World" .... Dvorak

G. Wallace Woodsworth, '24, Guest Conductor
Music for Freemasons .... Mozart
Soloist, Joseph E. Lautner, '21
Tarantella ...... Randall Thompson, '20
Canon: O Du Eselhafter Martin ... Mozart
Symphony No. 2, finale
Randall Thompson, '20
Choruses from "Yeomen of the Guard"
Sullivan
Soloist, D. P. MacAllester, '38
The Harvard Glee Club

Leroy Anderson, '29, Guest Conductor
Dance of the Buffoons from "Snow Maiden" .... Rimsky-Korsakov
"Vienna Blood," Waltzes .... Strauss
Harvard Fantasy ....Leroy Anderson, '29
Fair Harvard

Tuesday Evening

Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet
Overture, "The Hebrides" ("Fingal's Cave") .... Mendelssohn
Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger" .... Wagner
The Ride of the Valkyries...... Wagner
"Peer Gynt" Suite No. 1 .... Grieg
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker" ... Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites .. Arr. by Sanford
Malaguena .... Lecuona
Anchors Aweigh .... Zimmermann

Wednesday Evening

March, "Second Connecticut" ..... Reeves
Overture to "Light Cavalry" ..... Suppe
Scherzo in G minor from the Octet for Strings .... Mendelssohn
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ... Sibelius
Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" .... Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 .. Beethoven
Austrian Peasant Dances ..... Schoenherr
Bolero .... Ravel
"Estudiantina" Waltzes ...... Waldteufel
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango .... Gade
"Wintergreen for President" .... Gershwin

Thursday Evening

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" ..... Berlioz
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" . Offenbach
Minuet (for Strings) .... Bolzoni
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky

Wheeler Beckett, Guest Conductor
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"
Wagner
Symphony No. 1 in C minor ...... Beckett
"Nigh Froth," Rhapsody ... Peggy Stuart
Fantasia, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill-Bodge
"Up the Street," March .... Morse

Friday Evening

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"
Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Semiramide" .... Rossini
Minuet from "L'Arlesienne" .... Bizet
Soviet Iron Works .... Mossolov
Prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde" .... Wagner
Hora Staccato (Roumanian). Dinicu-Heifetz
"Artists' Life" Waltzes .... Strauss
Sixth Slavonic Dance .... Dvorak
Intermezzo from "Goyescas" .... Granados
March, "On the Mall" .... Goldman

Saturday Evening

Polonaise from "Eugene Onieg'n"
Tchaikovsky
Overture to "The Bartered Bride"
Smetana
Minute Waltz .... Chopin
Ballet Music from "Faust" ...... Gounod
"Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem .. Liszt
Rhapsody in Blue .... Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Girls of Baden" Waltzes .... Komzak
Prayer of Thanksgiving (Old Dutch Hymn) .... Valerius-Kremser
Entrance of the Gladiators .... Fucik

Sunday Evening

Overture to "Russian and Lumdilla"
Glinka
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36
Tchaikovsky
Concerto in F major for Three Pianos and Orchestra .... Mozart
Soloists: Jesus Maria Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard, Arthur Fiedler
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" ... Wagner

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Wagner Night at Pops

The 125th anniversary of the birth of Richard Wagner was notably observed at the Pops in Symphony Hall last night by performance of scenes from "Die Walkuere." The concert was, likewise, a benefit for the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Fritz Mahler was guest conductor. The soloists and the roles they sang were as follows: Hazel Hayes, Sieglinde; Margaret Halstead, Bruennhilde; Colin O'More, Siegmund, and Raymond Lutz, Wotan. All save Mr. O'More, who has appeared with the Boston Symphony here, sang for the first time in Boston.

No such program of Wagner excerpts, with soloists, had ever been given at the Pops in the 56 years of Boston's unique Spring concerts. It was especially fortunate that this page of Pops history was written under the combined circumstances of the Wagner anniversary and the most worthy cause of a pension fund benefit. To the guest artists must go due acknowledgment of the fact that they generously gave their services.

Mr. Mahler selected excerpts from all three acts of the second music-drama in the "Nibelungen Ring"—the stormy Introduction to the first act, and the final scene from that act, beginning with Siegmund's melancholy reflection on the lack of a sword with which to fight Hunding; the orchestral introduction to act 2 and the brief scene between Bruennhilde and Wotan that ends with Bruennhilde's "Ho-yo-to-ho"; the "Ride of the Valkyries" (the Introduction to the third act) and the closing scenes when Wotan kisses away the divinity of the disobedient Bruennhilde, bids her farewell and leaves her slumbering on the rock surrounded by magic fire.

Fritz Mahler's reputation as an operatic conductor had preceded his coming to the United States from Europe. He is a grand-nephew of Gustav Mahler and he looks like pictures of his illustrious relative. Fritz Mahler proved himself a skilled and authoritative Wagner conductor. His readings were precise, clear and vivid. There seemed to be complete understanding between him and the orchestra, not always the case when a guest first makes acquaintance with a body of instrumentalists.

If he subdued Wagner's tumultuous orchestra a little in deference to the relatively light voices of the Siegmund and Sieglinde, that was a considerate and a practical measure. Singing Wagner in an opera house is one thing; when a large orchestra is placed immediately behind and slightly above a vocalist, forced tones are usually required to be heard above the orchestra in certain of Wagner's incandescent pages. Mr. Mahler gave commensurate rein to the players, however, during the introductions to the second and third acts, and in "Wotan's Farewell," where the sonorous bass of Mr. Lutz for the most part came through well.

In point of musicianship, Mr. Lutz carried off the vocal honors. His voice is expressive, ample and soundly produced; his considerable range enables him to sing easefully those trying high notes of Wotan's role. Of even more importance, however, the emotional coloring of his tones, his clear communication of the text, and the breadth of his style indicated excellent training. His dynamic scale is consistent; where Wagner calls for pianissimo (though the orchestra may be playing robustly) Mr. Lutz was laudably content to abide by the score, and he did not force his voice.

Miss Halstead, with her agreeable vocal texture, was satisfactory, though she is not to be reckoned among the heroic Bruennhildes. Miss Hayes sang with gratifying intensity; her clear voice will perhaps gain in the future the volume demanded by Wagner. Mr. O'More, as Siegmund, was adequate. The audience was large and applauded most cordially all concerned in an enjoyable evening. C. W. D.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

Tonight will be the annual Harvard Night at the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall. There will be three guest conductors, each a Harvard graduate who has made his mark in the world of music; also choral numbers by the Harvard Glee Club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. The program:

Ernst Hoffman, '18, Guest Conductor—"Cruiser Harvard," March, Strube: Overture to "Oberon," Weber: Three German Dances, Mozart; Symphony No. 5, "From the New World," Allegro con fuoco, Dvorak;

G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, Guest Conductor—Music for Freemasons, Soloist: Joseph E. Lautner, '21, Mozart; Tarantella, Randall Thompson, '20; Canon: O Du Eselhafter Martin, Mozart; Symphony No. 2, Finale, Randall Thompson, '20; Choruses from the Yeomen of the Guard, Soloist: D. P. MacAllester, '38, Sullivan; the Harvard Glee Club.

Leroy Anderson, '29, Guest Conductor—Dance of the Buffoons, from "Snow Maiden," Rimsky-Korsakov; "Vienna Blood," Waltzes, Strauss; Harvard Fantasy, Leroy Anderson, '29; Fair Harvard.

Recent Phonograph Records

B. Trans – May 17/38

By MOSES SMITH

Two Mozart Symphonies in G minor have been issued by Columbia. One is the most familiar of all the symphonies of Mozart. It is played by the London Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham, and the set (Columbia No. 316; three twelve-inch records) may be briefly dismissed because it is so good. It is an altogether unmannered presentation by a conductor who is something of a specialist in the Mozartean style and by an orchestra which, though lacking the virtuoso qualifications of the best American ensembles, is quite adequate to the present purpose and has stylistic excellences as well. Sir Thomas's deliberate tempos will come as a shock to those whom most contemporary performances have "conditioned" to faster pace, but it is the kind of shock which at each repetition yields increasing exhilaration. The recording is satisfactory.

The other G minor, of approximately the same length (Columbia Set No. 323; three 12-inch records), is a product of Mozart's Salzburg days, written in 1773. One is astonished not only by the mastery of the young genius but also by his dramatic fervor in expression. The first movement is prophetic of his later operatic masterpiece, "Don Giovanni," or even of the rougher-voiced Beethoven to come. Even the minuet is not one of your sprightly, namby-pamby affairs, but has considerable force. The last movement, again, is much more dramatic than the usual symphonic movement of Mozart. Some of the excitement, it must be guessed, is a little forced in the reading of Alfred Wallenstein, who here makes his phonograph debut with his Sinfonietta. But aside from this condition (which in the present instance is to be preferred to understatement) and to occasional roughness of tone proceeding therefrom, the performance is good. The recording is exceptional. The Symphony itself, it should be said, has never been previously issued on records.

Sibelius

A little late—but presumably better than never—mention is made of an album of two Sibelius Symphonies (Victor Set M-394; seven 12-inch records). The works in question are the Third and Seventh, both in C major. The Third, which in straightforward presentation by the London Symphony Orchestra under Robert Kajanus, emerges as a magnificent work, has been undeservedly neglected on concert programs in favor of the more familiar symphonies of the same composer. Its suberb advance in style and utterance come almost like another "Eroica" after the Second. The elegiac character of the slow movement provides an additional resemblance. The recording, though made several years ago, is still serviceable.

The Seventh Symphony is played by the B. B. C. Orchestra of London under Serge Koussevitzky. An orchestra which is comparable with the best in America projects the conductor's magnificent conception of the music. The recording is also good. This part of the album has, indeed, only one fault, but it is serious: the recording having been made from a concert-hall performance, the breaks are abrupt and very badly considered.

Other Records

Two twelve-inch records by the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler are timely. One (Victor 12159) contains a characteristic performance of Dvorak's Carneval Overture, leaning a little to the sentimental side in the middle section. The other (Victor 12160) contains brilliant performances, similarly recorded, of pieces from the Pops repertory — "Jalousie" by Gade and the "Ritual Dance of Fire" from de Falla's "Amor brujo."

Finally, there is the latest of the New Music Quarterly Recordings (No. 14), setting forth, on two sides of a twelve-inch record, Edgar Varese's "Octandre," the seven wind instruments and bass being conducted by the ubiquitous Nicolos Slonimsky. Here, in three brief movements, is an exceptionally discordant work — even for these times. It was employed for Hanya Holm's dance project, "Trend," and perhaps served its purpose there. But for straight listening it comes exceedingly hard, and after several hearings I find myself unable to proceed beyond the mere associational stage: Stravinsky, Debussy, Schoenberg, Honegger, the Morse code by radio, the grinding of steel against steel, and so forth.

She Will Play for the Newsboys

B. Transcript – May 20/38

MISS PEGGY STUART

Conductor of the Junior League orchestra and composer for the Vincent Club shows, she will be soloist with the Pops orchestra Thursday at a benefit for the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation.

Mozart at the Pops

Monitor – May 1938

An octet of Boston Symphony men presented a Serenade for wind instruments by Mozart (K. No. 388) before a gathering of Simmons College women and their friends, and other people, at Symphony Hall last evening. Two oboes, two clarinets, two bassoons and two French horns, they were the equivalent of a boat crew on the river; and a hard-pulling, well-styled eight they were—Messrs. Speyer, Devergie, Valerio, Mazzeo, Allard, Panenka, Valkenier, and MacDonald, with Mr. Fiedler the steersman.

Wind instrument performance is liable to get out of hearing soon after the start, as a shell speeding in the course is apt to recede from sight. But any ear, even the most casual, could follow the serenaders for the first quarter (Allegro) and an attentive one could easily stay with them for the second (Andante). As for the third (Minuet) and the final (Allegro) they were another matter. The piece, though bearing a light title, was pretty serious, some persons might say, for the Pops, though worth the while of students, everyone would admit. For Mozart in all his tender charm and his mastery of wood and brass tone coloring was there for them to enjoy, especially in the Andante.

A Mozart work, too, opened the occasion—Overture to "Marriage of Figaro"—not to be heard in the opera houses so skillfully executed. Beethoven's Fifth Symphony succeeded the Overture, put on in good B. S. O. manner, notwithstanding a driving tempo from the baton. Ravel's "Bolero," in mid-program, got rather out of hand in respect of volume of sound; or noise, if anyone prefers to say so. The little work can be interpreted so that the listener scarcely realizes, until the end, that it is a study in crescendo—the old illusion of a band approaching from afar. It is a high refinement, truly, of that pleasant device; and accordingly the tapping of the drum should sound, at the beginning, as coming from miles, let us say, away; and at the conclusion, not much nearer than the next town. They tell of Eugene Goossens that soon after making the acquaintance of the "Bolero," he won a wager, whistling its wayward tune from first note to last. Perhaps conductors ought to whistle more, to keep their music from becoming in their imaginations too big and grandiose. W. P. T.

The Arts in Boston

Hazel Hayes

Soloist in the Performance of Excerpts From "Walküre," to Be Given on Wagner Night at the Symphony Hall Pop Concerts, Next Sunday

composition, novel color scheme, dramatic mood.

Among pictures which claim attention for appealing qualities are those by Russell West, Prescott Jones, Philip von Saltza, Frank Carson, William Hazleton, Benjamin Katcoff, Leon Hovsepian, Vernon Smith. Among monotypes are attractive contributions from Joseph diGiusto, Gordon Ham, and Fritz Fuglister.

The print and drawing section, less prominent and commanding, contains some notable work. The admirable prints of Lawrence Kupferman add to his repertoire of portraits of houses deftly and feelingly depicted. Samuel Greene shows a special poetic gift in such scenes as "Joppa Flats." John Gregory continues his atmospheric portrayals of Provincetown. D. A.

Complete Pops Programs for the Week

B. Traveler – May 21/38

An exceptional innovation for the Symphony Hall Pops concerts will be tomorrow night's concert performance of considerable excerpts from "Die Walkuere" by Wagner, with Fritz Mahler as guest conductor and with the assistance of the following soloists: Margaret Halstead, Hazel Hayes, Colin O'More and Raymond Lutz. The performance will begin with the Introduction to the first act and proceed successively through the third scene of this act, the Introduction and the opening scene from the second act, and the Introduction and closing scene of the third act.

Three Harvard men, Ernst Hoffman, G. Wallace Woodworth and Leroy Anderson, will be the guest conductors at the annual Harvard Night on Monday. Wheeler Beckett will be guest conductor of his own First Symphony on Thursday. The programs, including that of tonight and Sunday week, follow in detail:

Tonight

Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches"	Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades"	Offenbach
Minuet	Bolzoni
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
"La Source," Ballet Suite	Delibes
Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"	Churchill-Bodge
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon" Suite	Grofe
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"	Gliere

Sunday Evening, May 22, at 8.30

"DIE WALKUERE"

(Excerpts in Concert Form)

Monday Evening

Harvard Night

Ernst Hoffman, '18, Guest Conductor

"Cruiser Harvard," March	Strube
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
Three German Dances	Mozart
Symphony No. 5, "From the New World"	Dvorak

G. Wallace Woodsworth, '24, Guest Conductor

Music for Freemasons	Mozart
Soloist, Joseph E. Lautner, '21
Tarantella	Randall Thompson, '20
Canon: O Du Eselhafter Martin	Mozart
Symphony No. 2, Finale	Randall Thompson, '20
Choruses from "Yeomen of the Guard"	Sullivan
Soloist, D. P. MacAllester, '38
The Harvard Glee Club

Leroy Anderson, '29, Guest Conductor

Dance of the Buffoons from "Snow Maiden"	Rimsky-Korsakov
"Vienna Blood," Waltzes	Strauss
Harvard Fantasy	Leroy Anderson, '29
Fair Harvard

Tuesday Evening

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture, "The Hebrides" ("Fingale's Cave")	Mendelssohn
Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner
The Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
"Peer Gynt" Suite No. 1	Grieg
Ave Maria	Bach-Gounod
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arr. by Sanford
Malaguena	Lecuona
Anchors Aweigh	Zimmermann

Wednesday Evening

March, "Second Connecticut"	Reeves
Overture to "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Scherzo in G minor from the Octet for Strings	Mendelssohn
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches"	Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3	Beethoven
Austrian Peasant Dances	Schoenherr
Bolero	Ravel
"Estudiantina" Waltzes	Waldteufel
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
"Wintergreen for President"	Gershwin

Thursday Evening

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy"	Berlioz
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades"	Offenbach
Minuet (for Strings)	Bolzoni
Marche Slave	Tchaikovsky

Wheeler Beckett, Guest Conductor

Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Symphony No. 1 in C minor	Beckett
"Nigh Froth," Rhapsody	Peggy Stuart
Fantasia, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"	Churchill-Bodge
"Up the Street," March	Morse

Friday Evening

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Overture to "Semiramide"	Rossini
Minuet from "L'Arlesienne"	Bizet
Soviet Iron Works	Mossolov
Prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde"	Wagner
Hora Staccato (Roumanian)	Dinicu-Heifetz
"Artists' Life" Waltzes	Strauss
Sixth Slavonic Dance	Dvorak
Intermezzo from "Goyescas"	Granados
March, "On the Mall"	Goldman

Saturday Evening

Polonaise from "Eugene Onieg'n"	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "The Bartered Bride"	Smetana
Minute Waltz	Chopin
Ballet Music from "Faust"	Gounod
"Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem	Liszt
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Girls of Baden" Waltzes	Komzak
Prayer of Thanksgiving (Old Dutch Hymn)	Valerius-Kremser
Entrance of the Gladiators	Fucik

Sunday Evening

Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla"	Glinka
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36	Tchaikovsky
Concerto in F major for Three Pianos and Orchestra	Mozart
Soloists: Jesus Maria Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard, Arthur Fiedler
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner

Globe

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Wagner Night at Pops

The 125th anniversary of the birth of Richard Wagner was notably observed at the Pops in Symphony Hall last night by performance of scenes from "Die Walkuere." The concert was, likewise, a benefit for the pension fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Fritz Mahler was guest conductor. The soloists and the roles they sang were as follows: Hazel Hayes, Sieglinde; Margaret Halstead, Bruennhilde; Colin O'More, Siegmund, and Raymond Lutz, Wotan. All save Mr. O'More, who has appeared with the Boston Symphony here, sang for the first time in Boston.

No such program of Wagner excerpts, with soloists, had ever been given at the Pops in the 56 years of Boston's unique Spring concerts. It was especially fortunate that this page of Pops history was written under the combined circumstances of the Wagner anniversary and the most worthy cause of a pension fund benefit. To the guest artists must go due acknowledgment of the fact that they generously gave their services.

Mr. Mahler selected excerpts from all three acts of the second music-drama in the "Nibelungen Ring"—the stormy Introduction to the first act, and the final scene from that act, beginning with Siegmund's melancholy reflection on the lack of a sword with which to fight Hunding; the orchestral introduction to act 2 and the brief scene between Bruennhilde and Wotan that ends with Bruennhilde's "Ho-yo-to-ho"; the "Ride of the Valkyries" (the Introduction to the third act) and the closing scenes when Wotan kisses away the divinity of the disobedient Bruennhilde, bids her farewell and leaves her slumbering on the rock surrounded by magic fire.

Fritz Mahler's reputation as an operatic conductor had preceded his coming to the United States from Europe. He is a grand-nephew of Gustav Mahler and he looks like pictures of his illustrious relative. Fritz Mahler proved himself a skilled and authoritative Wagner conductor. His readings were precise, clear and vivid. There seemed to be complete understanding between him and the orchestra, not always the case when a guest first makes acquaintance with a body of instrumentalists.

If he subdued Wagner's tumultuous orchestra a little in deference to the relatively light voices of the Siegmund and Sieglinde, that was a considerate and a practical measure. Singing Wagner in an opera house is one thing; when a large orchestra is placed immediately behind and slightly above a vocalist, forced tones are usually required to be heard above the orchestra in certain of Wagner's incandescent pages. Mr. Mahler gave commensurate rein to the players, however, during the introductions to the second and third acts, and in "Wotan's Farewell," where the sonorous bass of Mr. Lutz for the most part came through well.

In point of musicianship, Mr. Lutz carried off the vocal honors. His voice is expressive, ample and soundly produced; his considerable range enables him to sing easefully those trying high notes of Wotan's role. Of even more importance, however, the emotional coloring of his tones, his clear communication of the text, and the breadth of his style indicated excellent training. His dynamic scale is consistent; where Wagner calls for pianissimo (though the orchestra may be playing robustly) Mr. Lutz was laudably content to abide by the score, and he did not force his voice.

Miss Halstead, with her agreeable vocal texture, was satisfactory, though she is not to be reckoned among the heroic Bruennhildes. Miss Hayes sang with gratifying intensity; her clear voice will perhaps gain in the future the volume demanded by Wagner. Mr. O'More, as Siegmund, was adequate. The audience was large and applauded most cordially all concerned in an enjoyable evening. C. W. D.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

Tonight will be the annual Harvard Night at the Pop concerts in Symphony Hall. There will be three guest conductors, each a Harvard graduate who has made his mark in the world of music; also choral numbers by the Harvard Glee Club, G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor. The program:

Ernst Hoffman, '18, Guest Conductor—"Cruiser Harvard," March, Strube; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Three German Dances, Mozart; Symphony No. 5, "From the New World," Allegro con fuoco, Dvorak;

G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, Guest Conductor—Music for Freemasons, Soloist: Joseph E. Lautner, '21, Mozart; Tarantella, Randall Thompson, '20; Canon: O Du Eselhafter Martin, Mozart; Symphony No. 2, Finale, Randall Thompson, '20; Choruses from the Yeomen of the Guard, Soloist: D. P. MacAllester, '38, Sullivan; the Harvard Glee Club.

Leroy Anderson, '29, Guest Conductor—Dance of the Buffoons, from "Snow Maiden," Rimsky-Korsakov; "Vienna Blood," Waltzes, Strauss; Harvard Fantasy, Leroy Anderson, '29; Fair Harvard.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

B. Globe – May 22/38

Wagner Program for Pension Fund at the Pops Tonight

A concert version of Wagner's music-drama, "Die Walkuere," will be presented at the Pops in Symphony Hall tonight for the benefit of the pension fund of the orchestra. Such a program has never before been heard at a Pop concert. Tonight's performance will also commemorate the 125th anniversary of Richard Wagner's birth.

Fritz Mahler, a European opera conductor of repute, will make his first Boston appearance as guest conductor. He is a nephew of the famous Bohemian conductor and composer, Gustav Mahler. The soloists will include two sopranos—Margaret Halstead of the Metropolitan Opera, and Hazel Hayes from the San Francisco Opera Company; Colin O'More, tenor, who has appeared with the Boston Symphony, and Raymond Lutz, German baritone, who has sung in New York, Philadelphia and other American cities.

This version of "Die Walkuere" will assemble, from the first act, the Introduction, "Siegmund's Narrative" and the duet between Siegmund and Sieglinde; the Introduction to the second act, and the opening scene between Wotan and Bruennhilde; the "Ride of the Valkyries" (Introduction to act three) and the closing scene of "Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music."

Tomorrow will be the annual Harvard Night, when the program will be shared by three guest conductors—Ernst Hoffman, G. Wallace Woodworth and Leroy Anderson.

Wheeler Beckett will be guest conductor Thursday evening, when he will present his own Symphony in C minor and Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" overture. Mr. Beckett was formerly conductor of the Richmond, Va., Symphony Orchestra and has conducted in various cities of Europe and the United States. His Symphony, which will be given first performance here, was played in Chicago in 1937.

Conspicuous among coming events at the Pops will be two appearances, Monday and Tuesday, May 30 and 31, by the Hans Wiener Dance Group in "The Incredible Flutist," a ballet written by Walter Piston of Harvard especially for the occasion.

These concerts begin at 8:30 in the evening. Save for tonight's program, which has been sufficiently detailed, the programs for the week will be as follows:

Tomorrow—Harvard Night. Ernst Hoffman, '18, guest conductor: "Cruiser Harvard," March, Strube; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Three German Dances, Mozart; Symphony No. 5, "From the New World," Dvorak. G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, guest conductor: Music for Freemasons, soloist, Joseph E. Lautner, '21, Mozart; Tarantella, Randell Thompson, '20; Canon, O Du Eselhafter Martin, Mozart; Symphony No. 2, Finale, Randall Thompson, '20; Choruses from the Yeomen of the Guard, soloist, D. P. MacAllester, '38, Sullivan; The Harvard Glee Club; Leroy Anderson, '29, guest conductor: Dance of the Buffoons, from "Snow Maiden," Rimsky-Korsakov; "Vienna Blood," Waltzes, Strauss; Harvard Fantasy, Leroy Anderson, '29; Fair Harvard.

Tuesday—Prelude to "Carmen," Bizet; Overture, "The Hebrides" (Fingal's Cave"), Mendelssohn; Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; "The Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; "Peer Gynt," Suite No. 1, Grieg; "Ave Maria," Bach-Gounod; Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker," Tchaikovsky; Victor Herbert Favorites, arranged by Sanford; Malaguena, Lecuona; Anchors Aweigh, Zimmerman.

Wednesday—March, "Second Connecticut," Reeves; Overture to "Light Cavalry," Suppe; Scherzo in G minor from the Octet for Strings, Mendelssohn; "Finlandia" Symphonic Poem, Sibelius; Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches," Ippolitov-Ivanov; Overture to "Leonore" No. 3, Beethoven; Austrian Peasant Dances, Schonherr; Bolero, Ravel; "Estudiantina" Waltzes, Waldteufel; "Jealousy," Gypsy Tango, Gade; "Wintergreen for President" from "Of Thee I Sing," Gershwin.

Thursday—Hungarian March, "Rakoczy," Berlioz; Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," Offenbach; Minuet (for strings), Bolzoni-Marche Slave, Tchaikovsky; Wheeler Beckett, guest conductor: Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Beckett; "Night Froth," Rhapsody, Peggy Stuart; Fantasia, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Churchill-Bodge; "Up the Street," March, Morse.

Friday—Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or," Rimsky-Korsakov; Overture to "Semiramide," Rossini; Minuet from "L'Arlesienne," Bizet; Soviet Iron Works," Mossolov; Prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner; Hora Staccato (Rumanian), Dinicu-Heifetz; "Artists' Life," Waltzes, Strauss; Sixth Slavonic Dance, Dvorak; Intermezzo from "Goyescas," Granados; March, "On the Mall," Goldman.

Saturday—Polonaise from "Eugene Oniegin," Tchaikovsky; Overture to "The Bartered Bride," Smetana; Minute Waltz, Chopin; Ballet Music from "Faust," Gounod; "Les Preludes," symphonic poem, Liszt; Rhapsody in Blue, soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Gershwin; "Girls of Baden," waltzes, Komzak; Prayer of Thanksgiving (Old Dutch Hymn), Valerius-Kremser; Entrance of the Gladiators, Fucik.

Sunday—Overture to "Russlan and Lumdilla," Glinka; Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36, Tchaikovsky; Concerto in F major for three pianos and orchestra, Mozart; soloists, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard, Arthur Fiedler; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner.

HAZEL HAYES
Soloist at the Pops
→SYMPHONY HALL TONIGHT←

Abridged Concert-Version of "Walkuere" Begins the Week of Concerts at Symphony Hall

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1938

Visitors to the Pop Concerts Next Week

HAZEL HAYES

Who will sing the music of Sieglinde in the concert performance of excerpts from "Die Walkuere" tomorrow night at Pops.

WHEELER BECKETT

Guest-conductor of his own First Symphony in C minor at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening.

MUSIC

B. Her. May 23/38

THE POPS

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The pop concert last night in Symphony Hall was held in honor of the 125th anniversary of the birth of Richard Wagner. The program consisted of excerpts from "Die Walkuere." Fritz Mahler, the nephew of the composer and conductor, Gustav Mahler, was the guest conductor. The soloists were as follows: Hazel Hayes and Margaret Halstead, soprano; Colin O'More, tenor; Raymond Lutz, bass. The concert was given for the orchestra's pension fund and with the generous contribution of the services of the conductor and the soloists.

There is no reason on earth why concert performances of opera should not be given at the Pops, though preferably on a Sunday night when the audience is prone to be both attentive and prompt. The experiment last night appeared to be justified by the enthusiasm and the good attendance. The singing was good, the orchestral playing admirable and Mr. Mahler's direction highly intelligent. Lacking the illusion of the operatic stage it is easy to be captious. But knowing as we do the inadequacies of that stage, apart from the superb singing that emanates from it, we are not at a disadvantage, provided the action and the music are universally unfamiliar.

Artistically the wiser policy would have been to give the first act in its entirety and then whatever time allowed after an intermission from other parts of the music drama. The action of the first act of "Die Walkuere," as everyone knows, is remarkably static and is conducted for the most part in obscurity. The music, some believe, is the finest of Wagner or at least unsurpassed. Consequently the act, with only three singers, seems built for concert performance. Furthermore, your bass who sang Hunding could pinch-hit for Wotan in the "Farewell" music, if necessary!

With more timidity and doubtless with a shrewder box-office sense the program was split last night between the prelude and final scene of Act I, the opening of Act II and the Valkyries' Ride and final scene of Act III. The result was a little confusing. A knowledge of the opera and a willingness to jump about in order to hear the most famous music were obligatory if one was to enjoy the concert to the full. That the storm music was not a good introduction to the sword music and the love of Siegmund and Sieglinde was clearly demonstrated last night. Still it is much to hear the music so well played, and nowadays the public bothers its head very little with the drama and the poetry by which Wagner set so much store.

The singing last night was well matched and of honest competence. That it did not scale the heights to which the recent performances of the Metropolitan and the zeal of the New York press have accustomed us goes without saying. At the least it was a job ably and sympathetically done. Mr. Mahler impressed us as an excellent operatic conductor, and he has, of course, a tremendous reputation to live up to in that respect.

HARVARD NIGHT AT POPS

The annual Harvard Night will be observed at the Pops concert at Symphony Hall tonight at 8:30 o'clock. Three Harvard graduates, all well known musicians, will be guest conductors. Choral numbers also will be presented by the Harvard Glee Club under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth. The program follows:

Ernst Hoffman, '18, guest conductor.
"Cruiser Harvard," march ....Strube
Overture to "Oberon" ....Weber
Three German Dances ....Mozart
Symphony No. 5, "From the New World," allegro con fuoco.......Dvorak
G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, guest conductor.
Music for Freemasons ....Mozart
Soloist: Joseph E. Lautner, '21.
Tarantella ....Randall Thompson, '20
Canon: O Du Eselhafter Martin... Mozart
Symphony No. 2, Finale
Randall Thompson, '20
Choruses from the Yeomen of the Guard
Sullivan
Soloist: D. P. MacAllester, '38.
The Harvard Glee Club.
Leroy Anderson, '29, guest conductor.
Dance of the Buffoons, from "Snow Maiden" ....Rimsky-Korsakov
"Vienna Blood," waltzes ....Strauss
Harvard Fantasy ....Leroy Anderson, '29
Fair Harvard

POPS CONCERT AMBITIOUS ONE

Honors Richard Wagner on 125th Anniversary

Post May 23/38

By WARREN STOREY SMITH

The most pretentious concert in the history of the Pops, that of last night, served to mark the 125th anniversary of the birth of Richard Wagner and to swell the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund. Properly speaking, operatic music, and Wagner's is no exception, belongs in the opera house. But if Wagner in the concert hall is only half himself, in a purely orchestral performance he is even less than that. Therefore, last night he was honored as fitly as might be under the circumstances by a series of excerpts from "Die Walkuere," with four singers to impersonate, respectively, Siegmund, Sieglinde, Breunnhilde and Wotan. Fritz Mahler, a grand nephew of the great Gustav, was guest conductor, making his first appearance in this city.

With the part of Fricka omitted, the excerpts chosen by Mr. Mahler made as effective a resume of the music drama as would have been possible in the time at his disposal. We listeners heard the orchestral storm which ushers in the first act and the scene between the two in love, which concludes it, sung by Colin O'More and Hazel Hayes. After an intermission, long enough to make one wonder why Mr. Mahler had hurried some of his tempi, there came the prelude to Act II and the opening scene, up to the moment of Fricka's entry; and from Act III, the Ride of the Valkyries and the concluding scene between Wotan and Bruennhilde with the inevitable Fire Music. The singers here were Raymond Lutz and Margaret Halstead.

Not quite up to Wagner's numerical specifications, the Pops orchestra was, at that, a somewhat larger aggregation than we Bostonians are likely to encounter in the theatre. Mr. Mahler is plainly a thoroughly capable and efficient operatic conductor, so far as he could be judged outside the opera house. Yet it can hardly be said the performance, even on the orchestral side, attained to any great or sweeping eloquence. Symphonic strings are not apt to have the "bite" proper to operatic strings. But fortunate indeed, would be the opera orchestra which could produce the woodwind playing heard in the scene of Bruennhilde's pleading.

Of the solo singers, Miss Hayes made the most pronounced impression. It would be a pleasure to hear her Sieglinde in the opera house. None of the other three had all the amplitude of voice or, to be colloquial, the degree of punch which their music required, though we were grateful to them for being as good as they were and for making possible this particular tribute

---

B. Her. May 22/38

agon' Coming

Margaret Halstead, soprano, who will sing the role of Bruenhilde in the concert version of selections from "Die Walkure," which will be given at the Pops tonight at Symphony Hall for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund.

'Pins and Nee

Wheeler Beckett, young American composer, whose Symphony No. 1 in C minor will have its first Boston performance at the Pop Concert to be given at Symphony Hall on Thursday evening for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation. He will conduct his own work.

Stage Is Preferred To the Factory By Laborers

What promises to be one of the longest group vacation tours on record and, incidentally, the pleasantest layoff in the books of the ladies' garment industry, is in prospect for two-score members of the cast of "Pins and Needles," labor revue, now at the Shubert.

This cast is recruited from the shops in Manhattan's famous garment district, and its work in this bright theatrical novelty has kept it busy since last December. Present indications are that it will continue indefinitely. Slated to go from here to Chicago, the company has still other bookings in San Francisco, Hollywood and possibly Australia.

"Of course, we are all excited about the trip now," said Millie Weitz, the 21-year-old who sings that provocative number "Nobody Makes a Pass at Me." "But when the tour was first proposed most of the cast didn't want to leave New York. Many of us have never wandered far from home and we were afraid of the road. Now we like it."

Miss Weitz, before her success on the boards, put hems on dresses. The girl has found the stage vastly more fun than her original calling, which she described as "very dreary—with nothing mental about it. She doesn't relish the idea of going back to the shop when, if ever, "Pins and Needles" folds. "Nor," she says "does any one else in the cast—but we're all practical about it. It's a job and you have to work."

Ruth Rubinstein, who got all those nice notices here and in New York for her rendition of the hit songs, "Chain Store Daisy" and "Public Enemy No. 1," similarly has learned that there is a lot more thought involved in being a prima donna than in her previous task of operating a brassiere-making machine.

Ann Brown is the most definitely determined about staying with the footlights. When she is not acting, Miss Brown runs a Merrow machine for the knit goods trade. Miss Brown admitted to a husband and a Philadelphia police record. "The police picked me up in a demonstration during the general strike in knit goods here three years ago. It was somewhere in Kensington," she added, "and I was held in ridiculously high bail for a time and eventually let out."

4th Week of Pops; "Die Walkuere"; Harvard Night

The Pop concerts enter upon their fourth week when a special Pension Fund concert is presented in Symphony Hall tonight. For the first time in Pops history, an opera of Richard Wagner—"Die Walkure"—will be presented, in concert form, this to commemorate the 125th anniversary of the composer's birth, which falls on this date. Fritz Mahler, the eminent operatic conductor, will be the guest conductor of the evening, then making his first appearance in Boston. Fritz Mahler, a nephew of the famous Austrian composer, Gustav Mahler, has acquired a high reputation conducting Wagnerian and other operatic performances in Europe and America. The soloists include the sopranos, Margaret Halstead of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Hazel Hayes of the San Francisco Opera Company, the tenor, Colin O'More, notable in opera and concert, who has appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Raymond Lutz, the baritone—a German operatic singer who has made a reputation in New York, Philadelphia and other American cities. The concert performance of "Die Walkure" will begin with the introduction to the first act, continue with the third scene of this act, including Siegmund's Narrative and the love duet of Siegmund and Sieglinde. From the second act, the introduction and the opening scene between Wotan and Brunnhilde will be played. The introduction to the third act ("The Ride of the Valkyries") will be followed by the entire third scene in which again Wotan and Brunnhilde figure, including Wotan's Farewell, and the Magic Fire Music.

Three guest conductors—Ernst Hoffmann, G. Wallace Woodworth and Leroy Anderson—will divide the program of Harvard Night, on Monday. A guest conductor and composer will be Wheeler Beckett, who will present his own Symphony in C minor at the concert of Thursday. Wheeler Beckett has conducted orchestras in a number of European and American cities. His symphony, performed in Chicago in 1937, is to have its first hearing in Boston.

Another coming event will be the appearance of Hans Wiener and his dance group in two performances (Monday, May 30 and Tuesday, May 31) of a new ballet by Walter Piston, written especially for the occasion—"The Incredible Flutist."

The programs of the week follow:

Monday evening, May 23

HARVARD NIGHT

Ernst Hoffmann, '18, guest conductor.
"Cruiser Harvard," march .... Strube
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Three German Dances .... Mozart.
Symphony No. 5, "From the New World" Dvorak
G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, guest conductor.
Music for Freemasons .... Mozart
Soloist—Joseph E. Lautner, '21.
Tarantella .... Randall Thompson, '20
Canon: O Du Eselhafter Martin.... Mozart
Symphony No. 2, Finale .... Randall Thompson, '20
Choruses from the Yeomen of the Guard Sullivan
Soloist—D. P. MacAllester, '38.
The Harvard Glee Club
Leroy Anderson, '29, guest conductor.
Dance of the Buffoons, from "Snow Maiden" .... Rimsky-Korsakov
"Vienna Blood," waltzes .... Strauss
Harvard Fantasy .... Leroy Anderson, '29
Fair Harvard

Tuesday evening, May 24

Prelude to "Carmen" .... Bizet
Overture, "The Hebrides" ("Fingal's Cave") .... Mendelssohn
Walther's Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" .... Wagner
[illegible] .... Wagner
Ave Maria .... Bach-Gounod
Ballet suite, "Nutcracker" .... Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert favorites .... Arranged by Sanford
Malaguena .... Lecuona
Anchors Aweigh .... Zimmermann

Wednesday Evening, May 25

March, "Second Connecticut" .... Reeves
Overture to "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Scherzo in G minor from the Octet for Strings .... Mendelssohn
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem .... Sibelius
Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches" .... Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Leonore" No. 3 .... Beethoven
Austrian Peasant Dances .... Schonherr
Bolero .... Ravel
"Estudiantina" Waltzes .... Waldteufel
"Jealousk," Gypsy Tango .... Gada
"Wintergreen for President" from "Of Thee I Sing" .... Gershwin

Thursday Evening, May 26

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" .... Berlioz
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" .. Offenbach
Minuet (for strings) .... Bolzoni
Marche Slave .... Tchaikovsky
Wheeler Beckett, Guest Conductor
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner
Symphony No. 1, in C minor .... Beckett
"Night Froth," Rhapsody .... Peggy Stuart
Fantasia, "Snow White and Dwarfs" .... Churchill-Dodge
"Up the Street," March .... Morse

Friday Evening, May 27

Wedding march from "Le [illegible] .... Rimsky-Korsakov Overture to "Semiramide [illegible]

TOLEDO, O.
NEWS-BEE
MAY 16 1938

SARAH JENNIE ANNIS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Annis and a student at Lasell Junior College in Auburndale, Mass., is a member of the college Orphean Club, which presented a concert last Friday evening in Boston Symphony Hall. The club was accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Annis' name has been on the honor roll for the first three quarters this year.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
MAY 13 1938

ANNA KASKAS . . . Bridgeport-born artist in Berkshire Festival.

Kaskas Sings At Berkshire

Former Stenographer Engaged With the Boston for Great Festival.

ANNA Kaskas, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, native of Bridgeport, and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, will appear with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the inaugural of the Berkshire Symphonic festival's new music shed at "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge, Mass.

Miss Kaskas and Miss Vreeland will be two of the four soloists at the opening concert of the fifth annual festival. Appearing also the opening night with the orchestra will be the well known Cecilia Society chorus of Boston. The program will consist of the chorus and chorale from the Bach cantata, "Ein feste burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. At the opening concert the following week, Miss Kaskas will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried."

From stenographer to Metropolitan Opera—that is the spectacular story of Miss Kaskas. Born in Bridgeport of Lithuanian parents she moved to Hartford when a girl with her family. There she studied in the conservatory. To pay for her lessons she found a position as stenographer. Her talent caught the interest of a music lover who financed a trip to Lithuania. There she remained in Kovno for a year after which the Lithuanian government sent her to Milan for two years study.

She returned to America and for four years was soloist in the Catholic Cathedral at Hartford. During this time she made two trips a week to New York driving herself in all kinds of weather in a borrowed car to study with Enrico Rosati, teacher of Gigli, Lauri-Volpi and Rosa Tentoni. She entered the Metropolitan Opera Audition contest the spring before last and was awarded first place over all contestants. Her work won her a contract to appear in leading roles in the Metropolitan's regular winter season. Last spring Miss Kaskas toured with the Metropolitan, was soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under Artur Rodzinski in Honegger's "King David," sang with the Detroit Civic opera and filled Community Concert engagements.

Complete program details of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival may be obtained by writing to the office at Stockbridge, Mass. The membership campaign closes May 15.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
MAY 17 1938

Mrs. Henry Dexter Sharpe will give a tea at her residence on Prospect street tomorrow afternoon for Providence friends of the Boston Symphony.

Those who will pour include Mrs. G. Maurice Congdon and Mrs. Royal Little.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
MAY 14 1938

Music

Second Pop Concert by Rhode Island Concert Orchestra Attended by Good Sized Audience in Infantry Hall.—Governor and Mrs. Quinn and Other State Officials Enjoy Music

The Rhode Island Concert Orchestra of the Federal Music Project gave its second pop concert last night, in Infantry Hall. The audience was numerous, virtually filling all the tables, and the music was good. Edouard Caffier conducted.

Whatever Infantry Hall may lack in decorations and ventilation, it is a fine hall for sound. It is some time since music has ventured to displace the arts of violence in the venerable building, but perhaps the attendance and enthusiasm at last night's concert will encourage the giving of others.

The audience included Governor Robert E. Quinn and Mrs. Quinn, Lieutenant Governor Raymond E. Jordan and Mrs. Jordan, Attorney General John P. Hartigan and Mrs. Hartigan, U.S. Marshal Neale Murphy and Mrs. Murphy, Mayor James E. Dunne, Mrs. Margaret Sullivan, National Democratic Committeewoman; Rev. Arthur H. Chandler, O. P., Dean of Providence College, and Prof. Matthew C. Mitchell, of Brown University.

The music was good, hearty stuff that could be heard readily above conversation, and some of it invited and received the participation of the audience, such as "Sweet Adeline," "Down On the Farm" and others. The "Irish Rhapsody" of Victor Herbert got another hearing, and there was always delightful Strauss.

The applause induced Mr. Caffier to play unlisted items such as "Molly On the Shore" and the "Children's March," by Goldman.

Beer, soft drinks and sandwiches were some of the other ingredients of a very pleasant evening.

The program:

Semper Fidelis .... Sousa
Overture: Poet and Peasant .... von Suppe
Dream of Love (Liebestraum No. 3)— Liszt-Herbert
Irish Rhapsody .... Herbert
The Student Prince—Selection ... Romberg
Old-Timers .... Arr. Lake
The Sunshine of Paradise Alley
Sweet Adeline
The Curse of an Aching Heart
Down on the Farm
Molly O
That's How I Need You
My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon
Tales from the Vienna Woods ...., Strauss
March Slav .... Tschaikowsky

G. Y. L.

A performance of "Aida" by the New England Grand Opera Company will be the next week's most elaborate music event. It will take place Tuesday night in Metropolitan Theatre.

Danilo Sciotti will conduct. The title role will be sung by Mme. Renata Flandina Ruisi of Westerly. Jose de Gaviria will have the part of Radames. Louise Bernhardt of New York wil lsing Amneris. She is a winner of a National Federation of Music Clubs prize.

The chorus is made up of Rhode Island singers who have been rehearsing several months under the direction of Mr. Sciotti.

The second concert of the season for the Pawtucket Men's Glee Club will be given in the auditorium of Pawtucket Y. M. C. A. on Monday night.

George McPhillips, baritone, will give a song recital in the Music Mansion on Wednesday night. He will be accompanied by Christine Gladhill.

Earl Hedberg, violinist, will assist Mr. McPhillips. His accompanist will be Hope Hedberg.

Mr. McPhillips was winner of the first prize in the junior contest of the Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs. He won a superior rating in 1938.

The program:

Widmung .... Franz
Die Rose, Die Lilie, Die Taube, Die Sonne .... Schumann
Sapphische Ode .... Brahms
Mr. McPhillips
La Folia .... Corelli
Mr. Hedberg
Arias—
O Du Mein Holder Abendstern (from "Tannhauser") .... Wagner
Vision Fugitive (from "Herodiade") .... Massenet
La Donna e Mobile (from "Rigoletto") .... Verdi
Mr. McPhillips
Chant .... White
Introduction et Tarentelle .... Sarasate
Mr. Hedberg
Tally-Ho .... Leoni
When I Have Sung My Songs ...... Charles
Calm as the Night .... Bohm
Pilgrim's Song .... Tschaikowsky
Mr. McPhillips

The recent competitive festival of Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs was conducted under the [illegible] system. The following won superior ratings in their age groups: Piano, Joan Sentler, Stephen Wiener, Betty Ortiz, Helen Koufoudakis, Elice [illegible], Mary Mallozzi, John Orr and Elena Rubiano; violin, Shirley and Ralston Read, Julian Mikolajewski and Donald March; voice, [illegible] McPhillips.

The custom of presenting secular song recitals on Sunday evenings in May will be continued by the Mathewson Street Church Quartet with part one of Charles Wakefield Cadman's song cycle, "The Morning of the Year," tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock.

Part two will be sung a week from tomorrow night. The quartet comprises Laura Cave Suddard, soprano; Hester Wright, contralto; George M. Tinker, tenor, and Ray A. Gardiner, bass. The organist and director is Frank E. Streeter.

The Rhode Island Civic Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Wassili Leps, will give a free concert in Wickford high school on Wednesday night.

The program:

Overture and "Poet and Peasant"... Suppe
Waltz, "Artist's Life" .... Strauss
Finale, Symphony No. 1 .... Beethoven
Overture, "Fingal's Cave" ... Mendelssohn
Themes from "Die Fledermaus" .... Strauss
"To a Wild Rose" .... MacDowell
Scotch Poem .... MacDowell
Russian Dance, Trepac .... Tchaikovsky

A similar concert will be given Friday night in Town Hall at Centredale. The program will be the same, except that "The Bee," by Bytovetszki, will be added, and the first movement of the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven will be played instead of the finale of the first.

Music by American composers will be played by the Rhode Island Concert Orchestra of the Federal Music Project in Faunce House on Thursday night. The concert will be under the auspices of the Brown Liberal Club.

Edouard Caffier will conduct compositions by Prof. S. Foster Damon, Hugh F. MacColl and David L. Stackhouse of this city and Harrison Kerr of New York, and Igor Stravinsky. It is a free concert.

The Channing Guild of the First Congregational Church (Unitarian) will present the Brown-Pembroke Orchestra in a pop concert tonight in the parish house, 1 Benevolent street. Prof. Arlan R. Coolidge will conduct. The soloist will be Roland A. Hueston, Jr., clarinetist.

Mendolssohn's "St. Paul" will be sung by the Providence Oratorio Society a week from tomorrow afternoon in Grace Church at 4 o'clock. It will be the last concert of the society's 10th season. William W. DeRoin will conduct. The organist will be Rene Viau.

The soloists will be: Jane DeRoin, soprano; Jean Downie, contralto; William S. Anthony, bass, and Mr. DeRoin, tenor.

Incidental solos will be sung by Stanley Hall, Robert Dahlin and Robert L. Anthony, Jr.

The fifth annual national piano playing tournament of the National Guild of Piano Teachers will take place on May 26. Mrs. Edith Gyllenberg Waxberg is general chairman for the Rhode Island contest.

Eva Tancrell Meunier, soprano, will be soloist with the Rhode Island Civic Symphony Orchestra in Pawtucket senior high school auditorium on Tuesday evening. Dr. Wassili Leps will conduct.

The program:

Egmont Overture .... Beethoven
Artist's Life, waltz .... Strauss
Songs—I Know Your Solitary Griefs, Does the Road Wind Uphill? .. MacColl
St. Francis of Assisi .... Rowlands
Tannhauser Overture .... Wagner
Pleurez, Mes Yeux .... Massenet
Melodies from Die Fledermaus .... Strauss
Nut Cracker Suite .... Tchaikovski

Concert versions of "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" will be presented by the State Chorus and Commonwealth Symphony Orchestra of the Federal Music Project in Taunton high school on Tuesday. A. Buckingham Simson will conduct.

The San Carlo Opera Company will give a week of benefit performances in Boston Opera House beginning Monday, under the auspices of the Forest Hills General Hospital.

The schedule for the week: Monday night, La Traviata; Tuesday, Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci; Wednesday, Madame Butterfly; Thursday matinee, Hansel and Gretel (in English) followed by a one act ballet, "Viennese Life"; with musical arrangement of melodies of Johann Strauss; Thursday night, Rigoletto; Friday, Aida; Saturday matinee, Carmen; Saturday night, Trovatore.

The programs for the six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, will be:

Thursday Evening, Aug. 4, at 8:30

Bach
Chorus from the cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" No. 80
Bach
Chorale from the cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott"
(The audience to join with the chorus in the singing of the second verse).
Beethoven
Symphony No. 9 in D Minor with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125.
Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler, Conductor and Soloists.

Saturday Evening, Aug. 6, at 8:30

Haydn
Symphony in E Flat No. 99 (B. & H. No. 3)
Debussy
"La Mer," Three Symphonic Sketches
Sibelius .. Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 7, at 3:30

Mozart
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Serenade for String Orchestra
Brahms .. Symphony in E Minor No. 4, Op. 98
Copland .... Music for the Theater
Ravel ... "Ma Mère l'Oye" ("Mother Goose")
Five children's pieces
Respighi
Symphonic Poem, "The Pines of Rome"

Thursday Evening, Aug. 11, at 8:30

Wagner .... "Die Walkyrie"
Introduction to Act III, "The Ride of the Valkyries"
Act III, Final Scene
Wagner .... Act III, "Siegfried"
The Wanderer (Wotan)
Erda
Siegfried
Bruennhilde .... Soloists

Saturday Evening, Aug. 13, at 8:30

Beethoven
Symphony No. 6 in F Major, Op. 68, "Pastoral"
Henry Hadley
Andante tranquillo from the Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, Op. 60
Tchaikovsky
Symphony No. 6 in B Minor, "Pathetic," Op. 74

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 14, at 3:30

Schumann
Symphony in B Flat, No. 1, Op. 38
Sibelius
"Tapiola," a Tone Poem for Orchestra
Brahms. Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Op. 73

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

MAY 17 1938

America Just Beginning to Build Its Cathedrals

AMID the picturesque surroundings which inspired Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conduct the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Tanglewood estate, now the property of the Boston Symphony, is situated between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., and a music shed has just been completed to house the concerts. The following editorial on the Berkshire festivals was printed May 2 in The Boston Globe.

In his prologue to "The Scarlet Letter" Hawthorne imagines the scorn of his bleak Puritan ancestors could they have known the calling of their descendant: "A writer of story-books? . . . Why, the degenerate fellow might as well have been a fiddler!"

This morning, nearly 90 years later, members and friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are on their way to the acres in Lenox where Hawthorne lived and wrote. Their errand is to see work in progress and to test acoustics in the new music shed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which is to be held, as annually, next August. In measurement of the distance traveled between the two points—these festivals and the abhorrence of secular music noted in Hawthorne's preface on the Salem Custom House—recall that when the first pipe organ was erected in a New England meeting house at Beverly, it was stigmatized by the righteous as "an ungodly kist o' whistles" (chest of whistles); and that likewise, when the first bass viol (an instrument on which Dr. Koussevitzky is a virtuoso) was brought into a church in New Hampshire to assist the psalmody, scandalized rustics called it "a hog trough."

Symphonic festivals on ground where in 1851 Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" unite music and literature into a pair of binoculars whose historic focus is toward the future of these arts in America. Beethoven, the first composer to earn his living by his pen, died in 1827; within a dozen years afterward the first American to earn his living by writing novels of indubitably high artistic rank was embarked on his labors. His living was not easy, nor did he earn all of it by writing, and his year at Lenox, though prolific mentally, was financially slim pickings. For company he had another American novelist, not then much in esteem, but who now, thanks largely to the late Philip Hale, is coming to be regarded by his fellow-countrymen as having been as great an author as Hawthorne if not a greater. Herman Melville was living close by and working hard over "Moby Dick." This gentle roysterer of the seas was the one man who ever came anywhere near to penetrating Hawthorne's stand-offishness (to call it by no harsher name), perhaps because Melville, too, was fighting the same lonely battle of a novelist fiddling for his livelihood in a Puritan meeting-house—a battle so forlorn that he finally gave it up.

And yet before the 19th century was ended Americans had done creditably in letters. Whitman, Thoreau and Emerson (to name them in their now-assigned order of eminence): let our own dear century match them! What prospect have we of doing so?

The fiddlers and other instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are today among the most admired and respected artists in America. Hardly less useful than the music they make is the disquieting surmise which their art now presses in upon a once self-complacent mercantocracy, the surmise that these musical artists may be much more valuable citizens than those who have hitherto been accustomed to consider themselves some pumpkins.

What, then, is to be the future of America in music? Good beginnings are being made. The gains in general diffusion of musical knowledge and taste even since 1920 are startling. As against these, the habit of passive listening fostered by radio and phonograph instead of active music-making by amateurs in their own homes is a nip-and-tuck contest not yet decided; but music schools and school music are sewing crops of young players, while academic choral societies are filling the land with young men and women who, in order to be completely happy, must sing. There seems reason to hope that as 19th century America did unexpectedly well in letters, the art in which 20th century America excels may be music.

Cathedrals were built in an age of violence. When the murderous feuds over property between modern nations are remembered only with loathing, the works of artists will be cherished with grateful reverence. America is only just beginning to build its cathedrals. The Berkshire Symphonic Festivals may be one of them.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

DALLAS, TEX.
JOURNAL

MAY 17 1938

Koussevitzky Discusses Musical Interpretation

Music is the recovered word of true feeling, liberated from the banality, hypocrisy and cruelty of life. Thus runs the definition given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in explaining the significance of music in the contemporary world and the current trend toward individualism in its delivery.

Discussing his art recently before the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, in Boston, Dr. Koussevitzky made pertinent observations upon the art of musical interpretation, pointing out its analogous situation with poetry. Poetry is silent music and music is the singing voice of poetry, he declared, and expressed delight at the progressive attitude toward the execution of musical notes. A dozen different meanings have been read into the lyrical rhymes of Shelley and Keats, and every new variation has been considered legitimate. No such freedom, until a few years ago, has been tolerated in the music world. A vivace indication meant sprightly movement, whether the conductor could pull himself out of lethargy or not.

Berlioz, Mendelssohn and Wagner, who appeared about the same time as leading conductors of their epoch, fathered the new school of conductor-interpreters. Impatient with the indolent technique of even the best masters, they had the courage to denounce careless "time beaters" and to demand more polished, more sensitive interpretation. Wagner and Mendelssohn created a real revolution in the sphere of conducting, said the Boston maestro. They no longer "beat time;" they built up the musical phrase. The geniuses of Wagner and Mendelssohn were totally opposite, but each exploited his own to the limit. Wagner was essentially romantic; Mendelssohn essentially constructive. And either system would be technically correct.

In stating his case that musical performers have a right to interpret compositions freely, Dr. Koussevitzky related an experience with Jean Sibelius. "When I studied his Fourth Symphony for a performance here, I found that the tempo of the last ninety-eight bars of the scherzo was marked twice as slow as the preceding tempo—and that, I could neither feel nor understand. I write to Sibelieus asking for an explanation, thinking that it was a possible misprint and saying I did not feel that tempo. And Sibelius answered: 'The right tempo is the one that the artist feels.'"

With this from the outstanding living composer, small wonder that Dr. Koussevitzky made the following arbitrary claim: "When the artist-interpreter is abole to perceive the inner meaning, the central line of a composition, he will find in himself the right and illuminating emotion to perform it. A perfect interpretation may have any number of aspects, equally faithful to the score of the composer."

Concluding with a resume of the place of music in modern living, the conductor denied that musical life in America develops only because of America's wealth. He insisted upon a definite need for music as an outlet for deepest emotional expression. —G. C.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

MAY 18 1938

Berkshire Festival Membership Increases For Summer Concerts

Stockbridge, Mass., May 18 (AP).—Two and a half months before Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will open the fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood near here, the Festival's preliminary membership campaign has closed with an increase of 25 per cent over last summer.

The subscription campaign opening today finds a backlog of 2,200 members already secured. Last summer at this time 100 boxes had been sold; this year the number is 130. Members come from all sections of the United States, and even from Canada, according to George Edman of the Festival board.

Work on the new fan-shaped "music shed" at Tanglewood is a month ahead of schedule. It will be inaugurated August 4 with a concert which includes Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, for which the St. Cecilia Chorus will come to the Berkshires from Boston. Seating capacity will be more than 5,000.

Among the patrons are Norman Hezekiah Davis, Albert Spalding, Miss Mabel Choate, Sidney Howard and Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice.

COLUMBUS, O.
DISPATCH

MAY 19 1938

ANSWERS to QUESTIONS

By Frederic J. Haskin

Q. When is the Berkshire Music Festival?—C. H. G.

A. The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held the first two week-ends in August at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra and the New Music Shed or auditorium seating 5000 will be inaugurated.

NE

38 certs

ternoon

The annual series of Sunday afternoon concerts by the South Mountain Quartet at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, Mass., will begin on July 10 and continue through the summer. On the two week ends of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Lenox, the South Mountain concerts will be held on Friday afternoons, August 5 and 12, instead of the following Sundays, to avoid conflicting with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts. The members of the quartet are Willem Willeke, cello; Kathleen Parlow and Conrad Ideler, violins, and Conrad Held, viola.

The concerts were started by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge twenty years ago. The South Mountain Association, organized to co-operate in financing the series, will welcome donations. Its officers are Charles W. Power, Pittsfield, president; Samuel G. Colt, Dr. George S. Reynolds and Henry Hudson Kitson, vice-presidents; James D. Colt 2d, treasurer, and William A. Whittlesey, secretary.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 21 1938

Four Musicians Of Note to Join School's Board

Four outstanding musicians have accepted places on the advistory board of the Hartford School of Music, it was announced at the annual meeting of the board of incorporators at the school Friday afternoon.

They are Mlle. Nadia Boulanger of Paris, considered one of the greatest teachers of music in the world today; Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony; Albert Stoessel, head of the orchestral department of the Juillard School of Music; and Leon Barzin, musical director and conductor of the National Orchestral Association in New York.

Goodwin Re-elected

Francis Goodwin was re-elected president of the board of incorporators with Mrs. Edward H. Little, vicepresident; Mrs. Berkeley Cox, secretary, and Clement Scott, treasurer.

The board also includes Mrs. Joseph W. Alsop, Thomas L. Archibald, A. E. Austin Jr., Miss Eleanor L. Brewster, Mrs. George W. Cheney, Mrs. Kenneth Collins, Mrs. Ansel G. Cook, Mrs. L. M. Dawson, Mrs. Stanley Edwards, Mrs. Wellington Elmer, Mrs. Wiliam J. Foote, Jo C. Hawthorne.

Miss Frances H. Johnson, Miss Mabel Johnson, Mrs. Wilmarth S. Lewis, Mrs. Robert Ransom, Stanley Rood, Walter K. Schwinn, Mrs. Chester Seymour, Arthur L. Shipman Jr., Dr. David N. Shulman, Miss Viola Vanderbeek, Mrs. Curtis H. Veeder, Mrs. H. K. W. Welch, Stillman F. Westbrook, Mrs. Thacher W. Worthen.

Faculty Named

The faculty for next year was named as follows: Paul Vellucci, director; Elizabeth Y. Hewitt, assistant to the director; Elizabeth Rommell, secretary.

Piano, Mr. Vellucci, Madeline Buell, Marie Porter, Doris Gibson; violin, Harold Berkley, Robert Doellner, Golda Shour; cello, Charles Krane, Doris Gibson, Sidney Rubinstein; voice, Laura Tappen Safford.

Oboe, Alfred Laubin; clarinet, Sebastiano Cassarino; French horn, Herbert Holtz; theory and harmony, Mr. Doellner and Mr. Vellucci; musicianship, Miss Porter; senior orchestra, Mr. Berkley, conductor; junior orchestra, Mr. Krane, conductor; senior and junior piano ensemble, Mr. Vellucci, referee.

A short musical program followed the meeting. Those taking part were Charlotte Rosen, piano; Isabelle Press, voice; and Donald Radding, violin. Tea was served

---

'Die Walkure' In Concert At Pops

May 22

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

FOR the first time in the history of the Pops a concertized version of a Wagnerian opera will be performed this evening.

Fritz Mahler, nephew of the illustrious Gustav Mahler, will conduct. The opera is "Die Walkure," and the occasion celebrates the 125th anniversary of the death of Wagner—at the same time benefiting the orchestra's Pension Fund.

Soloists will include sopranos Margaret Halstead, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Hazel Hayes of the San Francisco Opera Company. The tenor announced is Colin O'More, who has appeared previously with the Boston Symphony Orchestra,—the baritone, Raymond Lutz, an operatic singer native to Germany.

N Y Times
May 22 38

The inauguration of the new music shed of the Berkshire Music Festival will be one in which the audience will participate with its own music-making. At the first concert on Aug. 4, before the Beethoven Ninth symphony is performed, it will be invited to join the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second verse of the Bach chorale, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott."

That audience, it appears from present indications, will be a large one, for the festival reports a membership of 1,300 from many States of the Union, with 127 boxes gone.

The annual concert of the Boston Symphony "Pops" for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation Summer health camp will take place on Thursday, with Arthur Fiedler at his regular place on the podium. As is customary, "The Boston Blast," well known in Boston's journalistic circles, will be "hawked" during the intermission of the concert by debutantes and Harvard undergraduates.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 22 1938

The inauguration of the new music shed of the Berkshire Music Festival will be one in which the audience will participate with its own music-making. At the first concert on Aug. 4, before the Beethoven Ninth symphony is performed, it will be invited to join the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second verse of the Bach chorale, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott."

That audience, it appears from present indications, will be a large one, for the festival reports a membership of 1,300 from many States of the Union, with 127 boxes gone.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

MAY 25 1938

Visiting Orchestras Give Fine Concerts

Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., president of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Assn., announces plans for the 23rd season of visiting orchestra concerts. A series of five concerts will be given at Syria Mosque by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor. The opening concerts will bring the Philadelphia Orchestra for a pair of concerts, Nov. 5 and 6.

The Boston Symphony will also come for a pair on Dec. 10 and 11. The fifth concert will bring a return by the Philadelphia Orchestra, under Mr. Ormandy, on April 18.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

MAY 17 1938

America Just Beginning to Build Its Cathedrals

AMID the picturesque surroundings which inspired Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales," the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conduct the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Tanglewood estate, now the property of the Boston Symphony, is situated between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., and a music shed has just been completed to house the concerts. The following editorial on the Berkshire festivals was printed May 2 in The Boston Globe.

In his prologue to "The Scarlet Letter" Hawthorne imagines the scorn of his bleak Puritan ancestors could they have known the calling of their descendant: "A writer of story-books? . . . Why, the degenerate fellow might as well have been a fiddler!"

This morning, nearly 90 years later, members and friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are on their way to the acres in Lenox where Hawthorne lived and wrote. Their errand is to see work in progress and to test acoustics in the new music shed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which is to be held, as annually, next August. In measurement of the distance traveled between the two points—these festivals and the abhorrence of secular music noted in Hawthorne's preface on the Salem Custom House—recall that when the first pipe organ was erected in a New England meeting house at Beverly, it was stigmatized by the righteous as "an ungodly kist o' whistles" (chest of whistles); and that likewise, when the first bass viol (an instrument on which Dr. Koussevitzky is a virtuoso) was brought into a church in New Hampshire to assist the psalmody, scandalized rustics called it "a hog trough."

Symphonic festivals on ground where in 1851 Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" unite music and literature into a pair of binoculars whose historic focus is toward the future of these arts in America. Beethoven, the first composer to earn his living by his pen, died in 1827; within a dozen years afterward the first American to earn his living by writing novels of indubitably high artistic rank was embarked on his labors. His living was not easy, nor did he earn all of it by writing, and his year at Lenox, though prolific mentally, was financially slim pickings. For company he had another American novelist, not then much in esteem, but who now, thanks largely to the late Philip Hale, is coming to be regarded by his fellow-countrymen as having been as great an author as Hawthorne if not a greater. Herman Melville was living close by and working hard over "Moby Dick." This gentle roysterer of the seas was the one man who ever came anywhere near to penetrating Hawthorne's stand-offishness (to call it by no harsher name), perhaps because Melville, too, was fighting the same lonely battle of a novelist fiddling for his livelihood in a Puritan meeting-house—a battle so forlorn that he finally gave it up.

And yet before the 19th century was ended Americans had done creditably in letters. Whitman, Thoreau and Emerson (to name them in their now-assigned order of eminence): let our own dear century match them! What prospect have we of doing so?

The fiddlers and other instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are today among the most admired and respected artists in America. Hardly less useful than the music they make is the disquieting surmise which their art now presses in upon a once self-complacent mercantocracy, the surmise that these musical artists may be much more valuable citizens than those who have hitherto been accustomed to consider themselves some pumpkins.

What, then, is to be the future of America in music? Good beginnings are being made. The gains in general diffusion of musical knowledge and taste even since 1920 are startling. As against these, the habit of passive listening fostered by radio and phonograph instead of active music-making by amateurs in their own homes is a nip-and-tuck contest not yet decided; but music schools and school music are sowing crops of young players, while academic choral societies are filling the land with young men and women who, in order to be completely happy, must sing. There seems reason to hope that as 19th century America did unexpectedly well in letters, the art in which 20th century America excels may be music.

Cathedrals were built in an age of violence. When the murderous feuds over property between modern nations are remembered only with loathing, the works of artists will be cherished with grateful reverence. America is only just beginning to build its cathedrals. The Berkshire Symphonic Festivals may be one of them.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

DALLAS, TEX.
JOURNAL

MAY 17 1938

Koussevitzky Discusses Musical Interpretation

Music is the recovered word of true feeling, liberated from the banality, hypocrisy and cruelty of life. Thus runs the definition given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in explaining the significance of music in the contemporary world and the current trend toward individualism in its delivery.

Discussing his art recently before the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, in Boston, Dr. Koussevitzky made pertinent observations upon the art of musical interpretation, pointing out its analogous situation with poetry. Poetry is silent music and music is the singing voice of poetry, he declared, and expressed delight at the progressive attitude toward the execution of musical notes. A dozen different meanings have been read into the lyrical rhymes of Shelley and Keats, and every new variation has been considered legitimate. No such freedom, until a few years ago, has been tolerated in the music world. A vivace indication meant sprightly movement, whether the conductor could pull himself out of lethargy or not.

Berlioz, Mendelssohn and Wagner, who appeared about the same time as leading conductors of their epoch, fathered the new school of conductor-interpreters. Impatient with the indolent technique of even the best masters, they had the courage to denounce careless "time beaters" and to demand more polished, more sensitive interpretation. Wagner and Mendelssohn created a real revolution in the sphere of conducting, said the Boston maestro. They no longer "beat time;" they built up the musical phrase. The geniuses of Wagner and Mendelssohn were totally opposite, but each exploited his own to the limit. Wagner was essentially romantic; Mendelssohn essentially constructive. And either system would be technically correct.

In stating his case that musical performers have a right to interpret compositions freely, Dr. Koussevitzky related an experience with Jean Sibelius. "When I studied his Fourth Symphony for a performance here, I found that the tempo of the last ninety-eight bars of the scherzo was marked twice as slow as the preceding tempo—and that, I could neither feel nor understand. I write to Sibelieus asking for an explanation, thinking that it was a possible misprint and saying I did not feel that tempo. And Sibelius answered: 'The right tempo is the one that the artist feels.' "

With this from the outstanding living composer, small wonder that Dr. Koussevitzky made the following arbitrary claim: "When the artist-interpreter is abole to perceive the inner meaning, the central line of a composition, he will find in himself the right and illuminating emotion to perform it. A perfect interpretation may have any number of aspects, equally faithful to the score of the composer."

Concluding with a resume of the place of music in modern living, the conductor denied that musical life in America develops only because of America's wealth. He insisted upon a definite need for music as an outlet for deepest emotional expression. —G. C.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

MAY 18 1938

Berkshire Festival Membership Increases For Summer Concerts

Stockbridge, Mass., May 18 (AP).—Two and a half months before Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will open the fifth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood near here, the Festival's preliminary membership campaign has closed with an increase of 25 per cent over last summer.

The subscription campaign opening today finds a backlog of 2,200 members already secured. Last summer at this time 100 boxes had been sold; this year the number is 130. Members come from all sections of the United States, and even from Canada, according to George Edman of the Festival board.

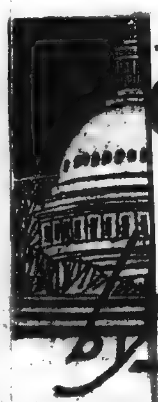
Work on the new fan-shaped "music shed" at Tanglewood is a month ahead of schedule. It will be inaugurated August 4 with a concert which includes Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, for which the St. Cecilia Chorus will come to the Berkshires from Boston. Seating capacity will be more than 5,000.

Among the patrons are Norman Hezekiah Davis, Albert Spalding, Miss Mabel Choate, Sidney Howard and Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice.

COLUMBUS, O.
DISPATCH

MAY 19 1938

14—B



Owners Ordere
To Move Fe

Claim Traffic Retarde
Long-High Street

Q. When is the Berkshire Music Festival?—C. H. G.

A. The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held the first two week-ends in August at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra and the New Music Shed or auditorium seating 5000 will be inaugurated.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 21 1938

Four Musicians Of Note to Join School's Board

Four outstanding musicians have accepted places on the advistory board of the Hartford School of Music, it was announced at the annual meeting of the board of incorporators at the school Friday afternoon.

They are Mlle. Nadia Boulanger of Paris, considered one of the greatest teachers of music in the world today; Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony; Albert Stoessel, head of the orchestral department of the Juillard School of Music; and Leon Barzin, musical director and conductor of the National Orchestral Association in New York.

Goodwin Re-elected

Francis Goodwin was re-elected president of the board of incorporators with Mrs. Edward H. Little, vicepresident; Mrs. Berkeley Cox, secretary, and Clement Scott, treasurer.

The board also includes Mrs. Joseph W. Alsop, Thomas L. Archibald, A. E. Austin Jr., Miss Eleanor L. Brewster, Mrs. George W. Cheney, Mrs. Kenneth Collins, Mrs. Ansel G. Cook, Mrs. L. M. Dawson, Mrs. Stanley Edwards, Mrs. Wellington Elmer, Mrs. Wiliam J. Foote, Jo C. Hawthorne.

Miss Frances H. Johnson, Miss Mabel Johnson, Mrs. Wilmarth S. Lewis, Mrs. Robert Ransom, Stanley Rood, Walter K. Schwinn, Mrs. Chester Seymour, Arthur L. Shipman Jr., Dr. David N. Shulman, Miss Viola Vanderbeek, Mrs. Curtis H. Veeder, Mrs. H. K. W. Welch, Stillman F. Westbrook, Mrs. Thacher W. Worthen.

Faculty Named

The faculty for next year was named as follows: Paul Vellucci, director; Elizabeth Y. Hewitt, assistant to the director; Elizabeth Rommell, secretary.

Piano, Mr. Vellucci, Madeline Buell, Marie Porter, Doris Gibson; violin, Harold Berkley, Robert Doellner, Golda Shour; cello, Charles Krane, Doris Gibson, Sidney Rubinstein; voice, Laura Tappen Safford.

Oboe, Alfred Laubin; clarinet, Sebastiano Cassarino; French horn, Herbert Holtz; theory and harmony, Mr. Doellner and Mr. Vellucci; musicianship, Miss Porter; senior orchestra, Mr. Berkley, conductor; junior orchestra, Mr. Krane, conductor; senior and junior piano ensemble, Mr. Vellucci, referee.

A short musical program followed the meeting. Those taking part were Charlotte Rosen, piano; Isabelle Press, voice; and Donald Radding, violin. Tea was served to the board and faculty.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

MAY 20 1938

[illegible]th Mountain Concerts

[illegible]artet to Begin Sunday Afternoon Series on July 10

The annual series of Sunday afternoon concerts by the South Mountain Quartet at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, Mass., will begin on July 10 and continue through the summer. On the two week ends of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at Lenox, the South Mountain concerts will be held on Friday afternoons, August 5 and 12, instead of the following Sundays, to avoid conflicting with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts. The members of the quartet are Willem Willeke, cello; Kathleen Parlow and Conrad Ideler, violins, and Conrad Held, viola.

The concerts were started by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge twenty years ago. The South Mountain Association, organized to co-operate in financing the series, will welcome donations. Its officers are Charles W. Power, Pittsfield, president; Samuel G. Colt, Dr. George S. Reynolds and Henry Hudson Kitson, vice-presidents; James D. Colt 2d, treasurer, and William A. Whittlesey, secretary.

55

'Die Walkure' In Concert At Pops

adv May 22

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

FOR the first time in the history of the Pops a concertized version of a Wagnerian opera will be performed this evening.

Fritz Mahler, nephew of the illustrious Gustav Mahler, will conduct. The opera is "Die Walkure," and the occasion celebrates the 125th anniversary of the death of Wagner—at the same time benefiting the orchestra's Pension Fund.

Soloists will include sopranos Margaret Halstead, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Hazel Hayes of the San Francisco Opera Company. The tenor announced is Colin O'More, who has appeared previously with the Boston Symphony Orchestra,—the baritone, Raymond Lutz, an operatic singer native to Germany.

N Y Times May 22/38

The inauguration of the new music shed of the Berkshire Music Festival will be one in which the audience will participate with its own music-making. At the first concert on Aug. 4, before the Beethoven Ninth symphony is performed, it will be invited to join the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second verse of the Bach chorale, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott."

That audience, it appears from present indications, will be a large one, for the festival reports a membership of 1,300 from many States of the Union, with 127 boxes gone.

The annual concert of the Boston Symphony "Pops" for the benefit of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation Summer health camp will take place on Thursday, with Arthur Fiedler at his regular place on the podium. As is customary, "The Boston Blast," well known in Boston's journalistic circles, will be "hawked" during the intermission of the concert by debutantes and Harvard undergraduates.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 22 1938

The inauguration of the new music shed of the Berkshire Music Festival will be one in which the audience will participate with its own music-making. At the first concert on Aug. 4, before the Beethoven Ninth symphony is performed, it will be invited to join the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second verse of the Bach chorale, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott."

That audience, it appears from present indications, will be a large one, for the festival reports a membership of 1,300 from many States of the Union, with 127 boxes gone.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

MAY 25 1938

Visiting Orchestras Give Fine Concerts

Mrs. William Thaw, Jr., president of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Assn., announces plans for the 23rd season of visiting orchestra concerts. A series of five concerts will be given at Syria Mosque by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor. The opening concerts will bring the Philadelphia Orchestra for a pair of concerts, Nov. 5 and 6.

The Boston Symphony will also come for a pair on Dec. 10 and 11. The fifth concert will bring a return by the Philadelphia Orchestra, under Mr. Ormandy, on April 18.

56

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 19 1938

A TEA FOR FRIENDS OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

Mrs. Henry Dexter Sharpe Gave a Tea at Her Residence on Prospect Street Yesterday for Providence Friends of the Boston Symphony. The Hostess Is Shown (Above Left) Chatting in the Garden with Mrs. Arthur M. Allen and Mr. Edward A. Taft, Treasurer of the Boston Symphony. Talking of Things Musical Over Their Teacups (Below) Are Mr. John H. Cady and Mrs. Henry C. Hart, Sr.

Pops Soloist

aymond Lutz, baritone, who sings e role of Wotan in the concert ersion of "Die Walkure" tomorrow vening in Symphony Hall. Fritz ahler, noted operatic conductor, ill wield the baton at this special pension fund concert.

'Die Waukure' at Pops Tomorrow

Th Pop concerts enter upon their fourth week when a special Pension Fund concert is presented in Symphony hall tomorrow night. For the first time in Pops history, an opera of Richard Wagner, "Die Walkure," will be presented, in concert form, this to commemorate the 125th anniversary of the composer's birth, which falls on this date. Fritz Mahler, the eminent operatic conductor, will be guest conductor of the evening, then making his first appearance in Boston. Fritz Mahler, a nephew of the famous Austrian composer, Gustav Mahler, has acquired a high reputation conducting Wagnerian and other operatic performances in Europe and America. The soloists include the sopranos Margaret Halstead of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Hazel Hayes of tht San Francisco Opera Company; the tenor, Colin O'More, notable in opera and concert, who has appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Raymond Lutz, the baritone—a German operatic singer who has made a reputation in New York, Philadelphia, and other American cities. The concert performance of "Die Walkure" will begin with the Introduction to the First Act, continue with the Third scene of this act, including Siegmund's Narrative and the Love Duet of Siegmund and Sieglinde. From the second act, the introduction and the opening scene between Wotan and Brunnhilde will be played. The introduction to the third act ("The Ride of the Valkyries") will be followed by the entire third scene in which again Wotan and Brunnhilde figure, including Wotan's Farewell, and the Magic Fire Music.

The program for tonight follows:

Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches"	Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades"	Offenbach
Minuet	Bolzoni
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
"La Source," Ballet Suite	Delibes
Intermezzo from "cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"	Churchill-Bodge
"On the Trail," from the "Grand Canyon Suite	Grofe
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"	Gliere

B. Trav. May 21/38

Paderewski for Fine Arts Theater

The long awaited first and only screen appearance of the world's greatest pianist, Ignace Jan Paderewski, is scheduled to open at the Fine Arts Theater this coming Wednesday. "Moonlight Sonata" is the title of this English production with a supporting cast of Marie Temperest, Charles Farrell, and a newcomer, Barbara Greene.

The plot tells the influence of Paderewski's sublime music; but it is his playing in the film that is of paramount importance from advance reports.

It is a strange coincidence that

Swing and 'S ow White' at Pops Opening

Monitor — May 5/38

The combined influences of Benny Goodman, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," and Ray Scott descended upon Symphony Hall last night as Arthur Fiedler and his musicians opened the fifty-third season of the Pop Concerts. Mr. Goodman is by now no stranger to these classic surroundings. After last Sunday's concert he is a formidable figure at least at the box office.

The Goodman influence was felt obliquely in the first performance of an amusing satirical number called "Swing Stuff," by Robert McBride, whose "Fugato on a Well-Known Theme" ("There she goes There she goes, All dressed up in her Sunday clothes") was introduced to Pops audiences last year. Mr. McBride expanded "Swing Stuff" from his composition for piano and clarinet, "Design for a Killer-Diller." The program notes innocently define a "killer-diller" as a clarinetist. Actually, the word means an excessively violent and well-liked swing number, one that "sends" the "jitterbugs," "cats," "alligators," et al. Aside from the clink of glasses and the buzz of chatter, last night's Symphony audience was a model of restraint.

Which does not by any means bespeak the failure of "Swing Stuff." It is a clever bit of jazz writing, but so much more intricate and richly scored than any swing band ever plays that it misses the mark slightly as satire on "swing" music. The swing band, after all, is composed of drums, a piano, four brasses, four reeds, a string bass, guitar or banjo. The insistency of rhythms are its outstanding characteristic; while cleverly conceived, the rhythms of "Swing Stuff" seemed involved rather than insistent. Manuel Valerio played in a masterful manner the clarinet solo, which was fast, furious and sounded extremely difficult.

Mr. Fiedler's program which was warmly applauded by the large audience, included the Georgian March from the "Caucasian Sketches," by Ippolitov-Ivanov, Grieg's "Sring" (for string orchestra), "Joyeuse Marche," by Chabrier, waltzes by Josef Strauss, the "1812" Overture, and Kodály's "Dances of Galanta."

The "Snow White" fantasia, arranged by Peter Bodge, will probably become a favorite of the Pops season, especially with the new orchestration of these sentimental tunes. Nor must one forget Scott's slightly dissonant "The Toy Trumpet," which, judging from the enthusiasm it inspired last evening, will probably occupy the position of popularity held by "Strike Up the Band," a season or two ago. The program closed with Brahms's First Hungarian Dance.

J. D. B.

4

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

MAY 22 1938

Going to Bethlehem

Pennsylvania City's Bach Festival Rated Only One in United States Comparable to Bayreuth and Salzburg—Had Humble Beginnings

By Miles Kastendieck

ONLY one music festival in the United States is comparable to the world-famous Wagner festival at Bayreuth and the Mozart festival at Salzburg. That is the Bach festival in Bethlehem, Pa., which takes place this coming Friday and Saturday. Like the Norfolk, Worcester and Cincinnati festivals, to which reference was made last Sunday in this column, the Bach festival goes back to the days when singing societies flourished in goodly number. Its story is one of humble beginnings and gradual development.

From the earliest days as a Moravian village of the pre-revolutionary period, Bethlehem has always been musical. That characteristic prevailed all through the years of its growth as an important manufacturing city, and blossomed forth in the Bach Choir in 1898 and the first festival in 1900, just 150 years after Bach's death.

It was the enthusiasm and determination of a young man for the music of one composer that made the Bach Festival what it is today. Had not the late J. Fred Wolle been unswerving in his allegiance to Bach, we probably would not have one internationally recognized music festival in the United States. But after the first struggles of those early festivals, Bethlehem has stood by Bach and Bach has become synonymous with Bethlehem. By this it has carved out its own distinction among American towns in developing through the Bach Choir a singular and cultured heritage.

So noted has this festival become that music lovers arrive from all parts of the country to hear the music and to hear the choir. With them "going to Bethlehem" is full of significance. They know what they will hear, for since 1912 the festival has been a two-day affair, given on Friday and Saturday of some weekend in May. The Friday sessions are usually devoted to less familiar works of Bach, cantatas and passions; Saturday always to the B Minor Mass. Some of the "Bach pilgrims," as they are called, have been coming for more than 15 years. They have learned that the repition of great works does not dim, but rather enhances, the glory of the music.

* * *

Dr. Wolle founded the Bethlehem Bach Choir as the outgrowth of the Bethlehem Choral Union, which devoted itself to singing the choral works of Handel, Haydn and Mendelssohn. On his own initiative he first formulated plans for this organization at 18. In June, 1888, the Choral Union gave the first performance in America of Bach's "St. John Passion," which will be heard again at this year's festival. Four years later the Union presented the "St. Matthew Passion," and then groomed itself for the most difficult task of all, the Mass in B Minor. It took until 1900 to weather the various difficulties in the young conductor's path, but on March 27, after 14 months of rehearsing, the work was given. It was the occasion of the first of the Bach Festivals.

In 1905 the festivals were disconnected and not resumed until 1912, when Dr. Wolle was persuaded by Charles M. Schwab to return from California to Bethlehem for the purpose of conducting a two-day festival devoted to the works of Bach. The last of these events under his leadership took place in 1932. Since then they have continued under the direction of Bruce Carey. The achievement was of course the performance of the Bach Mass. As the years passed it matured so that it stood without a peer for grandeur and inspiration.

The "Bach madness" of those early years of the century evidently had some method in it, for out of it came an international institution. With a natural growth the amateurish character of the performance gave way to an exhibition of choral singing that was choral singing. Now people come from all over the world to hear it.

Heralded by that traditional Bach choral announcements of the Moravian Trombone Choir, an organization well over 150 years old, from its Gothic tower, some 2,000 enthusiasts will gather this weekend within and without the ivy-covered walls of the Packer Memorial Church, on the campus of Lehigh University, for the 31st Bach Festival. Inside the church is usually taxed to capacity, while hundreds of people sit outside on the church steps, lean against the walls or occupy places of varying degrees of comfort on the greensward of the campus, for the music of the choral sections peals forth through the windows and may be heard successfully. And it matters not how familiar or unfamiliar the scene or the event, there is a great satisfaction in the hearts of these musical pilgrims when another festival draws to a close, as the last echoes of the mighty Mass in B Minor die away.

* * *

Thus it might have been with other festivals. Bethlehem stands alone in this country as a notable example of what a music festival can be, while many others which attract several thousand more people illustrate what it should not be. It is a question of simplicity and nobility of purpose. And what opportunities existed for other communities! There is a wealth of choral, oratorio and operatic material in the composition of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn and others, from which they might have chosen the works of one composer, declared their allegiance and then devoted themselves to the best possible performances of that man's work. Right now the Worcester Festival, for instance, could have been outstanding had it adopted Handel's music as its own from the beginning, and the newly formed Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, had it adopted a definitive program rather than one of just varied orchestral fare. Here was and perhaps still is the opportunity to establish a "Salzburg in America."

With the changing musical scene, music festivals, if they are to have a raison d'etre, should champion some particular composer or kind of music. The Berkshire Festival of Chamber Music, the White Top Folk Music Festivals—these are on the right path. But unless other festivals adopt a unity of purpose, the increasingly discriminating musical public will come to label them as somewhat futile.

SOCIETY BOSTON SUNDAY ADVERTISER NEW ENGLAND'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION WOMEN'S WORLD

NEWS OF THE WOMEN'S CLUBS BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1938 BEAUTY-TOURS AND TRAVEL

Many Novel Features Arranged for 'Newsboys Night' at the Pops

Young Set Members Serve on Committee

A BEVY of charming junior smart set members will serve as "newsies" . . . to sell the special yearly edition of "Boston Blast" . . . at Pop concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening for the benefit of "Agassiz Village" . . . summer camp of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation.

So that our debutantes will not appear too amateurish in their unique undertaking . . . Nancy Tucker, who heads the deb committee, and her sister, Mrs. Roger V. Pugh of the concert committee, have enlisted some real newsboys to coach them in professional methods of selling the famed tabloid.

Among the new sellers will be Helen Blanchard, Susan Brooks, Janet Eustis, Nancy Gilman, Priscilla Hall, Jean Halladay, Cynthia Haskell, Jane Swift, Pauline Tobey, Olivia Vogel and Nancy Whittier.

Guest conductor of the program . . . with Arthur Fiedler . . . will be Wheeler Beckett from Richmond, Virginia.

ANOTHER BENEFIT concert of outstanding interest is the version of "Die Walkure" . . . presented this evening in Symphony Hall . . . in celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of Wagner's birth . . .

Boston Branch of the Wagner Society is sponsoring the affair to aid the orchestra's pension fund. Among the members and guests who will attend are Mrs. Siegfried W. Gerhardt, Constance Gerhardt, Mrs. Ralph Young, Marguerite A. Whitcomb, Mme. Natalia Rimsky-Korsakov, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Geist, Dr. and Mrs. Howard K. Thompson and Mr. and Mrs. Donald G. Merrill.

Complete Recording of Bach's B. St. Matthew Passion

Her. By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS May 15/38

About a year after the memorable performance of the St. Matthew Passion by the combined forces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Harvard and Radcliffe choruses and soloists, both instrumental and vocal, under Dr. Koussevitzky, the records taken at the time have been issued. The experiment was considered to be hazardous, since there could be no retakes. Everything had to function smoothly, the audience had to co-operate, and the experts from the RCA Victor Company had to be constantly on their toes to see that the records ended logically.

Some doubts were expressed at the time and have since been repeated in one or two critical reviews of the completed records as to whether a really satisfactory result could be obtained from the experiment. These doubts, we feel, have been exaggerated. The value of the undertaking, of actually transscribing for posterity a good performance of a long and difficult masterpiece is so great that the pauses at the beginning of many records before the music begins and the several inconvenient breaks at the end can readily be discounted.

What is more important is that the music is heard with remarkable clarity. The soloists and the instrumentation are heard to excellent advantage, and the chorus sounds less massive than it appeared to do in Symphony Hall. It has always been one of the complaints of Bach scholars that the modern custom of large choruses has been everywhere retained to the disadvantage of the highly significant orchestra voices. On the records the size and vigor of the chorus is somehow less objectionable. . . .

~~Much depends in any performance of the St. Matthew Passion on the skill of the soloists. Dr. Koussevitzky had at his command three first-rate singers: Mr. Priebe, who had the exceedingly hard task of singing the recitatives of the Evangelist; Miss Vreeland and Mr. Falkner, who were both eminently trustworthy in this tpye of work. Miss Meisle, the alto soloist, was at the least adequate. Mr. Lechner was handicapped by his odd English diction.~~

The greatest reason for minimizing occasional, and in such a work inevitable, faults in the performance and recording of the St. Matthew Passion is, of course, its tremendous stature as a work of art. There is no choral work by any other composer which can touch it for purity of spirit, for the combination of the devout and the dramatic. It is the greatest musical account of the profoundest experience of Christianity, the Passion and Crucifixion of Our Lord. No pains, therefore, should be spared for the transmission of a full and reasonably authentic and vital production of such a work.

It is easy and very possibly healthy for scholars to take issue with various points about the interpretation of Bach's larger works and indicates their vitality in the musical life of today. The achievement of the RCA Victor Company has been a marvel of scientific ingenuity. The work of the forces under Dr. Koussevitzky, subject to one or two reservations, also is superb accomplishment. Even the audience, whose right to cough and leave concerts early is held to sacred, refrained entirely from the latter privilege and only rarely indulged in the former. As a matter of fact the unavoidable shortcomings in timing on the records, without the benefit of studio conditions, gives one the not disagreeable impression of being present at a real performance. There is something less smugly mechanical as a result.

The records are issued in three large volumes whose price, naturally, is high. Accompanying them is a pamphlet offering the text, an introduction by Mr. G. H. L. Smith describing the conditions under which the recording was made and an explanatory essay by Dr. Archibald T. Davison. The text is further embellished with Arabic numerals referring to the ordinary piano score and Roman numerals indicating the end of each record. Thus the owner of a set can dip accurately into any part of the St. Matthew Passion. This process, which we have recently enjoyed, is fascinating. You find yourself going on and on, playing just one more, until you realize that you might just as well have started at the beginning and gone right through to the end and then stopped, according to the recommendation of the King of Hearts at the trial. It is, all things considered, a fine piece of work and an interesting step in the processes of recording.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUN 7 - 1938

NOTED MUSICIAN BUYS STOCKBRIDGE HOME

One of the largest homes in Stockbridge, Mass., came into the possession of the famed Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, and Madame Rodzinski when they purchased the J. P. Argenti estate, at the end of Ice Glen road, Stockbridge. A famous addition to Berkshire's ever-growing musical colony, the Rodzinskis plan to use their new home as a summer residence and are taking immediate possession. It is expected that Dr. Rodzinski will return from conducting at the Hollywood Bowl in time to attend the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, conducted at Tanglewood by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

MAY 22 1938

THE ORCHESTRAS

ACCORDING to advance announcements, the general pattern of the New York orchestral season of 1938-'39 seems likely to be substantially similar to that of the season recently closed. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will give another twenty-eight weeks' season, beginning Thursday night, October 20, and closing Sunday afternoon, April 30.

John Barbirolli, in his second season as regular conductor, will conduct all the concerts, except those during two weeks next winter under the guest leadership of Georges Enesco, in his third successive engagement with this orchestra. All concerts will be held in Carnegie Hall.

The ninety-eight regular subscription concerts will again be divided into two series of fourteen Thursday evenings each, two of fourteen Friday afternoons each, two of fourteen Sunday afternoons each and two of seven Saturday evenings each. Ernest Schelling, resuming his activities after a season's absence due to eye trouble, will conduct the six concerts for young people.

An unfamiliar work scheduled for revival next season is Rossini's "Petite Messe Solennelle," with the Westminster Choir as the assisting chorus. Kirsten Flagstad, Metropolitan Opera soprano, and Eyvind Laholm, American tenor, will be soloisis in a Wagner program. Mr. Laholm, a pupil of William S. Brady, of New York, si now singing in the Wagner repertoire in Rome. He made his American debut last fall as Lohengrin with the Chicago City Opera.

Hephzibah Menuhin, pianist, who hitherto has been heard here only in sonata recitals with her brother, Yehudi, will make a solo appearance next season with the Philharmonic during Mr. Enesco's engagement. Sergei Rachmaninoff will be heard in a program of his music. Artur Schnabel will play Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto; Artur Rubinstein will be heard in De Falla's "Nights in the Gardens of Spain" and Saint-Saens's G minor concerto; Rudolf Serkin in Mendelssohn's G minor concerto; José Iturbi in Beethoven's C minor concerto and Liszt's concerto in E flat, and Eduardo del Pueyo, a newcomer, in the Schumann concerto. Other pianists to be heard with this orchestra are Walter Gieseking, Guiomar Novaes, Eugene List, Hortense Monath and Ernest Schelling.

The ten violinists engaged as soloists, in addition to Mishel Piastro, concertmaster, and John Corigliano, assistant concertmaster of the orchestra, are Jascha Heifetz in the Tchaikovsky concerto, Adolf Busch in the Beethoven concerto; Mischa Elman, Nathan Milstein, Guilio Bustabo, Joseph Knitzer, Orlando Barera and Albert Spalding, who will play the Brahms double concerto with Gaspar Cassado, cellist.

The list of soloists is completed by Felix Salmond in Mr. Ernesco's cello concerto, and Joseph Schuster, first cellist of the orchestra. The season of 1938-'39 will be the society's ninety-seventh, counting from the organization of the original Philharmonic Society in 1842, and the eleventh since the amalgamation of the Philharmonic and the New York Symphony Societies.

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will again give five evening and five Saturday afternoon concerts in Carnegie Hall next season, and five concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The Carnegie Hall dates are November 17 and 19, January 5 and 7, February 10 and 11, March 9 and 11 and March 30 and April 1. The Brooklyn concerts will be held Friday night, November 18, and January 6, Thursday night, February 9, and Friday nights, March 10 and 31. Subscription reservations for the Carnegie Hall concerts should be sent to Symphony Hall in Boston. Those for the Brooklyn series may be made daily, except Sundays, by application to the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences in the Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Adrian van Sinderen is chairman of the Brooklyn committee for these concerts.

The National Orchestral Association will again offer a series of six Monday night concerts next season in Carnegie Hall: On November 14, December 12, January 23, February 27, March 20 and April 24. Inquiries about these concerts should be sent to the association's office at 113 West Fifty-seventh Street.

Rudolf Serkin, pianist, will appear with the association as soloist in a special concerto series at Carnegie Hall on the following Saturday afternoons: January 28, February 4 and 18, March 4 and 25. This will be known as the Gabrilowitsch Memorial Concert Series, as an appreciation of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's services as soloist in the association's concerto series of 1934-'35.

Antonia Brico will again conduct the New York Women's Symphony Orchestra in four Tuesday night concerts in Carnegie Hall.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

MAY 27 1938

* * *

Plans for the 21st season of the New York Philharmonic-symphony's outdoor series at Lewisohn stadium include a George Gershwin memorial concert on Monday evening, July 11, to mark the first anniversary of the death of the composer. Paul Whiteman will conduct.

The first stadium concert will be June 26. Sunday night concerts will be broadcast over the Columbia network. Two conductors Massimo Freccia, an Italian, and Macklin Marrow, a native of Virginia, will make American debuts. Other conductors are Jose Iturbi, Alexander Smallens and Willem van Hoogstraten.

* * *

Another of summer's good signs is the Berkshire festival, where the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are the traditional features. The concerts are given at picturesque "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales."

* * *

Bruna Castagna and Richard Bonelli will sing in "Aida" at the Pasadena, Cal., bowl June 25.

* * *

Toscha Seidel will be violin soloist with the Promenade Symphony Orchestra at Toronto, June 2.

T, MONDAY, MAY 23, 1938 B. Trans.

l Musicians --- News of

Wagner at the Pop Concert

Fritz Mahler Conducts a Program of Excerpts from "Die Walkuere"

By MOSES SMITH

The Wagner program at the Pop concert last night had begun, from the first announcement, to be something of an occasion. It ended by being an exceptional one, since the cheers that resounded in Symphony Hall at the end of the concert had their parallel only in the prolonged demonstrations marking the end of a season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra or a concert like that of a Beethoven or Bach Mass. That demonstration was no doubt due in part to the name and music of Wagner, the 125th anniversary of whose death was being memorialized. Much of it must have proceeded from the hands and feet and throats of members of the Boston branch of the Richard Wagner Society, which had had much to do with making a success of this concert for the benefit of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But clearly it was also a tribute to the numerous performers, particularly the talented young visiting conductor, Fritz Mahler, who indicated that he was about the most surprised person in the house.

Mr. Mahler and the able quartet of soloists—Margaret Halstead and Hazel Hayes, sopranos, Colin O'More, tenor, and Raymond Lutz, baritone—had all given their services for the benefit of the Pension Fund. (It was a pity that some acknowledgment of this fact was not made in the printed program.) The concert had, almost from the beginning, proceeded less as the usual Pops affair than as an evening of significant music-making. Even in the length of the program Mr. Mahler had conformed with the customary routine that governs symphonic concerts in this country nowadays. As a matter of fact the concert, which began late, required, with a considerable intermission, rather less than the usual hour and three-quarters. Mr. Mahler might comfortably have chosen more liberally than his actual list, made up of the beginning of each of the three acts, the longish "love" scene from the first act and the final scene of the third.

Mr. Mahler turned out to be a man of modest but authoritative demeanor, with a firm and even insistent beat. Outside of the opening Prelude, which was not fast enough for the taste of the present correspondent, the tempos tended to lean on the fast side. Perhaps Mr. Mahler felt that in a concert performance the more leisurely tempos usually heard in the theater could not prevail. He was also inclined to be too unrelenting in maintaining a tempo, so that the singers were sometimes hard put to it to give the music its wonted expressiveness. Perhaps as a result of pace, too, the orchestra did not always achieve characteristic sonority and glow.

These details on the debit side, though, only emphasized the pleasure to be got from the occasion. With a competent conductor on the stand the audience was enabled, by virtue of the presence of a great orchestra, to hear Wagner's music set forth as practically never in the opera house. The singers, who had their faults, were surprisingly good. Particularly did the firm, rich voice and expressive singing of Margaret Halstead, the Bruennhilde, achieve their mark. Hazel Hayes as Sieglinde and Colin O'More wanted only a little more full-bodied tone to achieve similar eloquence. Mr. Lutz had the requisite dignity but not sufficient body of tone for Wotan. It is a cliche to say that the voices suffered in the unequal competition with the Wagnerian orchestra. But considering that the orchestra was on stage behind the singers one noted that Mr. Mahler achieved an exceptionally persuasive balance of forces.

The experiment was in a word successful. It attracted an audience that practically filled the house. There seems considerable encouragement for another attempt.

RADIO DIAL
CINCINNATI, O.

MAY 27 1938

All-Ravel Program Is Presented On Series

An all-Ravel program will be played by E. Robert Schmitz, noted concert pianist, when the second broadcast of the "Keyboard Concerts" series is given over CBS, including WHIO and WHAS, Wednesday, May 25, at 4:00 p. m. (E.S.T.)

Schmitz, a native of Paris, has appeared in all parts of the world in recital and as soloist with the New York Philharmonic Symphony, Boston Symphony, and Philadelphia Orchestras and about 60 others throughout the world.

Last summer he gave a series of historical Russian programs, on Columbia. The Ravel Works he is to play include the first movement of the Sonatina; "Jeux d'Eau;" "Pavane for a Dead Princess;" the Rigaudon and the Toccata from "The Tomb of Couperin."

B. Am. May 23/38

Tuning Up—Julia Theordorowicz, violinist, and Conductor Fritz Mahler at Pops rehearsal. What a harp to play—what music it holds. It's the granddaddy of 'em all.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

MAY 23 1938

WORDS AND MUSIC

Sir Adrian Boult Conducts An All-English Program

His Countrymen's Music Makes for a Long Evening on the Air Waves of N.B.C.

By SAMUEL CHOTZINOFF

For his second and final appearance with the N. B. C. Orchestra Saturday night Sir Adrian Boult modestly chose a program of English music. It is no doubt natural for an English conductor to have sympathy for his native art and to do all he can to boost it in alien lands, yet an evening of nothing but English compositions is a long evening except, perhaps, for Englishmen. I wonder what Sir Adrian would have thought if a German guest-conductor with the B. B. C. Orchestra would play an all-German program of Bach, Beethoven, Schubert and Strauss.

However, one must admire the English for the presistence with which they plug their native music. Our own American composers are no doubt green with envy when they contemplate a program like the one Sir Adrian contrived to send over the wires. One seldom hears of an American conductor doing right by his countrymen in foreign parts. I have no statistics at hand, but if I remember neither Mr. Ormandy nor Mr. Koussevitzky over imposed an all-American evening on the music lovers of Budapest, Linz, Vienna, Paris or London. Nor are they to be blamed for their reticence, for it is the first duty of a guest to please his host.

The compositions of Sir Adrian's choice were a Fugal Concerto for Flute, Oboe and String Orchestra by the late Gustave Holst; Vaughan Williams' Fourth Symphony, a piece by George Butterworth called "A Shropshire Lad" and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. In the first the N.B.C.'s flutist, Mr. John Wummer, and the oboist, Robert Bloom, played beautifully, and their participation helped to flavor a contrapuntal orgy in which originality was one of the things lacking.

The "Shropshire Lad" Rhapsody is pleasant, derivative music. Since its composer was killed in the great war at a tender age, it was difficult to listen to the piece without sentimental prejudice. Yet it betrayed a certain tenderness, as of one who felt deeply the Housman lyrics and desired to translate his feelings into sound.

The "Enigma" Variations constituted the most ponderable item of the evening, and Sir Adrian gave a sober account of it. No one will question the visitor's tempi in music, which he must know at first hand. Yet I have heard the "Enigma" when it sounded more spirited and certainly more fanciful than it did on Saturday night. The piece itself often tries, as an acute critic once said, to be another Brahms-Haydn Variations. Its Germanic undercurrent is unmistakable, as is its Victorian smugness. Indeed, it is to be suspected that Sir Edward did full justice to all the secret personages he attempted to characterize in the variations. They must all have been nice English people, solid and respectable, with no apparent flaws in their make-up.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 29 1938

Berkshire Museum Camera Club's First Annual Show

Pittsfield, May 28—The Berkshire Museum Camera club, founded in the fall of 1937 with 100 adult members, is sponsoring the first annual Berkshire county photographic exhibition, to be held in the Berkshire museum from July 31 to August 14. This will take place during the two weeks when the Boston Symphony orchestra visits the Berkshires for the six concerts of the nationally known Berkshire Symphonic festival.

July 16 will be the last day for receiving entries, which will be open to any resident of the United States, (entry fee $1). Four prints may be submitted by any contributor. Prints may be in any medium, but no hand-colored pictures will be accepted. Prints should be mounted on white or very light-tinted mounts 16 by 20 inches in size, and the title and return address of the artist written on the back. The Berkshire Hills conference will award a prize of $25 for a picture, taken in Bershire county, "best suited for use in promoting Berkshire county." Entries for the prize should be indicated as such. Three men, nonresidents of Berkshire county, will judge the prints.

B. Globe May 27/38

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

The Pops

The annual Burroughs Newsboys Foundation night at the Pops, in Symphony Hall, was also the occasion of the Boston debut of Wheeler Beckett. As guest conductor of the middle part of the program, Mr. Beckett presented Wagner's Overture to "The Flying Dutchman." and gave the first Boston performance of his own First Symphony, in C minor. The remainder of the program was conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

In his brief appearance, Mr. Beckett impressed by the vigor and directness of his conducting, and by the technical skill exhibited both in his writing for and his directing of the orchestra. His First Symphony, which has been heard in Chicago and Grand Rapids, is frankly in the romantic vein, of large dimensions and rhapsodic style. The scoring is brilliant, and the prevailing contrapuntal texture boasts luxuriant detail. The general style and substance are derivative, yet there is a certain modernity of thought and pace in the energetic finale. The slow movement, which begins with an effective clarinet solo, contains a suggestion of the similar movement in the D minor Symphony of Franck.

Mr. Fiedler's share of the program included Peggy Stuart's "miniature rhapsody," "Night Froth," in which the composer played the piano solo; the "Rakoczy" march of Berlioz and music of Offenbach, Tchaikovsky, Bolzoni and others. There were likewise pieces played by the Burroughs Newsboys Harmonica Band. Both Mr. Fiedler and Mr. Beckett were warmly applauded

C. W. D.

BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

MAY 29 1938

Another of summer's good signs is the Berkshire festival where the Boston symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are the traditional features. The concerts are given at picturesque "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales."

* * *

Bruna Castagna and Richard Bonelli will sing in "Aida" at the Pasadena, Cal., bowl June 25.

* * *

Toscha Seidel will be violin soloist with the Promenade symphony orchestra at Toronto, June 2.

* * *

Jessica Dragonette, who turned recently from radio to the concert stage, will make another and wider tour next year. The soprano ended her first tour with a concert at Lakewood, N. J., where she sang at the annual musicale of Georgian Court college. She will travel as far as Australia next year.

T, MONDAY, MAY 23, 1938 B. Trav.

l Musicians --- News of

Wagner at the Pop Concert

Fritz Mahler Conducts a Program of Excerpts from "Die Walkuere"

By MOSES SMITH

The Wagner program at the Pop concert last night had begun, from the first announcement, to be something of an occasion. It ended by being an exceptional one, since the cheers that resounded in Symphony Hall at the end of the concert had their parallel only in the prolonged demonstrations marking the end of a season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra or a concert like that of a Beethoven or Bach Mass. That demonstration was no doubt due in part to the name and music of Wagner, the 125th anniversary of whose death was being memorialized. Much of it must have proceeded from the hands and feet and throats of members of the Boston branch of the Richard Wagner Society, which had had much to do with making a success of this concert for the benefit of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But clearly it was also a tribute to the numerous performers, particularly the talented young visiting conductor, Fritz Mahler, who indicated that he was about the most surprised person in the house.

Mr. Mahler and the able quartet of soloists—Margaret Halstead and Hazel Hayes, sopranos, Colin O'More, tenor, and Raymond Lutz, baritone—had all given their services for the benefit of the Pension Fund. (It was a pity that some acknowledgment of this fact was not made in the printed program.) The concert had, almost from the beginning, proceeded less as the usual Pops affair than as an evening of significant music-making. Even in the length of the program Mr. Mahler had conformed with the customary routine that governs symphonic concerts in this country nowadays. As a matter of fact the concert, which began late, required, with a considerable intermission, rather less than the usual hour and three-quarters. Mr. Mahler might comfortably have chosen more liberally than his actual list, made up of the beginning of each of the three acts, the longish "love" scene from the first act and the final scene of the third.

Mr. Mahler turned out to be a man of modest but authoritative demeanor, with a firm and even insistent beat. Outside of the opening Prelude, which was not fast enough for the taste of the present correspondent, the tempos tended to lean on the fast side. Perhaps Mr. Mahler felt that in a concert performance the more leisurely tempos usually heard in the theater could not prevail. He was also inclined to be too unrelenting in maintaining a tempo, so that the singers were sometimes hard put to it to give the music its wonted expressiveness. Perhaps as a result of pace, too, the orchestra did not always achieve characteristic sonority and glow.

These details on the debit side, though, only emphasized the pleasure to be got from the occasion. With a competent conductor on the stand the audience was enabled, by virtue of the presence of a great orchestra, to hear Wagner's music set forth as practically never in the opera house. The singers, who had their faults, were surprisingly good. Particularly did the firm, rich voice and expressive singing of Margaret Halstead, the Bruennhilde, achieve their mark. Hazel Hayes as Sieglinde and Colin O'More wanted only a little more full-bodied tone to achieve similar eloquence. Mr. Lutz had the requisite dignity but not sufficient body of tone for Wotan. It is a cliche to say that the voices suffered in the unequal competition with the Wagnerian orchestra. But considering that the orchestra was on stage behind the singers one noted that Mr. Mahler achieved an exceptionally persuasive balance of forces.

The experiment was in a word successful. It attracted an audience that practically filled the house. There seems considerable encouragement for another attempt.

RADIO DIAL
CINCINNATI, O.

MAY 27 1938

All-Ravel Program Is Presented On Series

An all-Ravel program will be played by E. Robert Schmitz, noted concert pianist, when the second broadcast of the "Keyboard Concerts" series is given over CBS, including WHIO and WHAS, Wednesday, May 25, at 4:00 p. m. (E.S.T.)

Schmitz, a native of Paris, has appeared in all parts of the world in recital and as soloist with the New York Philharmonic Symphony, Boston Symphony, and Philadelphia Orchestras and about 60 others throughout the world.

Last summer he gave a series of historical Russian programs, on Columbia. The Ravel Works he is to play include the first movement of the Sonatina; "Jeux d'Eau;" "Pavane for a Dead Princess;" the Rigaudon and the Toccata from "The Tomb of Couperin."

B. Amer May 23/38

Tuning Up—Julia Theordorowicz, violinist, and Conductor Fritz Mahler at Pops rehearsal. What a harp to play—what music it holds. It's the granddaddy of 'em all.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

MAY 23 1938

WORDS AND MUSIC

Sir Adrian Boult Conducts An All-English Program

His Countrymen's Music Makes for a Long Evening on the Air Waves of N.B.C.

By SAMUEL CHOTZINOFF

For his second and final appearance with the N. B. C. Orchestra Saturday night Sir Adrian Boult modestly chose a program of English music. It is no doubt natural for an English conductor to have sympathy for his native art and to do all he can to boost it in alien lands, yet an evening of nothing but English compositions is a long evening except, perhaps, for Englishmen. I wonder what Sir Adrian would have thought if a German guest-conductor with the B. B. C. Orchestra would play an all-German program of Bach, Beethoven, Schubert and Strauss.

However, one must admire the English for the presistence with which they plug their native music. Our own American composers are no doubt green with envy when they contemplate a program like the one Sir Adrian contrived to send over the wires. One seldom hears of an American conductor doing right by his countrymen in foreign parts. I have no statistics at hand, but if I remember neither Mr. Ormandy nor Mr. Koussevitzky over imposed an all-American evening on the music lovers of Budapest, Linz, Vienna, Paris or London. Nor are they to be blamed for their reticence, for it is the first duty of a guest to please his host.

The compositions of Sir Adrian's choice were a Fugal Concerto for Flute, Oboe and String Orchestra by the late Gustave Holst; Vaughan Williams' Fourth Symphony, a piece by George Butterworth called "A Shropshire Lad" and Elgar's "Enigma" Variations. In the first the N.B.C.'s flutist, Mr. John Wummer, and the oboist, Robert Bloom, played beautifully, and their participation helped to flavor a contrapuntal orgy in which originality was one of the things lacking.

The "Shropshire Lad" Rhapsody is pleasant, derivative music. Since its composer was killed in the great war at a tender age, it was difficult to listen to the piece without sentimental prejudice. Yet it betrayed a certain tenderness, as of one who felt deeply the Housman lyrics and desired to translate his feelings into sound.

The "Enigma" Variations constituted the most ponderable item of the evening, and Sir Adrian gave a sober account of it. No one will question the visitor's tempi in music, which he must know at first hand. Yet I have heard the "Enigma" when it sounded more spirited and certainly more fanciful than it did on Saturday night. The piece itself often tries, as an acute critic once said, to be another Brahms-Haydn Variations. Its Germanic undercurrent is unmistakable, as is its Victorian smugness. Indeed, it is to be suspected that Sir Edward did full justice to all the secret personages he attempted to characterize in the variations. They must all have been nice English people, solid and respectable, with no apparent flaws in their make-up.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 29 1938

Berkshire Museum Camera Club's First Annual Show

Pittsfield, May 28—The Berkshire Museum Camera club, founded in the fall of 1937 with 100 adult members, is sponsoring the first annual Berkshire county photographic exhibition, to be held in the Berkshire museum from July 31 to August 14. This will take place during the two weeks when the Boston Symphony orchestra visits the Berkshires for the six concerts of the nationally known Berkshire Symphonic festival.

July 16 will be the last day for receiving entries, which will be open to any resident of the United States, (entry fee $1). Four prints may be submitted by any contributor. Prints may be in any medium, but no hand-colored pictures will be accepted. Prints should be mounted on white or very light-tinted mounts 16 by 20 inches in size, and the title and return address of the artist written on the back. The Berkshire Hills conference will award a prize of $25 for a picture, taken in Bershire county, "best suited for use in promoting Berkshire county." Entries for the prize should be indicated as such. Three men, nonresidents of Berkshire county, will judge the prints.

B. Globe May 27/38

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

The Pops

The annual Burroughs Newsboys Foundation night at the Pops, in Symphony Hall, was also the occasion of the Boston debut of Wheeler Beckett. As guest conductor of the middle part of the program, Mr. Beckett presented Wagner's Overture to "The Flying Dutchman." and gave the first Boston performance of his own First Symphony, in C minor. The remainder of the program was conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

In his brief appearance, Mr. Beckett impressed by the vigor and directness of his conducting, and by the technical skill exhibited both in his writing for and his directing of the orchestra. His First Symphony, which has been heard in Chicago and Grand Rapids, is frankly in the romantic vein, of large dimensions and rhapsodic style. The scoring is brilliant, and the prevailing contrapuntal texture boasts luxuriant detail. The general style and substance are derivative, yet there is a certain modernity of thought and pace in the energetic finale. The slow movement, which begins with an effective clarinet solo, contains a suggestion of the similar movement in the D minor Symphony of Franck.

Mr. Fiedler's share of the program included Peggy Stuart's "miniature rhapsody," "Night Froth," in which the composer played the piano solo; the "Rakoczy" march of Berlioz and music of Offenbach, Tchaikovsky, Bolzoni and others. There were likewise pieces played by the Burroughs Newsboys Harmonica Band. Both Mr. Fiedler and Mr. Beckett were warmly applauded

C. W. D.

BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

MAY 29 1938

Another of summer's good signs is the Berkshire festival where the Boston symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are the traditional features. The concerts are given at picturesque "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales."

• • •

Bruna Castagna and Richard Bonelli will sing in "Aida" at the Pasadena, Cal., bowl June 25.

• • •

Toscha Seidel will be violin soloist with the Promenade symphony orchestra at Toronto, June 2.

• • •

Jessica Dragonette, who turned recently from radio to the concert stage, will make another and wider tour next year. The soprano ended her first tour with a concert at Lakewood, N. J., where she sang at the annual musicale of Georgian Court college. She will travel as far as Australia next year.

59

NEWARK, N. J.
CALL

MAY 22 1938

In the Realm of Music

Call for American Opera

By Marguerite Krahenbuhl.

Worried about the difficult times encountered by contemporary American composers, the American Institute of Music, Arts and Drama of Montclair is going to do something practical about it. Today the institute makes a "nation-wide call for a truly American grand opera."

The contest, reads the announcement, is open to young opera composers and librettists. The opera will be selected by a board of competent judges and will be presented by an all-American cast. The emphasis by the institute is strictly American. Ralph Errolle, managing director, said: "The whole affair should be the result of matters entirely American."

Mr. Errolle forecast the contest at the closing performance of "Faust" in the spring season of the Essex County Opera Company, Wednesday night, during the course of his graceful curtain speech. Thanking the audience for its support of the opera series, he declared that next season's bill will place more emphasis on productions in English. Other countries enjoy grand opera in their native tongue, he said, and it's high time America did the same.

The sponsors of the contest have outlined a list of rules which indicate that though they're anxious for a national product, they'll not be trifled with.

"Any subject," they state, "will be acceptable other than a North American Indian story. The music must be serious with no attempt at jazz. The composer and librettist must be native citizens of the United States."

Compositions will be judged on "the play value of the story, the quality of the music, the melodic vocal opportunities for principals and the general value from the standpoint of presentation."

The no-Indian legend rule represents, stated Mr. Errolle, an effort to break down the idea that "you can't write anything about American without including the Indians. We're looking for new ideas."

The institute, Mr. Errolle cautioned further, is not guaranteeing to produce any American operas. Nothing will be produced unless the sponsors are assured of a reasonable success and convinced it will lose no prestige thereby.

As things stand now, November 1 will be the closing date for acceptance of scores. The winning opera will be produced by the Essex County Opera Company probably as the second offering of the spring season.

In regard to the opera-in-English idea, Mr. Errolle advised music-lovers that only opera which would appear to benefit by the English text would be sung that way. Specifically he listed "Madame Butterfly," "La Boheme," "Lakme," "Martha" and "Tales of Hoffman."

Festival Plans For High Schools—

A music festival in which all of the high schools in Essex county will participate will be held by the Music Department of the Essex County Division of the New Jersey State Teachers' Association at the Montclair High School garden theater, June 4, at 7 P. M. The program will be divided into three parts for band, chorus and orchestra selections, with students from most of the county high schools contributing to the membership of each group. Conductors will be Sayward Rowell of Montclair for the band; Arthur E. Ward, also of Montclair and president of the Essex county division, the chorus, and Jennings Butterfield of West Orange, the orchestra.

The program for the summer series by the Essex County Opera Company and the Federal Symphony Orchestra in Convention Hall at Asbury Park, opening Friday night, will include Saint-Saen's "Marche Heroique," Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony," Gliere's Russian Sailor's Dance from "The Red Poppy" and Wagner's Overture to "Tannhauser." Operatic selections will be the Soldiers' Chorus from "Faust" and the Bell Chorus from "Pagliacci," "Zitti-Zitti" from "Rigoletto," a "La Traviata" aria by Marthe Errolle and the complete triumphal scene from "Aida," with cast members, Adrian, Reiff, Kreuder, Brierley, May and Lipton.

many years president of the Lyric Club, and Walter Hewitt, who succeeded Mrs. Kirwan.

The Boston Symphony's concert tonight at Boston on Wagner's 125th anniversary will feature a concert performance of the master's "Die Walkure," with Raymond Lutz, East Orange baritone, singing Wotan. The concert, a benefit for the pension fund, will mark the suburbanite's first appearance in the United States with a major orchestra. Lutz, a product of German musical schools, made his debut at Stuttgart as Walter in another Wagner opus, "Tannhauser." He has sung with the Federal Symphony under Fritz Mahler and in "Lohengrin" with the Philadelphia Civic Opera Company.

Gilbert and Sullivan's "Yeoman of the Guard" will be sung by an all-male cast Wednesday night in Newark State Teachers College auditorium by the Electro Choir, directed by R. H. Ranger. The "ladies of the chorus" will be played by soprano and alto boys of the choir. Among singers will be Alvin Mancusi-Ungaro, Thomas Soraci, Carlton Legried, Paul Eccles, James Pinneo, William Pridham, Albert Fields, Robert Breitenfeldt, Thomas Gallagher, Russell Greer and Kenneth Glass Robert Kiss is a stage director; Edward Redeker, stage carpenter, assisted by Evan Boardman. Otis Werner and Coline Vanderhoof and John Cataldo. concert master of the 12-piece orchestra.

For the second time within a month Chester Barclay of Newark will appear under the baton of Rodney Saylor when he performs as flute soloist Tuesday night in the spring concert of the Morris County Choral Society in Morristown High School. Mr. Barclay was flute soloist for the Bach B Minor Mass April 28 by the Bach Society of New Jersey. He is a student of the world-famous Georges Barrere of France.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Talbot of Mendham, soprano, the other soloist, was winner of the contest sponsored by the Griffith Music Foundation. The concert will include works by Bach, Brahms, Schubert and Chaminade. The chorus numbers about 70.

The third guest who, in this instnce will turn soloist, is one of radio's best known voices—Milton J. Cross. Mr Cross is a tenor, although in recent years he has confined his activities more specifically to announcing.

Community Concerts of the Oranges has re-elected its officers: Russell B. Kingman, honorary president; Everett Colby, president; Charles E. Arnott, John K. Gore, Mrs. Charles Robbins, Frederick T. Kelsey and Mrs. Harry Epstein, vice presidents; Mrs. William S. Nelson, secretary, and Henry Leeb, treasurer. Most of these are associated with the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra, which is directed by Rene Pollain. Miss Mary Prizer is chairman of membership, the campaign for which will be opened at a dinner in the Rock Spring Country Club, October 10. The drive, ending October 17, is expected to produce renewals and a considerable increase of new members.

POPS PROGRAMS

TONIGHT

Polonaise from "Eugene Onjegin"	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "The Bartered Bride"	Smetana
Minute Waltz	Chopin
Ballet Music from "Faust"	Gounod
"Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem	Liszt
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Girls of Baden," Waltzes	Komzak
Prayer of Thanksgiving	Valerius-Kremser
Entrance of the Gladiators	Fucik

SUNDAY EVENING

Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla"	Glinka
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36	Tchaikovsky
Concerto in F major for three pianos and orchestra	Mozart
Soloists: J. M. Sanroma, H. Gebhard, A. Fiedler.
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"	Wagner

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 23 1938

Eugene Ormandy to Conduct Orchestra in Concert Course

Philadelphia Symphony Here on Nov. 9, Opening Smith College Program for 1938-39

Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra in the first concert to be given in the 1938-39 Smith college concert course, the full program of which has been announced by the Smith college department of music. Other symphony orchestras to make return appearances at Smith college include the Cleveland and Boston Symphony orchestras, directed by Artur Rodzinski and Serge Koussevitzky, respectively. Soloists listed for the series are Lotte Lehmann, soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera company, who was heard in this vicinity in 1932, and two newcomers: Rudolf Serkin, pianist, and Joseph Szigeti, violinist.

Mme. Lehmann, who was brought to John M. Greene hall six years ago by the Smith college music department, is a recognized operatic success. She has been acclaimed for the brilliance of her vocal technique, which is happily combined with musical intelligence and rare depth of feeling.

EUGENE ORMANDY

Rudolf Serkin has received enthusiastic praise from critics throughout the United States, who have lauded his brilliance, profundity and scholarly intelligence as a pianist. His winter recital this year in Carnegie hall, New York, was praised by Olin Downes as an exhibition of "seriousness and sincerity" on the part of a "great musician." Of Serkin's rendition of Beethoven's Hammerklavier on that the occasion, the New York Sun commented, "His performance of... was the finest that is likely to be heard here this winter."

Joseph Szigeti, who returned here last fall, after filling engagements in South Africa, will tour the United States during the current year. His career as a violinist has won him an enviable reputation in four continents. Szigeti, a Hungarian by nationality, has appeared in concerts sponsored by the Civic league of St. Louis, the Community Concert course of Pittsfield, the Pittsburgh Art society and others. He has been a soloist with the Philadelphia, Cincinnati and New York Philharmonic - Symphony orchestras. Szigeti has been praised for his emotional intensity, his "romantic virility" and "unswerving musical integrity."

The schedule for the 1938-39 concert course has been announced as follows:

Philadelphia orchestra, Wednesday, Nov. 9.

Joseph Szigeti, violinist, Wednesday, Dec. 7.

Rudolf Serkin, pianist, Thursday, Jan. 12.

Lotte Lehmann, Wednesday, Feb. 1.

Boston Symphony, Tuesday, March 7.

PT, TUESDAY, MAY 24

B. Trans

l Musicians

Harvard Night at Pops: Fun and Good Art

Hoffmann Supplies Vigor to Direction—Glee Club Gives 'Tarantella'

Varied Harvard talents—conductors, composers and the young men of the Glee Club—co-operated to make Harvard night at the Pops last evening interesting musically as well as convivial. The usual frothy Pops fare, delightful in itself, was supplemented by a liberal contribution of Harvard's Randall Thompson; the conducting was in the able hands of Ernst Hoffmann, G. Wallace Woodworth and Leroy Anderson.

Ernst Hoffmann, now conductor of the Houston (Texas) Symphony orchestra. covered his share of the directorial problems very capably. He is a vigorous, straight-from-the-shoulder conductor, who, even through the maze of milling about characteristic of the first part of a Pop concert, gave evidence of knowing what he wants and how to get it. Under his spirited, perceptive direction, the Pops ensemble lost any hint of the perfunctory. Of the part of the program under Mr. Hoffmann's care, the most engaging element was three German dances of Mozart, performed in a sprightly and robust manner.

The Harvard Glee Club, under the direction of Mr. Woodworth, had the next part of the program well in hand. The Mozart "Music for Freemasons" was made even more attractive by the fine voice and excellent style of Joseph Lautner, tenor, who sang in the Cantata for solo and men's chorus "Die Maurerfreude." Randall Thompson's deft "Tarantella," recently heard at a glee club concert, was done again with considerable eclat. Irving Fine's accompaniment deserves more than a word of praise. The Finale from Thompson's Third Symphony, which followed, perhaps did not appear to best advantage out of its context. The composer knows his orchestra, as his chorus thoroughly, but the conventionality of form and harmonic treatment seemed undistinguished after the real atmospheric charm and freshness of the "Tarantella."

Leroy Anderson conducted the final part of the evening, which ended with his own "Harvard Fantasy" on themes of college songs. The large and ebullient audience clamored for, and finally heard, Anderson's own version of Gershwin's "Wintergreen for President." J. E.

B. Record May 28 38

Pianists at Sunday Pops

Main feature on the Sunday Pops bill is Mozart's concerto for three pianos, with J. M. Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard and Arthur Fiedler at the pianos. Glinka's "Russian and Ludmilla" overture, Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony and the "Die Meistersinger" prelude are also listed.

Sanroma will play the piano part in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" at tonight's concert. Other numbers are the polonaise from Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin" opera, Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, Chopin's "Minute Waltz," the ballet music from "Faust," Liszt's "Preludes," Komzak's "Girls of Baden" waltzes, the Valerius-Kremser "Prayer of Thanksgiving" and the "Entrance of the Gladiators," by Fucik.

The last Sunday Pops is the Pension Fund Concert on June 5.

PT, FRIDAY, MAY 27

l Musicians

B. Trans.

Newsboy Night at Pops and a Guest Leader

Wheeler Beckett Conducts His First Symphony; Peggy Stuart Soloist

Last evening at the Pops, besides being Burroughs Newsboys Foundation night, was also notable for the appearance of a guest conductor-composer, Wheeler Beckett, and a guest composer-pianist, Peggy Stuart. Mr. Beckett, who since 1932 has been director of the Richmond Symphony Orchestra, conducted his own Symphony No. 1 in C minor, and Miss Stuart played the piano part in her "Night Froth, A Miniature Rhapsody."

Mr. Beckett began the part of the program entrusted to his care with the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," which was given a clear, unsubtle reading. Mr. Beckett knows his Wagner thoroughly; as a conductor, he has assurance and purpose, if no particular virtuosity. His own symphony is competent and workmanlike, conventionally romantic in feeling, and not unoriginal despite obvious Wagneresque echoes. Of the three movements, the Andante (which sounded more like an Adagio) is by far the best because of its dramatic atmosphere, its lyric thematic material, and more effective orchestral writing than in the other parts of the symphony.

"Night Froth" proved a facile little program piece rather in the Gershwin manner, and as such filled the bill very well. As arranged by Charles Leave, the orchestration was clever and effective. Miss Stuart played the showy piano part with considerable verve.

The rest of the program, under Mr. Fiedler's direction, offered such familiar Popsiana as the "Rakoczy" March of Berlioz, Offenbach's Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," Tschaikovsky's "Marche Slave" and the like. An unconventional feature was the Burroughs Newsboys Harmonica Band, which rendered "swing" numbers during the second intermission. J. E.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

MAY 28 1938

Mitropoulos To Conduct Symphony

Dmitri Mitropoulous, distinguished young Grecian conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, will be guest leader of the NBC Symphony Orchestra for the program to be broadcast from 9:00 to 10:30 p. m., on WCAE.

Mitropoulos, who on this occasion will make his New York debut, was born in Athens, Greece, in 1896. After completing his studies at the Athens Conservatory he spent several years in Berlin as a pupil of the late Ferruccio Busoni. Upon that master's recommendation Mitropoulos was engaged as assistant conductor of the Berlin Staatsoper, a post he held until 1924, when he was recalled to Athens to become conductor of that city's symphony orchestra.

Though he officially continues to hold that position, his guest appearances with Europe's foremost orchestras have made him an international figure in the world of music. In 1936 Serge Koussevitzky invited him to conduct five concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra which resulted in an invitation to become conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony.

For his program with the NBC Symphony Orchestra on May 28, Mitropoulos has chosen works by Purcell, Schumann, Glazounoff and Chopin.

Heading the list is the conductor's own orchestration of the Prelude and Final Aria from Henry Purcell's opera, "Dido and Aeneas." This early English work is based upon a story that resembles the plot of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde."

26, 1938 = B. Trans. May

COMPOSER WITH CONDUCTOR

(Egan photo)

MISS PEGGY STUART

Is shown above with Arthur Fiedler going over "Night Froth, A Miniature Rhapsody," her own composition, which will be played at tonight's Pop Concert in Symphony Hall. Miss Stuart, daughter of Willoughby H. Stuart Jr. of Cambridge, will be the guest soloist. Photo shows her in pre-rehearsal conference with Conductor Arthur Fiedler. While he tries a piano passage, she indicates a place in the orchestral part which she wishes to have given special treatment.

---

nist Appears as a Film Star

Monitor – May 26/38

Hans Wiener

In the Title Role of His New Ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," With Music by Walter Piston, Which Will Be Presented at the Pops on Monday and Tuesday Evenings

---

Sketches for a Ballet

On view in the foyer at Symphony Hall are some sketches by Marco Montedoro of costumes to be worn in the ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," to be presented by the Hans Wiener dancers at the Pop Concerts of Monday and Tuesday.

Each costume characterizes a type, with the exaggerations permitted in the theater; each costume is an item in a larger pattern which is characterized not alone by color and accents, but by lines which move and flow, hesitate and accelerate in the progress of the dance. There is, no doubt, in the thought of the designer some unifying motive of color or accent which harmonizes these varied garments. Seeing them individually, we are likely to be too analytical, not sufficiently detached.

"The Incredible Flutist" gives scope to the designer with its varied cast of characters—an astrologer, a circus owner, a juggler, a snake dancer, vendors. Caricature, exoticism, grace are implied. Montedoro does not ignore detail, nor does he treat it too precisely Yet he designs costumes which have a definite cut and style, and are not mere swathes, or sheaths of doubtful color and consistency. His is a more literal, more realistic costuming which has identity and special interest and is not subordinated to the complete authority of the dance. D. A.

Trav. 1938

Wiener with Pops Monday-Tuesday

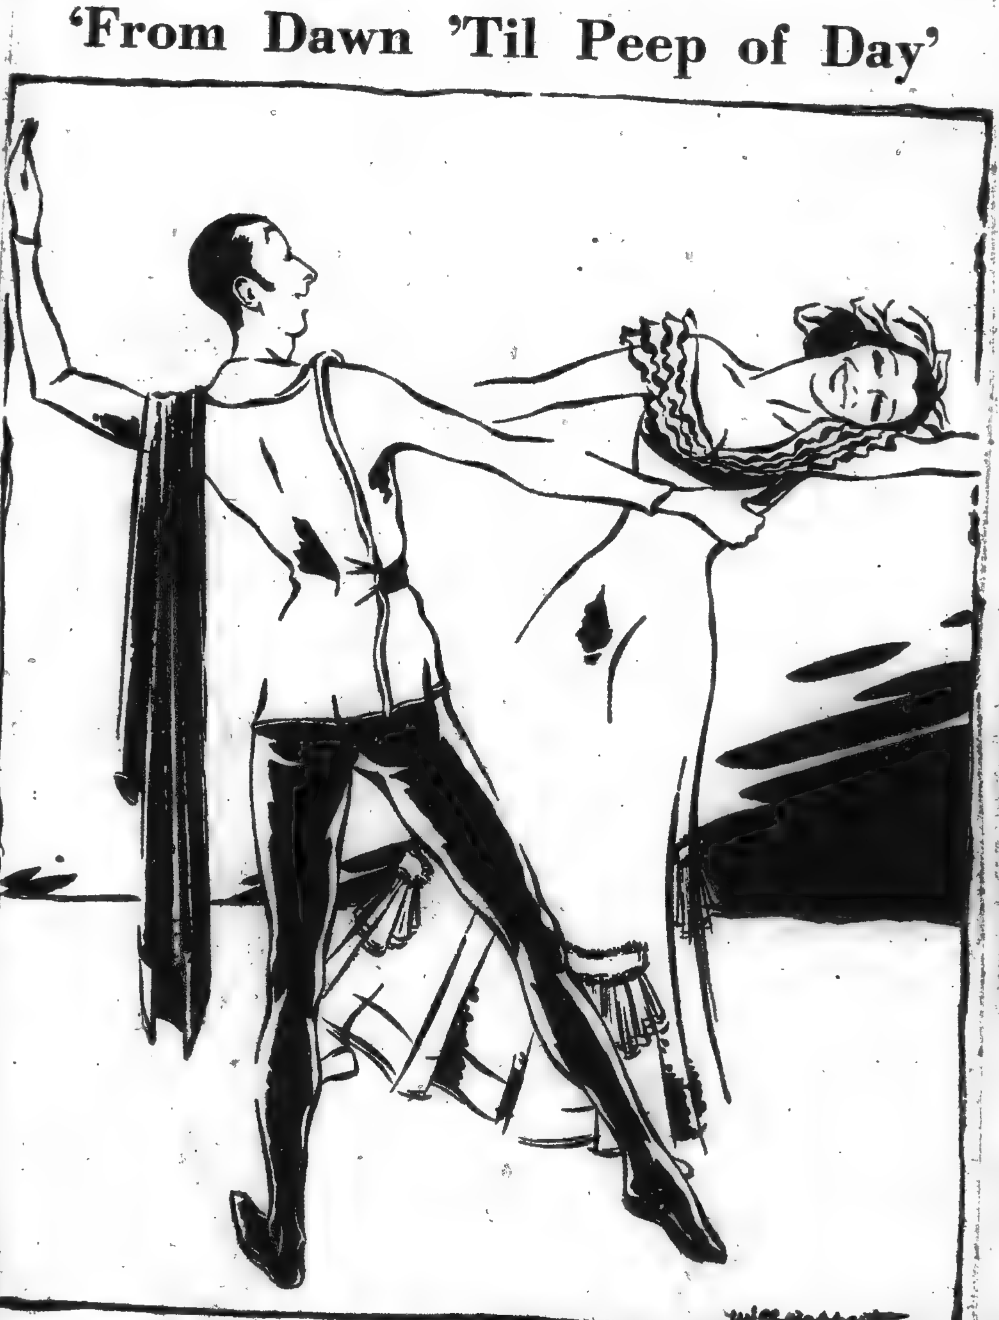
B. Trans. May 28/38

Hans Wiener, whose ballet "The Incredible Flutist" is to be given at the Pops, Symphony Hall, next Monday and Tuesday evenings, lives up to the title role he dances. His ability to make everyone dance to his

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1938

al --- Pops Programs for the Week ---

'From Dawn 'Til Peep of Day'



HANS WIENER AND ESTELLE KIBB

In the Love Duet from "The Incredible Flutist," by Hans Wiener, with music by Walter Piston, performed Monday and Tuesday evenings at the

and to call into play even some of the youngest of his pupils when children's roles are required.

Known in New England and New York and his native Vienna as one of the leading exponents of the contemporary dance, Mr. Wiener knows not only his own subject, but music, literature, art, history and folk customs. His ability as a designer has formed a strong bond with Marco Montedoro, designer for Music Hall at Radio City, whose trips to Boston to design costumes and the scenery for past and present ballets testify to their long-time friendship.

Walter Piston, chairman of the music division at Harvard, after watching a Wiener performance at the Pops, asked if they might cooperate on a ballet and "The Incredible Flutist" is the result, with the music by Mr. Piston.

Complete Pops Programs for the Week

B. Trans. May 28/38

At the last regular Sunday evening concert of the Symphony Hall Pops tomorrow night, Mozart's Concerto for three pianos will be heard probably for the first time in Boston, with Jesus Maria Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard and Arthur Fiedler (who will conduct from the keyboard) as soloists. Later Mr. Fiedler will conduct the Tschaikovsky Fourth Symphony.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings first performances will be given of a new ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," with music by Walter Pistin, with choreography by Hans Wiener and costumes and decor by Marco Montedoro, of the Radio City Music Hall. The ballet will be danced by Hans Wiener and his dancers. On Wednesday, Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist in MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto. The programs, including that of tonight and Sunday week, follow in detail:

TONIGHT

Polonaise from "Eugene Oniegin"	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "The Bartered Bride"	Smetana
Minute Waltz	Chopin
Ballet Music from "Faust"	Gounod
"Les Preludes." Symphonic Poem	Liszt
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Girls of Baden" Waltzes	Komzak
Prayer of Thanksgiving	Valerius-Kremser
Entrance of the Gladiators	Kucik

SUNDAY EVENING

Overture to "Russian and Lumdilla"	Glinka
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36	Tchaikovsky
Concerto in F major for Three Pianos and Orchestra	Mozart
Soloists: Jesus Maria Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard, Arthur Fiedler
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner

MONDAY EVENING

March, "Stars and Stripes"	Sousa
Ballet Suite	Rameau-Mottl
"Hansel and Gretel," Sandman's Song and Prayer	Humperdinck
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Overture to "Euryanthe"	Weber
"Blue Danube" Waltzes	Strauss
American Fantasy	Herbert
"The Incredible Flutist," a Dance Play (First performance)	Piston
Hans Wiener And His Dancers with Orchestra

TUESDAY EVENING

Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia"	Delibes
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Introduction to Act III, "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg"	Wagner
Finale from the Suite "Cinderella"	Eric Coates
Austrian Peasant Dances	Schonherr
Largo from "Xerxes"	Handel
"Pathetic" Symphony, No. 6: Allegro molto vivace	Tchaikovsky
"The Incredible Flutist," a Dance Play	Piston
Hans Wiener And His Dancers with Orchestra

WEDNESDAY EVENING

Entrance of the Boyards	Halvorsen
Finlandia, "Symphonic Poem"	Sibelius
Song to the Evening Star, from "Tannhaeuser"	Wagner
Solo trombone, Jacob Raichman
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Hungarian March, "Rakoczy"	Berlois
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades"	Offenbach
"The Ride of the Valkyries"	Wagner
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23	MacDowell
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
Songs with Orchestra: Framingham State Teachers College Glee Club. Edward F. Gilday, Jr., M. A. Director.
"Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring"	Bach
"How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place," from "A German Requiem"	Brahms
Seraphic Song ("Reve Angelique")	Rubinstein

THURSDAY EVENING

March from the "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
Overture to "Der Freischultz"	Weber
"Silver Shadows," Tango	Repper
"La Tosca," Fantasia	Puccini
"Scheherazade," Finale	Rimsky-Korsakov
Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg"	Wagner
Overture to "Sakuntala"	Goldmark
"The Skaters," Waltz	Waldteufel
Donkey Song from "The Firefly"	Friml
Aragonaise from "The Cid"	Massenet

FRIDAY EVENING

March, "Under the Double Eagle"	J. F. Wagner
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Air on the G string, for String Orchestra	Bach-Wilhelmj
Soviet Iron Works	Mossolov
Gilbert and Sullivan Favorites	Arranged by Seredy
Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda"	Ponchielli
"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Fantasy	Churchill-Bodge
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
"Strike Up the Band"	Gershwin

SATURDAY EVENING

Coronation March from "The Prophet"	Meyerbeer
Largo from the "New World" Symphony	Dvorak
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
"The Ride of the Valkyries"	Wagner
Peer Gynt Suite No. 1	Grieg
The Girl with the Flaxen Hair	Debussy
Bolero	Ravel
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes	Strauss
"The Toy Trumpet"	Scott
Solo Trumpet, Roger Voisin
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Stein Song

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Morning Telegraph
MAY 31 1938

Six members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra and one from the Boston Symphony will be in the orchestra conducted by Macklin Marrow for "The Two Bouquets," which opens tonight at the Windsor Theater. The score of the operetta sponsored by Marc Connelly in association with Bela Blau, was contributed by a score of Victorian composers, including Offenbach, Gounod and Balfe. The authors, Eleanor and Herbert Farjeon, have written new lyrics to the melodies, and forty-three different musical numbers are listed on "The Two Bouquets" musical program.

ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT
MAY 29 1938

ANOTHER of summer's good signs is the Berkshire Festival, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are the traditional features. The concerts are given at picturesque "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthrone lived and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales."

Globe May 31/38

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Hans Wiener at Pops

Hans Wiener and Walter Piston shared honors at last evening's Pop Concert in the first performance of "The Incredible Flutist," choregraphy by Mr. Wiener and music by Prof. Piston. Arthur Fiedler conducted.

This dance play, as Mr. Wiener prefers to call his ballet, is good theatre. Mr. Wiener, always at his best in comedy, has taken a light, little theme and treated it effervescently. He has played with the imaginative, the humorous, and the boy-meets-girls idea and developed a fantasy which boasts much speedy action, plenty of color and a great deal of sparkle.

Walter Piston, for his part, has composed a very merry score that is nostalgic of Russian airs, circus marches and Strauss waltzes. It, too, never lags in interest, but narrates—sometimes tersely and other times with the proper amount of sentiment—many moods. This music contains much that is melodious and much that is brilliant and, with a little cutting, should prove a delightful concert piece.

The choregraphy describes the prowess of a flutist who arrives before a shop filled with customers and proceeds to charm the snake, the snake dancer and one of the shopkeeper's daughters. The daughter and the flutist make a date and, when they meet to keep their tryst, they find that the other three daughters and the shopkeeper, too, have made arrangements each to meet a beloved one. Drama stalks in at this point, but thanks to the skill of the flutist, all ends happily.

Hans Wiener as the flutist, Estelle Kibbe as the daughter and Anita Rafey as the snake dancer had the leading roles. They were supported by a large cast.

The colorful costumes and decorations were designed by Marco Montedoro, who came on from New York for the occasion.

WIENER DANCERS AT POPS

The second and last performance of Walter Piston's Ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. The program follows:

Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia," Delibes; introduction to "Mignon," Thomas; introduction to Act III, "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; finale from the Suite "Cinderella," Eric Coates; Austrian Peasant Dances, Schonherr; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; "Pathetic" Symphony, No. 16; Allegro molto vivace, Tchaikovsky; "The Incredible Flutist," a dance play, Piston; Hans Wiener and his dancers with orchestra.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

26, 1938 = B. Trans. May

COMPOSER WITH CONDUCTOR

(Egan photo)

MISS PEGGY STUART

Is shown above with Arthur Fiedler going over "Night Froth, A Miniature Rhapsody," her own composition, which will be played at tonight's Pop Concert in Symphony Hall. Miss Stuart, daughter of Willoughby H. Stuart Jr. of Cambridge, will be the guest soloist. Photo shows her in pre-rehearsal conference with Conductor Arthur Fiedler. While he tries a piano passage, she indicates a place in the orchestral part which she wishes to have given special treatment.

Complete Pops Programs for the Week

B. Trans. May 28/38

At the last regular Sunday evening concert of the Symphony Hall Pops tomorrow night, Mozart's Concerto for three pianos will be heard probably for the first time in Boston, with Jesus Maria Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard and Arthur Fiedler (who will conduct from the keyboard) as soloists. Later Mr. Fiedler will conduct the Tschaikovsky Fourth Symphony.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings first performances will be given of a new ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," with music by Walter Pistin, with choreography by Hans Wiener and costumes and decor by Marco Montedoro, of the Radio City Music Hall. The ballet will be danced by Hans Wiener and his dancers. On Wednesday, Jesus Maria Sanroma will be soloist in MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto. The programs, including that of tonight and Sunday week, follow in detail:

TONIGHT

Polonaise from "Eugene Oniegin" Tchaikovsky
Overture to "The Bartered Bride" Smetana
Minute Waltz .... Chopin
Ballet Music from "Faust" ...... Gounod
"Les Preludes." Symphonic Poem ... Liszt
Rhapsody in Blue .... Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Girls of Baden" Waltzes .... Komzak
Prayer of Thanksgiving . Valerius-Kremser
Entrance of the Gladiators .... Fucik

SUNDAY EVENING

Overture to "Russlan and Lumdilla" Glinka
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36 Tchaikovsky
Concerto in F major for Three Pianos and Orchestra .... Mozart
Soloists: Jesus Maria Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard, Arthur Fiedler
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" ... Wagner

MONDAY EVENING

March, "Stars and Stripes" ...... Sousa
Ballet Suite .... Rameau-Mottl
"Hansel and Gretel," Sandman's Song and Prayer .... Humperdinck
Overture to "William Tell" ...... Rossini
Overture to "Euryanthe" .... Weber
"Blue Danube" Waltzes .... Strauss
American Fantasy .... Herbert
"The Incredible Flutist," a Dance Play (First performance) .... Piston
Hans Wiener
And His Dancers with Orchestra

TUESDAY EVENING

Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia" Delibes
Overture to "Mignon" .... Thomas
Introduction to Act III, "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg" .... Wagner
Finale from the Suite "Cinderella" Eric Coates
Austrian Peasant Dances ...... Schonherr
Largo from "Xerxes" .... Handel
"Pathetic" Symphony, No. 6: Allegro molto vivace .... Tchaikovsky
"The Incredible Flutist," a Dance Play Piston
Hans Wiener
And His Dancers with Orchestra

WEDNESDAY EVENING

Entrance of the Boyards .... Halvorsen
Finlandia, "Symphonic Poem" .... Sibelius
Song to the Evening Star, from "Tannhaeuser" .... Wagner
Solo trombone, Jacob Raichman
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" ..... Berlois
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" Offenbach
"The Ride of the Valkyries" ...... Wagner
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23 .... MacDowell
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
Songs with Orchestra:
Framingham State Teachers College Glee Club. Edward F. Gilday, Jr., M. A. Director.
"Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" .... Bach
"How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place," from "A German Requiem" .. Brahms
Seraphic Song ("Reve Angelique") Rubinstein

THURSDAY EVENING

March from the "Queen of Sheba" . Gounod
Overture to "Der Freischultz" .... Weber
"Silver Shadows," Tango .... Repper
"La Tosca," Fantasia .... Puccini
"Scheherazade," Finale . Rimsky-Korsakov
Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg" .... Wagner
Overture to "Sakuntala" ...... Goldmark
"The Skaters," Waltz .... Waldteufel
Donkey Song from "The Firefly" .... Friml
Aragonaise from "The Cid" .... Massenet

FRIDAY EVENING

March, "Under the Double Eagle" J. F. Wagner
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Air on the G string, for String Orchestra .... Bach-Wilhelmj
Soviet Iron Works .... Mossolov
Gilbert and Sullivan Favorites Arranged by Seredy
Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" .... Mendelssohn
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda" .... Ponchielli
"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Fantasy .... Churchill-Bodge
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango .... Gade
"Strike Up the Band" .... Gershwin

SATURDAY EVENING

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Largo from the "New World" Symphony .... Dvorak
Liebestraum .... Liszt-Herbert
"The Ride of the Valkyries" ...... Wagner
Peer Gynt Suite No. 1 .... Grieg
The Girl with the Flaxen Hair ... Debussy
Bolero .... Ravel
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes .... Strauss
"The Toy Trumpet" .... Scott
Solo Trumpet, Roger Voisin
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Stein Song

NEW YORK, N. Y.
Morning Telegraph
MAY 31 1938

Six members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra and one from the Boston Symphony will be in the orchestra conducted by Macklin Marrow for "The Two Bouquets," which opens tonight at the Windsor Theater. The score of the operetta sponsored by Marc Connelly in association with Bela Blau, was contributed by a score of Victorian composers, including Offenbach, Gounod and Balfe. The authors, Eleanor and Herbert Farjeon, have written new lyrics to the melodies, and forty-three different musical numbers are listed on "The Two Bouquets" musical program.

---

nist Appears as a Film Star

Monitor - May 26/38

Hans Wiener

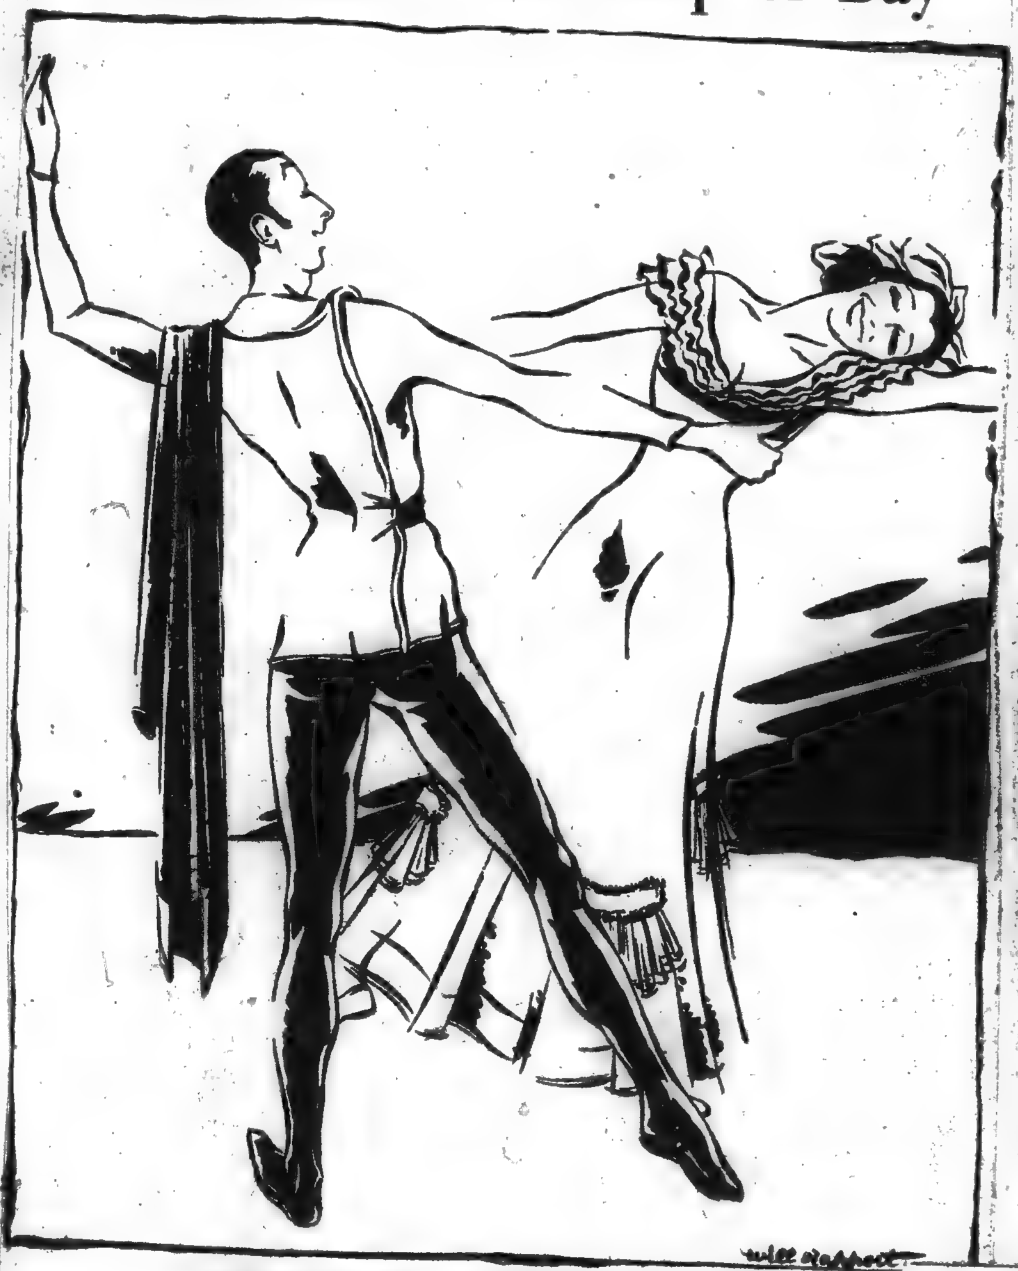
In the Title Role of His New Ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," With Music by Walter Piston, Which Will Be Presented at the Pops on Monday and Tuesday Evenings

---

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCR

al --- Pop Comment on

'From Dawn 'Til Peep of Day'



HANS WIENER AND ESTELLE KIBBE

In the Love Duet from "The Incredible Flutist," the da by Hans Wiener, with music by Walter Piston, which performed Monday and Tuesday evenings at the Pop

---

Sketches for a Ballet

On view in the foyer at Symphony Hall are some sketches by Marco Montedoro of costumes to be worn in the ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," to be presented by the Hans Wiener dancers at the Pop Concerts of Monday and Tuesday.

Each costume characterizes a type, with the exaggerations permitted in the theater; each costume is an item in a larger pattern which is characterized not alone by color and accents, but by lines which move and flow, hesitate and accelerate in the progress of the dance. There is, no doubt, in the thought of the designer some unifying motive of color or accent which harmonizes these varied garments. Seeing them individually, we are likely to be too analytical, not sufficiently detached.

"The Incredible Flutist" gives scope to the designer with its varied cast of characters—an astrologer, a circus owner, a juggler, a snake dancer, vendors. Caricature, exoticism, grace are implied. Montedoro does not ignore detail, nor does he treat it too precisely Yet he designs costumes which have a definite cut and style, and are not mere swathes, or sheaths of doubtful color and consistency. His is a more literal, more realistic costuming which has identity and special interest and is not subordinated to the complete authority of the dance. D. A.

Trav.

Wiener with Pops Monday-Tuesday

B. Trans. May 28/38

Hans Wiener, whose ballet "The Incredible Flutist" is to be given at the Pops, Symphony Hall, next Monday and Tuesday evenings, lives up to the title role he dances. His ability to make everyone dance to his piping is almost incredible, figuratively speaking, and it is his background and education and special executive gifts which make it possible for him to present an outstanding professional performance each year on the stage of Symphony Hall, and to call into play even some of the youngest of his pupils when children's roles are required.

Known in New England and New York and his native Vienna as one of the leading exponents of the contemporary dance, Mr. Wiener knows not only his own subject, but music, literature, art, history and folk customs. His ability as a designer has formed a strong bond with Marco Montedoro, designer for Music Hall at Radio City, whose trips to Boston to design costumes and the scenery for past and present ballets testify to their long-time friendship.

Walter Piston, chairman of the music division at Harvard, after watching a Wiener performance at the Pops, asked if they might cooperate on a ballet and "The Incredible Flutist" is the result, with the music by Mr. Piston.

ASHLAND, KY.
INDEPENDENT
MAY 29 1938

ANOTHER of summer's good signs is the Berkshire Festival, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are the traditional features. The concerts are given at picturesque "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthrone lived and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales."

USIC

ONY HALL

ener at Pops

May 31/38

Wiener and Walter Piston honors at last evening's Pop oncert in the first performance of "The Incredible Flutist," choregraphy by Mr. Wiener and music by Prof. Piston. Arthur Fiedler conducted.

This dance play, as Mr. Wiener prefers to call his ballet, is good theatre. Mr. Wiener, always at his best in comedy, has taken a light, little theme and treated it effervescently. He has played with the imaginative, the humorous, and the boy-meets-girls idea and developed a fantasy which boasts much speedy action, plenty of color and a great deal of sparkle.

Walter Piston, for his part, has composed a very merry score that is nostalgic of Russian airs, circus marches and Strauss waltzes. It, too, never lags in interest, but narrates—sometimes tersely and other times with the proper amount of sentiment—many moods. This music contains much that is melodious and much that is brilliant and, with a little cutting, should prove a delightful concert piece.

The choregraphy describes the prowess of a flutist who arrives before a shop filled with customers and proceeds to charm the snake, the snake dancer and one of the shopkeeper's daughters. The daughter and the flutist make a date and, when they meet to keep their tryst, they find that the other three daughters and the shopkeeper, too, have made arrangements each to meet a beloved one. Drama stalks in at this point, but thanks to the skill of the flutist, all ends happily.

Hans Wiener as the flutist, Estelle Kibbe as the daughter and Anita Rafey as the snake dancer had the leading roles. They were supported by a large cast.

The colorful costumes and decorations were designed by Marco Montedoro, who came on from New York for the occasion.

WIENER DANCERS AT POPS

The second and last performance of Walter Piston's Ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," will be given at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tonight, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. The program follows:

Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia," Delibes; introduction to "Mignon," Thomas; introduction to Act III, "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; finale from the Suite "Cinderella," Eric Coates; Austrian Peasant Dances, Schonherr; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; "Pathetic" Symphony, No. 16: Allegro molto vivace, Tchaikovsky; "The Incredible Flutist," a dance play, Piston; Hans Wiener and his dancers with orchestra.

Reorganized Symphony Orchestra At Houston Successful in Debut

DALLAS TIMES HERALD: TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1937

By JOHN WILLIAM ROGERS

Houston, Nov. 9.—What appears to be a new era of symphonic music in Texas had its beginning last evening in the season's opening concert of the Houston Symphony Orchestra. The town, as if sensing something exciting in the air, turned out some 3,500 persons, the largest symphony audience in Houston's history, to hear it, and they were not disappointed.

The symphony last season and this, under the direction of Ernst Hoffmann, has been undergoing some drastic reorganization. In spite of local protests, a dozen of the least able players were dropped from the roll and to strengthen the weakest chairs, proverbially feeble in orchestras of this part of the world, eleven musicians of recognized standing were imported from Boston and other musical centers.

Twenty hours of rehearsal were given to one of the most difficult programs ever essayed by the orchestra here, Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," Strauss' "Don Juan," Charbrier's "Spanish Rhapsody," and Rachmaninoff's "Second Symphony."

As if too conscious of what was expected of them, the musicians started off somewhat timidly but quickly gained confidence and before the intermission was reached the audience was brought to a high enthusiasm by genuinely effective and frequently brilliant playing.

Mr. Hoffmann is a conductor conspicuously lacking in that magnetic theatricality which is frequently found in virtuosos of the podium, but he is a musician of the most solid attainments, poised and able to keep his players on their mettle. One felt at once his competence in the excellent balance apparent in his choirs and both his phrasing and dynamic shading remained consistently impressive. The playing of his seventy-odd musicians brought Houston to what is probably one of the most spectacular ovations which the orchestra has ever received.

The whole musical colony of the city is noticeably enthusiastic about the marked improvement in its symphony. That the orchestra has made such strides is due, of course, to a wide and general support of its new and more ambitious aims, but as is always the case, one individual has been the spearhead driving toward the new accomplishments, and that is the president of the organization, Walter H. Walne, formerly of Dallas, who, during the months preceding this auspicious opening, has been thinking, talking, eating and sleeping the Houston Symphony Orchestra.

THE SYMPHONY TRIUMPHS

THE HOUSTON POST: WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1937

HAVING captured commercial and industrial leadership of Texas, Houston is making rapid progress toward supremacy in another field which will bring the city even more fame than a port teeming with the commerce of the world and busy industries pouring smoke into the Texas skies.

The City Auditorium filled nearly to capacity with lovers of good music last Monday night symbolized a cultural awakening in the community. It indicated that Houston not only is a place where one may make money but a city beginning to offer opportunities for spiritual enjoyment which make life richer, more worthwhile.

The Houston Symphony Orchestra, under the skillful leadership of Conductor Ernst Hoffmann, richly earned the triumphal reception it received at the hands of the largest audience the Symphony has attracted. It gave a remarkably polished performance for an opening concert. It is no longer necessary to call it a promising organization. It has taken its place definitely among the great symphonies of America.

That is a triumph for Mr. Hoffmann and the musicians he has assembled. It also is a great victory for the small group of Houston men and women who had the courage to revive the Symphony during a gloomy period of Nationwide depression, who guided it through its lean and difficult years, who saw their faith justified this week by a performance that would have been called creditable in Boston, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia or Detroit.

Particularly gratifying was the character of the audience that heard the opening concert of this new season. Social leaders were there in great numbers, but in the audience also were working men and women attracted by the appeal of fine music which speaks a universal language. The Symphony, it is evident, is enriching the cultural life of all Houston. It is not merely an expensive plaything of the very wealthy or a stage setting against which social functions may be staged. It is a cultural institution within reach of every lover of good music, and therein lies its strength and its assurance of permanence.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1937

Houston Orchestra Plays Under a Boston Conductor

Beginning of the Second Year of Ernst Hoffmann with a Reorganized Band

By Moses Smith

HOUSTON, Tex. (By Air Mail) —The relative character of the musical season is well illustrated by the concert here on Monday evening, when Ernst Hoffmann, familiar figure to Bostonians, began his second season in charge of the Houston Symphony Orchestra. Our so-called serious musical endeavors in the Northeast are suspended during the warm weather months, when, it is assumed, no one wants to listen to a "heavy" program. Here, in the deep South, the calendar is observed in the same way, except that the season of arts is likely to begin even later. Yet the November day here was as warm as the average midsummer day in Boston. And an evening like the one on which a couple of thousand Bostonians might listen to a Pop program in Symphony Hall with an obbligato of beer and pretzels finds about 4000 residents of Houston and adjacent Texas communities crowded into the Municipal Auditorium to hear a program of music by Weber, Richard Strauss, Chabrier and Rachmaninov.

It is an audience and a scene that interest the visitor. It assembles early in a huge theater that was never intended to be a concert hall, as its curious assortment of reverberations and dead spots has made clear in rehearsal and will reconfirm in the concert to come. "Society" is evidently out in force; and as each motor car disgorges an important family, the members are greeted with the exploding flash bulbs of the newspaper photographers, while "society" editors make rapid notes. The opening concert of the symphonic season takes on, in fact, something of the surface glamour of a movie premier in Hollywood; or the beginning of an opera season at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York or, closer home, the Boston Opera House. Another year or two and the opening symphonic matinee of the season in Symphony Hall will be equally glamorous. The photographers have already discovered it.

The rest of this Houston audience like audiences elsewhere, is you-and-me. There is a sprinkling of evening clothes in the seats before and behind the circle of boxes. But most of the patrons come in the summer attire of the street. Children are rather more numerous than at Boston evening concerts. The average age, too, of the audience is somewhat below that of a Boston Symphony Orchestra audience.

On the whole, it was a surprisingly attentive and well-behaved audience. It broke out into applause as the main portion of the Weber-Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance" was completed and before the musicians could resume with the epilogue. But it is a fair guess that the far more experienced listeners of the Boston concerts would not refrain entirely from the same mistaken interruption. This Houston audience, on the other hand, sat quietly through the lengths and ardors of "Don Juan" by Strauss. And not a handclap disturbed the desired silence between movements of the extensive and discursive Symphony in E minor by Rachmaninov.

But it was an audience which, whatever its previous acquaintance with symphonic music, clearly knew what it liked. The applause following the performance of the Weber waltz was perfunctory. It was a little warmer after "Don Juan," although still somewhat tentative. But Chabrier's "Espana," which ended the first half of the program, evoked the first really excited demonstration. At the close of the final number, Rachmaninov's Symphony, which might have been expected to leave most people here cold, the applause was longest and loudest and was even mingled with some cheers. This was a heartening thing for the visitor from the North and East; and so, too, was the obvious demonstration of the audience's affection for the conductor.

The program was played by an orchestra of about seventy musicians that had been assembled partly from the existing nucleus of the Houston Symphony Orchestra and partly from musicians that Mr. Hoffmann had engaged from out of town, particularly Boston. The process of reorganization naturally has not been an easy one, but its account may be postponed for another day. The result is that the present personnel is, musician for musician, about as good as—perhaps slightly better than—the People's Symphony Orchestra of Boston in its best days. It has a strikingly large representation of women, of whom there are twelve.

On the basis of the single concert and two of the preceding rehearsals that this writer was able to hear and watch, it may be said that the general standard of performance, at the beginning of Mr. Hoffmann's second season in charge, is at least as good as that of the People's Symphony at its best. The present Houston Orchestra may lack some of the fire of the People's Orchestra when Fabian Sevitzky was its conductor. This lack is due partly to the varying temperaments of the two conductors and partly to Mr. Hoffmann's method of procedure, which demands slow, careful, painstaking preparation and instruction of the musicians before they be permitted to take wing.

As it is, each of the instrumental sections of the Houston Orchestra has a degree of competence that insures the reproduction of the more important surface substance of the various scores. The notes are correctly played, in time and usually in tune (An understandable nervousness at the beginning of the concert produced some effect on the intonation of the wood-winds.) The most proficient section is naturally the strings. But there are capable players among the wood-winds; and their ensemble will naturally improve as the conductor devotes to them attention he has lavished, thus far this season, on the strings. The brass section was surprisingly reliable, if not agile; while its tone-quality was remarkably pure and even beautiful, practically on a par with that heard at the concerts of the big eastern orchestras. The latter fact is largely due, no doubt, to the kind of instruments that Mr. Hoffmann has induced the members of the trumpet and trombone sections to use; and in addition, of course, to his own careful up-building of the players' abilities.

The Weber waltz was least well performed, though it was superficially the easiest; perhaps because the musicians were not at ease. The Strauss tone-poem came off surprisingly clear in a performance which, technically and musically, could be favorably compared with that which the present writer heard a few nights earlier at the hands of the reorganized Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra under Otto Klemperer. The best, and on the whole, most really symphonic playing of the evening came in the performance of the Rachmaninov Symphony, when the musicians were presumably most relaxed. The tone-quality of the brass was here lovely; and the wood-wind section had improved notably.

How much better the Orchestra plays now than it did when Mr. Hoffmann first took charge a little more than a year ago a stranger in town cannot say. Nor can he predict how well the replacements that have been made this season will eventually be fused in the symphonic ensemble. But the answers may very likely be made from inferences. This year's opening program was more difficult than the patchwork collection that opened last season. And one who has watched Mr. Hoffmann through the stages of his remarkable transformation of a Boston WPA Orchestra knows that he is slow to give his musicians rein. It is a fair assumption, where a youthful orchestra and Mr. Hoffmann are concerned, that the more difficult the program the orchestra is assigned, the greater its competence.

Mr. Hoffmann's way with the several numbers is of less concern to Bostonians at the moment, partly because it is largely familiar from his appearances in Boston and largely because it is to a considerable degree determined by the facility of his musicians. Thus, "Espana" was played much too slowly; but it was almost obvious that Mr. Hoffmann was determined to get precision at the expense of excitement. The same reason could not have operated in the case of the Weber waltz, because here Mr. Hoffmann's variations in tempo made the music harder for the musicians to play. Most of us are accustomed to a more straightforward presentation, which the present writer would have preferred. Little or no fault could be found with Mr. Hoffmann's version of "Don Juan," which seems to be the result of careful and sympathetic study. And the minor changes of pace employed in the case of the Rachmaninov Symphony were both less important and more logical than in the case of Weber's music. The symphony's broad outlines, on the other hand, were admirably shaped by the conductor.

A review of a single concert by the present Houston Orchestra can scarcely indicate the full nature and variety of the many problems—musical, administrative and political—with which Mr. Hoffman has had to deal. Nor can it contain more than a passing reference to the zeal, energy and ability with which a group of Houston citizens, under the dynamic leadership of Walter H. Walne, have undertaken to build a symphony orchestra worthy of the name. The telling of these things and others must wait for another day.

Symphony Gives Inspired Concert of Favorites

Reprinted From The Houston Post, Feb. 8, 1938

By HUBERT ROUSSEL

THE sort of concert the Houston Symphony orchestra has been threatening to play all year was delivered at the City Auditorium Monday night, when it struck an inspired brilliance and held it for two dramatic and memorable hours. During that time it accomplished, by any standards applying to an orchestra of its age and experience, a magnificent performance of a program headed by Dvorak's "New World Symphony."

There have been many occasions when it seemed that Houston's most important musical unit was about to "arrive" and assume the stature as well as the name of a symphonic ensemble. The night of Feb. 7, 1938, may be reckoned in future as the date of this coming of age. Whatever the case, it was the happiest yet for those who have watched for the metamorphosis.

Under the direction of Ernst Hoffmann, whose indefatigable efforts to achieve balance of tone are beginning to bear rich fruit, the orchestra played like a symphony. It had feeling and understanding and fluency. It had restraint when restraint was the means of accentuating the beauty of Dvorak's scherzo, and it had vigor and cleanness and assurance of attack that realized the true value of climaxes. The color of the music was all there.

* * *

BUT more impressive than anything else was the transparency of the orchestra's tone. It is a difficult thing to explain with the ordinary expressions of musical comment, because when such fineness of balance occurs it is sensed rather than felt through the mind. Perhaps the best method is to say that for seven years the Houston Symphony's patrons have been listening to the orchestra play. Monday night a surprised audience heard the composers for the first time from beginning to end of a program.

It was apparent something was up from the outset. Such a worn offering as Schubert's "March Militaire," to which at least the past couple of generations of Americans have trudged the steps of the schoolhouse, is not a piece that would be expected to open a program with excitement. But the orchestra gave it with a flourish and zest that had tardy arrivals marching down to their seats like zouaves.

If any were still later, they must have come in like skulking cadavers. The next number was Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre," which got a finished and expressive performance. Especially effective was the off-key fiddling of Concertmaster Joseph Gallo, who handeld the grisly theme of the work with a fullness that left nothing to be desired.

But the real pitch of the evening was struck in the two following pieces, Sibelius' "Valse Triste" and "Finlandia." Your present reporter has heard practically every concert of the Symphony since 1930, and I have never known it to play as long at such a level as it reached in the waltz and the tone poem.

* * *

SAY they are not the greatest of music. Say they are not the best of Sibelius. It didn't matter at all when these moments arrived in the concert. The waltz was intoned with a ghostly and immaterial beauty that gave it new meaning and value, and this led to some even more thrilling achievements in the longer piece.

Hoffmann gave the Sibelius tonepoem an interpretation decidedly unusual, in that he failed to retard at all for the beautiful hymn-like song for the woods that occurs midway of this passionate expression of patriotism. As a matter of fact, Sibelius wrote it to be given in tempo; conductors have established a tradition of performing it slowly.

The natural result was a large doubt that the following climax could be reached with full dramatic effect, but it was done and done grandly with a crescendo that must have loosed the plaster of the building. It deserved the ovation it brought for conductor and players.

* * *

THE Dvorak symphony followed as the second half of the program. No principal work for the orchestra wears better than this poignant and inexhaustibly appealing selection, and there must have been many a tight throat in the audience before the brasses had done sounding the haunting chords that set the lovely adagio section in motion.

The largo, which of course everybody was waiting for, was voiced without the syrupy sentimentality that so often creeps into the playing of this movement, and became a thing to be remembered with joy. The same could be said of the scherzo, which was technically the best work of the evening.

If any slippage occurred, it was in the closing allegro of the symphony, which lacked the sureness of the earlier sections. But even so, it wound up with a flourish that brought the orchestra back to a high level.

Especially gratifying was the fact that this best of the season's performances was heard by an audience of unusual size. After the last note, it remained long in its seats to give Hoffmann and his players the most generous and enthusiastic applause they have ever received. It was richly deserved.

ERNST HOFFMANN

Conductor—Houston Symphony Orchestra

EUROPEAN PRESS

BERLIN

"Ernst Hoffmann is a well schooled musician with everything at his command. He knows exactly what he wants and has the ability to impart his ideas to the orchestra."—Allgemeine Musikzeitung

"He is a conductor of solid background who understands his metier."—Berliner Tageblatt

"He wins the audience with the care, clarity and clean cut quality with which he brings out the essentials of the music."—Kreuz Zeitung

MUNICH

"The conductor, who proved to be a brilliant musician and a sure, poised leader, interpreted Schumann's Spring Symphonie with all its youthful happy freshness."—Münchener Neueste Nachrichten

"Ernst Hoffmann proved to have a fine conducting talent. He showed a sure command and knowledge of the music played, added to an invigorating zest."—Münchener Zeitung

"He is an orchestral leader with qualities that command respect."—Münchener Post

VIENNA

"A musician possessed of excellent qualities as a conductor. His emotions are held in control and he is accurate in his interpretations."—Der Tag

"The American orchestral leader, Ernst Hoffmann who is now associated with Breslau Opera, is a poised, controlled and capable conductor."—Arbeiter Zeitung

BRESLAU

"One must admit that he understands how to interpret Verdi. The effects were produced without losing the melodic line. The orchestra performed with remarkable discretion and all the singers could be understood easily. The performance was marked by both force and finesse."—Breslauer Zeitung

POSEN

"The young conductor has a thorough knowledge of his business and possesses a strong dramatic feeling. Without resorting to any posing or overemphasis, he holds the complete attention of the audience. His interpretations are plastic and reveal esthetic sensibilities. We have become acquainted with an earnest and interesting personality whom we hope to see more of."—Kurjer Poznanski

As Conductor of the Boston Commonwealth Symphony

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT

"Mr. Hoffmann conducts Wagner in fine style. His readings graciously avoid overstatement."

"Aside from any other virtues that Mr. Hoffmann's presentation may have had—and they were numerous—the accuracy and flexibility of the orchestra, which must be largely credited to his rehearsing technique, were in themselves exciting."

"The musicianship of Mr. Hoffmann insures genuinely artistic results. The performances of the Commonwealth Orchestra are thoroughly professional."

"Mr. Hoffmann's conducting was marked by assurance, taste, vivacity and completeness of control over his players."

BOSTON HERALD

"It is fortunate that so excellent a musician as Mr. Hoffmann has been placed in charge of the Commonwealth Orchestra here."

"The performance of Madame Butterfly at the Boston Opera House last evening was a most convincing demonstration of Ernst Hoffmann's ability as a conductor of opera. Certainly the 2700 people present gave every indication of approval. Mr. Hoffmann led his forces through a moving and effective interpretation."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

"Last night's performance of Brahms D Major Symphony was remarkable for its almost complete technical security and precision, its range of dynamic shading, its spirit. Mr. Hoffmann's reading of the work was excellently planned, broadly and in detail."

The career of ERNST HOFFMANN, who now occupies the podium of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, began at Harvard University, where as an undergraduate he directed the university orchestra.

He was born in Boston, the son of a first violinist of the Boston Symphony. He first attended Boston Latin School and entered Harvard at the age of fourteen, graduating cum laude at eighteen. After serving a year as first violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra he went to Germany to study conducting at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik. A year later, in 1922, he was engaged as assistant conductor at the Breslau Opera House, becoming the regular conductor there in 1924. He is one of the few Americans who have held such a post in Germany. He remained in Breslau until 1934, commanding an orchestra of 120 men and performing every kind of opera,—Italian, French, German and Russian—including such widely varied composers as Mozart, Wagner, Verdi, Strauss, Donizetti, Puccini and Humperdinck. He also appeared as guest conductor of the Berlin, Vienna, Munich and Posen Symphony Orchestras.

Returning to the United States in 1934, Hoffmann first appeared at the Lewisohn Stadium in New York. Later he was asked to head the newly formed Commonwealth Symphony Orchestra in Boston. He developed this group of 95 men into such a highly professional body that he attracted widespread attention and was invited to become regular conductor of the Houston Symphony Orchestra.

Management
NBC ARTISTS SERVICE

RCA Bldg., New York
George Engles, Managing Director

PRINTED IN U. S. A.

GALVESTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE
Galveston, Texas
ORGANIZED 1845
"The Gateway of the Southwest"

OFFICE OF PRESIDENT

February 28, 1938

Mr. Walter H. Walne, President
Houston Symphony Orchestra
Esperson Bldg.
Houston, Texas

My dear Walter:

The orchestra has come and gone, and I find myself somewhat in a fog, attempting to realize that such an organization is any closer than New York City or Boston.

It has been two years since I last heard this organization, and had I not heard, would not have believed the change could have been so marked.

You are indeed fortunate to have such a conductor as Mr. Hoffman. To witness his reading of the scores and the interpretation which he displayes is indeed most refreshing. His beat is exceedingly clear and distinct, which is somewhat unusual; but most impressive is his appeal to his men for the various effects desired. So many conductors convey the impression of a demand. Not so with Hoffman. His desire is obtained by sympathetic request, which after all, in either business or music, obtains the best results. His men seem to sense this feeling, and they respond accordingly. Their efforts being voluntary, rather than compulsory, is in my opinion the principal reason for the beautiful effects, which he obtains with so much feeling.

Another most refreshing attribute, which he possesses, is a constant tempo, which is not prevalent in so many conductors. Not during a single passage of any number did his tempo drag. If a comment at all was forthcoming, it would be that his tempo in the "Meditation" from Thais was slightly fast, expecially in some passages.

Aside from the joy of hearing the orchestra, it afforded me a great deal of personal pleasure to fraternize with some five or six of the old original crowd, who were in the Symphony when I sang with them in 1915 under Blitz at the old Majestic Theater on Texas Avenue.

Let me again express to you how much happiness and pleasure was experienced by all who were present Friday night, and I sincerely trust we may have a repitition of this most joyous occasion in the near future.

Sincerely yours,

AJD/W

HOUSTON SYMPHONY SOCIETY

Financial Statement for the Fiscal Year ending April 30, 1938

RECEIPTS:

Sale of season tickets	$17,355.13
Donations	16,938.00
Single admissions to 6 subscription concerts	1,616.60
" " " 5 popular concerts	1,248.05
" " " 4 children's concerts	1,436.10
For 5 extra concerts or other performances in and out of Houston	2,308.87
Admission to 5 serenade concerts	687.00
Program Advertising 1937-38	2,780.80
Program Advertising 1936-37	306.39
Miscellaneous Items	470.71
Total receipts for the year		$45,147.65

DISBURSEMENTS:

Salaries of Musicians and Conductor	$32,363.41
Guest Artists	950.00
Salaries paid office employees and publicity writers	2,599.00
Incidentals	7,976.68
		$43,890.09
Balance cash on hand		$ 1,257.56
" due on unpaid donations		685.00
" " " season ticket sales		159.50
" " " Program Advertising		460.50
Total in cash and accounts due		$ 2,562.56

DETAIL OF INCIDENTAL EXPENSE ITEMS
1937-38

Rental of Music		$ 557,98
Advertising Publicity		920,31
Signs & Posters		149,00
Telephone & Telegraph		240,45
Office Supplies		722,22
Extra Office Help		300,09
Postage		25,00
Programs & Printing		1,260.03
Traveling		369,51
Rental of Auditoriums		629,00
Ushers & Doormen		296,00
Tickets		87,88
Stage Hands		866,50
Sound Service		175,00
Miscellaneous Items		1,377.71
	Total	7,976.68

You saw it in the BOSTON DAILY RECORD Saturday, May 28, 1938   19

61

Applause for Peggy Stuart

Helen Danforth to Have Sunday Birthday Party

By CONSTANCE WINSLOW

WHEN IT COMES TO CAREERS, Peggy Stuart of Vincent Club and Junior League fame will have none of this fluff-fluff business of modelling or poking her dainty nose into social service work. She's got a hard row to hoe in seeking for recognition as author and concert pianist.

SHE WENT UP another rung in the ladder the other evening when she played her own composition at the Newsboys' Pops. "Night Froth" was the title of the pianistic specialty, which, according to Peggy, was "a miniature rhapsody suggestive of a night club." She doesn't seem to lack humor in titling these compositions, playing for an encore one called "The Dodging Bachelor." But it evidently couldn't be applied to the eligible gentleman who squired her to the Ritz roof after the concert. Peggy's citrus yellow chiffon was topped with a cluster of gardenias and a maribou cape. At Symphony Hall Peggy was the center of a large table at which her papa, H. Willoughby Stuart, received many congratulations on his daughter's talents.

PEGGY STUART

Performs at Pops

AT SYMPHONY you were practically beseiged by debs and their student friends forcing a "Boston Blast" on you in behalf of the newsies' summer camp. Nancy Stevens seemed to be the most adventurous of all . . . dashing out to the marquee's end to ply her trade. But a very attractive newsie she made in her powdr blue slipper satin number and gardenias.

B. MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Pops

Globe May 30/38

In a dual role as soloist-conductor, Arthur Fiedler introduced to Boston Mozart's F-major concerto for three pianos and orchestra at the Pops last night. The low hanging candelabra, the clinking glasses and Mr. Fiedler conducting from the piano served to carry the audience back to the days of this concerto's origin when all this was customary.

Mozart wrote the concerto for two of his pupils, the daughters of the Countess Lodron. It is a simple piece, full of Mozartian melodies tossed back and forth between the pianists. Jesus Sanroma, Heinrich Gebhard and Arthur Fiedler as the soloists and the orchestra played it with a perfection probably unknown to Mozart. Though the concerto is a nice bit of theatricals, its worth is marred somewhat by the inequality of the parts. It seems evident that one of the young girls for whom it was written was not an accomplished pianist.

First on the program was the famliar Overture to Russlan and Ludmilla by Glinka. It was followed by Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, notable chiefly for its romantic character and the pizzicato third movement. While it was excellent in detail, the interpretation seemed to one listener to be oversentimentalized.

Mr. Fiedler closed the program with a glorious version of Wagner's prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg." It was truly stirring as those great sounds gushed forth. The audience applauded thunderously and long.

Music Notes from the Field

B. Trans. May 28/38

A book by Aaron Copeland, "What to Listen For in Music," will be published in the fall by Whittlesey House. It will treat the subject of music appreciation from the point of view of the composer rather than the educator, and will be general and suggestive rather than comprehensive.

Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester, has been awarded the Henry Hadley medal of the National Association for American Composers and Conductors for the greatest services to American composers during the last year. Honorable mention was given to Fabien Sevitzky, conductor of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, who has included more than twenty works by American composers on his programs during the past year.

The South Mountain Chamber Music Concerts, founded twenty years ago by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, will begin this year on Sunday afternoon, July 10, at four, in the temple at Pittsfield. The concerts will be given regularly on Sunday afternoons, except during the two weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, when they will take place on Friday afternoons, Aug. 5 and 12. The South Mountain String Quartet will play, made up of Willem Willeke, 'cellist and musical director; Kathleen Parlow and Edward Ideler, violinists, and Conrad Held, violist. Among the assisting performers will be Gunnar Johansen, pianist.

Charles Naginski of New York has been awarded the annual Rome prize in musical composition in a competition under the auspices of the American Academy in Rome. The fellowship, for two years, provides free residence and studio at the academy as well as $1400. Mr. Naginski, who was born in Cairo, Egypt, in 1909, has studied at the Juilliard School and with Roger Sessions. Honorable mention was awarded to William Douglas Denny of Modesto, Calif., a graduate of the University of California.

The first Town Hall Young Artist Award has been made to Rosalyn Tureck, young pianist, who gave a series of six Bach recitals in that auditorium during the season. Miss Tureck's prize will be an engagement in the Town Hall Endowment Series.

The radio broadcasts of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society are growing in favor throughout the country, according to a recent report by Marshall Field, president of the society. Not only have more than 25,000 unsolicited letters been received from listeners, but almost a thousand financial contributions have been made by members of the radio audience.

MUSIC AND

Fiedler Conductor and Piano Soloist at Pops Tonight

For the first time in his nine seasons as conductor of the Pops, Arthur Fiedler will both direct the orchestra and be a piano soloist at the concert in Symphony Hall tonight. He will join Jesus Maria Sanroma and Heinrich Gebhard in playing the solo portions of the Mozart Concerto, in F major, for three pianos.

Events of the week include appearances of Hans Wiener and his group of dancers tomorrow and Tuesday evenings in "The Incredible Flutist," a new ballet written especially for these occasions by Prof. Walter Piston, chairman of the Harvard Music Division and a leading American composer. The choreography was devised by Mr. Wiener, and the costumes and settings were fashioned by Marco Montedoro. On Wednesday evening, J. M. Sanroma will be soloist in the Second Piano Concerto of MacDowell.

These concerts begin at 8:30 in the evening, and are informal. Refreshments are served at the tables on the floor of Symphony Hall, and smoking there is permitted. Tonight will see the last regular Sunday concert of the season, although there will be a special request program June 5, which will be in the nature of a benefit for the Boston Symphony's pension fund. Programs of the week follow:

Tonight—Overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla," Glinka; Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36, Tchaikovsky; Concerto in F major for Three Pianos and Orchestra (K. No. 242), Mozart, soloists: Sanroma, Gebhard, Fiedler; prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner.

Monday—March, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa; Ballet Suite, Rameau-Mottl; "Hansel and Gretel," Sandman's Song, and Prayer, Humperdinck; Overture to "William Tell," Rossini; Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; American Fantasy, Herbert; "The Incredible Flutist," a dance play (first performance), Piston Hans Wiener and his dancers with orchestra.

Tuesday—Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia," Delibes; Overture to "Mignon," Thomas; introduction to Act III, "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; finale from the suite 'Cinderella," Eric Coates; Austrian Peasant Dances, Schonherr; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; "Pathetic" Symphony, No. 6: Allegro molto vivace, Tchaikovsky; "The Incredible Flutist," a dance play, Piston, Hans Wiener and his dancers, with orchestra.

Wednesday. Entrance of the Boyards, Halvorsen; Finlandia, "Symphonic Poem," Sibelius; Song to the Evening Star, from "Tannhauser," solo trombone: Jacob Raichman, Wagner; Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Hungarian March, "Rakoczy," Berlioz; Overture to "Orpheus in Hades," Offenbach; "The Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23, Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma, MacDowell; Songs with Orchestra: Framingham State Teachers College Glee Club, Edward F. Gilday Jr., M. A., director: "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," Bach; "How Lovely is Thy Dwelling Place," from "A German Requiem," Brahms; Seraphic Song (Reve Angelique"), Rubinstein.

Thursday, March from the "Queen of Sheba," Gounod; Overture to "Der Frieschutz," Weber; "Silver Shadows," Tango, Repper; "La Tosca," Fantasia, Puccini; "Scheherazade," Finale, Rimsky-Korsakov; Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; Overture to "Sakuntala," Goldmark; "The Skaters," Waltz, Waldteufel; Donkey Song from "The Firefly," Friml; Aragonaise from "The Cid," Massenet.

Friday—March, "Under the Double Eagle," J. F. Wagner; Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; Air on the G string for string orchestra, Bach-Wilhelmj; Soviet Iron Works, Mossolov; Gilbert and Sullivan Favorites, Arranged by Seredy; Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; Ballet of the Hours, from "La Gioconda," Ponchielli; 'Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Fantasy, Churchill-Bodge; "Jealousy," Gypsy Tango, Gade; "Strike Up the Band," Gershwin.

Saturday—Coronation March from "The Prophet," Meyerbeer; Largo from the "New World" Symphony, Dvorak; "Liebestraum, Liszt-Herbert; "The Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; Peer Gynt Suite No. 1, Grieg; The Girl with the Flaxen Hair, Debussy; Bolero, Ravel; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes, Strauss; "The Toy Trumpet," solo trumpet, Roger Voisin, Scott; Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Stein Song.

Sunday Evening, June 5—Request night, program to be announced.

B. MUSIC

Her. May 30/38

THE POPS

Jesus Maria Sanroma and Heinrich Gebhard, pianists, were the soloists at the Pop concert last night in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler conducted the orchestra in the following program:

Overture to Russlan and Ludmilla.. Glinka
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Opus 36 .... Tchaikovsky
Concerto in F major for three pianos and orchestra (K. no. 242)....... Mozart
Prelude to Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg Wagner

While next Sunday evening's "request night" at the Pops will be the last Sunday concert of the season, last night's program was the last of the more or less serious Sunday evening concerts. These audiences as a rule are much more attentive to the music, and there is less clinking of glasses and talking to interrupt one's listening. The programs on Sunday nights have gone so well with the public that there is reason to hope they will appear more frequently than once a week next year at Pops. Last night, as usual, the entire house was sold out.

The main feature of the concert was a performance of Mozart's Concerto in F Major for three pianos and small orchestra. Jesus Maria Sanroma and Heinrich Gebhard were the guest sololists, with Arthur Fiedler playing the third piano and conducting from the keyboard. This was said to be the first performance of this score in Boston. Mozart's concertos are gems of simplicity and beauty. And of all the works in true concerto form fully two-thirds were contributed by Mozart. A careful study of their form is most rewarding, and anyone so interested will gain much from reading Sir Donald Tovey's Essays in Musical Analysis (Volume 3—Concertos). Last night's performance of the triple concerto was competent, and gave considerable pleasure to the audience. The work itself is charming, but not as interesting as the best of his prize concertos. The opportunity of hearing another of the much neglected Mozart concertos was welcome.

The orchestra also gave a performance of the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony, always a popular composition at the Pops, which was enthusiastically applauded by the audience.

W. J. S.

B. MUSIC

Her. May 31/38

THE POPS

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

A new ballet was performed at last night's Pop concert for the first time. This was "The Incredible Flutist," choreography and book by Hans Wiener, music by Walter Piston, costumes and sets designed by Marco Montedoro, costumes and sets executed by Katrine Hooper and Dante Giglio, performed by Hans Wiener and his dance group. Arthur Fiedler conducted.

A great deal of talent and hard work has gone into the production of this entertaining new ballet, and the effort has been well worth while. The chief interest centered in what Mr. Piston would do with the music. He has composed an enchanting and wholly admirable score. The music is varied and always rhythmically alive. There are no tedious moments, no unshapely pauses or bridges from one mood to another. It merely goes to prove that a skilful composer, like Mr. Piston, can be just as capable at the making of a ballet as he can in the intellectual organization of a string quartet or any other music that is considered more abstract or is at least not written for so definite a purpose.

The plot of the ballet is unimportant and only serves to introduce a wide variety of turns, circuses, side-shows, monkeys, shop-keepers out of "La Boutique Fantasque," lovers—in a word a collection of characters who could and would have some reason to dance. The result is pleasant enough, but it is the excellent music that holds it together. The performance last night was praiseworthy in all respects. Mr. Wiener clearly has an industrious group of students and professionals around him, and they provide enthusiastic performances. The orchestra under Mr. Fiedler seemed in good accord with the dancing. The costumes and simple set were attractive. Altogether it was a most interesting event in the Pops season. Mr. Piston was in the audience to receive the applause. Anyone curious about so fine a score for a ballet has an opportunity to see and hear "The Incredible Flutist" this evening, when it will be repeated.

PROGRAMME OF THE WEEK FOR POPS

B. Post May 29 1938

THIS EVENING

Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" Glinka
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36. Tchaikovsky
Concerto in F major for Three Pianos and Orchestra (K. No. 242) Mozart
(Soloists: Sanroma, Gebhard, Fiedler)
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" .... Wagner

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 30

March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" .. Sousa
Ballet Suite .... Rameau-Mottl
"Hansel and Gretel," Sandman's Song, and Prayer .... Humperdinck
Overture to "William Tell" .... Rossini
Overture to "Euryanthe" .... Weber
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes .... Strauss
American Fantasy .... Herbert
"The Incredible Flutist," a Dance Play. Piston
(First performance)
(Hans Wiener and his dancers, with orchestra)

TUESDAY EVENING

Procession of Bacchus, from "Sylvia" Delibes
Overture to "Mignon" .... Thomas
Introduction to Act III, "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" .... Wagner
Finale from the Suite "Cinderella" Eric Coates
Austrian Peasant Dances .... Schonherr
Largo from "Xerxes" Handel
"Pathetic" Symphony, No. 6: Allegro molto vivace .... Tchaikovsky
"The Incredible Flutist," a Dance Play, Piston
(Hans Wiener and his dancers, with orchestra)

WEDNESDAY EVENING

Entrance of the Boyards........ Halvorsen
Finlandia, "Symphonic Poem" ..... Sibelius
Song to the Evening Star, from "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
(Solo, trombone: Jacob Raichman)
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Hungarian March, "Rakoczy" ...... Berlioz
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" .. Offenbach
"The Ride of the Valkyries" ...... Wagner
Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23, MacDowell
(Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma)
Songs with Orchestra:
(Framingham State Teachers' College Glee Club, Edward F. Gilday, Jr., M. A., director)
"Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" .... Bach
"How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place," from "A German Requiem" ...... Brahms
Seraphic Song ("Reve Angelique") Rubinstein

THURSDAY EVENING

March from the "Queen of Sheba" .. Gounod
Overture to "Der Freischutz" .... Weber
"Silver Shadows," Tango .... Repper
"La Tosca," Fantasia .... Puccini
"Scheherazade," Finale .. Rimsky-Korsakov
Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" .... Wagner
Overture to "Sakuntala" .... Goldmark
"The Skaters," Waltz .... Waldteufel
Donkey Song from "The Firefly" ... Friml
Aragonaise from "The Cid" ..... Massenet

FRIDAY EVENING

March, "Under the Double Eagle" J. F. Wagner
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman" Wagner
Air on the G string, for String Orchestra, Bach-Wilhelmj
Soviet Iron Works .... Mossolov
Gilbert and Sullivan Favorites, Arranged by Seredy
Scherzo from "A Midsummer Night's Dream" .... Mendelssohn
Ballet of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" Ponchielli
"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Fantasy .... Churchill-Bodge
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango .... Gade
"Strike Up the Band" .... Gershwin

SATURDAY EVENING

Coronation March from "The Prophet" Meyerbeer
Largo from the "New World" Symphony, Dvorak
Liebestraum .... Liszt-Herbert
"The Ride of the Valkyries" ...... Wagner
Peer Gynt Suite No. 1 .... Grieg
The Girl With the Flaxen Hair .... Debussy
Bolero .... Ravel
"Tales From the Vienna Woods," Waltzes, Strauss
"The Toy Trumpet" .... Scott
(Solo, trumpet: Roger Voisin)
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Stein Song

NEXT SUNDAY EVENING

Request Night: Programme to be announced.

Telt. April 24/38 —NEW YORK

Members Invited For Berkshire August Festival

'La Mer' To Be Included in Boston Symphony's Programs for the Series

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc. has opened a membership campaign for its fifth annual festival, which will consist of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the new music shed now under construction on the Tanglewood Estate near Lenox, Mass. The dates are Thursday and Saturday nights at 8:30 and Sunday afternoons at 3:30, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. Enrollment of memberships, with privileges including admission to one of the rehearsals as well as lower admission prices to the concerts close on May 15.

The programs have not yet been announced in full, but Debussy's "La Mer" is to be one of the festival numbers. The music shed, in the shape of a half-open fan and opening on a view of the lake and mountains, will seat 5,000. Certain temporary features in the shed this summer will be gradually replaced by permanent ones. Requests for memberships, reservations and other information about the 1938 festival should be sent to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture on the programs on the afternoons of August 4, 6, 11 and 13 in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield.

The first two festivals, with Henry Hadley conducting, were held on the Dan R. Hanna estate near Stockbridge in 1934 and 1935. The association of the Boston Symphony with these festivals began in 1936, when three concerts were given on the Holmwood estate between Stockbridge and Lenox. Last summer's festival, of six concerts, was the first to be held on the Tanglewood estate, which was donated to the Boston Symphony for these festivals by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston.

NEW CANAAN, CONN.
Weekly Advertiser
MAY 26 1938

The Screech Owl Notes on Music

CATHERINE VAN AERNAM

The fourteenth annual Music Festival at the Westchester County Center, White Plains, New York, came to a close on Saturday evening, May 21.

On Friday evening the Philadelphia Orchestra which made its local debut at White Plains last year, returned under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, its regular conductor. The program on that occasion consisted of time-honored compositions including Wagner's Overture to "Die Meistersinger," Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Debussy's "The Afternoon of a Faun," Paganini's "Moto Perpeto in an arrangement by Mr. Ormandy. Besides these the orchestra played "Till Eulenspiegel," by Strauss and "The Polka and Fugue from "Schwanda" by Weinberger.

Mr. Ormandy and his orchestra "warmed up" with "Die Meistersinger's overture and the result was a rather routine and mechanical performance. But their playing of Brahms' first symphony accorded with their usual high standard. The rich, well-rounded tones, the convincingly warm color, and the obedience of the orchestra to Mr. Ormandy's slightest wish gave distinction to the rendition of this number. The remaining portion of the program was played wtih Philadelphian excellence, and no comment is necessary.

Saturday evening's program was rendered by the festival chorus, composed of 332 singers representing fourteen separate organizations from Westchester cities and towns as well as from Greenwich, Conn.; and the Philadelphia orchestra this time under the direction of Hugh Ross. In accordance with the policy of the festival association, the soloists were all residents of Westchester County. They included Mack Harrell baritone; Dorothy Baker, soprano; Ellen Repp, contralto; Donald Rogers, tenor, and Ronald G. Portman, bass-baritone; Clifford E. Dinsmore at the organ.

The program included three selections from Bach's B Minor Mass; a. Gloria in Excelsis b. Et in Spiritum Sanctorum, bass solo sung by Mack Harrell c. Sanctus. Sibilius' The Origin of Fire with the solo sung by Ronald G. Portman. Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1 in A Major. After the intermission the soloists, organ, chorus and orchestra took part in R. Nathaniel Dett's oratorio "The Ordering of Moses."

The tone of the orchestra and organ were excellent, but the chorus seemed quite unbalanced. The alto and bass groups were overwhelmed by large soprano and tenor sections. In spite of this defect the rendition of the Origin of Fire by Sibelius had far more dramatic power than the performance given in New York City by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Janu~~ary~~ when it was sung by the Helsinki Chorus from Finland. That is, at least the opinion of one hearer. In this case the chorus sang in English. It is possible that an American voice is more attuned to American ears.

The Oratorio "The Ordering of Moses" by Dett made use of the negro spiritual "Go Down Moses." The work was uneven in quality but in its best moments showed great vitality. The orchestral prelude and several choruses were very dramatic. The solo parts were least effective, although Mr. Harrell and Miss Baker contributed some fine singing.

The acoustics were greatly improved by closing in the sides and back of the stage. Even at the back of the auditorium the music could be heard clearly. The audience was not as large as had been expected.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
MAY 27 1938

Recorded Music
Societies

WITH the publication of the Purcell Society Album containing most of the string fantasias, Columbia recently made available here all of those sets originally released in limited editions under the label of an allied company abroad. Victor has been slower in re-pressing society sets, but the list from which it draws is larger.

The long series of Haydn quartets recorded by the Pro Arte group has not yet been noticed in the domestic catalogue, nor has Fritz Kreisler, completing the Beethoven sonatas, with Franz Rupp as his pianist, received any attention for this activity.

Of the Beethoven piano sonata albums, in which Artur Schnabel performs all 32, only one has penetrated here—the "Hammerklavier," which because of its length comprises an album in itself. Hugo Wolf sets have fared no better, although the recent ban on the importation of Volume 6 suggests that Victor is contemplating bringing it out here.

Plays Bach Variations.

Wanda Landowska performs the "Goldberg Variations" of Bach in a six-record album that sells for $15 and she has also made collections of works by Scarlatti and Couperin. Gerhard Huesch, baritone, sings two Schubert cycles, "Schoene Muellerin" and "Winterreise," and an album of songs by a contemporary Finnish composer named Kilpinen. These all come through the customs.

Victor eventually cleaned the slate for Sibelius, letting domestic purchasers have the benefit of non-import prices by producing the sets here in quixotic order, but producing them.

Volume 4 of the 48 Preludes and Fugues of Bach played by Edwin Fischer was a feature of the Victor list not so long ago. The experiment apparently drew encouraging results, as volume 5 follows, but the first three remain under the handsome label of the imported "His Master's Voice." With this huge venture completed H. M. V. has decided to extend the Bach society and has already begun on the unaccompanied sonatas for cello with Pablo Casals. The Beethoven Society will also continue to include the Diabelli Variations.

Mozart Society Represented.

"Don Giovanni" and "Marriage of Figaro" represent the Mozart Opera Society here in our catalogues. Perhaps "The Magic Flute," just out in England, will join the list. In addition "Cosi" has been done, but Victor is most likely wary, since it is little known in this country.

In the ordinary editions the H. M. V. catalogue holds a number of attractive items that should be released here. Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony in the Haydn Symph~~ony No. 102~~, and Bruno Walter the Vienna Philharmonic in two other Haydn symphonies, including the "Military" (No. 100). Furtwaengler has signed for a number of recordings that are beginning to appear slowly. Already out are the Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan" and the Beethoven Fifth.

P.

EVANSTON, ILL.
NEWS INDEX
JUN 3 - 1938

Another of summer's good signs is the Berkshire festival, where the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge ~~Koussevitzky are~~ the traditional features. The concerts are given at picturesque "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales."

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
MAY 27 1938

Abridged Version of Music Drama in Concert Form

SELECTIVE choosing in one's musical fare can be exercised to good advantage occasionally in so-called popular affairs as well as in the extensive symphonic or operatic programs. What to us was a rare privilege came with the presentation of excerpts in concert form from Wagner's tremendous music-drama, "Die Walkure," sung in German, at the pension fund concert in the Pops series at Symphony hall, Boston, last Sunday evening.

The occasion can be set down as memorable for several reasons. It was arranged in commemoration of the 125th anniversary of Wagner's birth, the ~~Boston~~ Symphony management having ~~the co-operation~~ of the Boston Branch of the Richard Wagner Society in arranging the concert. It brought before a Boston audience a young, energetic and musically sensitive conductor, Fritz Mahler. Lastly, but most important of all, it marked the first time such a departure from the usual routine has been tried at the Pops, where approximately 90 members of the Boston Symony orchestra are participating.

Four soloists took part in the proceedings that set before the almost capacity audience judiciously culled scenes from the second work of the Ring Cycle. The singers were Margaret Halstead, soprano; Hazel Hayes, soprano; Colin O'More, tenor, and Raymond ~~Lutz, bass,~~ and while no mention was made in the program, all contributed their services gratis to the pension fund. Miss Halstead sang the role of Brunnhilde, Miss Hayes that of Sieglinde, Mr. O'More that of Siegmund, and Mr. Lutz that of Wotan. The portions presented were the prelude and Scene III from the first act, the prelude and opening scene from the second act and the introduction and Scene III from the third act.

Under Mr. Mahler's penetrating leadership, the divinely musical and stirringly dramatic qualities of the marvellous score were realized in splendid fashion. Only a few months ago we attended a performance of "Die Walkure" at the Metropolitan Opera house in New York with Kirsten Flagstad, Elisabeth Rethberg, Lauritz Melchior and Ludwig Hofmann in the four important roles. Vocally that was a memorable occasion, with Melchior's tenor sounding far better than in his customary bleating style. But the Metropolitan orchestra, much though it has been improved in recent seasons, never played that surging, pulsating, heart searing music as the Boston orchestra played it Sunday evening. The technical precision, the perfect intonation, the full-blooded sweep of the strings, the clarion proclamations of the brass and the searching sweetness of the wood-wind, were brought forth in their true symphonic significance, things that an over-worked operatic orchestra do not achieve consistently, even when led by a conductor of Artur Bodanzky's status. Repeatedly this condition has been demonstrated when Wagnerian excerpts are given by the major symphony orchestras and their general excellence has stood out in bold relief against the pedestrian strides of the theatre musicians. Toscanini well knew that years ago, when he severed his connection with the Metropolitan because he couldn't get the number of rehearsals and the calibre of artists he wanted.

Of the four soloists, only Miss Halstead, a Metropolitan artist, met the exacting demands of the music adequately. Even in the big climactic portions, her well-poised dramatic soprano soared clearly above the turbulent orchestral stream. Miss Hayes, Mr. O'More and Mr. Lutz sang with good tone and taste but were ~~submerged occasionally~~ in the heavier passages by the force of the instrumentation.

Less than one-half of the lengthy score was performed. Time would have permitted more had Mr. Mahler seen fit. Exceptionally welcome would have been the touching scene in the second act between Brunnhilde and Siegmund for which Wagner has written music that defies analysis, pointing the way to the apogee of lyricism found in "Tristan und Isolde." The plaudits of the large audience, particularly at the close, bore testimony of its profound appreciation of the music and its performance. For us it was a momentous occasion, things that come all too rarely along the sandy wastes of one's musical rovings.

—A. L. M.

HIGH SCHOOL MUSIC UNITS WIN ACCLAIM IN KEEN COMPETITION

Seemingly it requires out-of-town acclaim before an individual or organization can obtain the attention of approval of their own fellow citizens. But belated recognition probably is just as sweet as premature applause and excessive gush. The local high school musical units, as has been duly recorded, won honors for the community as well as for themselves in two recent conclaves in competition with organizations from many parts of New England, at Fall River and Burlington, Vt.

In recent years the units have won distinguished merit in similar competitions and as we have stated previously on several occasions, considerable of the credit for the success of the local groups is due Music Supervisor Robert E. Sault. In the face of actual indifference, he has kept alive his own interest as well as that of the youthful players. It is earnestly hoped that this city will be the scene of next year's competitions.

RELATION OF SONATA TO THE SYMPHONY

Regarding the terms sonata and symphony, briefly a sonata is an extended composition with several movements for piano or piano with one other instrument. For more than two instruments it is called a trio or quartet. For full orchestra it is called a symphony. The sonata or symphony form has indergone many modifications since its inception back in the 17th century. There are many reference volumes available if one desires either a short or elaborate explanation of the various types of musical composition. To many musicians and music students, Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians" is considered the most authoritative as well as most comprehensive. In the short, concise class might be mentioned Fillmore's "Lessons in Musical History" and Clarke's "Dictionary of Musical Terms."

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
MAY 27 1938

We Old Timers . . .

Remember James E. Devoe?

By GEORGE W. STARK

About the time that the Boston orchestra, Geraldine Farrar and Ignace Paderewski became simultaneously and internationally famous, James E. Devoe, shock-headed and red-headed impresario, came flamingly into the Detroit musical portrait.

He had been active on the YMCA courses and he had likewise been an organist in various Detroit churches. In addition to that, he had spent a season as booking representative of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, the conductor of which at the time was Frank Van der Stucken.

Contemporaneous in the impresario field with Jimmy was Ella Mae Hawthorne, better known to the New Timers of the town as Ella Mae McCormick, motion picture commentator. For many years, she brought to the City the attractions of Charles A. Ellis, one of America's best-beloved music managers. Another in the field was Burton Collver, who presented a noble line of artists. His gallery included people like Gadski and Sembrich and he staged the Detroit farewells of Adelina Patti and a great actress whose name was Sara Bernhardt. Aiso, Mr. Collver introduced Creatore, the fiery bandmaster, to the town.

LAST APPEARANCES

Well, speaking of farewells, it was the young impresario, Devoe, who featured the last appearances in Detroit of two great singing women, whose names were Lillian Nordica and Emma Eames. They sang their swan songs in the auditorium of Harmonie Hall. Today, Olympia would not be sufficient space.

He sponsored innumerable appearances of the well-loved Schumann-Heink. It might interest some Old Timers to know that the first great artist of the concert stage interviewed by your representative when he became a full-fledged reporter, was this same lovely lady. The event was staged at the Pontchartrain. The diva bought ice cream, pinned a rose on Your Old Timer's coat lapel, kissed him a fond farewell. There were many meetings afterwards and she is remembered with an Old Timer's affection that approaches reverence.

For a quarter of a century, Jimmy kept introducing to Detroit the first artists of this and other lands. They included John McCormack, Amelita Galli-Curci, Heifitz, Zimbalist, Mischa [redacted], Alma Gluck, Frieda Hempel, Stracciari, Enrico Caruso, Lawrence Tibbet, Richard Crooks, Reinold Werrenrath, Mascagni and the singers from La Scala Opera, the Grenadier Guards Band (the King's Own), the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra with Leopold Stokowski conducting, the Don Cossack Chorus, Fritz Kreisler and Serge Rachmaninoff. (Hey, Jimmy, how about getting all these people together for just one evening's entertainment?)

SUCCESSFUL VENTURE

After several years of presenting artists individually, Jimmy incorporated the Philharmonic courses. They were so successful in Detroit that he did similar series in Buffalo, Cleveland, Toronto, Toledo and in the larger Michigan cities outside Detroit. He presented the Detroit Symphony in many outside cities. And in Detroit, he brought his attractions to a variety of auditoriums, including the Harmonie, the Armory, the Detroit Board of Commerce, the Church of Our Father, the Temple Beth El, the Arena, Arcadia, Orchestra Hall and Masonic Temple.

Old Timers will remember that on the day of the Armistice, a great Italian woman sang in Arena Gardens. Her name was Galli-Curci. They will remember too that Detroit was emotionally unstrung that day. Devoe was advised to call off the concert. He didn't. He was smart. People thronged the hall. And Galli-Curci, wrapping herself in an American flag, sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" as it was never sung before. It was an unforgettable scene.

In the same building, the Chicago Opera Company once appeared, using as a stage the ice area at the Cass avenue end of the building. It was an episode that led Mary Garden to say this; "I have had cold audiences before, but this is the first time in my career where I have had the very stage freeze under my feet!"

GAR Vets to Be Guests at Stark's Broadcast

Beginning Monday, Memorial Day, George W. Stark's We Old Timer broadcasts will be heard each Monday from 8:45 to 9 p. m. over Station WWJ—The Detroit News. Monday night Stark will have as his guests the only two GAR veterans who will go from Detroit to the big reunion of Union and Confederate soldiers at Gettysburg. They are David Plumadore, 91 years old, and Augustus F. Chappell, 94.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

[illegible]

Left ... A GREAT MUSICAL IDEA TAKES SHAPE: Mrs Gorham Brooks who gav Tanglewood as permanen home of summer music festi val at Stockbridge, Mass inspecting building unde construction with Dr. Archi bald T. Davison (left) o Harvard University, and Dr Serge Koussevitsky, th noted conductor of Bosto Symphony Orchestra.

THE NEW YORK TIMES SUNDAY, MAY 29, 1938.

Arthur Fiedler, conducting "Pops" concerts in Boston these weeks.

Draft for a Modern Symphony

B. Trans. June 4/38

This Symphony I write should be
The last word in modernity.
The first part pictures the New Deal:
Thunder machine and glockenspiel
Will symbolize the sound and fury.
The second sings the trial of Jewry:
For Hitler's theme the horns will bellow
The tune, "For he's a jolly good fellow"—
In counterpoint there will be heard
All not Nazi give "the bird."
The last shall be a solemn hymn
To breakfast foods, and strength and vim.
For Scherzo? Ah! what could be finer
Than a Big Apple in B minor?

TRISTRAM LIVINGSTONE

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 30 1938

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's TIMES.]

MUSIC IN REVIEW

Mitropoulos Conducts NBC Program Featuring Schumann Second Symphony in C Major

Dimitri Mitropoulos, Greek conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, made his New York debut last night leading the NBC Symphony Orchestra in its weekly broadcast. Although he has been in America only two seasons, loud heraldings and excited rumors had created an advance reputation fraught with danger and challenge. As things turned out, Mr. Mitropoulos's reputation emerged fully intact. The studio audience, which numbered several conductors of note, behaved itself with an ardor not required by concert hall etiquette.

Mr. Mitropoulos began his musical education in Athens, then went to Berlin to study piano and composition with Busoni. It was at the invitation of Serge Koussevitzy, who heard him abroad, that Mr. Mitropoulos made his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936. The following year he was asked to take over the Minneapolis orchestra.

Mr. Mitropoulos, bald, lithe, energetic, conducts with neither baton nor score. His movements on the podium are generally of an unrelaxed intensity that seems impelled by an equal intensity of concentration in the music of the moment. Though Mr. Mitropoulos began his career as a pianist—especially lyric passages—he conducts like an ex-string player; that is, his left hand is generally held close to his body with the fingers tightly curved, his right hand moving freely and more eloquently.

In music of great vigor his movements assume a snap and a muscularity that summons the weight of his whole body. The response he elicited from the orchestra, over a wide gamut of musical expression, spoke eloquently for his technical powers.

Mr. Mitropoulos's musicianship was equally impressive. In his own arrangement of the prelude and air "When I Am Laid in Earth," from Purcell's opera "Dido and Aeneas," he revealed himself sensitive to the spirit of its broadly lyric measures and to the subtleties of string texture and phrasing. There was also communicative appreciation of the impulsive romanticism of the Schumann C major symphony, the second. Although Mr. Mitropoulos has certain unorthodox ideas of tempi, especially in the coda and in the finale, the symphony's capriciousness and nobility, its pathos and exultation were conveyed with unmistakable urgency.

Glazunoff's overture on Three Greek Themes, Op. 3, rarely heard here, is surely more Glazunoff than Greek, and more Borodin than either. It is a pot-pourri of naïve tunes whose hoopla orchestration keeps sliding like warm syrup on the constant chromaticism of inner voices. Equally hoopla were two transcriptions of Chopin works: the C minor "Revolutionary" etude, and the A flat Polonaise, written by Dimitri Rogal-Lewitzski.

It was a tympanist's and trombonist's holiday, and a technical tour de force for the orchestra; but the spirit of Chopin was light-miles away from Radio City. At least one hopes so. G. G.

PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

MAY 31 1938

STAR INFORMATION BUREAU

The answers to questions printed here each day are specime picked from the mass of inquiries handled by our great informati Bureau maintained in Washington, D. C., for the particular benefit the many thousands of Peoria Star readers. This wonderful and val able service is absolutely free to the public. Ask any question of fa you may want to know and you will get an immediate reply. Write plainly and enclose 3 cents in coins or stamps for postage for an answer directly to you. Do not use post-cards. Address:

PEORIA STAR INFORMATION BUREAU
Frederic J. Haskin, Director
Washington, D. C.

Q.—How many words did President Roosevelt use in his last fireside talk? E. W. H.

A.—The president's radio speech on April 14 consisted of 4,860 words.

Q.—What is the largest sailfish ever caught? C. H. J.

A.—Outdoor Life says that the world's sailfish record of 190 pounds; length, 10 feet 2 1-2 inches; girth, 39 inches, was set by Edmund Tremayne of Falmouth, England, in Post Office Bay, Charles island, Galapagos islands, on February 8. Tremayne was the guest of T. O. M. Sopwith on his yacht, Philante. The catch was recorded and affidavit signed at Balboa, February 16. Records show that feather lure and 30-inch thread-line were used.

Q.—How many copies of the McGuffey Readers were sold? J. T.

A.—Their estimated sales totaled 122,000,000 copies.

Q.—What is meant by the statement that Leonardo da Vinci was a strephosymbolic? E .W.

A.—Strephosymbolia is a failure of the brain to adjust itself to printed or written language. Da Vinci wrote backward, and was a left handed strephosymbolic.

Q.—How many planes are there on the United States aircraft carriers? P. J. H.

A.—The Navy Department says that there are about 80 planes on each of the United States Navy aircraft carriers.

Q.—What is the name of the foreign town that was founded for blind veterans of the World War? C. W.

A.—Vetrenik. Yugoslavia, was founded by the late King Alexander for blinded veterans. Each man is furnished by the government a house, several acres of land, and farming equipment.

Q.—What words contain all of the vowels? W. C. W.

A.—According to Dr. Frank H. Vizetelly, the words that contain all the vowels in their order are abstemious and facetious. Other words, but not in their natural order, are, authoritative, disadvantageous efficacious, encouraging, importunate, and instantaneous. There are a number of others of these.

Q.—Are any real Daughters of 1812 living? H. B.

A.—There are 109 Daughgters of 1812 living at present.

Q.—When is the Berkshire Music Festival? C. H. G.

A.—The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held the first two week-ends in August at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Massachusetts. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New Music Shed or auditorium seating 5,000 will be inaugurated.

63

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 29 1938

Left ... A GREAT MUSICAL IDEA TAKES SHAPE: Mrs Gorham Brooks who gave Tanglewood as permanent home of summer music festival at Stockbridge, Mass inspecting building under construction with Dr. Archibald T. Davison (left) of Harvard University, and Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the noted conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PEORIA, ILL.
STAR

MAY 31 1938

STAR INFORMATION BUREAU

The answers to questions printed here each day are specime picked from the mass of inquiries handled by our great informati Bureau maintained in Washington, D. C., for the particular benefit the many thousands of Peoria Star readers. This wonderful and val able service is absolutely free to the public. Ask any question of fa you may want to know and you will get an immediate reply. Write plainly and enclose 3 cents in coins or stamps for postage for an answer directly to you. Do not use post-cards. Address:

PEORIA STAR INFORMATION BUREAU
Frederic J. Haskin, Director
Washington, D. C.

Q.—How many words did President Roosevelt use in his last fireside talk? E. W. H.

A.—The president's radio speech on April 14 consisted of 4,860 words.

Q.—What is the largest sailfish ever caught? C. H. J.

A.—Outdoor Life says that the world's sailfish record of 190 pounds; length, 10 feet 2 1-2 inches; girth, 39 inches, was set by Edmund Tremayne of Falmouth, England, in Post Office Bay, Charles island, Galapagos islands, on February 8. Tremayne was the guest of T. O. M. Sopwith on his yacht, Philante. The catch was recorded and affidavit signed at Balboa, February 16. Records show that feather lure and 30-inch thread-line were used.

Q.—How many copies of the McGuffey Readers were sold? J. T.

A.—Their estimated sales totaled 122,000,000 copies.

Q.—What is meant by the statement that Leonardo da Vinci was a strephosymbolic? E .W.

A.—Strephosymbolia is a failure of the brain to adjust itself to printed or written language. Da Vinci wrote backward, and was a left handed strephosymbolic.

Q.—How many planes are there on the United States aircraft carriers? P. J. H.

A.—The Navy Department says that there are about 80 planes on each of the United States Navy aircraft carriers.

Q.—What is the name of the foreign town that was founded for blind veterans of the World War? C. W.

A.—Vetrenik. Yugoslavia, was founded by the late King Alexander for blinded veterans. Each man is furnished by the government a house, several acres of land, and farming equipment.

Q.—What words contain all of the vowels? W. C. W.

A.—According to Dr. Frank H. Vizetelly, the words that contain all the vowels in their order are abstemious and facetious. Other words, but not in their natural order, are, authoritative, disadvantageous efficacious, encouraging, importunate, and instantaneous. There are a number of others of these.

Q.—Are any real Daughters of 1812 living? H. B.

A.—There are 109 Daughgters of 1812 living at present.

Q.—When is the Berkshire Music Festival? C. H. G.

A.—The annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held the first two week-ends in August at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Massachusetts. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New Music Shed or auditorium seating 5,000 will be inaugurated.

THE NEW YORK TIMES SUNDAY, MAY 29, 1938.

Arthur Fiedler, conducting "Pops" concerts in Boston these weeks.

Draft for a Modern Symphony

B. Trans. June 4/38

This Symphony I write should be
The last word in modernity.
The first part pictures the New Deal:
Thunder machine and glockenspiel
Will symbolize the sound and fury.
The second sings the trial of Jewry:
For Hitler's theme the horns will bellow
The tune, "For he's a jolly good fellow"—
In counterpoint there will be heard
All not Nazi give "the bird."
The last shall be a solemn hymn
To breakfast foods, and strength and vim.
For Scherzo? Ah! what could be finer
Than a Big Apple in B minor?

TRISTRAM LIVINGSTONE

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 30 1938

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's TIMES.]

MUSIC IN REVIEW

Mitropoulos Conducts NBC Program Featuring Schumann Second Symphony in C Major

Dimitri Mitropoulos, Greek conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, made his New York debut last night leading the NBC Symphony Orchestra in its weekly broadcast. Although he has been in America only two seasons, loud heraldings and excited rumors had created an advance reputation fraught with danger and challenge. As things turned out, Mr. Mitropoulos's reputation emerged fully intact. The studio audience, which numbered several conductors of note, behaved itself with an ardor not required by concert hall etiquette.

Mr. Mitropoulos began his musical education in Athens, then went to Berlin to study piano and composition with Busoni. It was at the invitation of Serge Koussevitzy, who heard him abroad, that Mr. Mitropoulos made his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936. The following year he was asked to take over the Minneapolis orchestra.

Mr. Mitropoulos, bald, lithe, energetic, conducts with neither baton nor score. His movements on the podium are generally of an unrelaxed intensity that seems impelled by an equal intensity of concentration in the music of the moment. Though Mr. Mitropoulos began his career as a pianist—especially lyric passages—he conducts like an ex-string player; that is, his left hand is generally held close to his body with the fingers tightly curved, his right hand moving freely and more eloquently.

In music of great vigor his movements assume a snap and a muscularity that summons the weight of his whole body. The response he elicited from the orchestra, over a wide gamut of musical expression, spoke eloquently for his technical powers.

Mr. Mitropoulos's musicianship was equally impressive. In his own arrangement of the prelude and air "When I Am Laid in Earth," from Purcell's opera "Dido and Aeneas," he revealed himself sensitive to the spirit of its broadly lyric measures and to the subtleties of string texture and phrasing. There was also communicative appreciation of the impulsive romanticism of the Schumann C major symphony, the second. Although Mr. Mitropoulos has certain unorthodox ideas of tempi, especially in the coda and in the finale, the symphony's capriciousness and nobility, its pathos and exultation were conveyed with unmistakable urgency.

Glazunoff's overture on Three Greek Themes, Op. 3, rarely heard here, is surely more Glazunoff than Greek, and more Borodin than either. It is a pot-pourri of naive tunes whose hoopla orchestration keeps sliding like warm syrup on the constant chromaticism of inner voices. Equally hoopla were two transcriptions of Chopin works: the C minor "Revolutionary" etude, and the A flat Polonaise, written by Dimitri Rogal-Lewitzski.

It was a tympanist's and trombonist's holiday, and a technical tour de force for the orchestra; but the spirit of Chopin was light-miles away from Radio City. At least one hopes so. G. G.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
MAY 29 1938

Musical Maturity Has Come In Last 70 Years

Public Concerts Rare In Early Days. Stoeckel, Parker and Steinert Among Pioneers

DURING the long period between the settling of New Haven and the last quarter of the Nineteenth Century little happened in the town that might serve as material for an account of its music. Public concerts were rare, and the cultivation of the art was either carried on privately, and perhaps apologetically, or in the church choir gallery. The early settlers were too rugged and austere, too much preoccupied with clearing a way for themselves and their religion, to nurture so gracious an art as music.

And their descendants were slow to shake off the prejudice that music is only a pleasant entertainment. To be sure, we read of bands greeting Washington or some other hero. But these bands, if we may trust our imaginations, were hardly more than fife and drum corps playing light airs of the period.

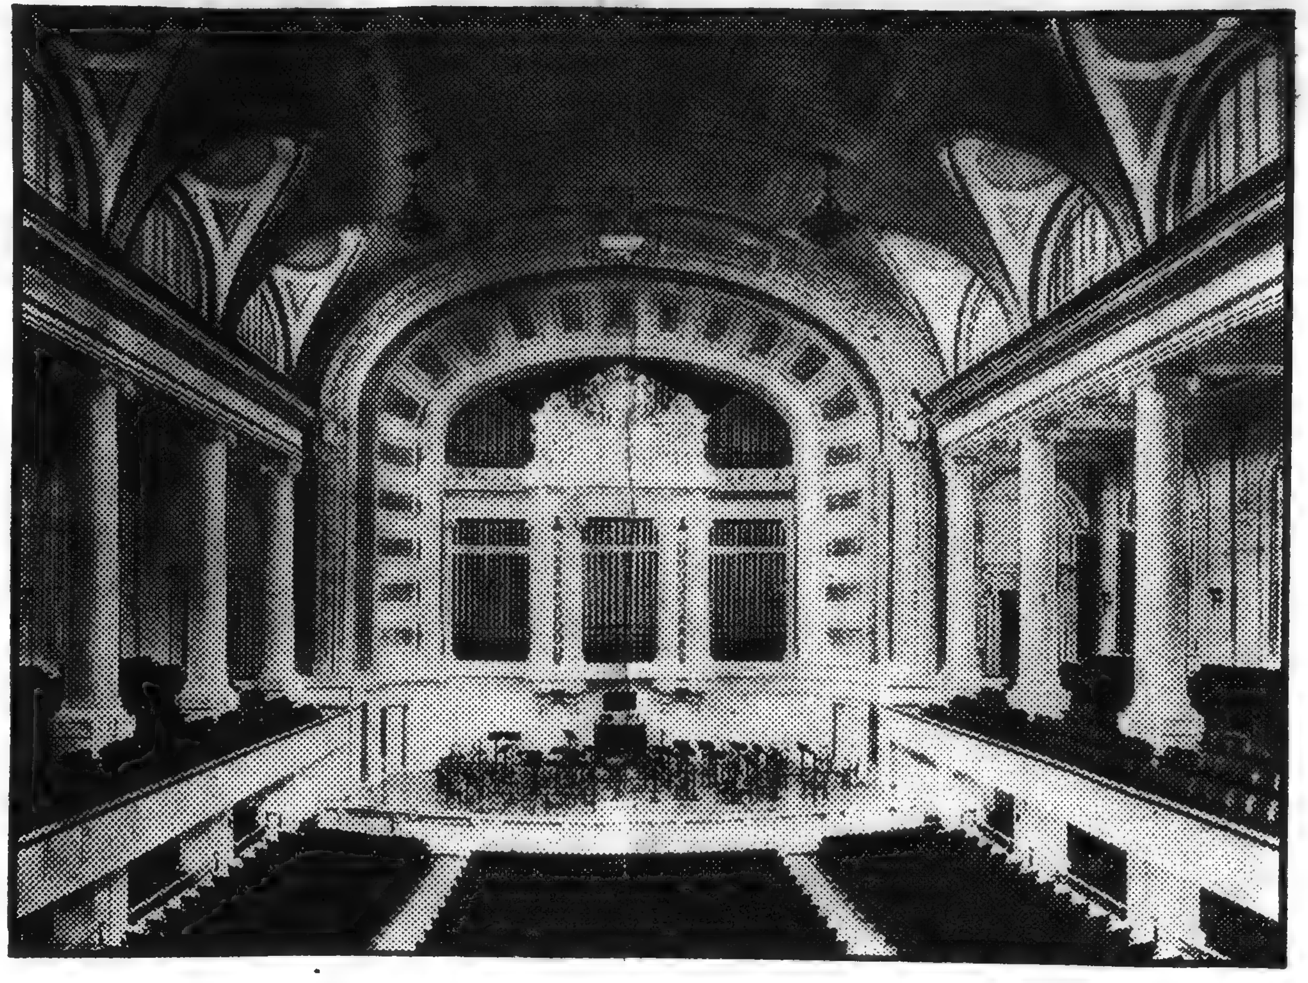
Stoeckel A Pioneer

However, in 1870 signs of an awakening appeared, for it was in that year that the Beethoven Jubilee took place. This ambitious enterprise was organized by Gustave Stoeckel, who had come to New Haven from Germany twenty years before and whose activities as a musician, though centering about his main work as instructor in music at Yale, entended with great affectiveness through the whole region of New Haven. The program of the Jubilee included not only Beethoven's sole opera "Fidelio," played by a visiting company, but also the one complete performance of the Ninth Symphony that has ever taken place in the city. Stoeckel directed this work, and in addition the Eroica Symphony and a monstrous composition of Beethoven, the Battle Symphony, a piece of music that is so unrepresentative of the great master as to have had a few performances anywhere.

Much enthusiasm was aroused by the Jubilee, and New Haven found itself for almost the first time music minded. To be sure, the Jubilee would not have been possible had there not been already stirrings of musical interest. The town had heard much choral singing, numerous organ recitals by Dr. Stoeckel in the Old Chapel on the Yale Campus, and the concerts of the Yale Glee Club, which was then singing "Neath the Elms" and other short compositions of Dr. Stoeckel.

Wagner Created Interest

In this period, even before the Beethoven Jubilee, orchestral music was not unknown. The New Haven Philharmonic Orchestra gave concerts under Dr. Stoeckel's baton. Theodore Thomas began coming to New Haven with his fine orchestra and troubled the ears of an audience unaccostomed to the then "modern music of Wagner" with the "Ride of the Valkyries," played from manuscript, and even excerpts from "Tristan and Isolde." The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a performance of the Piano Concerto in B flat by Brahms, whose name in the '80's carried with it considerable terror for a conservative folk far away from European music centers.



Woolsey Hall at Yale, one of the finest auditoriums in any university, houses the famous Newberry organ, among the largest in the world.

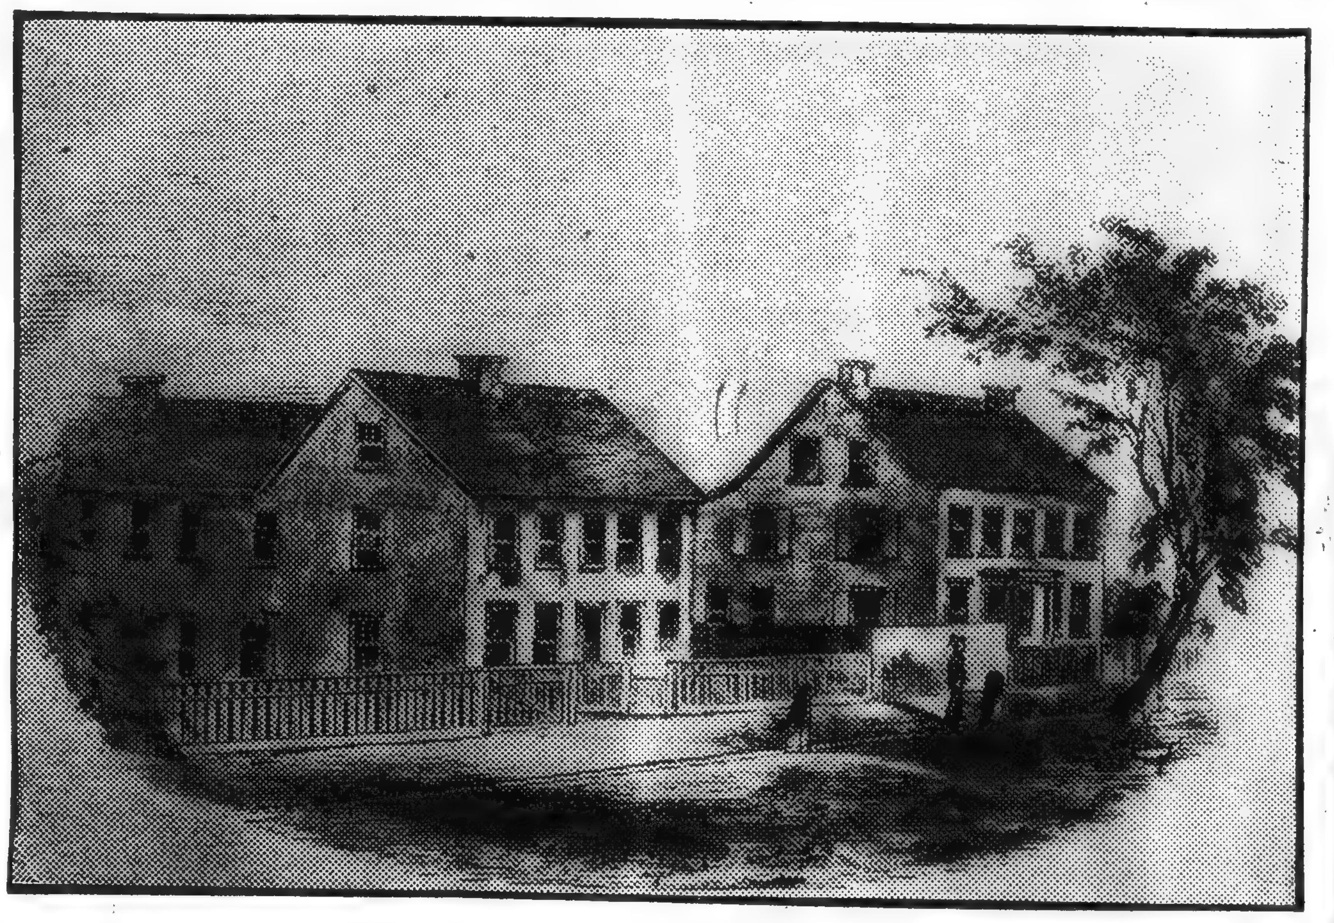
Partly contemporaneous with Dr. Stoeckel was Morris Steinert, also a native of Germany. Steinert organized the New Haven Symphony Orchestra. The writer of this article once heard this orchestra, then small and rather incompetent, rehearse over Mr. Steinert's music store on Chapel Street, with the light coming through the old semi-circular window. More important than organizing concerts was Steinert's delight in collecting antique musical instruments. He had purchased old viols, harpsichords and clavichords in attics and shops in Germany and had exhibited them at the Chicago World's Fair. He later presented the collection to Yale University, in whose keeping it now remains.

Jepson's Influence Great

The young people of New Haven were fortunate in receiving general instruction in music from Benjamin Jepson, who for over fifty years was in charge of music in the public schools. Many generations of school children derived the first acquaintance with the delights of mass singing from him. His enthusiasm and understanding of the popular need brought him wide fame throughout the country. No New Haven musician was ever more widely beloved. It is not the place of this article to trace the development of the teaching of music in the schools. But the growing interest and opportunity are worthy of mentioning. Children here are fortunate also in having the Neighborhood House School and Johnson's Little Symphony Orchestra as laboratories in which to develop their talents.

The year 1894 is a milestone in New Haven's music history, for it was then that Horatio Parker came to the city. Dr. Stoeckel had laid the foundations of music teaching at Yale and worked nobly for an ideal which he was to see only partially realized. With the coming of Parker the musical taste and enthusiasm of the community began to prepare itself for its full maturity. Parker's fine equipment as a musician carried with it strong effectiveness, and this effectiveness was the more far reaching owing to his prestige as a composer. Parker and his gifted colleagues Samuel S. Sanford and Isidore Troostwyk developed a comprehensive course of study for musical young people, and were the true founders of the Yale School of Music, which, by reason of its prestige and background, has taken the lead in musical matters.

At the turn of this century concerts became more numerous. The Gounod Society gave frequent performances of the great oratorios in the Hyperion Theater. The Symphony Orchestra began to show signs of its present technique and gave concerts regularly.



The home of Roger Sherman, where the Union League now stands in Chapel Street, as sketched by an early artist.

Woolsey Boon To Concerts

With the construction of Woolsey Hall in 1901 concerts on a large scale became possible. From that time on the record shows an increasingly active musical interest. The Gounod Society, conducted by Agramonte, gave way to the New Haven Oratorio Society, though the change was more a matter of name than of personnel. Under Parker's direction such works as Bach's St. Matthew's Passion, Parker's own Hora Novissima and St. Christopher, the solemn Requiem of Brahms and the glowing Requiem of Verdi received fine presentations.

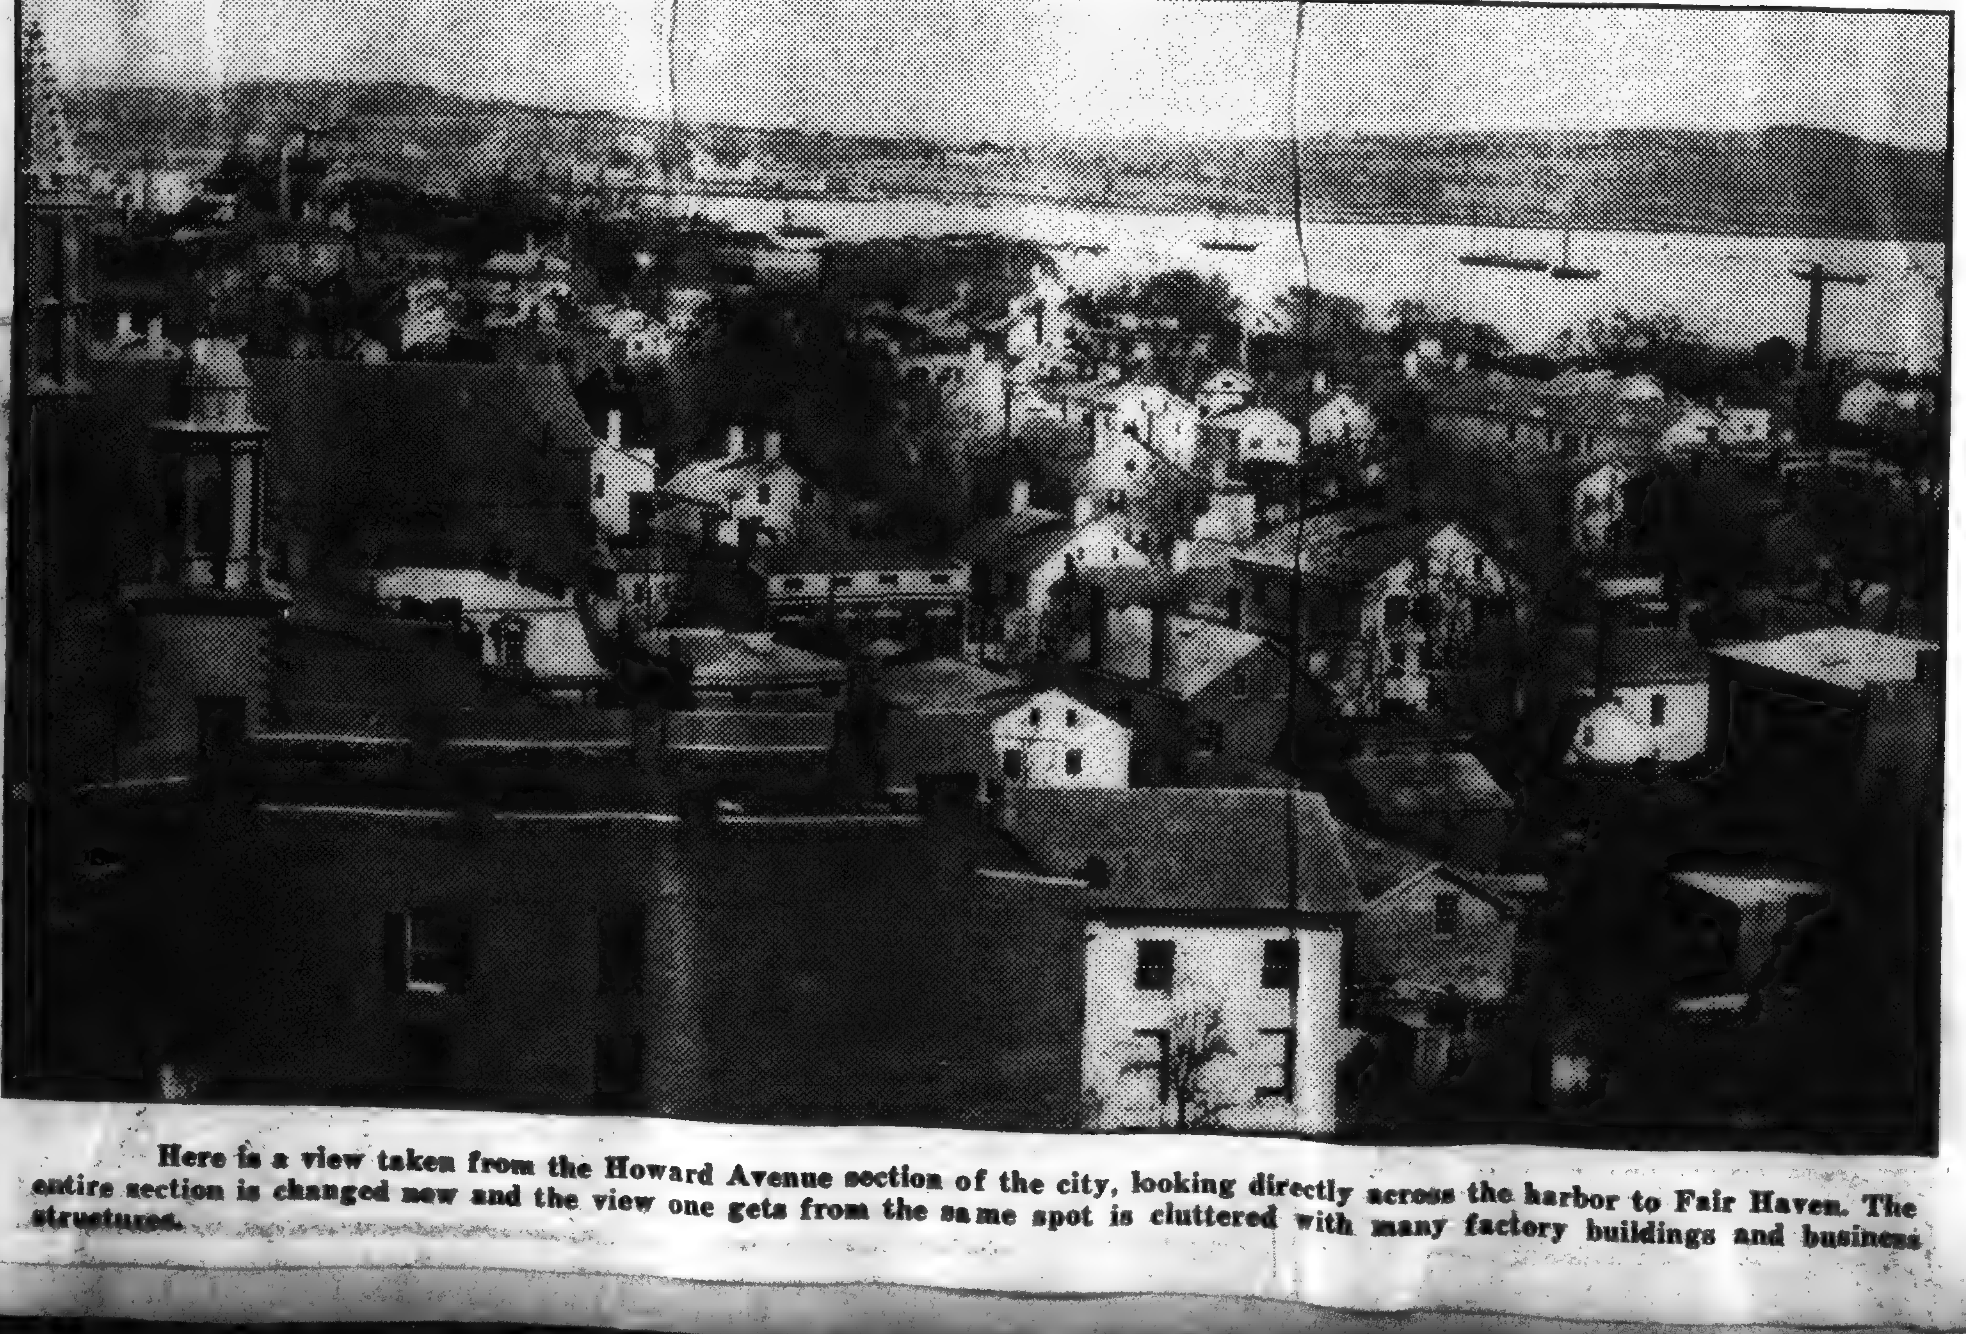
At this point it is well to remark that New Haven, perhaps unconsciously, holds a high position among cities as a town where there is maintained a just balance between local musical enterprise, inspired by the fine spirit of the amateur, and the importation of famous and high priced artists. It is fair to say that the most conspicuous mark of health in a community's music is the desire and ability to organize performances of music out of its own resources without undue resort to purchasing them from the outside. The annual series of concerts in Woolsey Hall given by noted visitors affords an opportunity to hear music in its most completely developed perfection, and it is inspiring to see the great audiences that greet the artists. But if musical interest stopped there it would lack the vitality that goes with home-produced accomplishment. A record of music in New Haven, therefore, should not be a mere catalogue of great foreign names, but must bring to light the achievements of its own citizens as the truest index of its real productiveness.

Symphony One of Oldest

New Haveners cannot too often be reminded that its Symphony Orchestra has had a continuous history longer than any but four or five similar organizations in the country. The Symphony and Civic Orchestra is a good example of an effective combination of professional attainment and amateur impulses. The union of the venerable Symphony and its younger contemporary, the Civic Orchestra, brought about in 1936, is a symbol of the general growth of mutual helpfulness in the city and university. Many organizations, such as the St. Ambrose Club, the University Glee Club of New Haven, the Woman's Choral Society and the Bach Cantata Club exist largely by reason of an irrepressible love for artistic expression. Yet their influence extends far beyond the walls of the rehearsal room.

In order to appreciate the full meaning of the progress made in music from the older days of New Haven one need only send his memory back a century to the time when the only music one might hear would be hymn singing in the churches, with an occasional anthem, now and then a "piece" played by an amateur pianist, a song or two, and perhaps a biennial orchestral concert. Now, with the Boston or the New Haven Orchestra or some great solo artist filling Woolsey Hall with sound, string quartets providing delicate chamber music concerts in Sprague Memorial Hall, Ellsworth Grumman or Bruce Simonds or some gifted student playing a recital, the Yale Glee Club and the city choral organizations singing their songs and the church choirs their anthems and motets, the music season is indeed vibrating with life.

At this Tercentenary time we do well to recall the pioneer work of Harry Rowe Shelley, Richard Percy, Gustave Stoeckel, Isidore Troostwyk, Virginia Johnstone, Morris Steinert and Horatio Parker, who did great work in awakening an apathetic public to the fine delights of music. With the concert hall, the radio and phonograph pouring out a steady stream of fine music, the present generation is in danger of forgetting that at one time the devotee of the art had either to play his own music or wait months for an opportunity to hear a Beethoven symphony. In the early days music was to be had with too much difficulty, now it is to be gotten with too much ease.



Here is a view taken from the Howard Avenue section of the city, looking directly across the harbor to Fair Haven. The entire section is changed now and the view one gets from the same spot is cluttered with many factory buildings and business structures.

65

N.Y. Trib. May 29/38

A SEASON'S CENSUS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

ALTHOUGH a few of its notes still remain to be sung or played within the next few days, the indoor music season of 1937-'38, so far as privately sponsored indoor performances are concerned, can be regarded as virtually finished, and the local center of musical interest is about to make its seasonal migration from the concert halls to the principal sites of outdoor music-making.

The annual statistical survey which it has become customary to inflict upon readers of these columns at this time of the year reveals that the season whose record has just been written has been the busiest in several years. Within the area considered in these censuses, the borough of Manhattan north of Greenwich Village, 1,107 privately sponsored musical events, according to the records of this department, have been presented for the pleasure (or, in a few cases, for the boredom or distress) of the ticket-buying public during the last nine months, as compared with 986 during the corresponding period in 1936-'37.

The lengthening by a fortnight of the regular season at the Metropolitan Opera House did not entirely offset from a musical point of view the absence of a spring season this year, the 1937-'38 total number of performances being 119, as compared with 123 in 1936-'37. The number of operatic performances at the Hippodrome, seventy-seven, counting tonight's performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," is smaller by thirteen than the Hippodrome total of last season. But 1937-'38 brought the return of the San Carlo company, which gave thirteen performances, and visits by the Salzburg Opera Guild and the London Intimate Opera Company, with ten and sixteen respective appearances. Ten performances by other groups bring this season's operatic total to 245, ten more than in 1936-'37.

Many More Concerts

In the concert field the 1937-'38 increase is much larger, with 862 events, compared with 751. Symphony orchestras gave 146 concerts, and concerts of miscellaneous orchestras and large instrumental groups of other types raise this figure to 160 events, compared with 138 last season. There were sixteen opera concerts at the Metropolitan Opera House, two more than before. The total for choral concerts rose from forty-six to fifty-six, for concerts by chamber music groups and chamber orchestras from seventy-five to seventy-seven.

The most notable numerical fact about the season of 1937-'38 probably is the copiousness of its crop of piano recitals, whose total, counting several two-piano programs and by an ensemble of nine pianos, is 190, fifty more than in 1836-'37 and nearly tying the total of 1926-'27, 191, which not improbably marked the highest record for any one season thus far. This is the first time since 1923, and, quite possibly, for several years before that, that a season has offered us more pianistic than vocal events. Despite this pianistic superiority in regard to quantity, this season's total of 174 song recitals marks an increase of six over its predecessor, while the number of violin recitals rose from sixty-four to sixty-eight. The total for cello recitals fell off from fourteen to eleven. There were four more concerts by small vocal ensembles, five guitar recitals, and one recital each by soloists on the harp, viola, xylophone, flute, theremin and polychord. Joint recitals in more than one musical medium and other events not falling under any of the above categories amounted to ninety-two, twenty-four more than before.

Organizations of the Federal Music Project have offered about 120 popular-priced concerts since late last August, which raises the total number of events offered to the paying public to 1,227. This does not represent the absolute total for this far-flung city, what with the limitation of the census to part of Manhattan, so as to afford a basis of comparison with previous years, and various semi-private events of programs in studios or private homes for which admission was charged.

The flucatation in the number of concerts and recitals in five important classifications presented in the last ten seasons is shown in the following table:

Season	Song	Piano	Violin	Chamber Music	Choral
1929-'30..	234	167	62	59	56
1930-'31..	210	156	56	70	56
1931-'32..	233	140	50	72	48
1932-'33..	170	108	58	57	44
1933-'34..	129	102	42	51	41
1934-'35..	149	134	59	72	50
1935-'36..	159	141	53	70	56
1936-'37..	168	140	64	75	46
1937-'38..	174	190	68	77	56

Trends in Concert Totals

In the 1920s the trend in the number of concerts given here each season was generally upward, except in the orchestral field. The totals in 1921 and 1922 were enough to cause viewing with alarm by notable authorities such as Henry E. Krehbiel, who in both years observed that the numerical increase in the supply of concerts was unaccompanied by a corresponding increase in the artistic value of the season's music-making, and that much of it visited much financial loss upon the sponsors or managers of the various

(Continued on page 7, column 1)

Judge
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN - 1938

THE MOVIES

By Robert Terrall

THE double feature—you are familiar with the argument—is as though the New York Philharmonic were required not only to play two symphonies every night but to change the symphonies three times a week. In about two months it would run out of good symphonies. Then it would play one good symphony and one not so good, and before long two not so good. People would call up to find when the one that was not quite so bad as the other was going on. Composers would deliberately write bad, tiresome, commonplace music to fill up the program. The Board of Governors of the Philharmonic would put in Bingo Wednesday and Saturday nights. The Boston Symphony would give away chinaware. The public, we would be given to understand, would like it.

The theory is, and every movie house proprietor in the land believes it, that out of sheer wanton self-indulgence people come to the movies to be bored. After sitting for an hour and a half through a pretty good film, they just like to stick around for another hour and a half, though they know in advance that the next film will send them home stupefied.

still exhibited only a feature and a comedy, Walt Disney would never have set his men to making Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. And without the double feature movie critics would have considerably less opportunity to work up indignation. The most effective pose a critic can take is to be indignant, and almost every critic gets indignant about the double feature.

Now, you don't catch us getting excited about the theatre, for instance. The theatre can go right ahead and die, and we will not be among those standing at the corner of 45th Street and Broadway, weeping. But if the movies died and eighty million people had to do something else nights, it would make us very sad.

In the last few months, a few surveys conducted on the most accepted pseudo-scientific principles have shown that the public, except for grammar school students and old men who go to the movies to keep warm, really does not like "two smash hits." Reluctantly the movie house proprietors have begun to shake their heads and go back to the single feature. But there is one notion that they refuse to give up: the notion that no matter how long a picture lasts, the

---

N.Y. Tribune - May 29/38

THE ORCHESTRAS

UNTIL the twenty-first season of concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium opens three weeks from next Thursday, on June 23, devotees of orchestral concerts here will be supplied mainly by the radio and by the concerts of the Federal Music Project at the Federal Music Theater.

Both of today's concerts at the Federal Music Theater will have conservative programs. Dvorak's "New World" symphony will be the principal item to be conducted by Antonia Brico, of the New York Women's Symphony, in the Federal Symphony Orchestra's afternoon concert beginning at 1:30. Harry Farbman will be the solo violinist in Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," and Dr. Sigmund Spaeth will comment on the program. In the sixth of his Tchaikovsky programs tonight with the New York Civic Orchestra, Eugene Plotnikoff will present the fifth symphony. Ruth Peter and Charles Haywood will sing airs from "Joan of Arc" and "Eugene Onegin."

Stadium Plans

Details of the Stadium Concert season thus far announced include the appearance of Albert Spalding, violinist, on the opening night, playing the Mendelssohn concerto under Jose Iturbi's direction, and of Grace Moore, Metropolitan Opera soprano, on Monday night, June 27, with Mr. Iturbi conducting. Beveridge Webster, pianist, will play under Mr. Iturbi's direction on Thursday, June 30.

Alexander Smallens will conduct the first two Sunday night concerts, on June 26 and July 3, which will be broadcast by the Columbia system. John Corigliano, assistant concertmaster of the Philharmonic-Symphony, who will act as concert master for the summer series, will be the soloist on July 3 in Jules Conus's violin concerto in E minor. On Tuesday night, July 5, the Hall Johnson Negro Choir will sing under Mr. Smallens's direction. For the six remaining Sunday night concerts to be broadcast, the Columbia system has announced that Macklin Marrow will conduct on July 10, Massimo Freccia on July 17; Willem van Hoogstraten on July 24 and 31; Mr. Smallens on August 7 and Mr. Iturbi on August 14.

Stravinsky Festival

On the first anniversary of the composer's death, Monday night, July 11, Paul Whiteman will conduct a memorial program in which members of his own orchestra, in addition to the Philharmonic-Symphony musicians, will take part. Bizet's "Carmen" will be given Thursday and Friday nights, July 14 and 15, with Mr. Smallens conducting and Bruna Castagna, of the Metropolitan Opera, in the title role. It has not yet been announced whether any other operas will be staged during the eight weeks' Stadium season. Walter Gieseking, pianist, will make his first summer appearance here at the Stadium on a date not yet announced.

A Stravinsky program has been announced for Thursday night, August 11, with Mr. Smallens conducting "Les Noces" and the "Symphony of Psalms," for orchestra and chorus, and the "Fire Bird" suite. The first two works are new to the Stadium, and "Les Noces" has not been previously performed by the Philharmonic, which gave the "Symphony of Psalms" under Otto Klemperer in October, 1934.

According to the last report of the campaign for the guaranty fund, issued May 18, $15,000 was still needed to complete the $75,000 needed to balance the season's budget. Contributions to bridge this gap should be sent to the office of the Stadium Concerts at 20 West Fifty-seventh Street.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES

JUN 7 - 1938

EFREM ZIMBALIST

Next Tuesday's stadium concert in Newark will include the playing of Tchaikovsky's Concerto in D major, opus 35, for violin and orchestra, with Efrem Zimbalist as soloist. The violinist, who is appearing on the program with Mischa Levitzki, pianist, as a second soloist, is an American citizen of Russian birth who studied under Leopold Auer. He made his American debut in 1911 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and has played in the important cities of the world since. Alexander Smallens will conduct the forthcoming concert as he did last night's, when Grace Moore was the soloist

---

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUN 1 - 1938

WPA Music Project Here Being Probed

Alleged Inaccuracies in Time Sheets Are Under Investigation of U. S. Treasury Dept.

Jacques Gordon Out As Director

'No Connection' Reported Between His Dismissal-Resignation and Government Inquiry

Alleged inaccuracies in the time sheets of the Federal music project in Hartford have been under investigation for several days now by the United States Treasury Department, WPA officials at state headquarters in New Haven revealed Tuesday night.

Earlier Tuesday Jacques Gordon, director of the WPA Hartford Symphony Orchestra, severed his connection with the project and declared at a rehearsal of the orchestra that he had been told he was through June 10.

Queried on Mr. Gordon's dismissal-resignation which came as a complete surprise to his orchestra Tuesday morning, WPA officials indicated the investigation and Mr. Gordon's action were just a coincidence. "There is no connection between them," it was explained.

Before the orchestra Tuesday morning in the ballroom of the Allyn House here, Conductor Gordon ran through a number and then briefly addressed the musicians. He said that it was the first time in his artistic career of 23 years that he had been given the "red slip," meaning dismissal.

"This is a case when politics takes preference over art," he said.

2 Reasons Explained.

The conductor explained that two reasons had been given for his dismissal. The first, he said, was the fact that he lives out of Hartford and the second, that it was claimed he had been unable to get along with Francis Goodwin, 2d, former local supervisor of the WPA orchestra and currently head of the Connecticut Symphony Society, which will cooperate with the WPA music project in the presentation of concerts at the Bushnell Memorial.

Orchestra members pointed out that as far as the first reason was concerned, it bore little weight because Mr. Gordon lived out of town when he first came to conduct the orchestra. In the summer the conductor lives at Falls Village and in the winter in New York City. As for the second reason, it was remarked that Mr. Goodwin had resigned some time ago as local supervisor.

Says Answer Evasive.

At the rehearsal, Mr. Gordon then turned to Mrs. Ethel M. Edwards of Bridgeport, director of the Connecticut WPA music project, and said that she should know more about the dismissal because of her position. Mrs. Edwards replied that she knew no more than he did, adding she was sorry to have him leave. Stating before the orchestra that the director's answer was evasive, Mr. Gordon then thanked the musicians for their cooperation during the past two years and thanked the state for its occasional cooperation which, he said, he was not receiving now.

The conductor continued that he wished he had been given notice three years ago, rather than now. It would have saved his "health" and that of some of the orchestra members, he explained. Wishing his musicians the best of luck, he then continued with the rehearsal. During intermission there was a hubbub among the orchestra members. Disappointment was expressed on all sides.

Probe Acknowledged.

While PWA officials acknowledged an investigation of time sheets by an agent from the Division of Investigation of the Treasury Department was in progress, they declined Tuesday night to comment on the details at the present time. It was understood that the agent will report his findings to authorities in Washington and that a copy will be returned to Vincent J. Sullivan, state WPA administrator at New Haven, who may then order what action may be taken.

Administrator Sullivan ordered the probe when the Finance Department of the WPA state headquarters brought to his attention possible inaccuracies in the Hartford time sheets. The Finance Department makes out the payrolls from the time sheets. The payrolls are then sent on to Washington to the Treasury Department where checks are made out and returned.

Gordon Submit Resignation.

In connection with his "dismissal," it was learned that Mr. Gordon had submited a resignation Saturday to State Administrator Sullivan in which he said simply, "After talking with Dr. Nicolai Sokoloff (national director of the WPA music projects) I decided to resign from the Hartford Orchestra before the Bushnell Park concerts begin. Please notify Mrs. Edwards of my decision. I hope to have the pleasure of meeting you in the near future." The communication was a telegram.

(Continued from Page 1.)

At the New Haven WPA office the resignation was accepted by Director Sullivan, it was announced. No successor had been named up to late Tuesday night.

Celebrated for his musical presentations at Music Mountain as head of the Gordon String Quartet, Mr. Gordon before coming to Hartford was for eight years concert master of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. His musical career was begun in America while studying under Franz Kneisel, erstwhile concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and organizer of the famous Kneisel Quartet.

This morning at 9:30 o'clock the orchestra is scheduled to give a concert at the Arsenal School. A rehearsal is also to be held.

A SEASON'S CENSUS

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

ALTHOUGH a few of its notes still remain to be sung or played within the next few days, the indoor music season of 1937-'38, so far as privately sponsored indoor performances are concerned, can be regarded as virtually finished, and the local center of musical interest is about to make its seasonal migration from the concert halls to the principal sites of outdoor music-making.

The annual statistical survey which it has become customary to inflict upon readers of these columns at this time of the year reveals that the season whose record has just been written has been the busiest in several years. Within the area considered in these censuses, the borough of Manhattan north of Greenwich Village, 1,107 privately sponsored musical events, according to the records of this department, have been presented for the pleasure (or, in a few cases, for the boredom or distress) of the ticket-buying public during the last nine months, as compared with 986 during the corresponding period in 1936-'37.

The lengthening by a fortnight of the regular season at the Metropolitan Opera House did not entirely offset from a musical point of view the absence of a spring season this year, the 1937-'38 total number of performances being 119, as compared with 123 in 1936-'37. The number of operatic performances at the Hippodrome, seventy-seven, counting tonight's performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," is smaller by thirteen than the Hippodrome total of last season. But 1937-'38 brought the return of the San Carlo company, which gave thirteen performances, and visits by the Salzburg Opera Guild and the London Intimate Opera Company, with ten and sixteen respective appearances. Ten performances by other groups bring this season's operatic total to 245, ten more than in 1936-'37.

Many More Concerts

In the concert field the 1937-'38 increase is much larger, with 862 events, compared with 751. Symphony orchestras gave 146 concerts, and concerts of miscellaneous orchestras and large instrumental groups of other types raise this figure to 160 events, compared with 138 last season. There were sixteen opera concerts at the Metropolitan Opera House, two more than before. The total for choral concerts rose from forty-six to fifty-six, for concerts by chamber music groups and chamber orchestras from seventy-five to seventy-seven.

The most notable numerical fact about the season of 1937-'38 probably is the copiousness of its crop of piano recitals, whose total, counting several two-piano programs and by an ensemble of nine pianos, is 190, fifty more than in 1936-'37 and nearly tying the total of 1926-'27, 191, which not improbably marked the highest record for any one season thus far. This is the first time since 1923, and, quite possibly, for several years before that, that a season has offered us more pianistic than vocal events. Despite this pianistic superiority in regard to quantity, this season's total of 174 song recitals marks an increase of six over its predecessor, while the number of violin recitals rose from sixty-four to sixty-eight. The total for cello recitals fell off from fourteen to eleven. There were four more concerts by small vocal ensembles, five guitar recitals, and one recital each by soloists on the harp, viola, xylophone, flute, theremin and polychord. Joint recitals in more than one musical medium and other events not falling under any of the above categories amounted to ninety-two, twenty-four more than before.

Organizations of the Federal Music Project have offered about 120 popular-priced concerts since late last August, which raises the total number of events offered to the paying public to 1,227. This does not represent the absolute total for this far-flung city, what with the limitation of the census to part of Manhattan, so as to afford a basis of comparison with previous years, and various semi-private events of programs in studios or private homes for which admission was charged.

The fluctuation in the number of concerts and recitals in five important classifications presented in the last ten seasons is shown in the following table:

Season	Song	Piano	Violin	Chamber Music	Choral
1929-'30..	234	167	62	59	56
1930-'31..	210	156	55	70	56
1931-'32..	233	140	50	72	48
1932-'33..	170	108	58	57	44
1933-'34..	129	102	42	51	41
1934-'35..	149	134	59	72	50
1935-'36..	159	141	53	70	56
1936-'37..	168	140	64	75	46
1937-'38..	174	190	68	77	[illegible]

Trends in Concert Totals

In the 1920s the trend in the number of concerts given here each season was generally upward, except in the orchestral field. The totals in 1921 and 1922 were enough to cause viewing with alarm by notable authorities such as Henry E. Krehbiel, who in both years observed that the numerical increase in the supply of concerts was unaccompanied by a corresponding increase in the artistic value of the season's music-making, and that much of it visited much financial loss upon the sponsors or managers of the various

(Continued on page 7, column 1)

Judge
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN - 1938

THE ORCHESTRAS

N.Y. Tribune - May 29/38

UNTIL the twenty-first season of concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium opens three weeks from next Thursday, on June 23, devotees of orchestral concerts here will be supplied mainly by the radio and by the concerts of the Federal Music Project at the Federal Music Theater.

Both of today's concerts at the Federal Music Theater will have conservative programs. Dvorak's "New World" symphony will be the principal item to be conducted by Antonia Brico, of the New York Women's Symphony, in the Federal Symphony Orchestra's afternoon concert beginning at 1:30. Harry Farbman will be the solo violinist in Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," and Dr. Sigmund Spaeth will comment on the program. In the sixth of his Tchaikovsky programs tonight with the New York Civic Orchestra, Eugene Plotnikoff will present the fifth symphony. Ruth Peter and Charles Haywood will sing airs from "Joan of Arc" and "Eugene Onegin."

Stadium Plans

Details of the Stadium Concert season thus far announced include the appearance of Albert Spalding, violinist, on the opening night, playing the Mendelssohn concerto under Jose Iturbi's direction, and of Grace Moore, Metropolitan Opera soprano, on Monday night, June 27, with Mr. Iturbi conducting. Beveridge Webster, pianist, will play under Mr. Iturbi's direction on Thursday, June 30.

Alexander Smallens will conduct the first two Sunday night concerts, on June 26 and July 3, which will be broadcast by the Columbia system. John Corigliano, assistant concertmaster of the Philharmonic-Symphony, who will act as concertmaster for the summer series, will be the soloist on July 3 in Jules Conus's violin concerto in E minor. On Tuesday night, July 5, the Hall Johnson Negro Choir will sing under Mr. Smallens's direction. For the six remaining Sunday night concerts to be broadcast, the Columbia system has announced that Macklin Marrow will conduct on July 10, Massimo Freccia on July 17; Willem van Hoogstraten on July 24 and 31; Mr. Smallens on August 7 and Mr. Iturbi on August 14.

Stravinsky Festival

On the first anniversary of the composer's death, Monday night, July 11, Paul Whiteman will conduct a memorial program in which members of his own orchestra, in addition to the Philharmonic-Symphony musicians, will take part. Bizet's "Carmen" will be given Thursday and Friday nights, July 14 and 15, with Mr. Smallens conducting and Bruna Castagna, of the Metropolitan Opera, in the title role. It has not yet been announced whether any other operas will be staged during the eight weeks' Stadium season. Walter Gieseking, pianist, will make his first summer appearance here at the Stadium on a date not yet announced.

A Stravinsky program has been announced for Thursday night, August 11, with Mr. Smallens conducting "Les Noces" and the "Symphony of Psalms," for orchestra and chorus, and the "Fire Bird" suite. The first two works are new to the Stadium, and "Les Noces" has not been previously performed by the Philharmonic, which gave the "Symphony of Psalms" under Otto Klemperer in October, 1934.

According to the last report of the campaign for the guaranty fund, issued May 18, $15,000 was still needed to complete the $75,000 needed to balance the season's budget. Contributions to bridge this gap should be sent to the office of the Stadium Concerts at 20 West Fifty-seventh Street.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES
JUN 7 - 1938

EFREM ZIMBALIST

Next Tuesday's stadium concert in Newark will include the playing of Tchaikovsky's Concerto in D major, opus 35, for violin and orchestra, with Efrem Zimbalist as soloist. The violinist, who is appearing on the program with Mischa Levitzki, pianist, as a second soloist, is an American citizen of Russian birth who studied under Leopold Auer. He made his American debut in 1911 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] played in the important cities of the world since. Alexander Smallens will conduct the forthcoming concert as he did last night's, when Grace Moore was the soloist.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUN 1 - 1938

WPA Music Project Here Being Probed

Alleged Inaccuracies in Time Sheets Are Under Investigation of U. S. Treasury Dept.

Jacques Gordon Out As Director

'No Connection' Reported Between His Dismissal-Resignation and Government Inquiry

Alleged inaccuracies in the time sheets of the Federal music project in Hartford have been under investigation for several days now by the United States Treasury Department, WPA officials at state headquarters in New Haven revealed Tuesday night.

Earlier Tuesday Jacques Gordon, director of the WPA Hartford Symphony Orchestra, severed his connection with the project and declared at a rehearsal of the orchestra that he had been told he was through June 10.

Queried on Mr. Gordon's dismissal-resignation which came as a complete surprise to his orchestra Tuesday morning, WPA officials indicated the investigation and Mr. Gordon's action were just a coincidence. "There is no connection between them," it was explained.

Before the orchestra Tuesday morning in the ballroom of the Allyn House here, Conductor Gordon ran through a number and then briefly addressed the musicians. He said that it was the first time in his artistic career of 23 years that he had been given the "red slip," meaning dismissal.

"This is a case when politics takes preference over art," he said.

2 Reasons Explained.

The conductor explained that two reasons had been given for his dismissal. The first, he said, was the fact that he lives out of Hartford and the second, that it was claimed he had been unable to get along with Francis Goodwin, 2d, former local supervisor of the WPA orchestra and currently head of the Connecticut Symphony Society, which will cooperate with the WPA music project in the presentation of concerts at the Bushnell Memorial.

Orchestra members pointed out that as far as the first reason was concerned, it bore little weight because Mr. Gordon lived out of town when he first came to conduct the orchestra. In the summer the conductor lives at Falls Village and in the winter in New York City. As for the second reason, it was remarked that Mr. Goodwin had resigned some time ago as local supervisor.

Says Answer Evasive.

At the rehearsal, Mr. Gordon then turned to Mrs. Ethel M. Edwards of Bridgeport, director of the Connecticut WPA music project, and said that she should know more about the dismissal because of her position. Mrs. Edwards replied that she knew no more than he did, adding she was sorry to have him leave. Stating before the orchestra that the director's answer was evasive, Mr. Gordon then thanked the musicians for their cooperation during the past two years and thanked the state for its occasional cooperation which, he said, he was not receiving now.

The conductor continued that he wished he had been given notice three years ago, rather than now. It would have saved his "health" and that of some of the orchestra members, he explained. Wishing his musicians the best of luck, he then continued with the rehearsal. During intermission there was a hubbub among the orchestra members. Disappointment was expressed on all sides.

Probe Acknowledged.

While WPA officials acknowledged an investigation of time sheets by an agent from the Division of Investigation of the Treasury Department was in progress, they declined Tuesday night to comment on the details at the present time. It was understood that the agent will report his findings to authorities in Washington and that a copy will be returned to Vincent J. Sullivan, state WPA administrator at New Haven, who may then order what action may be taken.

Administrator Sullivan ordered the probe when the Finance Department of the WPA state headquarters brought to his attention possible inaccuracies in the Hartford time sheets. The Finance Department makes out the payrolls from the time sheets. The payrolls are then sent on to Washington to the Treasury Department where checks are made out and returned.

Gordon Submit Resignation.

In connection with his "dismissal," it was learned that Mr. Gordon had submited a resignation Saturday to State Administrator Sullivan in which he said simply, "After talking with Dr. Nicolai Sokoloff (national director of the WPA music projects) I decided to resign from the Hartford Orchestra before the Bushnell Park concerts begin. Please notify Mrs. Edwards of my decision. I hope to have the pleasure of meeting you in the near future." The communication was a telegram.

(Continued from Page 1.)

At the New Haven WPA office the resignation was accepted by Director Sullivan, it was announced. No successor had been named up to late Tuesday night.

Celebrated for his musical presentations at Music Mountain as head of the Gordon String Quartet, Mr. Gordon before coming to Hartford was for eight years concert master of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. His musical career was begun in America while studying under Franz Kneisel, erstwhile concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and organizer of the famous Kneisel Quartet.

This morning at 9:30 o'clock the orchestra is scheduled to give a concert at the Arsenal School. A rehearsal is also to be held.

THE MOVIES

By Robert Terrall

THE double feature—you are familiar with the argument—is as though the New York Philharmonic were required not only to play two symphonies every night but to change the symphonies three times a week. In about two months it would run out of good symphonies. Then it would play one good symphony and one not so good, and before long two not so good. People would call up to find when the one that was not quite so bad as the other was going on. Composers would deliberately write bad, tiresome, commonplace music to fill up the program. The Board of Governors of the Philharmonic would put in Bingo Wednesday and Saturday nights. The Boston Symphony would give away chinaware. The public, we would be given to understand, would like it.

The theory is, and every movie house proprietor in the land believes it, that out of sheer wanton self-indulgence people come to the movies to be bored. After sitting for an hour and a half through a pretty good film, they just like to stick around for another hour and a half, though they know in advance that the next film will send them home stupefied. still exhibited only a feature and a comedy, Walt Disney would never have set his men to making Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs. And without the double feature movie critics would have considerably less opportunity to work up indignation. The most effective pose a critic can take is to be indignant, and almost every critic gets indignant about the double feature.

Now, you don't catch us getting excited about the theatre, for instance. The theatre can go right ahead and die, and we will not be among those standing at the corner of 45th Street and Broadway, weeping. But if the movies died and eighty million people had to do something else nights, it would make us very sad.

In the last few months, a few surveys conducted on the most accepted pseudo-scientific principles have shown that the public, except for grammar school students and old men who go to the movies to keep warm, really does not like "two smash hits." Reluctantly the movie house proprietors have begun to shake their heads and go back to the single feature. But there is one notion that they refuse to give up: the notion that no matter how long a picture lasts, the

66

ELK CITY, OKLA.
NEWS

JUN 1 - 1938

NEW YORK INSIDE OUT

By DON O'MALLEY

NEW YORK—It begins to look as if the the best way to kill a Broadway show is to award it a prize. The Drama Critics Circle a couple of weeks ago voted John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men" the best American play of the season. About a week later, the management announcement that "Of Mice and Men" would close in two weeks . . A short time ago "Susan and God" won the New York Theatre Club's prize as the best play of the season. Less than a fortnight later, producer John Golden announced the closing date for early in June

. . . The Pulitzer Prize had a healthy box office reaction on Thornton Wilder's "Our Town"—but things (no harm wished) may yet happen . . . As a matter of fact, the whole matter of prizes has been worked to death, until now an award means very little apart from a one-day publicity splurge. There was a time when these awards carried authoritative meaning. But the hue and cry raised against the selections of the Pulitzer committee a few years ago, as well as the racketeering device of using dummy societies to bestow inside "prizes," has developed a general skepticism toward all official accolades . . . . Broadway plays will hereafter have to win or lose, I think, on their own intrinsic merits.

* * * *

WITHOUT HORSES—The whole matter of critical approval is a curious one, and often depends merely on current fashion. A couple of years ago I made a review of the orchestral situation in regard to Carnegie Hall concerts, and in almost every case the music experts were praising the conductors for qualities they didn't have . . . Thus, Serge Koussevitzky, of the Boston Symphony, was praised for conducting "without fireworks," and Fritz Reiner earned a local magazine's approved for conducting "without a score." Jose Iturbi, then starting on his orchestral career, achieved recognition for conducting "without a piano," and Eugene Ormandy was congratulated for conducting 'without a score." . . . A little bit earlier, Otto Klemperer caused favorable comment because he conducted without a podium, Leopold Stokowski because he dispensed with a baton, and John Barbirolli, who is near-sighted, was praised because he conducted without his eyeglasses . . . The negative standard of appraised finally caught up with the theatre, this season, and several plays—including the Pulitzer Prize winner, "Our Town"—gained fame partly because they were shown without scenery . . . Reasons for critical hat-throwing will have changed by next season, you may be sure. The actor selected for first honors, next spring, will probably be a fellow who performed his entire role without speaking a word.

* * * *

FRIBBLES—Nita Naldi, once the heart-stopping siren of the silent pictures, is now an amiable and jolly lady who likes to relax by attending the swing spots in the company of friends . . . Evelyn Nesbit, another lady whose glamour once captivated the attention of multitudes, is also a jolly woman now—depending on laughing good nature as her professional asset . . . They raised a lot of fuss in Newk York, a week or two ago, over the 'kissable" aspects of movie actress Olympe Bradna. A glance at today's movie ads reminds me that such stories always have a way of appearing a few days before the opening of a new picture . . . . Regular visitors to New York usually pick on one hotel and stick to it through the years. Old-world Europeans (are there any left;) like places like the Gotham. Fussy old bachelors lean toward the Great Northern. Eugene O'Neill and other theatrical folks swear by the Madison, while literary luminaries head for the Algonquin . . . . Pianist-whistler Bob Byron tried to whistle "Whistle While You Work" on his broadcast the other morning and failed completely—having just walked up 22 flights to get to the CBS studio after the elevator power failed, and being naturally, out of breath . . . . Helen Morgan's mother attends every single performance that her piano-sitting daughter gives at Billy Rose's Casa Manana. Just likes the act very much, it seems . . . . Benny Goodman almost invariably wears a brown slip-over sweater when rehearsing his radio band . . . . Radio actress Joan Blaine, I hear, is having a show written for her by a leading playwright, with a Broadway production scheduled for next fall.

SPOKANE, WASH.
CHRONICLE

JUN 6 - 1938

ALSO MONEY BACKER.

In pre-war days Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was both conductor and financial backer of his own symphony orchestra in Russia.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH

JUN 4 - 1938

Victor Cheers Long and Loud For 2 Releases

By Frances Boardman

Victor is cheering long and loud for two of its latest releases: The Symphony No. 2 by Schumann, as recorded by the Philadelphia orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, and the series of Johann Strauss waltzes presented by the Boston "Pops" orchestra (really the Boston Symphony, orchestra, slightly reduced [redacted]thur Fiedler conducting.

The waltz series supplements Victor's earlier set, made by the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra under the Ormandy baton, there being no duplications, and it is a brilliant and beautiful contribution to music literature in this field. Arthur Fiedler, always an interesting director, has his own way of presenting the items in the list. He inclines toward emphasis on the robust side, giving full value to all the suggestions, usually offered in the introductory passages, of a blood kinship between these ballroom scores and the Laendler, Alpine songs and Trinklieder of the countryside. It is an interesting and attractive factor in his presentations. Probably, on the other hand, you will miss the inimitable touch of sophistication which the Ormandy baton supplies—chiefly, perhaps, by his extremely subtle insinuating treatment of pauses and accents.

The Fiedler list includes "Wine, Women and Song," "Artists' Life," "The Emperor," "Wiener Blut" and "Fruehlingsstimmen," and it is good to hear these things done on efficient space to display the fine, symphonic introductions, with their implications of elegant leisure.

This release, by the way, will stop my long wail for a fresh pressing of "The Emperor." (It will not, however, keep me from going on and on about the necessity for a new record of "Am Stellen Herd," preferably by Jussi Bjoerling.)

The Schumann Symphony No. 2, in my purely personal opinion, the least grateful of the four turned out by the composer, is given every benefit by this new reproduction—the tonal sumptuousness and versatility of the Philadelphia orchestra, and the Ormandy passion for presenting each musical work as though its author's whole reputation rested upon this particular hearing. It is beautifully articulated in all its parts, and yet at no sacrifice to mass and outline. Enough hearings of this pressing will perhaps alter my alignment of this symphony among its fellows.

Of real historic importance is Victor's issue of two performances by the late Feodor Chaliapin, one of the greatest singers of the past century. These are songs which were, for many years, especially identified with him, although they have more recently become almost too-common property: The "Volga Boat Song" and Moussorgsky's "Song of the Flea." The singer was quite obviously no longer young when he recorded these, but time had by no means obliterated either the exceptional quality of his voice, or the compelling authority of his art.

Incurable Haydn addicts are among the happiest of music fans, as they have every right to be, and they undoubtedly will go with enthusiasm for the seldom-heard Trio in D major, as pressed for Musicraft (in four parts) by Albert Leveque, pianist; Rene Le Roy, flutist, and Lucien Kirsch, 'cellist. The music is lovely, and so, for the most part, is the performance, although it seems to me that the ensemble is quite frequently marred by a preponderance of piano. A first run on the machine also would indicate that the recording is not quite up to Musicraft's high standard of clear incisiveness. It may, however, improve (this frequently happens) with repetition.

Among recent popular record releases are the following:

B. Trans. June 9/38

News of Music

The seventh week of the Pops concerts will begin next Monday night with a program to be played exclusively for cohorts of Boston University. The Piston-Wiener ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," will be repeated on Tuesday evening. "Italian Night" will be on Wednesday, with Alba Alessandrini, soprano, and Francesco Albanese, tenor, for soloists, and with Respighi's "Pines of Rome" for principal symphonic item on a well-made program largely operatic. The "Request" program will be repeated on Thursday. For "New England Conservatory" night on Saturday the soloists will be Eleanor Steber, soprano, and Esther Asher, pianist. At the same concert Paul White's "Four Spokes from the Hub" will be played for the first time.

Musician

Let us pause to consider Benito Randolfi.
Musician: Revived after muffins and coffee,
He would flip his mustachios, kiss his frail wife,
And sweep from the board to professional life,
To tell some young student the world was agreed
None equalled his Mendelssohn Concerto for speed.

At least once a week, at a fashionable soiree,
He enchanted the ladies with his suave foreign way,
And his manner of dealing with Chaconnes and such matter,
Like an aspic atremble on an hors d'oeuvre platter.
And nightly his wife, with her obsolete smile.
Heard some exploit recounted in picaresque style.

But Earth shrugged a shoulder, and in shrugging did make
The usual havoc that accompanies a quake.
A bust of Beethoven plunged down through the air—
Alas, to receive it, Randolfi was there!
Mentioned in the casualties of the unfortunate disaster
Was an unknown musician who was felled by some plaster.

—TRISTRAM LIVINGSTONE

EASTON, PA.
EXPRESS

JUN 1 - 1938

Valley Festival?

While it lasted, Austria's Salzburg Festival enjoyed a unique niche in the annals of world music. Naziism has destroyed its security. Apparently the same force is about to destroy its existence on its former basis.

Probably all Europe, with the exception of Germany, would like to see the spirit of Salzburg preserved somewhere, but no European nation has the time or the freedom from the threat of war to do much about it.

In that connection, it is interesting to note that the Bach Festival, already a world institution, closed its 1938 season with a performance regarded by many as the most successful in its 31-year history. And represented in 1938 reservations were England, France, Canada, South America, and 24 states and the District of Columbia in this country.

The thought arises: If devotion to one composer and one type of music can make a musical group the subject of world attention, what could the widening of that program to include a week of chorus, symphonic, and operatic entertainment accomplish?

That thought is the more compelling because, just as New York has become the musical center of the world, so is the Lehigh Valley an approximate center of musical America. To the north and east, the Metropolitan, the Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony. To the southwest, the Philadelphia and Baltimore orchestras. To the west, the Cleveland and Cincinnati symphonies.

Could a co-operative plan be worked out to enable the three cities of the Lehigh Valley to sponsor a week of music drawn from those key centers of American music? Could this Valley become the equivalent of the Salzburg of yesterday?

It's an interesting question, not necessarily visionary.

NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

JUN 7 - 1938

Who's Who in the News

A Repulse Is Never a Defeat for the Son of a Pioneer of the Days of Self-Reliance

Survived the Surprise

Receiving the honorary degree of doctor of music at Russell Sage College, Nadia Boulanger, director of the Ecole Normale of Paris and the American Conservatory at Fontainebleu, now in this country as visiting lecturer in music at Radcliffe College, can name some of the more prominent contemporary composers of the United States as among her former pupils.

Gratifying, indeed, must be this Russell Sage degree, but, if questioned as to her reaction, she might reply as to that interviewer who, upon her selection as the first woman guest conductor of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, naively inquired concerning her emotions. Smiling, the fragile little French lady replied superbly: "I have been a woman for a little over 50 years and have got over my initial astonishment."

Fifty-seven years old, she has white hair done into a soft roll piled upon the back of her neck, bright eyes gleaming behind pince-nez, wears black gowns which manage to give the impression of a uniform, a silver chain around the neck and perhaps an old-fashioned sunburst in her black tie. She comes of a family of musicians. Both her father and grandfather were professors in the Paris Conservatory.

LEMUEL F. PARTON.

67

Complete Pops Programs for the Week

B. Trans June 4/38

A second Pop concert for the benefit of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin the week in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening, when the annual "Request" program will occupy the final Sunday night concert of the season. For the rest, the features of the programs assembled by Arthur Fiedler for the week's concerts include "Old Timers' Night" on Monday "Tufts Night" on Thursday and the appearance of Albion Metcalf, pianist, and the New England Federation of Men's Glee Clubs under Donald Gammons on Saturday. The programs, including that to be given this evening, which will be conducted by Paul Cherkassky, violinist in the orchestra, follow in detail:

Tonight

Paul Cherkassky, Conductor

Coronation March from "The Prophet" ..... Meyerbeer
Largo from the "New World" Symphony ..... Dvorak
Liebestraum ..... Liszt-Herbert
The Ride of the Valkyries ..... Wagner
"Peer Gynt" Suite No. 1 ..... Grieg
The Girl with the Flaxen Hair ... Debussy
Bolero ..... Ravel
Tales from the Vienna Woods ..... Strauss
The Toy Trumpet ..... Scott

Solo trumpet: Roger Voisin

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner

Stein Song

Tomorrow Night

Request Program

March, "Pomp and Circumstance ... Elgar
By the Beautiful Blue Danube .... Strauss
Largo from "Xerxes" ..... Handel
Finlandia ..... Sibelius
The Animals' Carnival ..... Saint-Saens

Pianos: J. M. Sanroma, L. Litwin

Bolero ..... Ravel
Rhapsody in Blue ..... Gershwin

Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma

Night and Day ..... Porter
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn ..... Valerius-Kremser
Encores:
  Tango, "Jealousy" ..... Gade
  The Toy Trumpet ..... Scott
  Mosquito Dance ..... White
  Pizzicati, from "Sylvia" ..... Delibes

Monday Night—Old Timers' Night

"La Sorella," March ..... Borel-Clerc
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" .... Suppe
La Paloma (The Dove) ..... Yradier
Selection from "The Mikado" ..... Sullivan
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ..... Volstedt
La Golondrina, Mexican Folk Song (Arranged by Findlay)
"Song Fest," Medley:
  "Pack Up Your Troubles"—"Smiles"—"Till We Meet Again"—"In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree"—"My Wild Irish Rose"—"Take Me Out to the Ball Game"—"Sweet Adeline"—"Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet"—"There Is a Tavern in the Town"—"Maine Stein Song"—"Let Me Call You Sweetheart"
A Hunt in the Black Forest ..... Voelker
The Glow Worm ..... Lincke
Songs of the Old Days:
  "Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-ay"—"The Bowery"—"The Sidewalks of New York"—"Sweet Rosie O'Grady"—"Daisy Bell"—"Comrades"—"Little Annie Rooney"—"She May Have Seen Better Days"—"The Band Played On"—"After the Ball"—"A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight"

Tuesday Evening

Triumphal March from "Aida" ..... Verdi
Overture, "The Roman Carnival" .. Berlioz
Molly on the Shore ..... Grainger
Danse Macabre ..... Saint-Saens
The I. B. M. Symphony ..... Giannini
Largo from "Xerxes" ..... Handel
Invitation to the Dance .... Weber-Berlioz
"Cagliostro," Waltzes ..... Strauss
La Comparsa (Cuban Carnival Procession) ..... Lecuona-Gould
Pomp and Circumstance ..... Elgar

Wednesday Evening

March, "Only One Vienna" .... Schrammel
Overture to "Euryanthe" ..... Weber
The Troika (from "The Seasons") ..... Tschaikowsky
Hungarian Dances ..... Brahms
Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or" ..... Rimsky-Korsakov
Ballet Suite ..... Rameau-Mottl
Finale, Fourth Symphony ... Tschaikowsky
"New Vienna," Waltzes ..... Strauss
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" ... Wagner
Prelude in G minor ..... Rachmaninoff
To a Water Lily ..... MacDowell
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen" ..... Bizet

Thursday Evening

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ..... Wagner
Overture to "The Bartered Bride" ..... Smetana
Hora Staccato (Rumanian) .. Dinicu-Heifetz
Magic Fire Music (Finale of "Die Walkure") ..... Wagner
Bolero ..... Ravel

L. R. Lewis, '87, conducting:

Intercollegiate Inklings ... L. R. Lewis, '87
Tuftonia's Day ..... E. W. Hayes, '16
Class Song of 1938 .... W. A. Johnson, '38
Horn solo by Willem Valkenier
That Mascot ..... P. B. Lewis, '18
Spell It Out ..... A. T. Williams, '19
"Princess Ida," Selection ..... Sullivan
Tales from the Vienna Woods .... Strauss
Wintergreen for President ..... Gershwin
Dear Alma Mater

Friday Evening

"Washington Post," March ..... Sousa
Overture to "Raymond" ..... Thomas
Fugato on a Well-known Theme .. McBride
Ballet Suite from "Aida" ..... Verdi
"Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes ..... Strauss
Judex ..... Gounod
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ..... Liszt
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ..... Churchill-Bodge
Night and Day ..... Porter
American Fantasy ..... Herbert

Saturday Evening

"Military Polonaise ..... Chopin-Glazounov
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ..... Nicolai
At the Mill ..... Gillet-Cailliet
"In War Time," from the Indian Suite ..... MacDowell
Fantasia for Piano and Orchestra ..... Tschaikowsky

Soloist: Albion Metcalf

Marche Slave ..... Tschaikowsky

N. E. Federation of Men's Glee Clubs
Donald Gammons, conductor

The Ride of the Valkyries ..... Wagner

Free Concerts

Gaston Elcus, violinist, accompanied by Leo Litwin, and Reginald Boardman, pianist, will share the program at the Gardner Museum tomorrow afternoon at two. Mr. Elcus will play a Handel Sonata in A major and two movements from Lalos "Concerto Russe." Schumann's "Symphonic Etudes" (Op. 13) and pieces by Grieg, Debussy, and Rachmaninoff will make up Mr. Boardman's part of the program.

The closing concert of the Longy School will be given in Agassiz Theater, Cambridge, on Tuesday evening at 8.15. The program includes Purcell's "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day" for chorus and orchestra, "Le Tombeau de Couperin" of Ravel, Haydn's Symphony No. 82 in C major, Hindemith's First Sonata, and a Concerto for 'cello and orchestra by Tartini. Tickets required for admission to the concert may be obtained at the Longy School.

Pupils of Theo S. Carreiro will give a recital in Brown Hall Tuesday evening at 8.15. Artiss de Volt, harpist, will be the guest artist, and the accompanists will be Annette M. Schuerfeld and Nathan Rudnick.

The annual concert of the Back Bay Singing School will be held at Curry Hall on Saturday evening at 8.15. Included on the program will be Schubert's "Der Hirt auf dem Felsen," to be sung by Olive DiNapoli, soprano, with Gustav Lofblad as clarinetist. Bertha Parker will play three violin obbligatos.

VICTOR RECORDS
YOU CAN ALWAYS GET WHAT YOU WANT AT STEINERT'S
Largest Victor Stock in Boston
Plenty of Audition Rooms
M. Steinert & Sons
162 BOYLSTON STREET
Steinert Hall - - HANcock 1900

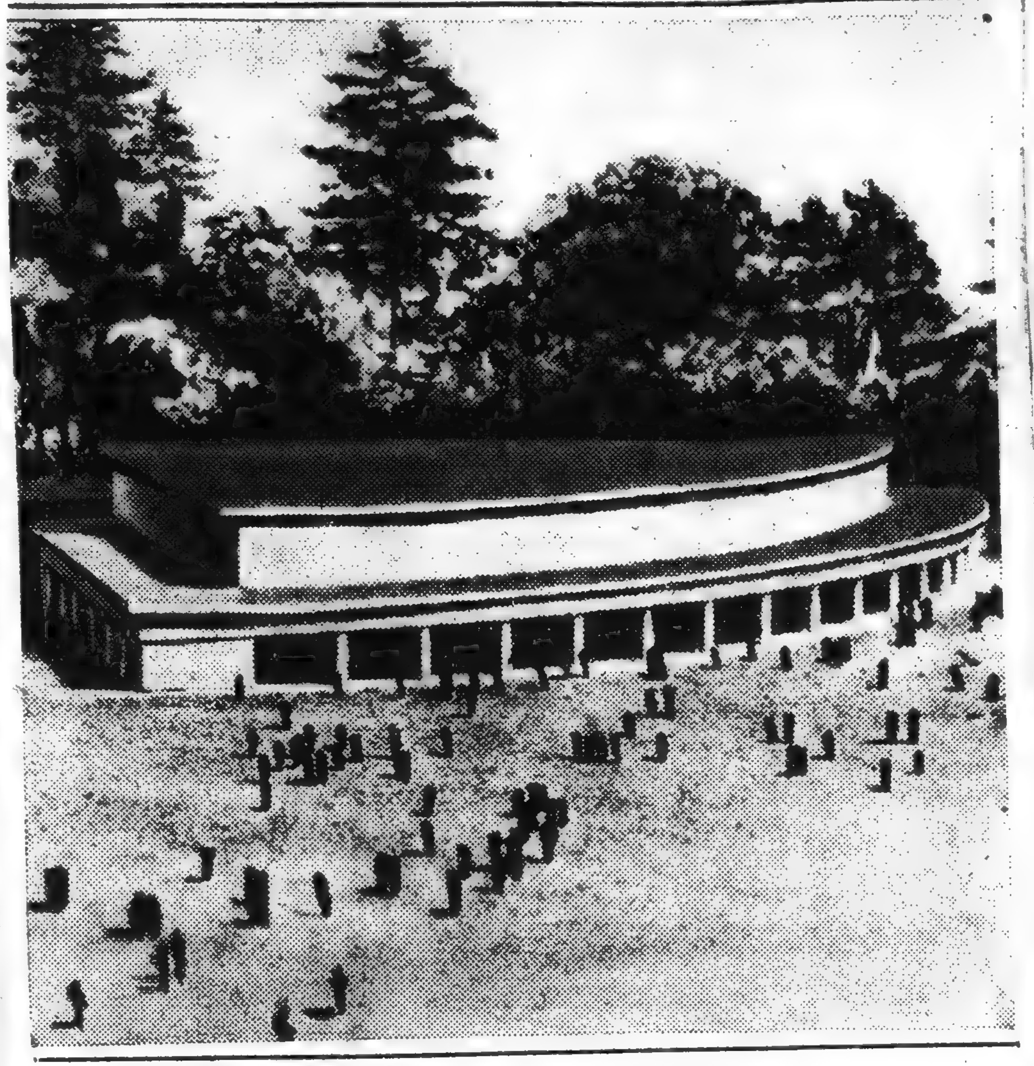
Globe Jun 10

CANDID CAMERA CONTEST TO BE OBSERVED AT POPS

The first Candid Camera Night in the history of pop concerts will be held in Symphony Hall on the evening of June 24. All photographers are invited to take this chance of photographing the Pops orchestra, its conductor, the crowds in the corridors, cars arriving or any other detail of Pops evening which appeals to them. During part of the program the use of flashlights will be permitted.

Three prizes in the form of buying orders at the Eastman Kodak Company will be awarded the three photographers who take the most interesting pictures that evening.

Modern Temple of Music



THE "SHED" AT TANGLEWOOD
New home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August. The reproduction above was obtained by superimposition of a photograph of an artist's model of Shed on a photograph of Tanglewood terrain.

Dance it to the WALTZ KING'S OWN MUSIC

Once again it's smart to be romantic and dance the Viennese Waltz!

JOHANN STRAUSS ON VICTOR RECORDS

played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler

New Victor Red Seal Album of Strauss Waltzes, including Frühlingsstimmen (Voices of Spring)—Wine, Woman and Song—Wiener Blut (Vienna Blood)—Artists' Life Waltz—Emperor Waltz...(Album M-445) Price, Complete $7.00 (Records may be purchased singly if desired).

For a full list of Johann Strauss recordings see the new Victor Catalog at your RCA Victor Music Merchant's.

Special Release! The musical treat of the decade—Benny Goodman and The Budapest String Quartet playing the Mozart Quintet for Clarinet and Strings. (K-581) Album M-452. $6.50.

Here's How to Get $14.95 RCA Victrola Attachment Without Extra Cost!*

Play Records through your Radio with the new RCA Victrola Attachment. Join the Victor Record Society and get this $14.95, *list price, instrument without extra cost.

Attaches to any modern AC radio . . . Has feather-touch crystal pick-up. Can be played from your armchair. Get it now. See your dealer about joining the V. R. S.

RCA presents the Magic Key every Sunday, 2 to 3 P.M., E.D.S.T., on the NBC Blue Network.

NEW Higher Fidelity VICTOR RECORDS
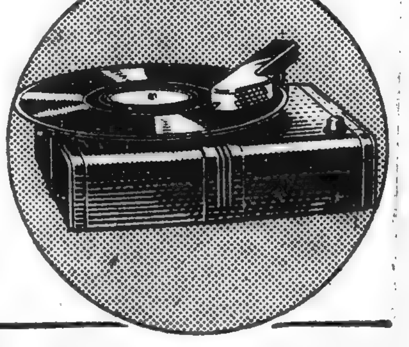
AND RCA VICTROLAS AND VICTROLA ATTACHMENTS
A Service of the Radio Corporation of America



HARRISBURG, PA.
PATRIOT

JUN 3 - 1938

CHATTER

By MARGARET BECKER KULP

BUT THE ARTS of far-away countries are not the only contributions these people have to make to their adopted country. They bring with them a vision, a purpose, and a sense of stability. For even as our early American ancestors came to these shores to find freedom in worship and a refuge from oppression, so have these aliens come, bringing with them the conviction of their responsibility and their gratitude to America.

Last Sunday the members of St. John's Rumanian Orthodox Church of Harrisburg, the Rev. John Ciucla, rector, had a dinner-meeting and a program of Rumanian music and folk lore at Chestnut Street Auditorium. It was my privilege to attend the dinner, the purpose of which was to further plans for raising money to build a church here. The group has been meeting for the last six years in St. Gerald's Episcopal Church at Thirteenth and Herr streets, which has been given them for use by St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Cathedral.

A number of notable speakers from several church groups in Harrisburg were represented on the program which followed the dinner, and in reply to their stirring and inspirational talks, the president of the Rumanian Church board, Teodor Mermeze, in broken English but with powerful earnestness, said this in behalf of his people:

"America is the greatest Country in the world. It has welcomed us and shielded us. Here we are free, we may have our own schools and build our own churches. I hope, and pray Almighty God, for the everlasting liberty and freedom of this great land!"

There are fifty-five Rumanian families in Harrisburg, and the gratitude of the group was expressed in the printed programs of the meeting held last Sunday.

"Our aim is to build a Church in our adopted Country, that we may maintain our religious customs and faith. We want to worship God in the faith of our fathers," these people said by way of the printed word. "The members of St. John's Rumanian Orthodox Church of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, consider it their paramount and imperative duty to express their gratitude toward the people of this great Republic for their brotherly welcome and the hospitality extended them from the day of their arrival in this Country, which has been a haven for the persecuted and oppressed.

"Rumanians, attracted by the liberty and prosperity of America, left their ill-fated country and sought shelter and means of a better livelihood in the United States. The people from the State Juditul Arad and Juditul Timisioara and vicinity began immigrating to Harrisburg as early as 1903. Newcomers brought with them beloved traditions and customs of their forefathers. The early immigrants found themselves happy in this Country, sent for their wives and families and now our colony has fifty-five families, many of whom own their own homes. Our people are eager to have our children educated in the American way and many of our children have been graduated from Harrisburg high schools. Most of our adult members are citizens and voters of this community."

* * *

SALZBURG AND ALL ITS RICH TRADITION of world-famous music festivals, seems now to be a thing of the past. But somewhere there will be a new Salzburg, and today the paramount question among the music lovers of the world is: "Where will this old treasure house of music, symphony, opera, great voices and great instrumentalists find a new home? Will it be in Europe, or will it be in America?"

Somehow it seems that America would be the logical place, and it is interesting to note ~~that the~~ growing national and local efforts toward music education and music appreciation may have been a part of a fore-ordained plan to bring this vast traditional festival to a more permanent sanctuary.

At any rate, America, spurred on by an ever-increasing interest in music, has been getting ready for it. There are rumors of its going to Chautauqua, N. Y., to Robin Hood Dell in Philadelphia, and recently the Women's Committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, raised ~~a subscription~~ fund of $10,000 to build a symphony "shed," now under construction in the Berkshires, which will seat 5000 persons.

If America should be chosen to carry on the great Salzburg Festival, she will be ready and will offer any part of her vast territory to shelter the rich heritage of music that has come down through the ages.

* * *

THE ACTIVITIES OF the Women's Committee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to collect funds for a symphony "shed," interest us keenly, but it also gives us a bit of a heartache. For it has been a persistent dream of many years standing that Harrisburg might create a symphony "shed"—or call it by any other name if you will—as part of its plans for a city beautiful.

Harrisburg is now an acknowledged part of America's scheme of things musical, and while this city could never hope for so great an honor as to shelter an old-world traditional festival, it must keep pace with America's stride forward in cultural trends. A fine big outdoor theater in a lovely natural amphitheater would solve so many of Harrisburg's problems. Don't you think so?

B. Post June 5/38

THEY WILL LIFT THEIR VOICES IN SONG

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

By WARREN STOREY SMITH

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

MUSIC properly should be both something we make for ourselves and something we receive from others. Only rarely are these two sources of enjoyment combined, as they will be at the Pop Concert of tomorrow evening, the annual "Old Timers'" night. Besides listening to such ancient favorites as "La Sorella," the "Poet and Peasant" Overture, "La Paloma" and "The Glow Worm," the audience will twice be permitted to lift up its collective voice in the popular songs of yesterday and the day before. It has been proven that the words of a great many of these no longer timely songs and ballads are far better known to a miscellaneous audience than those of their present day successors. Tomorrow, it is quite safe to prophesy, a good time will be had by all.

This evening's concert brings another annual event, the request programme. A year ago this department waxed statistical and disclosed just how many times certain numbers had been requested. This evening's list has certainly a familiar sound. One could easily guess that the march would be "Pomp and Circumstance"; the waltz, "By the Beautiful Blue Danube." As easy to predict would be the presence of the "Rhapsody in Blue," the Largo from "Xerxes" and "Bolero."

It was only after pressure had been brought to bear upon him that Saint-Saens consented to publish his "Grand Zoological Fantasia,' "The Animals' Carnival," which this evening follows Sibelius "Finlandia." The remaining numbers on this popularly chosen list are Porter's "Night and Day," one of the most enduring of modern dance numbers, and the Valerius-Kremser "Prayer of Thanksgiving."

A very different request programme will be heard over the air from Radio City at 12:30 p. m. today. A month ago it was announced that such a programme would conclude the current series known as "Music Hall on the Air," and a deluge of letters was received. We are told the selections requested ranged from such old favorites as "L'Amour, Toujours L'Amour" and "In a Monastery Garden" to symphonies of Bruckner, Mahler and Sibelius. The programme compiled on the basis of these preferences runs as follows: Tchaikovsky's Overture Fantasia "Romeo and Juliet," Debussy's Prelude to "The Afternoon of a Faun," Enesco's Rumanian Rhapsody, No. 1, and the duet, "O Soave Fanciulla" from Puccini's "La Boheme."

Tchaikovsky's Overture-Fantasia is suddenly in high popularity, possibly because of the excellent recording of it made not long ago by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, possibly because of the prominence given some of the music in the screen version of Shakespeare's play. In the request programme played by the Philadelphia Orchestra in its concerts of May 5 and 6, this "Romeo and Juliet" headed a list which also contained Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" and the First Symphony of Brahms.

It is hardly necessary to point out that such pieces as Debussy's "Faun," Strauss' "Tod und Verklaerung" and Brahms' C Minor were once anything but popular. When it comes to a vote in symphonic music the balloting is likely to favor pieces composed in the last half, or even the last quarter, of the 19th century. The moderns, the classics and the early romanticists fare less well. Our audiences, radio and concert, have a taste for orchestral richness, plus melodic appeal.

AT THE POPS

REQUEST PROGRAMME THIS EVENING

March, "Pomp and Circumstance"....Elgar
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes ....Strauss
Largo, from "Xerxes"..............Handel
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem......Sibelius
The Animals' Carnival, Grand Zoological Fantasia ....Saint-Saens
Piano soloists, J. M. Sanroma-L. Litwin
Bolero ....Ravel
"Rhapsody in Blue" ....Gershwin
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Night and Day".....................Porter
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn ....Valerius-Kremser
Encores:
Tango, "Jealousy" ....Gade
The Toy Trumpet ....Scott
Mosquito Dance ....White
Pizzicati, from "Sylvia"........Delibes

MONDAY EVENING

Old-Timers' Night

"La Sorella," March...........Borel-Clerc
Overture to "Poet and Peasant".....Suppe
"La Paloma" ("The Dove").......Yradier
Selection from "The Mikado"......Sullivan
Waltz, "Jolly Fellows" ....Volstedt
"La Golondrina" ("The Swallow"), Mexican Folk Song....(Arranged by Findlay)
"Song Fest," Medley
"Pack Up Your Troubles," "Smiles," "Till We Meet Again," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "My Wild Irish Rose," "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," "Sweet Adeline," "Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet," "There Is a Tavern in the Town," "Maine Stein Song," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart"
"A Hunt in the Black Forest," Descriptive Episode ....Voelker
"The Glow Worm" ....Lincke
Songs of the Old Days
"Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-ay," "The Bowery," "The Sidewalks of New York," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "Daisy Bell," "Comrades," "Little Annie Rooney," "She May Have Seen Better Days," "The Band Played On," "After the Ball," "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight"

TUESDAY EVENING

Triumphal March from "Aida".......Verdi
Overture, "The Roman Carnival"...Berlioz
"Molly on the Shore"............Grainger
"Dance Macabre," Tone Poem...Saint-Saens
The I. B. M. Symphony...........Giannini
Largo from "Xerxes"...............Handel
Invitation to the Dance.....Weber-Berlioz
"Cagliostro," Waltzes..............Strauss
La Comparsa (Cuban Carnival Procession) ....Lecuona-Gould
"Pomp and Circumstance," March....Elgar

WEDNESDAY EVENING

March, "Only One Vienna".....Schrammel
Overture to "Euryanthe"............Weber
"The Troika" (From "The Seasons") ....Tchaikovsky
Hungarian Dances....................Brahms
Wedding March from "LeCoq d'Or" ....Rimsky-Korsakov
Ballet Suite ....Rameau-Mottl
Finale, Fourth Symphony......Tchaikovsky
"New Vienna," Waltzes...........Strauss
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" ....Wagner
Prelude in G minor..........Rachmaninoff
To a Water Lily..................MacDowell
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen".........Bizet

THURSDAY EVENING

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" .Wagner
Overture to "The Bartered Bride"..Smetana
Hora Staccato (Roumanian)..Dinicu-Heifetz
Magic Fire Music (Finale of "Die Walkure") ....Wagner
Bolero ....Ravel
L. R. Lewis, '87, conducting:
Intercollegiate Inklings...L. R. Lewis, '87
Tuftonia's Day ....E. W. Hayes, '16
Class Song of 1938....W. A. Johnson, '38
Horn solo by Willem Valkenier
That Mascot ....P. B. Lewis, '18
Spell It Out..........A. T. Williams, '19
"Princess Ida," Selection...........Sullivan
"Tales From the Vienna Woods," Waltzes ....Strauss
"Wintergreen for President"......Gershwin
Dear Alma Mater

FRIDAY EVENING

"Washington Post," March...........Sousa
Overture to "Raymond" ....Thomas
Fugato on a Well-Known Theme....McBride
Ballet Suite from "Aida"..............Verdi
"Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes.Strauss
Judex ....Gounod
Second Hungarian Rhapsody.........Liszt
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" ....Churchill-Bodge
"Night and Day" ....Porter
American Fantasy ....Herbert

SATURDAY EVENING

Military Polonaise ....Chopin-Glazounov
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" ....Nicolai
"At the Mill" ....Gillet-Caillist
"In War Time," from the Indian Suite ....MacDowell
Fantasia for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 56 ....Tchaikovsky
Soloist, Albion Metcalf
Marche Slave ....Tchaikovsky
N. E. Federation of Men's Glee Clubs
Donald Gammons, Conductor
"The Ride of the Valkyries".......Wagner

AKRON, O.
TIMES PRESS

CURRENT, FUTURE EVENTS IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK, June 4.—"Music Hath Charms" has been applied to political relations between Germany and Italy. A great Italian-German musical carnival held at Rome.

Germany sent four military and two naval bands, while Italy provided 15 bands, making a total of more than 1500 musicians for a series of concerts, separately and together, at the Mussolini Forum.

On their way back to Germany, the Nazi musicians gave concerts in Bologna, Florence, Spezia, Venice, Milan and Turin.

Jose Iturbi, the Spanish pianist and conductor who has received many an ovation in the United States, found out what a real ovation is when he appeared in Buenos Aires recently. A tumultuous audience, the largest ever to attend a symphony concert in the Colon Theater, cheered so long and so vociferously that it seemed for a time police would have to be called to clear the theater.

At an earlier concert, the demonstration also was terrific, but of a different nature. Iturbi played a composition of Shostakovitch, the modern Soviet composer. The audience, opposed to anything Communistic, booed, hissed and seemed minded to tear up the orchestra chairs and hurl them at the stage. Iturbi, far from being annoyed, enjoyed it and grinned impishly at the orchestra until order was restored.

Thirty-three cities already had bid for concerts by the United States Marine Band, which will leave Washington for a tour Sept. 16 to Oct. 29. "The President's Own" will appear in the Middle West for the first time in seven years.

The English are supposed to be somewhat phlegmatic, but they are given to enthusiasm. The London Daily Mail reports:

"A scene seldom before witnessed at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, took place last night after the performance of Richard Strauss' Elektra.

"So great was the enthusiasm over what critics stated to be the best performance of that opera heard since its first production here in 1910, that people in the stalls rushed from their seats and crowded around the orchestra to clap, cheer and shout their applause.

"Boxholders stamped their feet, whistles came from the gallery, and the circle responded with bravos as the artists received curtain after curtain. It was half an hour before the house could be cleared."

Bakersfield, Cal., reports that the Kern County Musical association has completed arrangements for the 1938-1939 concert series with the engagement of Lily Pons for the opening concert on Oct. 31. Other artists will include Josef Hofmann, pianist; Albert Spalding, violinist, and Igor Goring, baritone.

Plans for the 21st season of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony's outdoor series at Lewisohn Stadium include a George Gershwin memorial concert July 11, to mark the first anniversary of the death of the composer. Paul Whiteman will conduct.

The first stadium concert will be June 26. Sunday night concerts will be broadcast over the Columbia network. Two conductors, Massimo Frecca, an Italian, and Macklin Marrow, a native of Virginia, will make American debuts. Other conductors are Jose Iturbi, Alexander Smallens and Willem von Hoogstraten.

Another of summer's good signs is the Berkshire Festival, here the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are the traditional features. The concerts are given at picturesque "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales."

CINCINNATI, O.
TIMES - STAR

JUN 7 - 1938

WHO'S NEWS TODAY

by LEMUEL F. PARTON

COPYRIGHT 1938 BY CINCINNATI TIMES-STAR

NEW YORK, June 7—Heber J. Grant, 81-year-old president of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, made a holy cause of the slogan, "All Mormons off the Relief Rolls"! He promulgated it with all the dynamic fervor and shrewd devisings which have ever characterized this bearded patriarch in his temporal and spiritual endeavors, and he made Utah a standout among the commonwealths of the nation as a non-money moocher in the Federal family.

Austere, bearded, abstemious, determined, resourceful, waging his campaign upon the ancient shibboleths of his faith—purity, punctuality. faith, perseverance—he had led his great flock out of the slough, saw ahead promise of victory, only in the end to find his domain enveloped in the lowering clouds of defeat.

Ability to get something for little, or nothing, consequent undermining of the spirit of self-reliance which inspired and informed the early Mormon pioneers, was the enemy's final redoubt, and over it the banners of Federal relief still wave triumphantly. Many could not be persuaded, or coerced, into leaning upon their own constructive enterprise instead of upon the Government.

Those who know Heber Grant know, however, that this is but a repulse; the war is not yet ended. Offspring of Jebediah M. Grant, who drove a covered wagon across plain and mountain in the historic Mormon hegira, he has all the rugged pertinacity of the paternal pioneer and his unconquerable spirit. The first native son of Utah to be honored with the title of president of the Mormon Church, he was chosen an apostle when only 26 years old, succeeding the late Joseph Fielding Smith in command of one of the richest churches in America on Nov. 23, 1918, a day after his sixty-second birthday.

Receiving the honorary degree of Doctor of Music at Russell Sage College, Nadia Boulanger, director of the Ecole Normale of Paris and the American Conservatory at Fontainebleu, now in this country as visiting lecturer in music at Radcliffe College, can name some of the more prominent contemporary composers of the United States as among her former pupils.

Gratifying, indeed, must be this Russell Sage degree, but, if questioned as to her reaction, she might reply as to that interviewer who, upon her selection as the first woman guest conductor of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, naively inquired concerning her emotions. Smiling, the fragile little French lady replied superbly. "I have been a woman for a little over 50 years and have got over my initial astonishment".

Fifty-seven years old, she has white hair done into a soft roll piled upon the back of her neck; bright eyes gleaming behind pince nez; wears black gowns which manage to give the impression of a uniform; a silver chain around the neck and perhaps an old-fashioned sunburst in her black tie. She comes of a family of musicians. Both her father and grandfather were professors in the Paris Conservatory.

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD

JUN 6 - 1938

Finally, Professor Lundin presented the visitor from Paris for her degree, speaking as follows: "I have the honor to present for the degree of Doctor of Music honoris causa Nadia Boulanger, head of the department of composition in the Ecole Normale de Musique in Paris, concert organist, and director. Born in Paris of a family of musicians, she did brilliant work at the Paris Conservatory at a very early age. Pupil of Guilmant and Vierne on the organ, and of Gabriel Faure in composition, she won many first prizes and the Grand Prix de Rome. For years she has taught classes in counterpoint, in piano accompaniment, history of music, and composition.

Conducts Orchestra.

"In 1925 she gave lectures and organ concerts in this country. In 1936 and 1937 she directed the Royal Philharmonic Society in London, the first woman to direct this orchestra since its formation 126 years ago. Last year her group of trained singers gave over fifty concerts in Paris alone. In February of this year she directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the first time a woman has been so honored. Accompanied by her own group of singers, she has been lecturing to Wellesley, Radcliffe and Harvard students, and directing the joint concert of the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club. Her concert programs are often characterized by groups of compositions of different periods having the same musical relationship. Thus she compares modern works with those written centuries earlier.

"Among her pupils are musicians and composers of note, members of the music faculties in many American universities and colleges. At once a distinguished musician and an inspiring interpreter of music, she is indefatigable in pursuing her mission to increase the understanding and enjoyment of her art."

Represents France.

President Meader spoke as follows: "Nadia Boulanger: Student, teacher, artist and composer, we salute you as an eminent representative of the spirit of France, that spirit which has revealed its power, its beauty and its creative genius so often in art, letters, science and the service of mankind.

"Constantly aiming to refine the public taste, educate the public mind, and elevate human emotions, you are dedicating your life to interpreting with subtle insight, sound scholarship, many-sided skill and compelling enthusiasm, the works of the great musical masters.

"Of all the arts beneath the heaven
That man has found or God has given,
None draws the soul so sweet away
As music's melting, mystic lay."

"Twenty years ago we of America left in your warm and friendly earth the bodies and the blood of many who were near and dear to us. Today, the spirits of these beloved dead are with us in this sanctuary, I am sure, as I extend to you the right hand of American fellowship and confer upon you our highest honors.

"Mademoiselle, mes felicitations!"

NEW YORK, N. Y.
MIRROR

JUN 15 1938

All-Wagner Program

Beal Hober, soprano, has been engaged to sing at the Berkshire Festival on Aug. 11 in an all-Wagner program with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky's direction. She will do the last acts of Walkure and Seigfried.

69

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER

JUN 5 - 1938

Annual Festival at Berea Recalls Bach's Greatness as Master of Tonal Prose

By Herbert Elwell

THERE is no dividing line in music as there is between prose and poetry in literature. Yet it is easy to recognize a highly poetic sentiment in some types of music, and in others an expression more closely related to prose.

HERBERT ELWELL

Some composers, like Chopin, concentrate on those exclusive, personal and highly subjective moods we generally associate with poetry. Other composers express themselves with more broadly related ideas and in a more objective and impersonal manner, suggestive not necessarily of the rhythm and syntax of prose (music is always metrical) but of its even tenor, its logically directed thought, its avoidance of emotional excess.

To this category belongs the music of Johann Sebastian Bach. He is its greatest representative. If it were possible to use such a seemingly self-contradictory term, he might be referred to as the greatest master of musical prose. And by this I do not mean to call him in any sense prosaic.

No one rightfully could impute Bach with a lack of poetic feeling. The extraordinary poetic imagery and symbolism of his music is known to all Bach students. Nor is his work devoid of emotional extremes, for it plumbs the depths and rises to exalted heights with greater intensity than that shown by most composers. Bach was, in short, a master of all styles and all moods.

Always Straight to Point

But what characterizes the great bulk of his music (and he wrote an amazing quantity of it) is not so much its great tragic moments, nor its occasional flights into the realm of pure ecstacy, but rather its steady, even course, its frank acceptance of certain inevitable physical limitations and its willingness to move happily and freely within them.

It is music which, like good prose, adopts an easy conversational manner but is always clear, vigorous and straight to the point. Its adherence to the middle road is probably what makes it wear better than the heaven-storming of a Berlioz, the ecstacy cult of a Scriabin or the messianic urge of a Bruckner or a Mahler. Bach's music stands with both feet on the ground. It neither takes you by assault, nor tricks you by undue appeal to the sensuous. It invites by its lack of ostentation. It is genial, hospitable and, again like good prose, full of keen observation of the simplest human feelings. But it is never commonplace. One can come back to it again and again, and it will always reward you by invigorating your spirit, revitalizing your energy. By the very fact that it spends so much time in the temperate valleys, its occasional ascents to lofty peaks become all the more dramatic and exciting.

It is the exceptional durability of Bach's music that makes it fit material for annual festivals. Music of the poetic type, ethereal hothouse grown stuff, has not the toughness of fiber to enlist our interest year after year. Much music reaches imortality through one great spurt of inspiration. Bach reached it by a gift for continuous, consistent imaginative exercise and a fund of ideas that seemed to multiply the more he developed them. It is a fine thing to be reminded that such music exists, especially in an age when a feeling of insecurity seems to have thrown all the arts out of gear and sidetracked them up a blind alley. And music lovers are greatly indebted to the few organizations who devote a large part of their time to the serious study and preparation of Bach's music for concert performance.

Such Is B.-W. Conservatory

One of these is the Baldwin-Wallace Conservatory of Music at Berea, where a two-day Bach festival is held every year. The sixth annual festival there Friday and Saturday includes four concerts, each preceded by a half hour program of chorales by a brass choir stationed in the tower of the Memorial Building on the Baldwin-Wallace campus. Both the afternoon and evening, Saturday, will be devoted to a performance of the "Christmas Oratorio." This is one of the four major works of Bach which the festival management plans to present in rotation during each student generation of four years.

Soloists at this year's festival are Alma Babb, Akron soprano; Lila Robeson, Cleveland contralto; Ruth Stein Musson, Akron contralto; Harold Haugh, New York tenor; David Blair McClosky, New York basso; Leon Machan, Cleveland pianist; Dr. Jerome Gross, Cleveland violinist, and Julius Baker, Cleveland flutist. The basso, McClosky, has appeared twenty times with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky.

In addition to the above, the following local soloists will take part: Mary Marting, a member of the chorus, will take the "echo" part in the soprano aria, "Ah, My Savior," from the "Christmas Oratorio." Shirley Brooks, Jack Broucek, Edwin Sroka and Donald Stevenson will play the concerto for four pianos and string orchestra in A minor on the Friday afternoon program, which opens with the Prelude and Fugue in F Flat for organ by the director of the festival, Albert Riemenschneider. On the same program the A Cappella Choir under Cecil Munk will sing two motets, one by Johann Christoph Bach. Carl G. Schluer will conduct Cantata No. 54. The Concerto in A minor for piano, violin and flute completes this program.

The Friday evening program consists of Cantata No. 80 conducted by Riemenschneider; Overture: Suite No. 4 in D Major for orchestra, conducted by Schluer; aria for contralto chorus, "Wo Soll Ich Fliehen Hin;" Cantata No. 6 and Cantata No. 50. The "Christmas Oratorio," to be given on Saturday without cuts, will be conducted by Riemenschneider. The afternoon concerts are at 4, the evening, at 8:30. The chorale programs begin a half hour earlier.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 5 - 1938

MUSIC FESTIVAL SOLOIST

Anna Kaskas, Young American Contralto, of the Metropolitan Opera, Will Sing With the Providence Festival Chorus at Its 15th Annual Spring Concert Next Sunday Afternoon in Roger Williams Park.

ANNA KASKAS CHOSEN SOLOIST

Continued from Page One.

Ferrara. A year later she made her debut in Pavia in "Francesca da Rimini," by Zandonai. She gave performances in several other cities, and returned to America at the end of her second year. For the next four years she was soloist in the Catholic Cathedral in Hartford. She went to New York twice a week to study with Enrico Rosati.

In the winter of 1936, she was heard by Earle Lewis, now assistant manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association. He arranged for her to sing at the first of the Metropolitan Opera radio auditions. She won in a field of 700. At the next Metropolitan spring season she sang in "Rigoletto" and "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Orpheus and Euridice." She sang so well that she was given a contract for the regular winter season.

Toured Last Spring

She toured with the Metropolitan last spring, was soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony in "King David," by Honneger, sang with the Detroit Civic Opera and eight times for the Community Concert Association. She has been chosen by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to sing at the Berkshire Festival this summer.

The program for the concert next Sunday contains music for all tastes. Miss Kaskas will sing "O Don Fatale," from "Don Carlos," by Verdi, and a group of three songs. The chorus will sing sacred and secular music. Some of the items will be for women alone, others for men and others for the entire chorus.

"The Heavens Are Telling," from "The Creation" and "Song of the Marching Men," by Hadley, will be among the songs for the chorus.

Special arrangements will be made for traffic. If it rains, the concert will be given in the Rhode Island Auditorium, 1111 North Main street. The concert is free in either case.

Program Announced

The program:

1. The Star Spangled Banner . arr. O'Hara
The King Shall Rejoice (Coronation Anthem) .... Handel
The Heavens Are Telling (The Creation) .... Haydn
The Chorus
2. Procession of Nobles (Mlada) Rimsky-Korsakoff
The Band
3. Aria "O, Don Fatale" (Don Carlos) Verdi
4. Battle Hymn (Rienzi) .... Wagner
Men's Chorus
Introduction to "Polovetzian Dances" Borodin
Women's Chorus
Procession of the Sardar (Caucasian Sketches) .... Ippolitow-Ivanoff arr. by Treharne
The Chorus
5. Overture "La Gazza Ladra" .. Rossini
The Band
6. Echo Waltz, trio for cornets . . Goldman
Leonard B. Smith, Frank Elsass, Ned Mahoney
7. Montezuma Comes (Zuni Indian Tribal Song) .... arr. Loomis
Song of the Marching Men (New Earth) .... Hadley
The Chorus
8. Songs "Thy Beaming Eyes" . . MacDowell
"My Laddie" .... Thayer
"The Year's at the Spring" .... Beach
Miss Kaskas
9. Italian Polka .... arr. Rachmaninoff
March, "Happy Go Lucky" . . Goldman
March, "Chimes of Liberty" . . Goldman
The Band
10. The Tournament, based on the third movement of the Sixth Symphony by Tchaikovski .... arr. Treharne

---

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL - COURIER

JUN 1 1 1938

Berkshire Festival Soloists

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 10, (AP)—Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan Opera contralto from Bridgeport, Conn., and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, will be the soloists when the Boston Symphony Orchestra inaugurates the Berkshire symphonic festival's new music shed on Aug. 4 with a performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST - GAZETTE

JUN 1 1 1938

TRIVIA: Herbert Hoover is reviewing "The Public Papers and Addresses of Franklin D. Roosevelt" for a San Francisco newspaper. The publishers are hoping to use some of his comments in forthcoming advertisements for the Roosevelt set! . . . Longmans, Green will publish a book about George Gershwin in the fall, to include a complete bibliography of all Gershwin compositions and reproductions of many of the late composer's paintings. Contributors will include Serge Koussevitsky, Jerome Kern, Paul Whiteman, Walter Damrosch, Rouben Mamoulian and DuBose Heyward . . . Farrar and Rinehart have just sold 15,000 copies of Peter B. Kyno's "The Go-Getter" to Chevrolet Motors. Chevrolet is distributing the book among its salesmen as part of a special campaign to stimulate sales. This purchase brings the total sales of "The Go-Getter" above the 200,000 mark.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

JUN 1 1 1938

SOLOISTS ANNOUNCED FOR BERKSHIRE FETE

STOCKBRIDGE, June 10 (AP)—Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan Opera contralto, and Jeannette Vrealand, soprano, will be the soloists when the Boston Symphony Orchestra inaugurates the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed on Aug. 4 with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Festival officials in making the announcement tonight said the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston would sing the choral part, and the male soloists would be announced later.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 1 1 1938

Kaskas, Vreeland On First Program

Berkshire Festival Shed to Be Inaugurated Aug. 4

STOCKBRIDGE, June 10 (AP)—Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan Opera contralto from Bridgeport, Conn., and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, will be the soloists when the Boston Symphony Orchestra inaugurates the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed on Aug. 4 with a performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony.

Festival officials in making the announcement tonight said the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston would sing the choral part.

Miss Kaskas, who paid for her musical lessons by working as a stenographer in Hartford, Conn., also will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried" a week later.

Miss Vreeland, a native of Denver, Colo., has sung in Beethoven's ninth symphony and other great works at numerous concerts and festivals in leading musical centers in recent years.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

JUN 1 1 1938

KASKAS, VREELAND TO SING AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Soloists at Inauguration of New Music Shed on August 4

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., June 10-AP-Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan Opera contralto from Bridgeport, Conn., and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, will be the soloists when the Boston Symphony Orchestra inaugurates the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed on Aug. 4 with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

Festival officials in making the announcement tonight said the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston would sing the choral part, and the male soloists would be announced later.

Miss Kaskas, who paid for her musical lessons by working as a stenographer in Hartford, Conn., also will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried" a week later.

Miss Vreeland, a native of Denver, Colo., has sung Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and other great works at numerous concerts and festivals in leading musical centers in recent years.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 1 1 1938

Kaskas, Vreeland On First Program

STOCKBRIDGE, June 11 (AP)—Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan Opera contralto from Bridgeport, Conn., and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, will be the soloists when the Boston Symphony Orchestra inaugurates the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed on Aug. 4 with a performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony.

Festival officials in making the announcement last night said the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston would sing the choral part.

Miss Kaskas, who paid for her musical lessons by working as a stenographer in Hartford, Conn., also will sing the role of Erda when the orchestra performs the third act of Wagner's "Siegfried" a week later.

Miss Vreeland, a native of Denver, Colo., has sung in Beethoven's ninth symphony and other great works at numerous concerts and festivals in leading musical centers in recent years.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

70

Music Tastes of Boston and Chicago Differ

By Cecil Smith.

In the twenty-eight pairs of Thursday evening and Friday afternoon concerts of its 47th season, which ended April 22, the Chicago Symphony orchestra played 127 separate pieces by 66 different composers. Dr. Frederick Stock and his associate, Hans Lange, shared the principal conducting duties. Otto Klemperer, conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic orchestra, appeared as guest conductor at one Thursday-Friday pair and one supplementary Tuesday matinée. Georges Enesco and Paul Hindemith each conducted works of their own [one each].

Of the total of 127 works in the season's répertoire [excluding the Tuesday afternoon list, which presented only one novel item not heard at any other time, Stan Golestan's "Concerto Moldave," for cello and orchestra, the solo part played by Raya Garbousova in her first Chicago appearance] the following revealing analysis may be made: Sixteen, or a little over 12 per cent of the compositions played, were written in the classic or preclassic periods, before 1800. Seventy-one works, or over 55 per cent of the total répertoire, were composed between 1800 and 1900. The remaining forty pieces, or about 32 per cent of the total, were written after 1900.

The figures indicate that the orchestra leans most heavily on the music of the romantic period. What are the facts about the 1937-'38 season of the Boston Symphony orchestra?

• • •

Only 24 pairs of concerts, four fewer than in Chicago, were played in the Friday-Saturday series of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky was the regular conductor. The assistant conductor and concert master, Richard Burgin, conducted one week; Daniele Amfitheatrof, assistant conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, conducted for two weeks; Nadia Boulanger and Georges Enesco each appeared once as guest conductor, and Serge Prokofieff and Walter Piston conducted works of their own composition.

The Boston répertoire consisted of a total of 87 works. Of these ten, or 11 per cent, were from the classical and preclassical periods; 26, or 30 per cent, were composed between 1800 and 1900, and 51, or 59 per cent, were written after 1900.

When the tally for Chicago is ranged up against that for Boston a number of interesting facts come to light. In the first place, the Boston audience may expect, in the course of a season, to hear fewer and longer works. One can scarcely assume that four additional concerts in Boston would have brought to light forty additional compositions! Without jumping at unwaranted conclusions, it is safe to say that Dr. Koussevitzky expects his audience to have better stamina in listening to works of major dimensions than Dr. Stock does. One astute Chicagoan has suggested that the programming of many short works in Orchestra hall is a vestigial remain of the quasi-beer garden origin of orchestral music in Chicago, in the outdoor summer concerts directed by Theodore Thomas.

• • •

The most startling divergence of Bostonian taste from that of Chicago is found in Boston's heavy weighting of the schedule in favor of works written since 1900. The high tally of modern compositions in Boston—59 per cent of the total—is partly explained by two accidents. The late Maurice Ravel was memorialized by nine of his pieces, and late in the season Serge Prokofieff agreed to come as guest conductor of several of his own compositions after Dr. Koussevitzky had already played two other Prokofieff novelties earlier in the year. These two accidents, then, explain seventeen of the 51 contemporary items in the list.

In the light of past seasons, however, it is evident that Dr. Koussevitzky would have chosen to play other modern works had these particular ones not seemed of immediate value. The percentage is not notably higher than in most other Boston seasons. In comparison, then, our local enthusiasm for the music of our own generation seems a bit pale, and our programs reflect what many Bostonians might consider an undue reverence for the superior merits of nineteenth century music.

The backward look of our Chicago programs becomes more apparent in the record of the season's novelties. The Chicago Symphony orchestra added twenty new works in the course of the year. Eight of these had already been played elsewhere—primarily at Ravinia and by the Illinois Symphony orchestra. Of the remaining twelve genuine novelties, three [two Bach transcriptions and the Mozart violin concerto introduced by Mr. Enesco] were not contemporary. In the final analysis, therefore, only nine of the 127 pieces played were novelties by contemporary composers. [One of the nine, Leo Weiner's "Prince Csongor and the Goblins," was composed nearly 25 years ago, and is completely in a nineteenth century idiom].

• • •

The Boston Symphony orchestra made 21 new works known to its home city, out of a total of 87 pieces played. Two of the 21—a Suite for Strings, by Boccherini, and the "lost" Schumann concerto, played by Yehudi Menuhin—belonged to past generations. The remaining 19 contemporary novelties made up more than 21 per cent of the entire répertoire.

Did the so-called "standard répertoire" suffer in Boston? Perhaps it did. A comparison of the composers most frequently represented in new programs of both cities may shed some light:

CHICAGO.		BOSTON.
Beethoven	13	Ravel	9
Bach	9	Prokofieff	8
Wagner	8	Beethoven	6
Brahms	6	Sibelius	6
Strauss	5	Wagner	4
Mozart	4	Brahms	4
D'Indy	4	Haydn	3
Wolf	4	Mozart	3
Hindemith	3	Schumann	3
Mahler	3	Strauss	3
Ravel	3	Tschaikowsky	3
Sibelius	3
Glazounoff	3
All other composers two or less.		All other composers two or less.

Statistics may be made to prove almost anything the statistician chooses. These figures and tabulations by no means exhaust the comparisons that might be made between the achievements and policies of the two orchestras. Nor are they intended to demonstrate anything except whatever grist for his mill the individual reader may find in them.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1938

nd Elsewhere --- The Stage and Screen in P

Crest of the Wave

DOROTHY WOOD, KATHRYN POPE AND ESTELLE KIBBE
In a scene from "The Incredible Flutist," ballet to be repeated at the Pop Concert next Tuesday evening.

B. Trans., June 12/38

Two Barbers

At the Pop concert on Wednesday, "Italian Night," Arthur Fiedler will present two Overtures to "The Barber of Seville," one by Paisiello, the other by Rossini. Thereby hangs a tale, as a friendly note from Symphony Hall reminds this department.

Paisiello had made his setting as early as 1782. But the Beaumarchais comedy stimulated many other composers, including Mozart, of course. Paisiello was 85 years old when, late in 1815, Rossini, aged twenty-three, was commissioned to write an opera. Rossini settled upon "The Barber"; as a sop to the jealous Paisiello, made an obeisance in the preface to the work, published as "Almaviva."

It will be recalled that Rossini wrote the opera in two weeks. There was enough time, however, for the opposition to become formidably organized (at Paisiello's instigation, it is supposed). The opening was scandalous, the singers being persistently hooted and the composer, conducting at the piano, derided. But the opera was not long in making its way.

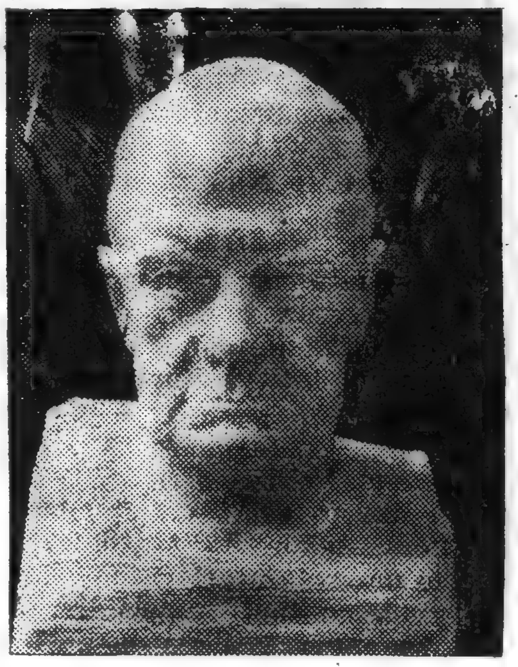
The Overture was lost. In its place Rossini complacently substituted an overture that had already done duty for two previous works, "Aureliano di Palmira" and "Elisabetta, Regina d'Inghilterra." The latter version is the one that is customarily played as the Overture to "The Barber" in most concerts. At Pops on Wednesday, as usually at the opera, the second revision, made for the "Barber" by Rossini, is to be heard.

ALBA ALESSANDRI
Soprano soloist at Italian night at the Pops next Wednesday.

GARDNER, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 11 1938

Sibelius Music At Boston Pops



JEAN SIBELIUS

Bust of the famous Finnish composer made by Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky, the wife of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The music of Dr. Jean Sibelius, famous Finnish composer, will be predominant at Boston Symphony Pops Monday, June 20.

Dr. Sibelius belongs to that limited class of great musicians whose immortal works live on forever, finding greater appreciation every time they are performed.

A program featuring the orchestral music of Sibelius performed by 85 Symphony players is singularly appropriate at this time. It will supplement and give additional color to the many other celebrations being held all over this country in honor and commemoration of the landing of the Finns in America at Delaware 300 years ago.

The remainder of the program will include favorite European and American music producing a well-balanced program which will appeal to every lover of good music.

The chairman of the committee is Atty. John B. Mattson of Boston, well-known also as a bandmaster and former conductor of the Finnish Festival Chorus of Greater Boston.

Pops Features Draw Crowds

By Ruth Marsters
Music Editor

B. Her. June 12/38

THE zealousness of Bostonians in general for that particular form of relaxation and entertainment known familiarly as the Pops continues in a state undimmed as the season nears its end.

Tomorrow evening's concert has been taken over by Boston University—which means that Symphony Hall will be closed to the public for the nonce.

On Tuesday evening Hans Weiner and his group will appear once more in "The Incredible Flutist."

On Wednesday evening Conductor Arthur Fiedler will present an all-Italian program. Operatic arias of Puccini and Donizetti will be sung by Alba Alessandrini and Frtncesco Albanese.

The "Request Program" will be repeated on Thursday evening.

Friday evening is Children's Night, with "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" assuming a prominent place beside "The Ride of the Valkyries" and the Finale of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 11 1938

Louis Schmidt.

Louis Schmidt, widely known violinist prior to his retirement fifteen years ago, died yesterday at his home, 4306 Forty-seventh street, Sunnyside, L. I., after an illness of a few months. He was in his eighty-third year.

A native of New York, where he was born October 11, 1855, Mr. Schmidt was educated musically at Leipzig and at the Paris Conservatory. He was composer of a number of violin selections and semi-classical works.

Returning to this country he was first concert master with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra and later was a member of and soloist for the Boston Symphony. With his friend, Victor Herbert, he organized the Schmidt-Herbert string quartette. For twenty-five years he was with the Philharmonic Orchestra.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Nellie Cruger Schmidt; a son Louis, better known on the stage as Louis Cruger, and a daughter, Eugenia Pine.

Funeral services will be held at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the parlors of Jacob Herrlich Sons at 332 East Eighty-sixth street.

MADISON, WIS.
STATE JOURNAL

JUN 12 1938

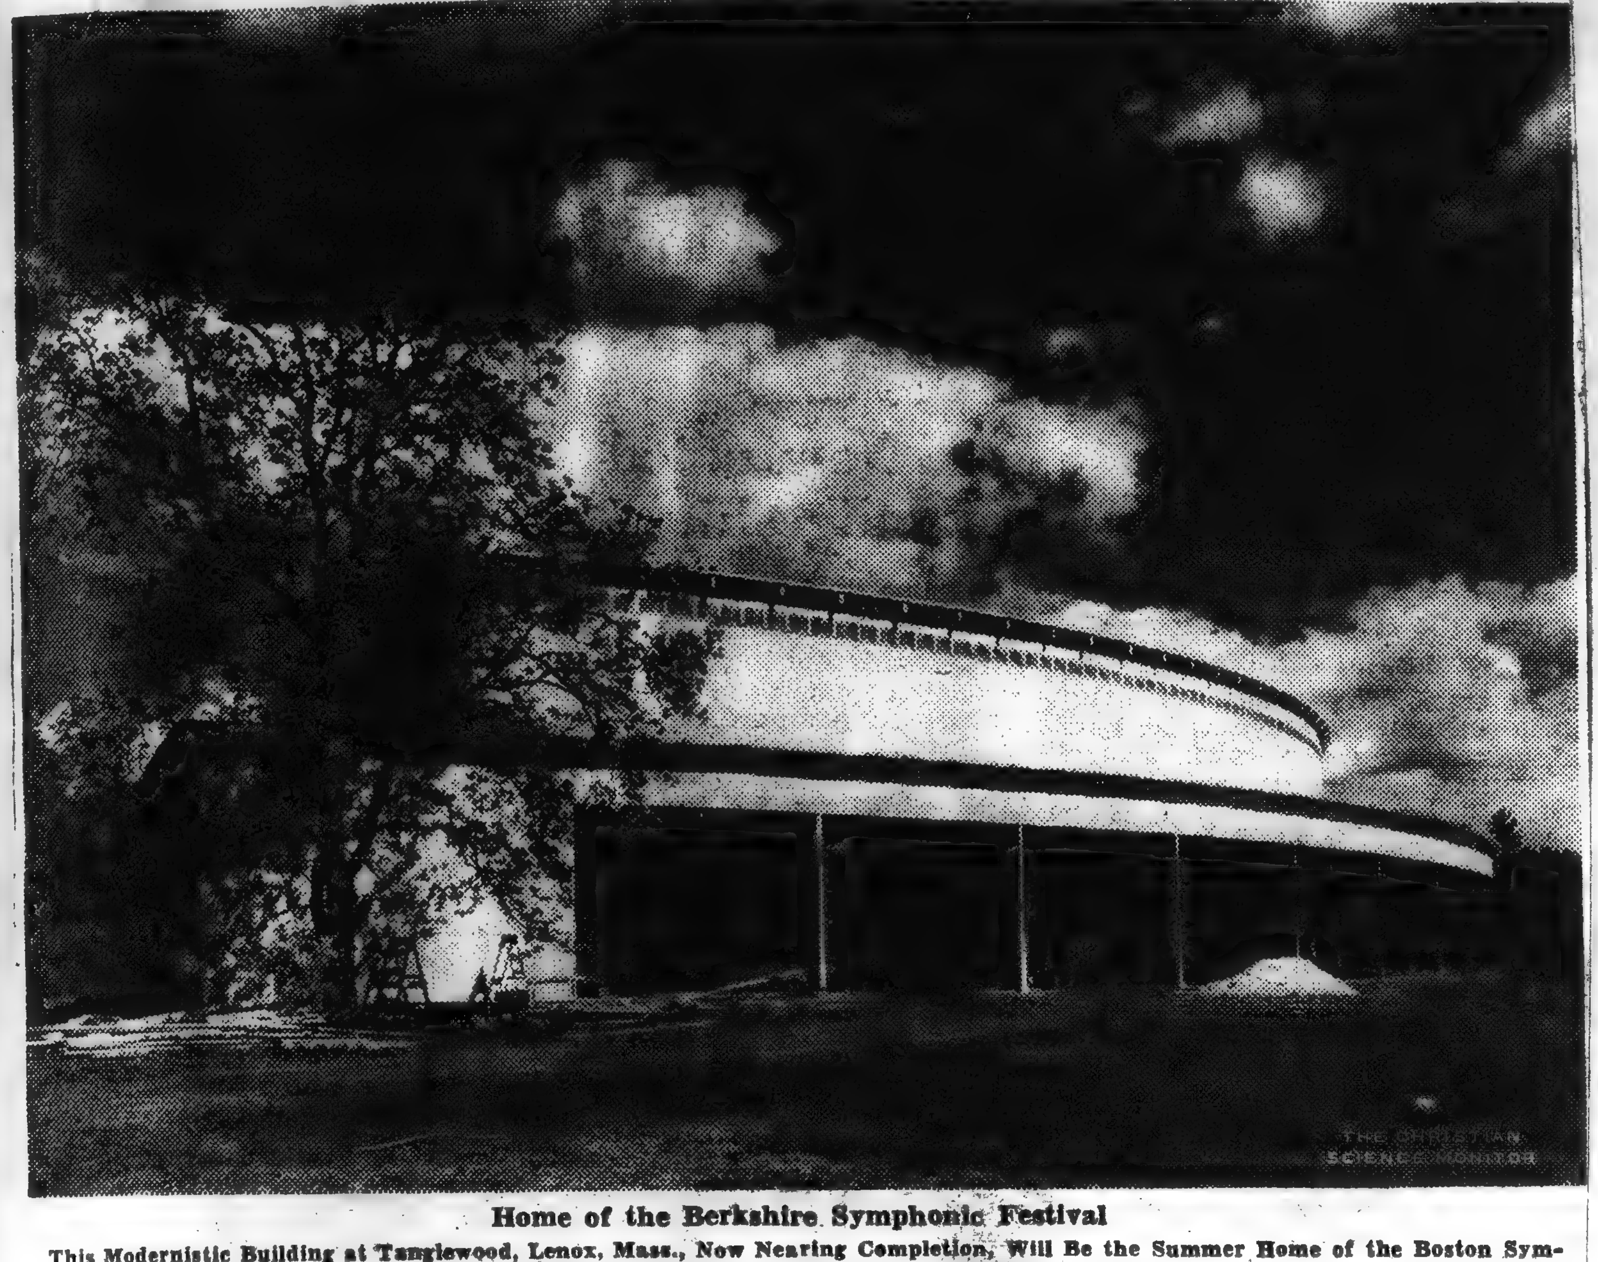
BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Another of summer's good signs is the Berkshire festival, where the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky are the traditional features. The concerts are given at picturesque "Tanglewood" near Stockbridge, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and wrote his famous "Tanglewood Tales."

71

, BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1938 = Monitor New England News—

A Summer Symphony Hall



Home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

This Modernistic Building at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Now Nearing Completion, Will Be the Summer Home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra During the Berkshire Symphonic Festival

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

NEW MUSIC SHED ACOUSTICS 'PERFECT'

Pittsfield, June 13—Prof Richard K. Fay, sound expert of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Saturday tested the acoustics of the new music shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, and pronounced them perfect. He was accompanied by Prof Bauam, also of M. I. T.; George E. Judd, business manager of Boston Symphony orchestra; Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, architect and engineer in charge of construction of the shed, and George W. Edman, chairman of the executive committee of the Berkshire Music festival. Mr Judd departed for New York city to meet Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, who arrived from a six weeks' trip abroad.

It was disclosed for the first time that the music shed plans drawn by Eilel Saarinen were rejected except as to general design, for which he was paid $4000. The plans and specifications finally accepted are those of Mr Franz. It is understood that if the building had been constructed from Saarinen's plans the cost would have been $250,000. He insisted on elimination of three steel central pillars and with these removed the additional cost of steel alone would have been $20,000. The architect's resignation followed several sessions with Berkshire Music festival officials at which no agreement could be reached.

When Mr Saarinen stepped out Mr Franz came to the rescue and drew up a set of plans which were accepted without change by the festival directors and the state department of public safety. The cost of the structure, now practically completed for this year has been $82,000, which is the amount subscribed. At some future time, when the festival corporation is bubbling over with funds, the 78 piers which form the colonnade will be inclosed and there may be a new ceiling.

Three thousand theater seats costing $8000 have been bought by the festival corporation for the so-called "blue ticket" section. Only those holding red tickets will use the settees in general use by all except box holders in other years. There will be no wooden floor, for the present at least. A 10-ton steam roller has leveled off the clay soil under the shed roof and it is hard and smooth as a billiard table. Henry W. Jones, electrical contractor of Lenox, is now installing the fixtures.

Engineer Franz has tested out the roof during one of the hardest thunderstorms in years and no noise of pelting drops was heard in the auditorium. It was a thunder shower that broke up a concert last August under the old tent. The roof of the new shed is of felt and asphalt laid on 150,000 feet of two-inch Oregon fir plank. The roof covers an acre and a half. It was installed by J. Douglas Wooliver & Sons of Pittsfield at a contract price of $8000. The total weight on each of the three central piers is 2500 tons, while the middle piers hold 160 tons each.

Leading off the stage to the south is a special apartment for Dr Koussevitzky equipped with shower bath. He always takes a shower during the intermission of each concert. Five thousand seats can be placed in the main part of the auditorium while the seating capacity with the colonnade is 9000. It is 194 feet from the stage to the outer rim of this colonnade and it is 420 feet around the outer arc. The maximum hight of the structure is 42 feet, the hight of the colonnade being 20 feet.

The shed exterior has been given a coat of cream colored paint. This work was done under the general contract held by Graves & Hemmes of Great Barrington. The cost of the steel in the building was $38,000. There are 104 boxes, most of which have been sold for all six concerts of the August festival at $150 each. A rehearsal hall has been built in the rear of the stage, a substantial building in itself but small compared with the huge auditorium.

Mr Franz has been on the job daily since he was awarded the contract of architect and engineer in full charge. He has given his services to the association. "Joe," as he is known by innumerable friends, was graduated from the University of Vienna in the electrical engineering course with the class of 1907. He has lived at Stockbridge since 1915. He retired recently as engineer for the Southern Berkshire Power and Electric company after 23 years of service.

Only box holders this year will park on the south side of Tanglewood. All others will park on the north side in two fields on opposite side of the main north driveway. There will be ample parking space for 5000 cars. The cost of maintaining Tanglewood flower gardens was so great that they have now all been planted to lawn. Hedges have been trimmed. The four-acre lawn in front of the new music shed, which was badly gouged out by heavy trucks hauling materials last winter, has been smoothed over and seeded and everything will be spick and span long before the first festival concert Thursday, August 4, at 8.30 p. m. Dr Koussevitzky is expected soon for a visit at Tanglewood. It was said unofficially that the net proceeds from last year's six concerts were $3000. The 1936 festival netted $1800.

POST

JUN 12 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY RETURNS

BOSTON, June 11—(AP) A month's vacation in Paris and Aix-Les-Bains completed, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will arrive in New York on Monday, aboard the Normandie.

FILM DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN 13 1938

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony, arrives in New York from Europe today on the Normandie, accompanied by Mrs. Koussevitsky.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUN 13 1938

Koussevitsky Returning

Detroyat and Potez, French Aviation Experts, Also on Normandie

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will arrive from Europe today with Mrs. Koussevitsky aboard the French liner Normandie. Other passengers aboard the liner include Michael Detroyat and Henry Potez, French aviation experts; M. Urena, Spanish Minister to Colombia; Vladimir Yourkevitch, engineer who designed the Normandie's hull; J. J. Shubert, theatrical producer; Arde Bulova, watch manufacturer; Arnold Gingrich, editor of "Esquire," and I. J. Fox, fur merchant.

Dr. Albert Einstein, son of the physicist, will arrive from London aboard the United States liner American Trader, accompanied by Mrs. Einstein and their two children.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD - TIMES

JUN 12 1938

SYMPHONY DIRECTOR WILL LAND TOMORROW

BOSTON, June 11 (AP)—A month's vacation in Paris and Aix-les-Bains completed, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will arrive in New York on Monday, aboard the Normandie.

He is expected to get an early start in preparing for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, which begins Aug. 4, and in which the orchestra will appear for the third consecutive year.

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE

JUN 11 1938

LOCAL MUSICIANS OFFER CONCERT

By WILLIAM ROBERT ADAM

Stadium concerts will open soon at the famous College of the City of New York. Iturbi, Van Hoogestraten, Golschmann, Kirby, and Smallens are the principal conductors to share the podium. Opera, ballet and the symphony will be presented in the same manner which is so well known to summer concertgoers. Philadephia's Dell and Hollywood's Bowl will carry on in the same manner with a similar roster of conductors. The Silvermine and Berkshire Festivals come later in the season. Koussevitzky has arranged a surprisingly impressive array of works for the Boston Symphonies Tanglewood ventures.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 13 1938

New Music Shed Acoustics Said 'Perfect' After Test

Resignation of Architect Eielel Saarinen Revealed—Work Taken Over by Joseph Franz of Stockbridge After Disagreement Over Details of Design

Pittsfield, June 12—Prof Rrichard K. Fay, sound expert of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, yesterday tested the acoustics of the new music shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, and pronounced them perfect. He was accompanied by Prof Bauam, also of M. I. T.; George E. Judd, business manager of Boston Symphony orchestra; Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, architect and engineer in charge of construction of the shed, and George W. Edman, chairman of the executive committee of the Berkshire Music festival. Mr Judd departed yesterday afternoon for New York city to meet Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, who arrived from a six weeks' trip abroad.

It was disclosed today for the first time that the music shed plans drawn by Eilel Saarinen were rejected except as to general design, for which he was paid $4000. The plans and specifications finally accepted are those of Mr Franz. It is understood that if the building had been constructed from Saarinen's plans the cost would have been $250,000. He insisted on elimination of three steel central pillars and with these removed the additional cost of steel alone would have been $20,000. The architect's resignation followed several sessions with Berkshire Music festival officials at which no agreement could be reached.

When Mr Saarinen stepped out Mr Franz came to the rescue and drew up a set of plans which were accepted without change by the festival directors and the state department of public safety. The cost of the structure, now practically completed for this year has been $82,000, which is the amount subscribed. At some future time, when the festival corporation is bubbling over with funds, the 78 piers which form the colonnade will be inclosed and there may be a new ceiling.

Three thousand theater seats costing $8000 have been bought by the festival corporation for the so-called "blue ticket" section. Only those holding red tickets will use the settees in general use by all except box holders in other years. There will be no wooden floor, for the present at least. A 10-ton steam roller has leveled off the clay soil under the shed roof and it is hard and smooth as a billiard table. Henry W. Jones, electrical contractor of Lenox, is now installing the fixtures.

Engineer Franz has tested out the roof during one of the hardest thunderstorms in years and no noise of pelting drops was heard in the auditorium. It was a thunder shower that broke up a concert last August under the old tent. The roof of the new shed is of felt and asphalt laid on 150,000 feet of two-inch Oregon fir plank. The roof covers an acre and a half. It was installed by J. Douglas Wooliver & Sons of Pittsfield at a contract price of $8000. The total weight on each of the three central piers is 2500 tons, while the middle piers hold 160 tons each.

Leading off the stage to the south is a special apartment for Dr Koussevitzky equipped with shower bath. He always takes a shower during the intermission of each concert. Five thousand seats can be placed in the main part of the auditorium while the seating capacity with the colonnade is 9000. It is 194 feet from the stage to the outer rim of this colonnade and it is 420 feet around the outer arc. The maximum hight of the structure is 42 feet, the hight of the colonnade being 20 feet.

JOSEPH FRANZ

The shed exterior has been given a coat of cream colored paint. This work was done under the general contract held by Graves & Hemmes of Great Barrington. The cost of the steel in the building was $38,000. There are 104 boxes, most of which have been sold for all six concerts of the August festival at $150 each. A rehearsal hall has been built in the rear of the stage, a substantial building in itself but small compared with the huge auditorium.

Mr Franz has been on the job daily since he was awarded the contract of architect and engineer in full charge. He has given his services to the association. "Joe," as he is known by innumerable friends, was graduated from the University of Vienna in the electrical engineering course with the class of 1907. He has lived at Stockbridge since 1915. He retired recently as engineer for the Southern Berkshire Power and Electric company after 23 years of service.

Only box holders this year will park on the south side of Tanglewood. All others will park on the north side in two fields on opposite side of the main north driveway. There will be ample parking space for 5000 cars. The cost of maintaining Tanglewood flower gardens was so great that they have now all been planted to lawn. Hedges have been trimmed. The four-acre lawn in front of the new music shed, which was badly gouged out by heavy trucks hauling materials last winter, has been smoothed over and seeded and everything will be spick and span long before the first festival concert Thursday, August 4, at 8.30 p. m. Dr Koussevitzky is expected soon for a visit at Tanglewood. It was said unofficially today that the net proceeds from last year's six concerts were $3000. The 1936 festival netted $1800.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 13 1938

Fay Making Tests at Tanglewood

Believes Acoustics Of Shed Satisfactory

Professor Richard K. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, made additional tests for acoustics at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood Saturday and will make final tests within a few weeks when the shell has been completed and chairs and benches are installed. When the tests are completed, Professor Fay will submit his report to the Festival trustees.

From his preliminary studies, Professor Fay concluded that conditions were satisfactory. He was accompanied to Tanglewood by Joseph Franz, engineer in charge of construction; George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and George W. Edman, chairman of the Festival's coordinating committee.

The shed is rapidly nearing completion under Mr. Franz's direction. The structure was designed originally by Eliel Saarinen, noted architect of Cranbrook, Mich., and in its essentials follows Mr. Saarinen's plans. The only principal variation is in the use of three posts within the colonnade, the use of which it is estimated saved the Festival about $20,000 in construction costs. Although no longer officially the architect for the Festival, Mr. Saarinen was most helpful and was agreeable to the sale of his plans for use in the Berkshire enterprise.

Three steel chairs with padded seats and back have been ordered for use in the front section and the boxes. Benches will be used in the rear section. Plans for parking facilities are now being studied and when finally adopted will be incorporated in letters to accompany members' and subscribers' tickets to be mailed next month.

Mr. Judd left the Berkshires yesterday for New York where he will meet Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, who is returning on the Normandie today.

12

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 14 1938

Koussevitzky Eager to Tour Europe With Hub Symphony

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

NEW YORK, June 13.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, arrived yesterday from Europe, and took time for only one chore in New York before hurrying to Boston to attend the funeral of a friend.

Dr. Koussevitzky went up to a store on Fifth avenue to buy himself some special clothes in which to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August in Stockbridge, Mass.

It's almost as important to look right from the rear as it is to make the Berkshire festival continue to be the most conservatively managed and perhaps best prepared artistically in the country. August is too hot for tails after long struggle, Koussevitzky and George Judd, manager of the orchestra, settled on black trousers and a white tuxedo coat.

That is what the well-dressed conductor will wear this Summer in the Berkshires.

Dr. Koussevitsky came back with a burning desire, it's to tour Europe with his Boston Symphony.

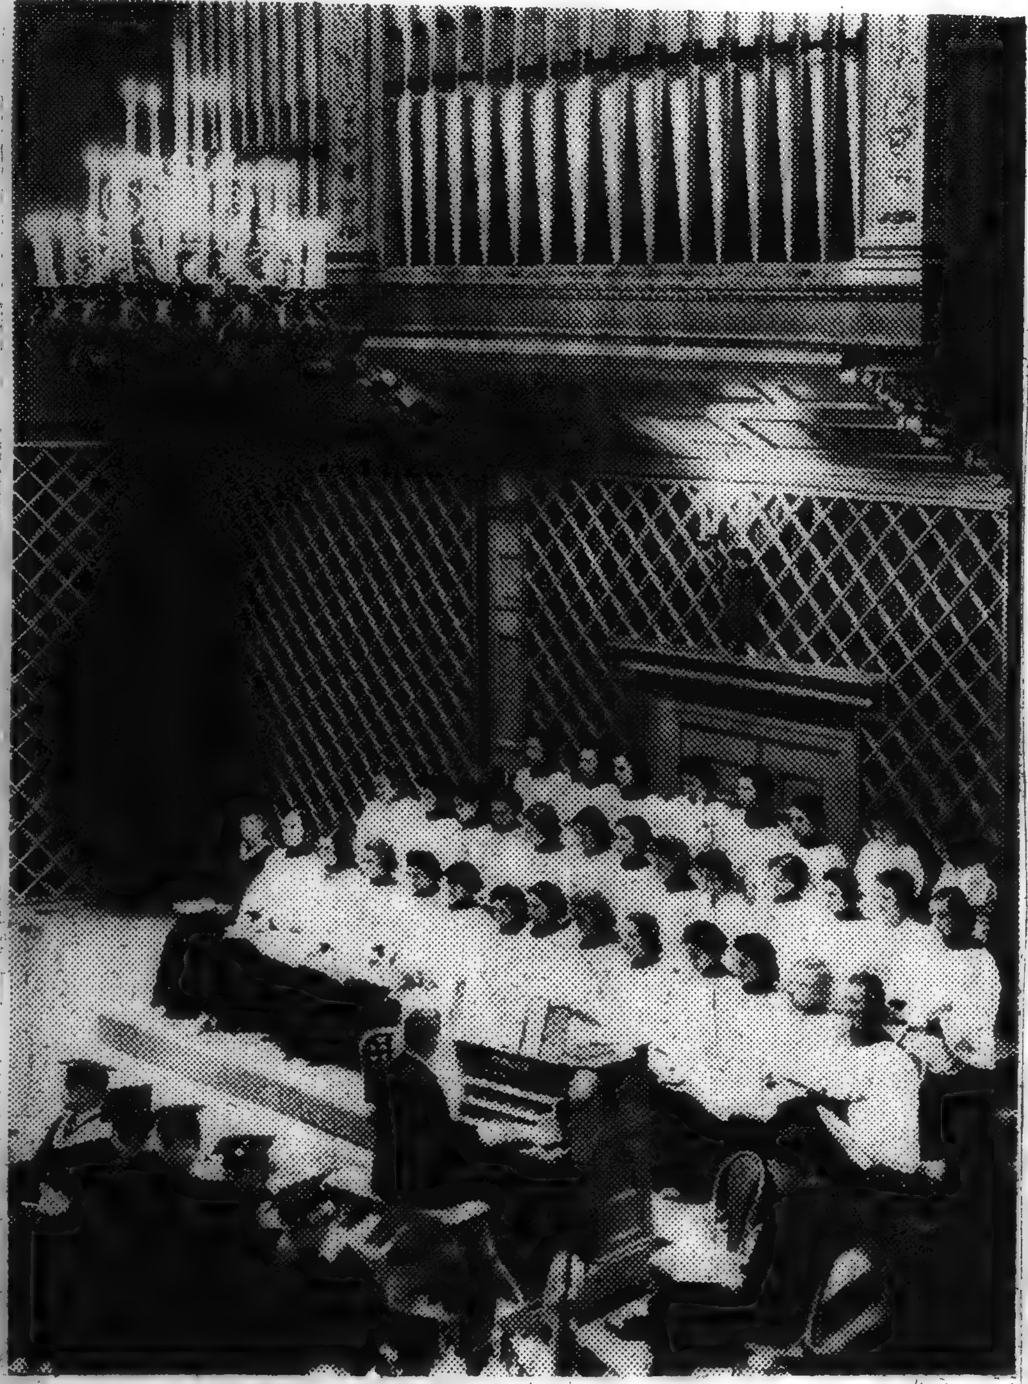
"It is," said he, "a little delicate for me to say how popular the Boston Symphony is abroad. You know," very softly and Russian-like, "I am most enthusiastic and content with my men, and I know there is nothing like them abroad.

"The best, abroad, is second rate to us. This is not because there are not marvelous musicians there. It is because there is no money. The orchestra men want to play great music. They organize, and give the concerts, and divide what comes in. It is not enough.

"And these people, they say to me, 'We give you great composers and artists; you give us the Boston orchestra. We will sell the shirt off our back to hear it.'"

But, says Judd with a practical look about the eyes, the tour won't be for a while yet. Touring takes money.

AT SIMMONS COMMENCEMENT



Scene at exercises in Symphony Hall.

B. Herald - June 14/38

Only Funds for Atlantic Passage Needed for Symphony Tour Abroad

Only the lack of funds for the transatlantic passage of 110 men prevents the Boston Symphony Orchestra from making its long-sought European concert tour, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, said last night on his return from France on the Normandie with Mrs. Koussevitzky.

The soft-spoken Russian musician, attired smartly in a light topcoat, gray suit and felt hat, told a welcoming party at the Back Bay station that Europe was not only ready but clamoring for concerts by the Boston Symphony.

"'We gave you our great composers,' they told me, 'now let us hear your superior musicians,'" the conductor said.

Such a tour would be possible only through a guarantee of traveling expenses of the orchestra and personnel, he disclosed, adding that if the tour were arranged it would have to begin immediately after the concert season here, thus delaying the opening of the noted Pop concerts.

Asked to estimate the cost of making the tour possible, Dr. Koussevitzky smiled, waved his umbrella and replied, "Give us $100,000."

His return to America this year is several weeks earlier than usual because of his wish to accept an honorary degree from Yale University later this month. Although the conductor declined to discuss this, it was understood that the degree of doctor of music would be conferred on him. He has received similar honors from Harvard, Brown and Rutgers.

On Thursday, Dr. Koussevitzky said he would leave for Pittsfield to inspect the new music shed that will house the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its audience at the Berkshire Festival, which is scheduled to begin Aug. 4.

June 14, 1938 B.

Y. Bridal

Symphony Tour Hope Of Leader

NEW YORK, June 13 (AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived today from Europe and took time for only one duty in New York before hurrying to Boston to attend the funeral of a friend.

Dr. Koussevitzky went up to a store on Fifth avenue to buy himself some special clothes in which to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August in Stockbridge, Mass.

It's almost as important to look right from the rear as it is to make the Berkshire Festival continue to be the most conservatively managed and perhaps best prepared artistically in the country. August is too hot for tails; so, after a long struggle, Koussevitzy and George Judd, manager of the orchestra, settled on black trousers and a white tuxedo coat.

That is what the well-dressed conductor will wear this summer in the Berkshires.

Dr. Koussevitzky came back with a burning desire. It's to tour Europe with his Boston Symphony.

"It is," said he, "a little delicate for me to say how popular the Boston Symphony is abroad, you know. I am most enthusiastic and content with my men and I know there is nothing like them abroad.

"The best abroad is second-rate to us. This is not because there are not marvelous musicians there. It is because there is no money. The orchestra men want to play great music. They organize and give concerts, and divide what comes in. It is not enough.

"And these people, they say to me, 'We give you great composers and artists; you give us the Boston Orchestra. We will sell the shirt off our back to hear it.'"

But, says Judd with a practical look in his eyes, the tour won't be for a while yet. Touring takes money.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 14 1938

Koussevitzky Back with Yen to Tour Europe

NEW YORK, June 14. (AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, arrived from Europe, and took time for only one chore in New York before hurrying to Boston to attend the funeral of a friend.

Dr. Koussevitzky went up to a store on Fifth Avenue to buy himself some special clothes in which to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August in Stockbridge, Mass.

After a long struggle, Koussevitzky and George Judd, manager of the orchestra, settled on black trousers and a white Tuxedo coat.

Dr. Koussevitzky came back with a burning desire. It's to tour Europe with his Boston Symphony.

But, says Judd with a practical look about the eyes, the tour won't be for a while yet. Touring takes money.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUN 13 1938

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitsky will return today on the Normandie after a short vacation in Europe. Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony in the six concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass., on August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 14 1938

Orchestra Trip Abroad, Dream Of Its Leader

By JOHN SELBY

NEW YORK, June 13 — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, arrived yesterday from Europe, and took time for only one chore in New York before hurrying to Boston to attend the funeral of a friend.

Dr. Koussevitzky went up to a store on Fifth avenue to buy himself some special clothes in which to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August in Stockbridge, Mass.

It's almost as important to look right from the rear as it is to make the Berkshire festival continue to be the most conservatively managed and perhaps best prepared artistically in the country. August is too hot for tails; after long struggle, Koussevitzky and George Judd, manager of the orchestra, settled on black trousers and a white tuxedo coat.

That is what the well-dressed conductor will wear this summer in the Berkshires.

Dr. Koussevitzky came back with a burning desire: It's to tour Europe with his Boston Symphony.

"It is," said he, "a little delicate for me to say how popular the Boston Symphony is abroad. You know", very softly and Russian-like, "I am most enthusiastic and content with my men, and I know there is nothing like them abroad.

"The best, abroad, is second-rate to us. This is not because there are not marvelous musicians there. It is because there is no money. The orchestra men want to play great music. They organize, and give the concerts, and divide what comes in. It is not enough.

"And these people, they say to me, 'We give you great composers and artists; you give us the Boston orchestra. We will sell the shirt off our back to hear it.'"

But, says Judd with a practical look about the eyes, the tour won't be for a while yet, for touring takes money.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUN 15 1938

The acoustics of the new music shed at Tanglewood, scene of the Berkshire symphonic festival, were tested and found completely satisfactory by Prof. Richard K. Fay of M. I. T. last week-end.

The new shed, constructed at a cost of $82,000, has a seating capacity of 5000. It was disclosed last week-end that Eilel Saarinen, architect who drew the first plans for the shed, resigned from the job when his plans were rejected as too expensive. Saarinen's designs required the elimination of three steel pillars which are now part of the shed, and the consequent use of $20,000 worth of extra steel. As a result the shed was designed and constructed by Joseph Franz of Stockbridge. Among the interesting features of the building are a roof that is sound-proof to raindrops and other disturbances, and a shower bath for Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Sympony orchestra, whose custom it is to take a shower during the intermission of each concert.

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUN 16 1938

"Gulliver's Travels" is about to be filmed as a feature length cartoon in color and third dimensional effects. The picture will be done at a new film cartoon studio in Miami, Fla., and the making will take 18 months, it is expected. . . Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has decided that he will wear informal evening dress when conducting his band at Tanglewood, Lenox, during the Berkshire festival. Sweltering August weather has cured him of regulation full dress with tails, so this summer he will wear black trousers, a white tuxedo coat and accessories to correspond.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 14 1938

Koussevitzky Decides Upon White Coat, Black Trousers

Boston Symphony Director Picks His Outfit to Be Worn at Berkshire Festival

NEW YORK, June 13 (AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, arrived yesterday from Europe, and took time for only one chore in New York before hurrying to Boston to attend the funeral of a friend.

Dr. Koussevitzky went up to a store on Fifth Ave. to buy himself some special clothes in which to conduct the Berkshire Symphonic festival next August in Stockbridge, Mass.

It's almost as important to look right from the rear as it is to make the Berkshire festival continue to be the most conservatively managed and perhaps best prepared artistically in the country. August is too hot for tails; after a long struggle, Koussevitzky and George Judd, manager of the orchestra, settled on black trousers and a white tuxedo coat.

That is what the well-dressed conductor will wear this summer in the Berkshires.

Dr. Koussevitzky came back with a burning desire. It's to tour Europe with his Boston symphony.

"It is," said he, "a little delicate for me to say how popular the Boston symphony is abroad. You know," very softly and Russian-like, "I am most enthusiastic and content with my men, and I know there is nothing like them abroad.

"The best, abroad, is second-rate to us. This is not because there are not marvelous musicians there. It is because there is no money. The orchestra men want to play great music. They organize, and give the concerts, and divide what comes in. It is not enough.

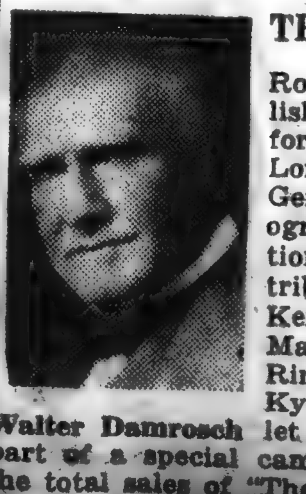
"And these people, they say to me, 'we give you great composers and artists; you give us the Boston orchestra. We will sell the shirt off our back to hear it.'"

But, says Judd with a practical look about the eyes, the tour won't be for a while yet. Touring takes money.

TOLEDO, O.
BLADE

JUN 15 1938

* * *



Walter Damrosch

TRIVIA: Herbert Hoover is reviewing "The Public Papers and Addresses of Franklin D. Roosevelt" for a San Francisco newspaper. The publishers are hoping to use some of his comments in forthcoming advertisements for the Roosevelt set . . . Longman's Green will publish a book about George Gershwin in the fall, to include a complete bibliography of all Gershwin compositions and reproductions of many of the late composer's paintings. Contributors will include Serge Koussevitsky, Jerome Kern, Paul Whiteman, Walter Damrosch, Reuben Mamoulian and DuBese Heyward . . . Farrar and Rinehart have just sold 15,000 copies of Peter B. Kyne's "The Go-Getter" to Chevrolet Motors. Chevrolet is distributing the book among its salesmen as part of a special campaign to stimulate sales. This purchase brings the total sales of "The Go-Getter" above the 200,000 mark.

Koussevitzky Wants to Tour Europe With Boston Symphony

B. Globe June 14/38

Noted Conductor Returns From Abroad To Accept Honorary Degree From Yale

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY CONFESSES AN AMBITION
The famed conductor is seen here telling reporters of his desire to take Symphony Orchestra on tour of Europe.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, upon whom Yale University is bestowing a degree at its Commencement exercises next week, arrived in Boston last night after having spent his second shortest European vacation since he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the days before the Berkshire Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky embarked for Europe in May and debarked in the United States in October. Come the Festival, and his European holidays here ended in July. Come honorary degrees, and these vacations are limited to about a month. In 1929, when this famous conductor was honored with a degree of doctor of laws at Harvard, he sailed away in May, and returned in June. And, this year, when Yale wishes to reward him, he has had to do the same thing.

Despite such a short rest from his arduous task, Dr. Koussevitzky looked very tanned and in excellent health when he stepped off the Merchants Limited at Back Bay Station last night at 9:25.

"The degree?" he parried, his face wreathed in smiles and his blue eyes twinkling merrily, "it is a secret. I know nothing about it. I'm back to see the new music shed at Tanglewood."

Tanglewood, the estate in the Berkshires at which the Music Festival is held during the first two weeks in August, now has a shed instead of a tent for Boston's Symphony Orchestra members. Dr. Koussevitzky plans to make a tour of inspection on Thursday, principally to test the acoustics.

Very dapper in his tan topcoat, grey suit, grey felt hat and striped shirt of soft green, Dr. Koussevitzky said that he found conditions in France "better." He spent his vacation, chiefly in Paris with a few days in Aix-le-Bains.

"Things are better there. And the music," he continued enthusiastically, "there was much good music in Paris. I heard the Berlin Symphonic Orchestra under Furtwangler and the Paris Symphony Orchestra, and many, many soloists.

"And in Paris the Boston Symphony Orchestra is deeply appreciated. Over the radio they broadcast for an hour's program our symphony records. And they want the orchestra to come to Paris to play. As some musicians said to me, 'We have given you our best composers. You should bring them back to us so that we may hear them as an orchestra.'

"That," continued Dr. Koussevitzky, gesturing excitedly, "is what I should like to do. Give me $10,000 and I shall take them, next season!"

Dr Koussevitzky was accompanied by Mme. Koussevitzky, dressed smartly in grey and black, and by George E. Judd, manager of Symphony Hall, who met the couple in New York on their arrival on the Normandie yesterday noon. Miss Olga Naumoff, Dr. Koussevitzky's niece and secretary, was at the station.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who will now take up his residence again in his Brookline home, said that he might go to Pops one evening, "if he had time."

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

Would Take Symphony to Europe Next Year

B. Post - June 14/38

ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR RETURNS
Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shown, left, as he arrived in Boston last night after European tour. At right, Manager George E. Judd of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

After a brief visit to Paris, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived last evening at Back Bay station. Mme. Koussevitzky accompanied him. There are two reasons for the conductor's speedy return from his annual European vacation. One of these was the degree of Doctor of Music which he is about to receive from Yale University; the other was the desire to see how work is progressing on the new auditorium at Stockbridge, which is to be the permanent home of the Berkshire Festival.

Question regarding conditions in Europe, Mr. Koussevitzky replied enigmatically that they were better "since France has come to think more as Hitler does." Dr. Koussevitzky concedes that Paris has as good orchestral material as might be found anywhere, but he feels that the superabundance of orchestras in the French capital—there are no less than six—the small pay, 3000 francs a month and the limited rehearsals are not conducive to the best results.

The impressive testimony of the phonograph records, on top of the long-established tradition of the eminence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have fired the French desire to hear our orchestra in the flesh.

"We have sent you the best composers," they say. "Now you should send us the best performers." Of the fact that he would like to take the Symphony Orchestra to Europe and of the fact that next summer is none too soon, Dr. Koussevitzky makes no secret. He would go early in May and, as for the Pops—well, they could wait until fall.

B. Trans. June 15/38

News of Music

Tauno Hannikainen, Finnish conductor now visiting this country, will be guest conductor at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall next Monday evening. He will preside over the performance of the Second Symphony of Sibelius, while the rest of the program, containing several numbers by Finnish composers, will be directed by Paul Cherkassky, violinist in the orchestra, who has already conducted several Pop concerts at short notice.

The general public will not be admitted to the concert of next Tuesday evening, reserved for the Harvard Class of 1913. Leo Litwin will be the soloist in Rubenstein's D minor Concerto on Wednesday. He and Jesus M. Sanroma will be the pianists in the Saint-Saens "Carnival of Animals" on Thursday. On Saturday evening Mr. Sanroma, in turn, will be the soloist in the Mendelssohn G minor Piano Concerto. Friday will be "Candid Camera Night," which is to say, open sesame to photographers.

On the Air

Three new compositions by contemporary writers will be presented on a Columbia radio network next Friday afternoon from 3.15 to four. V. Kapralova will direct his "Military" Symphonietta; J. Koffler's Third Symphony will be presented by Hermann Scherchen and Arnold Fulton will be the conductor for Lennox Berkeley's "Domini est terra" for chorus and orchestra. The broadcast will originate in Queen's Hall, London, in connection with the first orchestral concert of the I. S. C. M. Festival. The BBC Symphony Orchestra and Chorus will be the performers.

23

73

HURSDAY, JUNE 16, 193

PLACID CLUB SEASON LOOMS AS SUCCESSFUL

Ice Skating Will Be One of Features To Attract Visitors

LAKE PLACID CLUB, June 15—

Members of the internationally famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will compose the 12-piece Symphony Ensemble which will play for concerts. Informal talks on current economic and political trends will again be given weekly by Dr. William Starr Myers of Princeton University. Several Broadway stars are expected to make appearances with the Lake Placid Players, who will open their season in mid-July at Lakeside Theatre, under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Stearns of Boston.

The club's dance orchestra will again be under the direction of Mr. Johnny Schwab, and a school of modern dancing will be conducted by Miss Elaine Wetmore of the Arthur Murray Studios in New York City. Bridge tournaments, under the guidance of Mrs. Edith Chubb of New York, motion pictures, teas, recitals and social entertainment features will all be a part of the special activities here during the summer months. The Carl Lamson School of Music from Boston will again hold a summer session at the club. A new feature this summer will be the Dartmouth Sextet, composed of members of the Dartmouth Glee Club, under the direction of Mr. Robert Lange, president of the glee club.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 14 1938

Yale To Present Honorary Degree to Dr. Koussevitzky

Similarly Honored by Harvard In 1929—Coming to Berkshire To Inspect Tanglewood Shed

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who ~~returned~~ yesterday from a brief holiday in Europe, will be presented an honorary degree at Yale University June 22. He was similarly honored by Harvard in 1929.

Coming to Berkshire

In a week or so, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to inspect the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood where Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra in August. After that the conductor will enjoy another brief holiday before the Festival concerts.

Before leaving New York yesterday, Dr. Koussevitzky took time out for one chore before hastening to Boston to attend the funeral of a friend. He went to a store on Fifth Avenue to buy himself some special clothes in which to conduct the Festival concerts.

Interviewed by AP

According to John Selby, Associated Press writer of New York who interviewed the conductor yesterday, "It's almost as important to look right from the rear as it is make the Berkshire Festival continue to be the most conservatively managed and perhaps best prepared artistically in the country. August too hot for tails; after a long truggle, Koussevitzky and George E. Judd manager of the orchestra, settled on black trousers and a white tuxedo coat."

That is what the well-dressed conductor will wear this summer in the Berkshires.

Dr. Koussevitzky came back with a burning desire. It's to tour Europe with his Boston Symphony.

"It is," said he, "a little delicate for me to say how popular the Boston Symphony is abroad. You know," very softly and Russian- st enthusiastic and ny men, and I know g like them abroad. abroad, is second-rate to us. This is not because there are not marvelous musicians there. It is because there is no money. The orchestra men want to play great music. They organize, and give the concerts, and divide what comes in. It is not enough.

"And these people, they say to me, 'we give you great composers and artists; you give us the Boston Orchestra. We will sell the shirt off our back to hear it.' "

"But," says Judd with a practical look about the eyes, "the tour won't be for a while yet. Touring takes money."

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 15 1938

YALE WILL HONOR DR. KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston Symphony Director to Get Degree—Berkshire Festival Campaign Starts Monday.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra which will give the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs at Tanglewood in Lenox in August, is to receive an honorary degree from Yale university at its commencement a week from today, it has been earned.

Dr. Koussevitzky has just returned from a European vacation and will visit Tanglewood within the next fortnight to go over preparations for this season's festival for which the subscription campaign will begin next Monday. The 50 sub-chairmen of the subscription campaign will meet Monday for luncheon at the Curtis hotel in Lenox to plan the drive which will intensify the sale of subscriptions that has already been under way for several weeks. The sub-chairmen will visit Tanglewood in the afternoon to inspect the last month's progress on the music shed.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Yale Will Honor Dr. Koussevitzky

Noted Symphony Conductor to Get Degree June 22

PITTSFIELD, June 14—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who returned yesterday from a brief holiday in Europe, will be presented an honorary degree at Yale University June 22. He was similarly honored by Harvard in 1929.

In a week or so, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to inspect the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood, where Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra in August. After that the conductor will enjoy another brief holiday before the festival concerts.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

Several Musical Events of Interest Scheduled

Musicians Honored.

In the conferring of honorary degrees this summer colleges are logically considering the claims of musicians to such distinction as is proper for institutions dedicated to the cultivation of the liberal arts. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is returning earlier than usual from his vacation abroad to receive such an honor at Yale. The University of Maine gave Dr. Walter Damrosch a degree and Bates college in the same state honored Frank W. Asper, organist of the famous tabernacle at Salt Lake City. Others who have been honored in this way this season are Marian Anderson, the celebrated Negro contralto, and Clarence Adler, pianist and teacher.

23

73

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

Koussevitzky Wants to Tour Europe With Boston Symphony

B. Globe June 14/38

Noted Conductor Returns From Abroad To Accept Honorary Degree From Yale

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY CONFESSES AN AMBITION
The famed conductor is seen here telling reporters of his desire to take Symphony Orchestra on tour of Europe.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, upon whom Yale University is bestowing a degree at its Commencement exercises next week, arrived in Boston last night after having spent his second shortest European vacation since he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In the days before the Berkshire Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky embarked for Europe in May and debarked in the United States in October. Come the Festival, and his European holidays here ended in July. Come honorary degrees, and these vacations are limited to about a month. In 1929, when this famous conductor was honored with a degree of doctor of laws at Harvard, he sailed away in May, and returned in June. And, this year, when Yale wishes to reward him, he has had to do the same thing.

Despite such a short rest from his arduous task, Dr. Koussevitzky looked very tanned and in excellent health when he stepped off the Merchants Limited at Back Bay Station last night at 9:25.

"The degree?" he parried, his face wreathed in smiles and his blue eyes twinkling merrily, "it is a secret. I know nothing about it. I'm back to see the new music shed at Tanglewood."

Tanglewood, the estate in the Berkshires at which the Music Festival is held during the first two weeks in August, now has a shed instead of a tent for Boston's Symphony Orchestra members. Dr. Koussevitzky plans to make a tour of inspection on Thursday, principally to test the acoustics.

Very dapper in his tan topcoat, grey suit, grey felt hat and striped shirt of soft green, Dr. Koussevitzky said that he found conditions in France "better." He spent his vacation, chiefly in Paris with a few days in Aix-le-Bains.

"Things are better there. And the music," he continued enthusiastically, "there was much good music in Paris. I heard the Berlin Symphonic Orchestra under Furtwangler and the Paris Symphony Orchestra, and many, many soloists.

"And in Paris the Boston Symphony Orchestra is deeply appreciated. Over the radio they broadcast for an hour's program our symphony records. And they want the orchestra to come to Paris to play. As some musicians said to me, 'We have given you our best composers. You should bring them back to us so that we may hear them as an orchestra.'

"That," continued Dr. Koussevitzky, gesturing excitedly, "is what I should like to do. Give me $10,000 and I shall take them, next season!"

Dr Koussevitzky was accompanied by Mme. Koussevitzky, dressed smartly in grey and black, and by George E. Judd, manager of Symphony Hall, who met the couple in New York on their arrival on the Normandie yesterday noon. Miss Olga Naumoff, Dr. Koussevitzky's niece and secretary, was at the station.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who will now take up his residence again in his Brookline home, said that he might go to Pops one evening, "if he had time."

Would Take Symphony to Europe Next Year

B. Post - June 14/38

ORCHESTRA CONDUCTOR RETURNS
Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shown, left, as he arrived in Boston last night after European tour. At right, Manager George E. Judd of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

After a brief visit to Paris, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived last evening at Back Bay station. Mme. Koussevitzky accompanied him. There are two reasons for the conductor's speedy return from his annual European vacation. One of these was the degree of Doctor of Music which he is about to receive from Yale University; the other was the desire to see how work is progressing on the new auditorium at Stockbridge, which is to be the permanent home of the Berkshire Festival.

Question regarding conditions in Europe, Mr. Koussevitzky replied enigmatically that they were better "since France has come to think more as Hitler does." Dr. Koussevitzky concedes that Paris has as good orchestral material as might be found anywhere, but he feels that the superabundance of orchestras in the French capital—there are no less than six—the small pay, 3000 francs a month and the limited rehearsals are not conducive to the best results.

The impressive testimony of the phonograph records, on top of the long-established tradition of the eminence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have fired the French desire to hear our orchestra in the flesh.

"We have sent you the best composers," they say. "Now you should send us the best performers." Of the fact that he would like to take the Symphony Orchestra to Europe and of the fact that next summer is none too soon, Dr. Koussevitzky makes no secret. He would go early in May and, as for the Pops—well, they could wait until fall.

B. Trans. June 15/38

News of Music

Tauno Hannikainen, Finnish conductor now visiting this country, will be guest conductor at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall next Monday evening. He will preside over the performance of the Second Symphony of Sibelius, while the rest of the program, containing several numbers by Finnish composers, will be directed by Paul Cherkassky, violinist in the orchestra, who has already conducted several Pop concerts at short notice.

The general public will not be admitted to the concert of next Tuesday evening, reserved for the Harvard Class of 1913. Leo Litwin will be the soloist in Rubenstein's D minor Concerto on Wednesday. He and Jesus M. Sanroma will be the pianists in the Saint-Saens "Carnival of Animals" on Thursday. On Saturday evening Mr. Sanroma, in turn, will be the soloist in the Mendelssohn G minor Piano Concerto. Friday will be "Candid Camera Night," which is to say, open sesame to photographers.

On the Air

Three new compositions by contemporary writers will be presented on a Columbia radio network next Friday afternoon from 3.15 to four. V. Kapralova will direct his "Military" Symphonietta; J. Koffler's Third Symphony will be presented by Hermann Scherchen and Arnold Fulton will be the conductor for Lennox Berkeley's "Domini est terra" for chorus and orchestra. The broadcast will originate in Queen's Hall, London, in connection with the first orchestral concert of the I. S. C. M. Festival. The BBC Symphony Orchestra and Chorus will be the performers.

HURSDAY, JUNE 16, 193

PLACID CLUB SEASON LOOMS AS SUCCESSFUL

Ice Skating Will Be One of Features To Attract Visitors

LAKE PLACID CLUB, June 15—Members of the internationally famous Boston Symphony Orchestra will compose the 12-piece Symphony Ensemble which will play for concerts. Informal talks on current economic and political trends will again be given weekly by Dr. William Starr Myers of Princeton University. Several Broadway stars are expected to make appearances with the Lake Placid Players, who will open their season in mid-July at Lakeside Theatre, under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Stearns of Boston.

The club's dance orchestra will again be under the direction of Mr. Johnny Schwab, and a school of modern dancing will be conducted by Miss Elaine Wetmore of the Arthur Murray Studios in New York City. Bridge tournaments, under the guidance of Mrs. Edith Chubb of New York, motion pictures, teas, recitals and social entertainment features will all be a part of the special activities here during the summer months. The Carl Lamson School of Music from Boston will again hold a summer session at the club. A new feature this summer will be the Dartmouth Sextet, composed of members of the Dartmouth Glee Club, under the direction of Mr. Robert Lange, president of the glee club.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 15 1938

YALE WILL HONOR DR. KOUSSEVITZKY

Boston Symphony Director to Get Degree—Berkshire Festival Campaign Starts Monday.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra which will give the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs at Tanglewood in Lenox in August, is to receive an honorary degree from Yale university at its commencement a week from today, it has been earned.

Dr. Koussevitzky has just returned from a European vacation and will visit Tanglewood within the next fortnight to go over preparations for this season's festival for which the subscription campaign will begin next Monday. The 50 sub-chairmen of the subscription campaign will meet Monday for luncheon at the Curtis hotel in Lenox to plan the drive which will intensify the sale of subscriptions that has already been under way for several weeks. The sub-chairmen will visit Tanglewood in the afternoon to inspect the last month's progress on the music shed.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

Yale Will Honor Dr. Koussevitzky

Noted Symphony Conductor to Get Degree June 22

PITTSFIELD, June 14—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who returned yesterday from a brief holiday in Europe, will be presented an honorary degree at Yale University June 22. He was similarly honored by Harvard in 1929.

In a week or so, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to inspect the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood, where Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra in August. After that the conductor will enjoy another brief holiday before the festival concerts.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

Several Musical E of Inte

Musicians Honored.

In the conferring of honorary degrees this summer colleges are locally considering the claims of musicians to such distinction as is proper for institutions dedicated to the cultivation of the liberal arts. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, is returning earlier than usual from his vacation abroad to receive such an honor at Yale. The University of Maine gave Dr. Walter Damrosch a degree and Bates college in the same state honored Frank W. Asper, organist of the famous tabernacle at Salt Lake City. Others who have been honored in this way this season are Marian Anderson, the celebrated Negro contralto, and Clarence Adler, pianist and teacher.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 14 1938

Yale To Present Honorary Degree to Dr. Koussevitzky

Similarly Honored by Harvard In 1929—Coming to Berkshire To Inspect Tanglewood Shed

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who returned yesterday from a brief holiday in Europe, will be presented an honorary degree at Yale University June 22. He was similarly honored by Harvard in 1929.

Coming to Berkshire

In a week or so, Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will come to the Berkshires to inspect the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood where Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct his orchestra in August. After that the conductor will enjoy another brief holiday before the Festival concerts.

Before leaving New York yesterday, Dr. Koussevitzky took time out for one chore before hastening to Boston to attend the funeral of a friend. He went to a store on Fifth Avenue to buy himself some special clothes in which to conduct the Festival concerts.

Interviewed by AP

According to John Selby, Associated Press writer of New York who interviewed the conductor yesterday, "It's almost as important to look right from the rear as it is to make the Berkshire Festival continue to be the most conservatively managed and perhaps best prepared artistically in the country. August is too hot for tails; after a long struggle, Koussevitzky and George E. Judd manager of the orchestra, settled on black trousers and a white tuxedo coat."

That is what the well-dressed conductor will wear this summer in the Berkshires.

Dr. Koussevitzky came back with a burning desire. It's to tour Europe with his Boston Symphony.

"It is," said he, "a little delicate for me to say how popular the Boston Symphony is abroad. You know," very softly and Russian-like, "I am most enthusiastic and content with my men, and I know there is nothing like them abroad.

"The best, abroad, is second-rate to us. This is not because there are not marvelous musicians there. It is because there is no money. The orchestra men want to play great music. They organize, and give the concerts, and divide what comes in. It is not enough.

"And these people, they say to me, 'we give you great composers and artists; you give us the Boston Orchestra. We will sell the shirt off our back to hear it.' "

"But," says Judd with a practical look about the eyes, "the tour won't be for a while yet. Touring takes money."

Passage to Europe

Serge Koussevitzky Revives His Plan to Take the Boston Symphony Orchestra Abroad

B. Trav. By MOSES SMITH June [illegible]/38

Serge Koussevitzky has not given up his long-cherished hope to take the Boston Symphony Orchestra on a European tour. Being not a tight-lipped man of affairs but a warm-hearted artist who enjoys communicating his emotions, he did not hesitate to repeat his ambition when he met Boston newspapermen early in the week after his return from a brief European holiday. A superficial judgment might be that the eminent conductor is considerably less likely to see his wish gratified at the end of the coming season than he was on a more prosperous day several years ago, when the subject was first bruited hereabouts. But there are some elements that do not meet the casual eye.

First, the ante, as we say in poker, has gone down. The inevitable financial deficit for such a tour Dr. Koussevitzky set the other day as a comfortable $100,000. He even intimated to this writer that he might settle for $75,000. Much more was required in those happier days when there seemed to be no ceiling whatever to the price of American Telephone & Telegraph stock. The current rate of exchange accounts for part of the difference. But another factor very likely would be an abbreviated itinerary.

In 1929 or the early thirties a European tour that did not include Germany, for example, would have been inconceivable. Now it is scarcely conceivable that an orchestra containing many non-Aryans and a conductor who is non-Aryan would be welcomed in Berlin or Vienna even if they wanted to go there. Perhaps a city or two in Italy might be visited. It is more likely, however, that the trip would include mainly London and Paris, with perhaps a few way-stops or brief excursions including cities like Amsterdam and Brussels and perhaps a provincial English or French city.

It does not necessarily follow that the journey would be greatly restricted in time. Dr. Koussevitzky seems to think that Paris alone could "absorb" several concerts. The Boston Symphony Orchestra's reputation has been considerably enhanced, it will be remembered, by its phonograph records. The conductor spoke of hearing an hour's radio program devoted to them. In addition the conductor himself has a wide personal following there because of his celebrated "Concerts Koussevitzky" in the past and because for many years Paris has been his second home. Similar considerations prevail in the case of London, where Dr. Koussevitzky has conducted many times in the past two decades.

* * *

There is nothing new in the phenomenon of a touring orchestra. Even the nineteenth century knew it. The Boston Orchestra began to travel in its early days, and its regular annual mileage now would probably equal that of a European tour. As to a single long trip, the visit to the San Francisco World's Fair in 1915 was comparable. A trans-oceanic voyage on the orchestra's own (instead of by invitation and guarantee) is, of course, another matter. For precedent here, however, one need go back no further than to the tour of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society under Arturo Toscanini.

The idea of an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra going abroad has psychological overtones that somehow are not associated with the trips of lesser societies or traveling virtuosi. The symphony orchestra, itself so representative an expression of our century, tends to become in the popular mind a sort of good-will ambassador. It is true that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, like others of its time, is enabled to visit distant territories without leaving Symphony Hall—by means of the phonograph and the radio. But mechanical reproduction, while much more important than it used to be considered in respectable circles, is not quite the same thing as performance in the flesh, a fact which continues to be repeated in respectable circles. It is not the same thing for the audience, nor is it for the performers.

On both counts a European trip for the Boston Orchestra and its conductor is to be encouraged. A Parisian audience, "assisting" at a performance of the Second Suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, will probably experience. in addition to the customary aesthetic satisfaction, the sort of thrill that recently animated a Symphony Hall audience when Benny Goodman and his orchestra played swing music there. The Bostonians, in turn, reacting as performers do toward an audience, would achieve a concentration and tension surpassing even the degree of those qualities exhibited at home with such remarkable periodicity.

The determing element in the decision of a prospective benefactor or benefactors might well be civic pride, which is not a musical consideration at all but which, as we all know, has a good deal to do with music. We in Boston and America, as Dr. Koussevitzky says he was reminded on his recent visit to Paris, have been taking European composers and executant musicians these many years to the enrichment of our musical life. Is it not time for us at least partially to repay the loan in a specie in which we are rich and, by so doing, indicate to the world the extent of our good fortune?

BOSTON TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1938

CIVIC LEADERS HONOR HUMPHREY

Fields of Banking, Law, Music Represented at Service

Leading representatives of the fields of banking, law and music joined yesterday afternoon in paying final tribute to Chester Bradley Humphrey, vice-president of the Old Colony Trust Company, as funeral services were held for him at the Church of the Advent, Mt. Vernon and Brimmer streets. The Rev. S. Whitney Hale, rector, officiated. Burial was in Mt. Auburn cemetery.

Ushering at the services were the following: Oliver Wolcott, S. Parkman Shaw and Rollin B. Fisher, vice-presidents of the Old Colony Trust Company; Gilbert E. Fuller, president of Raymond-Whitcomb, Inc.; Butler Ames, Dr. J. Dillinger Barney, Edward A. Taft, trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra; George L. Foote, Boston composer; Gorham Brooks, and Walter S. Bucklin, president of the National Shawmut Bank.

Among those present were representative groups from leading Boston banks and financial organizations, as well as the Travelers Aid Society of Boston, the South End Music School and the Forsyth Dental Infirmary for Children. Also attending were: Channing H. Cox, president and director of the Old Colony Trust Company, together with other officials of the organization; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra; Philip Stockton, president of the First National Bank of Boston, and Dean Wallace B. Donham of the Harvard graduate school of business administration.

Complete Pops Programs for Week

The penultimate week of the Pops concerts in Symphony Hall will begin on Monday with a program the direction of which will be shared by Tauno Hannikainen, Finnish conductor now visiting America, and Paul Cherkassky, member of the orchestra. The Finnish conductor will present the Second Symphony of Sibelius. The general public will not be admitted to the concert of Tuesday evening, given over entirely to the Harvard class of 1913.

The complete programs for the week and for tonight, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, except as otherwise indicated, follow:

Tonight

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ... Wagner
Nocturne ... Dorothea Dean
(First performance)
Scherzo, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" ... Mendelssohn
Aria from "La Forza del Destino," "Pace, pace, mio Dio" ... Verdi
Soloist: Eleanor Steber, soprano
Four Spokes from the Hub ... Paul White
(First performance)
Dances from the Ballet, "The Three-Cornered Hat" ... De Falla
Piano Concerto No 1 ... Rachmaninoff
(First movement)
Soloist: Esther Asher
"Espana," Waltzes ... Waldteufel
Perpetuum Mobile ... Strauss
Divertimento (Finale) ... Ibert

Monday Evening

Entrance of the Gladiators ... Fucik
Overture to "Raymond" ... Thomas
Berceuse ... Jarnefelt
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem ... Sibelius
Symphony in D major ... Sibelius
"Where the Citrons Bloom" ... Strauss
"The Toy Trumpet" ... Scott
Prayer of Thanksgiving (Old Dutch Hymn) ... Valerius-Kremser

Tuesday Evening

"Up the Street," March ... Morse, '96
Austrian Peasant Dances ... Schonherr
Largo from "Xerxes" ... Handel
Organ: Leland Arnold, '13
"Barbaresques," Suite for Orchestra ... T. Spelman, '13
Rhapsody in Blue ... Gershwin
Soloist: Henry Levine, '13
Conductor: Samuel Seininger, '13
"Estudiantina," Waltzes ... Waldteufel
"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," ... Churchill-Bodge
Harvard Fantasy ... Leroy-Anderson, '29

Wednesday Evening

First Hungarian Dance ... Brahms
Symphony in D major, Third Movement ... Brahms
Marche Militaire ... Schubert
Prize Song from "Die Meistersinger" ... Wagner
Judex ... Gounod
Overture to "Sakuntala" ... Goldmark
Piano Concerto in D minor ... Rubinstein
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Kamenoi Ostrow ... Rubinstein
Russian Sailors' Dance, from "Red Poppy" ... Gliere

Thursday Evening

Triumphal March from "Aida" ... Verdi
Selection, "The Mikado" ... Sullivan
None But the Lonely Heart ... Tschaikowsky-Caillet
Soviet Iron Works ... Mossolov
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ... Wagner
The Animals' Carnival ... Saint-Saens
Pianos: J. M. Sanroma-Leo Litwin
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ... Liszt
"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Fantasy ... Churchill-Bodge
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango ... Gade
"Stars and Stripes Forever," March ... Sousa

Friday Evening

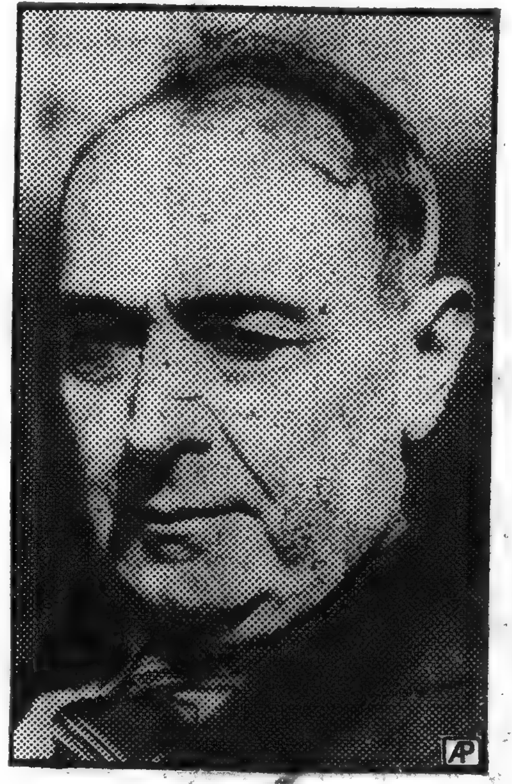
Procession of the Sardar, from the "Caucasian Sketches" ... Ippolitov-Ivanov
Overture to "Light Cavalry" ... Suppe
Chanson Triste ... Tschaikowsky
Ballet Music from "Faust" ... Gounod
Waltz from "Eugen Oniegin" ... Tschaikowsky
Rachem ... Manna-Zucca
Divertissement ... Ibert
Bolero ... Moskowski
Donkey Serenade from "The Firefly" ... Friml
"Thunder and Lightning," Polka ... Strauss

Saturday Evening

Polonaise from "Eugen Oniegin" ... Tschaikowsky
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" ... Rossini
Valse Bluette ... Drigo
Fete Espagnole ... Crist
Overture to "Fingal's Cave" ("The Hebrides") ... Mendelssohn
Piano Concerto in G minor ... Mendelssohn
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Voices of Spring," Waltzes ... Strauss
Two Hearts in Three-Quarter Time ... Stolz
March from "The Gypsy Baron" ... Strauss

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
June 17/38

Dr. Koussevitzky To Receive Honorary Degree From Yale



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

On the same stage where his conducting of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has thrilled thousands of music-lovers, Dr. Koussevitzky, renowned Russian musician, will appear in a distinguished company Wednesday in Woolsey Hall to receive an honorary degree of doctor of music from Yale University.

Ranked among the foremost conductors of the world, Doctor Koussevitzky has already been honored by Brown University, in 1926, and Harvard University, in 1929, being awarded honorary doctorates by both.

Exiling himself from his native land in 1920 because of bitterness toward the Bolshevik regime, he became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1924 and has since directed that outstanding musical organization. Decorated by the Czar of Russia in 1903, he was made a knight of the French Legion of Honor in 1924 and was promoted to the rank of officer in that honorary body in 1930. In quitting Moscow, he relinquished the post of conductor of the Russian state orchestra.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 16 1938

Koussevitzky To Hunt for House, Inspect Shed Tuesday

Mrs. Brooks To Arrive Monday— Fifty Chairmen To Attend Subscription Meeting in Lenox

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be in the Berkshires Tuesday accompanied by Madame Koussevitzky to inspect the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood, and on a house-hunting expedition.

Meeting them in Lenox will be Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, who presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival. Mrs. Brooks will arrive Monday.

A place among others that has caught the conductor's fancy is Lakeside, the Charles Astor Bristed place, overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, and conveniently located near Tanglewood. It adjoins the estate of Canon Anson Phelps Stokes of Washington Cathedral who will be at his estate during the Festival. Another place in which the conductor has expressed interest is the home of the late Miss Adele Kneeland on West Street. A third possibility is the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club where Dr. Koussevitzky and several friends stayed during the 1937 Festival.

At Yale Wednesday

The conductor will motor here from Saratoga and after settling the problem of living quarters, he will continue to New Haven where on Wednesday Yale University will present to him an honorary degree.

As a convenience to hundreds of music lovers from distant points who will come to the concerts in August, the Festival office has compiled lists of rooming houses in Stockbridge, Lenox and neighzoring towns. These lists and other information may be had by writing to the office in Stockbridge.

Hotel accommodations in Stockbridge and Lenox are becoming more scarce daily but there are still ample accommodations at inns and tourist houses.

The meeting of sub-chairmen at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox Monday which will mark the opening of the subscription campaign will be attended by at least 50 community chairmen.

ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
JUN 18 1938

Koussevitzky Seeking House

Back from Europe to receive an honorary degree of Doctor of Music from Yale University June 22, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will come to the Berkshires Tuesday for another inspection of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood," and he also will be on a house-hunting expedition.

He will be accompanied by Madame Koussevitzky. They want everything settled before they leave on a holiday before the opening concert of the Festival, Aug. 4.

A location among others that has captured Dr. Koussevitzky's fancy is Lakeside, the estate of the late Charles Astor Bristed of New York overlooking Stockbridge Bowl near "Tanglewood."

It will be a busy week for festival officers. In addition to the inspection of the shed and the house-hunting expedition of Dr. Koussevitzky and Madame Koussevitzky, there will be the opening of the subscription campaign by 50 or more sub-chairmen from far-flung areas. They will meet for luncheon at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox

There are the final touches to be added to the music shed to make it as it will be for the concerts this summer. There is grass to be cut, lawns to be mowed, trees to be trimmed, roads to be built and a hundred other details necessary for the comfort and convenience of the public.

Also coming to "Tanglewood" Tuesday will be Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., a member of the Festival board and donor of the 200-acre estate as a permanent home for the festival. She will accompany Dr. Koussevitzky in his search for a house.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 17 1938

Dr. Koussevitzky Will Hunt a Home

Conductor and Wife to Be in Berkshires Tuesday

PITTSFIELD, June 16—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be in the Berkshires Tuesday accompanied by Mme. Koussevitzky to inspect the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood and to hunt a house. Meeting them in Lenox will be Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, who presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

A place among others that has caught the conductor's fancy is Lakeside, the Charles Astor Bristed place, overlooking Stockbridge Bowl and conveniently located near Tanglewood. It adjoins the estate of Canon Anson Phelps Stokes of Washington Cathedral, who will be at his estate during the Festival. Another place in which the conductor has expressed interest is the home of the late Miss Adele Kneeland on West St.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUN 17 1938

Dr. Koussevitzky Will Hunt a Home

PITTSFIELD, June 17—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be in the Berkshires Tuesday accompanied by Mme. Koussevitzky to inspect the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood and to hunt a house. Meeting them in Lenox will be Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, who presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival.

A place among others that has caught the conductor's fancy is Lakeside, the Charles Astor Bristed place, overlooking Stockbridge Bowl and conveniently located near Tanglewood. It adjoins the estate of Canon Anson Phelps Stokes of Washington Cathedral, who will be at his estate during the Festival. Another place in which the conductor has expressed interest is the home of the late Miss Adele Kneeland on West St.

25

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 18 1938

Koussevitzky Seeks Home In Berkshires

Back from Europe to receive an honorary degree of doctor of music from Yale university June 22, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will come to the Berkshires Tuesday for another inspection of the Berkshires Tuesday for another inspection of the Berkshires Symphonic festival's music shed at "Tanglewood", and he also will be on a house-hunting expedition. He will be accompanied by Madame Koussevitzky. They want everything settled before they leave on a holiday before the opening concert of the festival, August 4.

A location among others that has captured Dr. Koussevitzky's fancy is Lakeside, the estate of the late Charles Astor Bristed of New York overlooking Stockbridge bowl and near "Tanglewood". The estate of Canon Anson Phelps Stokes of Washington Cathedral adjoins the Bristed property. The Stokes expect to be at their summer home during the fastival.

It will be a busy week for festival officers. In addition to the inspection of the shed and the house-hunting expedition of Dr. and Madame Koussevitzky, there will be the opening of the subscription campaign by 50 or more sub-chairmen from far-flung areas. They will meet for luncheon at the Curtis hotel in Lenox. There are the final touches to be added to the music shed to make it as complete as it will be for the concerts this summer. There is grass to be cut, lawns to be mowed, trees to be trimmed, roads to be built and a hundred other details necessary for the comfort and convenience of the public.

Also coming to "Tanglewood" Tuesday will be Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., a member of the festival board and donor of the 200-acre estate as a permanent home for the festival. She will accompany Dr. Koussevitky in his search for a house.

Mrs. B. G. Peck, local sub-chairman, and Miss Eleanor Smith will attend the luncheon. Reservations for any or all concerts may be obtained from the local committee.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

[illegible] 19 1938

MUSIC

Dr. Koussevitzky To Get Degree Wednesday At Yale

Back from Europe to receive a honorary degree of doctor of m sic from Yale university Wedne day, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, co ductor of the Boston Symphor orchestra, will visit the Berkshir Tuesday for another inspection the Berkshire Symphonic Fest val's music shed at "Tangl wood". He will be on a hous

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 19 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY TO GET A DEGREE FROM YALE

Conductor to Be Made Doctor of Music Wednesday

Returned recently from a European vacation, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Music from Yale on Wednesday.

GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES

JUN 20 1938

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky claims, "The best (symphony orchestra) abroad is second rate to us." Not because there aren't the musicians there, but because there is more money here to support them.

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

B. Post — June 18/38

News and Views About Music Matters Here and Elsewhere

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE eventual popularity of much once-enigmatic music is a matter that should always give the impulsive music critic pause. Surely not one of the reviewers who gave voice to their common mystification when Sibelius' Second Symphony was first performed here, on March 11, 1904, would ever have dreamed that 34 years later that baffling and cryptic work would be played in its entirety at a Pop Concert. Played it will be, however, tomorrow evening, under the baton of the composer's countryman, Tauno Hannikainen, a conductor of recognized abilities in his own land, now visiting the United States. The occasion for what is virtually a Finnish programme is the 300th anniversary of the arrival in Delaware of the first Swedish and Finnish settlers to reach these shores. Before the Symphony will come a Berceuse by Jaenefelt and Sibelius' "Finlandia," both to be directed by Paul Cherkassky, who also conducts the remainder of the programme. Arthur Fiedler, on leave of absence for this one evening, will on Friday, July 1, conduct his 500th Pop Concert. . . . Time flies.

* * * *

Bishop Fan Sylvain Noli, one-time premier and dictator of Albania, who was much in the news during the recent American visit of King Zog's three sisters, will make his debut as orchestral composer at Jordan Hall on Tuesday afternoon. When Bishop Noli receives from the New England Conservatory the degree of Bachelor of Music his "Overture on Byzantine Themes" will be played by the Conservatory Orchestra, under Wallace Goodrich.

* * * *

It is interesting to see the Lucerne has had to wait no longer than this summer to secure the services of Toscanini and Bruno Walter for its music festival. Richard Strauss, Ernest Ansermet and Willem Mengleberg will be the other directors in a festival which lasts from mid-July to the end of August. At Salzburg, where Messrs. Toscanini and Walter had been slated to appear, the conductors will be Wilhelm Furtwaengler, Hans Knappertsbusch, Karl Boehm and Vittorio Gui. The festival will begin July 23 with a performance of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," under Furtwaengler, and will conclude on Aug. 31 with Beethoven's "Fidelio," Mr. Knappertsbusch conducting. Other operas to be heard are "Don Giovanni," "Der Rosenkavalier," "Tannhauser," "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Falstaff." As far as the musical end of the festival is concerned, it is the personnel rather than the repertory which has been changed by the recent Anschluss.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 19 1938

Ballet With the Boston Symphony

WHEN THE American flag floated down from the vaulted ceiling of old Symphony Hall in Boston last Tuesday night on Flag Day, and the Symphony orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler played the "Star Spangled Banner" . . . and the audience stood up as one man, it marked intermission at one of the finest programs ever heard and seen there in the ever popular series. Preceded by sterling favorites like the Schubert "March Militaire" and the second movement of his "Unfinished Symphony," a Granados composition new to most, a magnificent trumpet solo with orchestra by Roger Voisin, and Wagnerian encores the dance play by Hans Wiener and his dancers, (music by Walter Piston) was repeated with the orchestra. It was a charming melange of motion, color and gay miming by the master of dance and a large company of 40. Street scene with such picturesque characters as the Prudent Shopper, the Blowzy Belle, and the carnival come to town, a side-show barker, band leader, jugglers, snake dancer, the monkey trainer and monkeys made a colorful background for Mr. Wiener with his intangible flute, the Merchants Daughters of a concert group, Dorothy Sammis, Kathryn Pope, Dorothy Wood and Estelle Kibbee, the apprentice, Gregory MacDougall and the Rich Widow, Mildred Simons. Conductor Fiedler who traditionally has the Wiener dancers appear on his pops programs sometime through the season, Walter Piston, the composer of the ballet music took two curtain calls with the incredible flutist himself. After the very successful performance Mr. Wiener entertained at a penthouse party at his studio atop Hotel Brunswick, where the costumes had been made under supervision of Katrine Hooper. Marco Montedoro of Radio City Music Hall designed both costumes and set.

B. Transc. June 16/38

Pops Give Night to Italian Music

Resphigi's Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome," was the main item on last night's Italian program at the Pops. It was done with the unerring delicacy that marks so many of Conductor Fiedler's interpretations. The four parts were read so that the most effective moments were emphasized. This was particularly true of the second, rather bizarre "Pines Near a Catacomb." The orchestra's response to the odd nuances was alert, filling the listener with admiration for its excellent workmanship.

Another arrangement which caught the fancy of the audience was that of the Prelude to "La Traviata." Seldom have we heard the broad sweep of the aria which comes in the middle of the Prelude as inspiringly played. Every instrument seemed to sing its line, sounding the strong emotions of regret and sadness. So well was it liked that the musicians were compelled to give an encore, one of the many which were interspersed into the concert. And even then, the ovation continued. But Francesco Albanese, the first soloist of the evening, appeared to sing "Una Furtiva Lagrima" from Donizetti's "L'Elisir d'Amore."

The young tenor carefully followed the style of Caruso, and later Schipa, in his conception of the haunting aria. The vocal tricks which the first two artists were easily able to accomplish eluded him; because he has neither sufficient power nor adequate breath control. The song is difficult enough as Donizetti wrote it, and when ambitious, but too enthusiastic, tenors add little cadenzas and high notes of their own it becomes a task. Signor Albanese sang delightfully in the middle register. His voice has warmth, and the romantic mood of the young man who saw "A Furtive Tear" in the eye of his beloved was tenderly projected. Once more the applause was generous.

Two Overtures to "The Barber of Seville," the first by Paisiello, the second by Rossini; Ballet Music from "Aida," the Overture to "The Secret of Suzanne," Arditi's "Il Bacio," and soprano solos by Alba Alessandrini completed the program. Musetta's Aria from "La Boheme" was the most important of Signora Allessandrini's songs. She sang well, although handicapped by a voice too small for Symphony Hall.

J. G.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

JUN 21 1938

Camera Men to Exhibit at Berkshire Festival.

Co-operating with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be a major summer attraction, the Berkshire Museum Camera Club, of Pittsfield, has arranged for its first annual Berkshire County Photographic Exhibition. Nineteen leading salon photographers already have accepted the invitation to participate in the exhibition July 31 to August 14.

The exhibition will be held at the Berkshire M[illegible]m in Pittsfield, whose direct[illegible] Laura Bragg, life director of hi[illegible] Charleston (S. C.) Museum.

JAMAICA, N. Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS

JUN 20 1938

Sibelius Music to Feature Finnish Tercentenary Fete

Concert, Program and Speeches Arranged for Tomorrow

Professor Tauno H. Hannikainen, conductor of the Turku Symphony of Finland, who is warmly commended by Jean Sibelius as an interpreter of the Finnish composer's work, will be the guest conductor at the Finnish American festival tomorrow night in Forest Park.

His appearance in Queens will be one of four in this country. He will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, tonight and will be heard also at Central Park and at Chester, Pa., at the official dedication of the Finnish memorial commemorating the early Finns who landed on the shores of the Delaware River in 1638.

Flaxen-haired bays and girls in old-country folk costumes will mingle with the thousands of Long Island Finns who are expected to fill the flag-draped park for the concert, dance program and speeches occasioned by the 300th anniversary of the first Swedish-Finnish settlement in America.

The girls will wear full-sleeved white blouses and white aprons over their red and black skirts and ribbons in their hair to distinguish them in the old Finnish fashion from the married women, who wear hats.

Councilman James A. Burke will deliver the welcoming address after introductory remarks by Ero K. Djerf, chairman of the New York State Committee for the American-Finnish Delaware Tercentenary.

Municipal Court Justice Nicholas M. Pette will also speak, and a talk in Finnish will be given by Professor John B. Olli of the College of the City of New York.

Sibelius music will predominate in the Finnish selections played by the New York State Symphonic Band. Two of the compositions which Professor Hannikainen will conduct are "Finlandia," one of Sibelius' best known and best loved works, and his "Valse Triste."

The Finnish conductor has been conductor of the Helsinki Opera for six years and is a cello artist of international fame.

He will also conduct the "Praeludium" and "Berceuse of Jarnefelt. Other compositions to be played by the symphonic band will be conducted by its director, Guiseppe Creatore. They will include the finale of Tchaikowsky's Fourth Symphony and Friedemann's "Slavonic Rhapsody."

Long Island Finnish dancers directed by Mrs. Edward Sipila of Queens Village, will be accompanied by Veikko Hietala on the accordion.

They will perform the Purpuri, a Finnish wedding dance; Kehraa Kehraa Tyttonen, a weaving dance, and Koiviston Polska, the country polka.

Uuno Pulkkinen and John Kultti are directing a Finnish chorus which will sing "Kevat Laulu," a spring song; "Karjalan Kunnila" and "Laulu Wuokselle."

Mrs. Edward H. Dawson of Hollis is the Queens representative on the State Committee.

The following are members of the Long Island Committee for the Delaware Tercentenary:

Matti Mulari, chairman; Mrs. Amalia Matson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Maire Nordlund, recording secretay; Hugo Hoit, treasurer; Elina Lehto, assistant to the chairman; Erkki Matson, Fanny Hoit, Aino Kunnas, Erkki Kunnas, Cilja Nordlund, Olva Nordlund, Alina Pelto, Lydia Johnson, Erick Brand, Victor Ahola, Tatu Pietila, Emil Forsblum and Jennie Mulari.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 20 1938

MUSIC NOTES

Preparations for the opening of the outdoor operetta season at Jones Beach on Saturday night are progressing, with the company scheduled to take over the big stage for final rehearsals on Wednesday or Thursday. Among those in rehearsal for "Three Waltzes" are Everett Marshall, former Metropolitan baritone; Lucy Monroe, Fred Sherman, June Havoc, Douglas Leavitt, Louis Sorin and Dean Dickens.

* * *

Three composers will have the honor of having works published this fall as the result of competitions. The Juilliard School has selected for inclusion in its series of American scores Gardner Read's "Sketches of the City" (opus 26), and a symphony in F by Werner Josten. This is the second time Mr. Josten's work has appeared in this series, his "Concerto Sacro" being published several years ago. The Society for the Publication of American Music, of which A. Walter Kramer is president, has chosen for publication this year a string quartet by Douglas Moore, associate professor of music at Columbia.

* * *

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orche[illegible] who already holds honorary degrees from Brown and other American colleges, will receive another award next Thursday, this one from Yale. He is scheduled to pay a visit tomorrow to the estate near Lenox where the permanent shed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is now being constructed. He will also meet with the executives of the festival, who are preparing an intensive drive for subscriptions.

CARLISLE, PA.
SENTINEL

JUN 22 1938

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music-lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says, that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the continent.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 21 1938

Koussevitzkys Inspect Shed At Tanglewood

LENOX, June 21.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Madame Koussevitzky, arrived here this noon by automobile from Saratoga, N. Y., and after inspecting the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Shed at Tanglewood, proceeded at once to hunt for a house which would be suitable for their occupancy during the Festival.

From here, Dr. Koussevitzky will motor to New Haven, Conn., where tomorrow Yale University will bestow upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Music.

MERRILL, WIS.
HERALD

JUN 22 1938

THE Boston "Pops" orchestra, comprising a large part of the Boston Symphony orchestra, recently produced the first ballet score of the distinguished American composer, Walter Piston. Titled "The Incredible Flutist," the score was presented under direction of Conductor Arthur Fiedler and with Hans Wiener and his dance group. The consensus of critics was that the music itself was so appealing that it probably could be performed as a concert suite without dancers. Piston is chairman of the faculty of music at Harvard University.

TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 18 1938

Koussevitzky Seeks Home In Berkshires

Back from Europe to receive an honorary degree of doctor of music from Yale university June 22, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will come to the Berkshires Tuesday for another inspection of the Berkshires Tuesday for another inspection of the Berkshires Symphonic festival's music shed at "Tanglewood", and he also will be on a house-hunting expedition. He will be accompanied by Madame Koussevitzky. They want everything settled before they leave on a holiday before the opening concert of the festival, August 4.

A location among others that has captured Dr. Koussevitzky's fancy is Lakeside, the estate of the late Charles Astor Bristed of New York overlooking Stockbridge bowl and near "Tanglewood". The estate of Canon Anson Phelps Stokes of Washington Cathedral adjoins the Bristed property. The Stokes expect to be at their summer home during the fastival.

It will be a busy week for festival officers. In addition to the inspection of the shed and the house-hunting expedition of Dr. and Madame Koussevitzky, there will be the opening of the subscription campaign by 50 or more sub-chairmen from far-flung areas. They will meet for luncheon at the Curtis hotel in Lenox. There are the final touches to be added to the music shed to make it as complete as it will be for the concerts this summer. There is grass to be cut, lawns to be mowed, trees to be trimmed, roads to be built and a hundred other details necessary for the comfort and convenience of the public.

Also coming to "Tanglewood" Tuesday will be Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., a member of the festival board and donor of the 200-acre estate as a permanent home for the festival. She will accompany Dr. Koussevitky in his search for a house.

Mrs. B. G. Peck, local sub-chairman, and Miss Eleanor Smith will attend the luncheon. Reservations for any or all concerts may be obtained from the local committee.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 19 1938

MUSIC

Dr. Koussevitzky To Get Degree Wednesday At Yale

Back from Europe to receive honorary degree of doctor of m sic from Yale university Wedne day, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, co
ductor of the Boston Sympho orchestra, will visit the Berkshir
Tuesday for another inspection
the Berkshire Symphonic Fest
val's music shed at "Tangl wood". He will be on a hous

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 19 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY TO GET A DEGREE FROM YALE

Conductor to Be Made Doctor of Music Wednesday

Returned recently from a European vacation, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will receive the honorary degree of Doctor of Music from Yale on Wednesday.

GLOUCESTER, MASS.
TIMES

JUN 20 1938

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky claims, "The best (symphony orchestra) abroad is second rate to us." Not because there aren't the musicians there, but because there is more money here to support them.

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

B. Post — June 18/38

News and Views About Music Matters Here and Elsewhere

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THE eventual popularity of much once-enigmatic music is a matter that should always give the impulsive music critic pause. Surely not one of the reviewers who gave voice to their common mystification when Sibelius' Second Symphony was first performed here, on March 11, 1904, would ever have dreamed that 34 years later that baffling and cryptic work would be played in its entirety at a Pop Concert. Played it will be, however, tomorrow evening, under the baton of the composer's countryman, Tauno Hannikainen, a conductor of recognized abilities in his own land, now visiting the United States. The occasion for what is virtually a Finnish programme is the 300th anniversary of the arrival in Delaware of the first Swedish and Finnish settlers to reach these shores. Before the Symphony will come a Berceuse by Jaenefelt and Sibelius' "Finlandia," both to be directed by Paul Cherkassky, who also conducts the remainder of the programme. Arthur Fiedler, on leave of absence for this one evening, will on Friday, July 1, conduct his 500th Pop Concert. . . . Time flies.

* * * *

Bishop Fan Sylvain Noli, one-time premier and dictator of Albania, who was much in the news during the recent American visit of King Zog's three sisters, will make his debut as orchestral composer at Jordan Hall on Tuesday afternoon. When Bishop Noli receives from the New England Conservatory the degree of Bachelor of Music his "Overture on Byzantine Themes" will be played by the Conservatory Orchestra, under Wallace Goodrich.

* * * *

It is interesting to see the Lucerne has had to wait no longer than this summer to secure the services of Toscanini and Bruno Walter for its music festival. Richard Strauss, Ernest Ansermet and Willem Mengleberg will be the other directors in a festival which lasts from mid-July to the end of August. At Salzburg, where Messrs. Toscanini and Walter had been slated to appear, the conductors will be Wilhelm Furtwaengler, Hans Knappertsbusch, Karl Boehm and Vittorio Gui. The festival will begin July 23 with a performance of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger," under Furtwaengler, and will conclude on Aug. 31 with Beethoven's "Fidelio," Mr. Knappertsbusch conducting. Other operas to be heard are "Don Giovanni," "Der Rosenkavalier," "Tannhauser," "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Falstaff." As far as the musical end of the festival is concerned, it is the personnel rather than the repertory which has been changed by the recent Anschluss.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 19 1938

Ballet With the Boston Symphony

WHEN THE American flag floated down from the vaulted ceiling of old Symphony Hall in Boston last Tuesday night on Flag Day, and the Symphony orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler played the "Star Spangled Banner" . . . and the audience stood up as one man, it marked intermission at one of the finest programs ever heard and seen there in the ever popular series. Preceded by sterling favorites like the Schubert "March Militaire" and the second movement of his "Unfinished Symphony," a Granados composition new to most, a magnificent trumpet solo with orchestra by Roger Voisin, and Wagnerian encores the dance play by Hans Wiener and his dancers, (music by Walter Piston) was repeated with the orchestra. It was a charming melange of motion, color and gay miming by the master of dance and a large company of 40. Street scene with such picturesque characters as the Prudent Shopper, the Blowzy Belle, and the carnival come to town, a side-show barker, band leader, jugglers, snake dancer, the monkey trainer and monkeys made a colorful background for Mr. Wiener with his intangible flute, the Merchants Daughters of a concert group, Dorothy Sammis, Kathryn Pope, Dorothy Wood and Estelle Kibbee, the apprentice, Gregory MacDougall and the Rich Widow, Mildred Simons. Conductor Fiedler who traditionally has the Wiener dancers appear on his pops programs sometime through the season, Walter Piston, the composer of the ballet music took two curtain calls with the incredible flutist himself. After the very successful performance Mr. Wiener entertained at a penthouse party at his studio atop Hotel Brunswick, where the costumes had been made under supervision of Katrine Hooper. Marco Montedoro of Radio City Music Hall designed both costumes and set.

B. Transcript June 18/38

Pops Give Night to Italian Music

Resphigi's Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome," was the main item on last night's Italian program at the Pops. It was done with the unerring delicacy that marks so many of Conductor Fiedler's interpretations. The four parts were read so that the most effective moments were emphasized. This was particularly true of the second, rather bizarre "Pines Near a Catacomb." The orchestra's response to the odd nuances was alert, filling the listener with admiration for its excellent workmanship.

Another arrangement which caught the fancy of the audience was that of the Prelude to "La Traviata." Seldom have we heard the broad sweep of the aria which comes in the middle of the Prelude as inspiringly played. Every instrument seemed to sing its line, sounding the strong emotions of regret and sadness. So well was it liked that the musicians were compelled to give an encore, one of the many which were interspersed into the concert. And even then, the ovation continued. But Francesco Albanese, the first soloist of the evening, appeared to sing "Una Furtiva Lagrima" from Donizetti's "L'Elisir d'Amore."

The young tenor carefully followed the style of Caruso, and later Schipa, in his conception of the haunting aria. The vocal tricks which the first two artists were easily able to accomplish eluded him; because he has neither sufficient power nor adequate breath control. The song is difficult enough as Donizetti wrote it, and when ambitious, but too enthusiastic, tenors add little cadenzas and high notes of their own it becomes a task. Signor Albanese sang delightfully in the middle register. His voice has warmth, and the romantic mood of the young man who saw "A Furtive Tear" in the eye of his beloved was tenderly projected. Once more the applause was generous.

Two Overtures to "The Barber of Seville," the first by Paisiello, the second by Rossini; Ballet Music from "Aida," the Overture to "The Secret of Suzanne," Arditi's "Il Bacio," and soprano solos by Alba Alessandrini completed the program. Musetta's Aria from "La Boheme" was the most important of Signora Allessandrini's songs. She sang well, although handicapped by a voice too small for Symphony Hall.

J. G.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

JUN 21 1938

Camera Men to Exhibit at Berkshire Festival.

Co-operating with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be a major summer attraction, the Berkshire Museum Camera Club, of Pittsfield, has arranged for its first annual Berkshire County Photographic Exhibition. Nineteen leading salon photographers already have accepted the invitation to participate in the exhibition July 31 to August 14.

The exhibition will be held at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, whose direct[illegible] Laura Bragg, life director of hi[illegible] Charleston (S. C.) Museum.

JAMAICA, N. Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS

JUN 20 1938

Sibelius Music to Feature Finnish Tercentenary Fete

Concert, Program and Speeches Arranged for Tomorrow

Professor Tauno H. Hannikainen, conductor of the Turku Symphony of Finland, who is warmly commended by Jean Sibelius as an interpreter of the Finnish composer's work, will be the guest conductor at the Finnish American festival tomorrow night in Forest Park.

His appearance in Queens will be one of four in this country. He will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, tonight and will be heard also at Central Park and at Chester, Pa., at the official dedication of the Finnish memorial commemorating the early Finns who landed on the shores of the Delaware River in 1638.

Flaxen-haired bays and girls in old-country folk costumes will mingle with the thousands of Long Island Finns who are expecteu to fill the flag-draped park for the concert, dance program and speeches occasioned by the 300th anniversary of the first Swedish-Finnish settlement in America.

The girls will wear full-sleeved white blouses and white aprons over their red and black skirts and ribbons in their hair to distinguish them in the old Finnish fashion from the married women, who wear hats.

Councilman James A. Burke will deliver the welcoming address after introductory remarks by Ero K. Djerf, chairman of the New York State Committee for the American-Finnish Delaware Tercentenary.

Municipal Court Justice Nicholas M. Pette will also speak, and a talk in Finnish will be given by Professor John B. Olli of the College of the City of New York.

Sibelius music will predominate in the Finnish selections played by the New York State Symphonic Band. Two of the compositions which Professor Hannikainen will conduct are "Finlandia," one of Sibelius' best known and best loved works, and his "Valse Triste."

The Finnish conductor has been conductor of the Helsinki Opera for six years and is a cello artist of international fame.

He will also conduct the "Praeludium" and "Berceuse of Jarnefelt. Other compositions to be played by the symphonic band will be conducted by its director, Guiseppe Creatore. They will include the finale of Tchaikowsky's Fourth Symphony and Friedemann's "Slavonic Rhapsody."

Long Island Finnish dancers directed by Mrs. Edward Sipila of Queens Village, will be accompanied by Veikko Hietala on the accordion.

They will perform the Purpuri, a Finnish wedding dance; Kehraa Kehraa Tyttonen, a weaving dance, and Koiviston Polska, the country polka.

Uuno Pulkkinen and John Kultti are directing a Finnish chorus which will sing "Kevat Laulu," a spring song; "Karjalan Kunnila" and "Laulu Wuokselle."

Mrs. Edward H. Dawson of Hollis is the Queens representative on the State Committee.

The following are members of the Long Island Committee for the Delaware Tercentenary:

Matti Mulari, chairman; Mrs. Amalia Matson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Maire Nordlund, recording secretay; Hugo Hoit, treasurer; Elina Lehto, assistant to the chairman; Erkki Matson, Fanny Hoit, Aino Kunnas, Erkki Kunnas, Cilja Nordlund, Olva Nordlund, Alina Pelto, Lydia Johnson, Erick Brand, Victor Ahola, Tatu Pietila, Emil Forsblum and Jennie Mulari.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 20 1938

MUSIC NOTES

Preparations for the opening of the outdoor operetta season at Jones Beach on Saturday night are progressing, with the company scheduled to take over the big stage for final rehearsals on Wednesday or Thursday. Among those in rehearsal for "Three Waltzes" are Everett Marshall, former Metropolitan baritone; Lucy Monroe, Fred Sherman, June Havoc, Douglas Leavitt, Louis Sorin and Dean Dickens.

* * *

Three composers will have the honor of having works published this fall as the result of competitions. The Juilliard School has selected for inclusion in its series of American scores Gardner Read's "Sketches of the City" (opus 26), and a symphony in F by Werner Josten. This is the second time Mr. Josten's work has appeared in this series, his "Concerto Sacro" being published several years ago. The Society for the Publication of American Music, of which A. Walter Kramer is president, has chosen for publication this year a string quartet by Douglas Moore, associate professor of music at Columbia.

* * *

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orche[illegible]who already holds honorary degrees from Brown and other American colleges, will receive another award next Thursday, this one from Yale. He is scheduled to pay a visit tomorrow to the estate near Lenox where the permanent shed for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is now being constructed. He will also meet with the executives of the festival, who are preparing an intensive drive for subscriptions.

CARLISLE, PA.
SENTINEL

JUN 22 1938

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music-lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the continent.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 21 1938

Koussevitzkys Inspect Shed At Tanglewood

LENOX, June 21.—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Madame Koussevitzky, arrived here this noon by automobile from Saratoga, N. Y., and after inspecting the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Shed at Tanglewood, proceeded at once to hunt for a house which would be suitable for their occupancy during the Festival.

From here, Dr. Koussevitzky will motor to New Haven, Conn., where tomorrow Yale University will bestow upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Music.

MERRILL, WIS.
HERALD

JUN 22 1938

THE Boston "Pops" orchestra, comprising a large part of the Boston Symphony orchestra, recently produced the first ballet score of the distinguished American composer, Walter Piston. Titled "The Incredible Flutist," the score was presented under direction of Conductor Arthur Fiedler and with Hans Wiener and his dance group. The consensus of critics was that the music itself was so appealing that it probably could be performed as a concert suite without dancers. Piston is chairman of the faculty of music at Harvard University.

Guest Conductor from Finland

B. Trans. June 21/38

Tauno Hannikainen Presents Second Symphony of Sibelius at Pop Concert

By Moses Smith

Guest-conducting, which has been so much abused in this country in recent years, has something to be said for it. And the legitimate diversion which it furnishes a faithful winter subscription audience may also be applied occasionally to an institution like the Symphony Hall Pops concerts, led through these nine seasons with ever-increasing popularity by Arthur Fiedler. Earlier in the season Fritz Mahler presented a Wagner program with profit to almost everybody and everything concerned, including the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Last night there appeared for only a part of the program a visitor out of Finland, Tauno Hannikainen. But the Sibelius Second Symphony, to which his ministrations were confined, were sufficient to indicate a personage.

The rest of the program consisted of items out of the familiar Pops repertory, with more than a leaning to the Finnish side (Jarnefelt's Berceuse, Sibelius' "Finlandia" and a couple of extra numbers). Selection of both music and leaders, it appeared, was occasioned by commemoration of the 300th anniversary of the arrival of the first Finnish and Swedish settlers in America. Mr. Cherkassky, who is now no stranger to the podium at Pops, comported himself with animation as well as dignity, and was obviously and deservedly liked by the large audience.

The visiting conductor, who is a youngish-appearing, personable figure, made it apparent by the broad but commanding sweep with which he established the opening tempo of the Symphony that he was a musician of authority and a leader of experience. Perhaps the most striking aspect of an engrossing performance was the sureness with which the tempos were set and maintained or—at need—made flexible without collapsing. Whether or not the tempos were "right" did not for the moment matter beside the more important consideration that they justified themselves in actual performance and indeed seemed inevitable.

The same thing, for the most part, could be said of the scheme of dynamics and expressive devices generally. This Symphony has sounded eloquently in our ears so frequently at the hands of the Bostonian musicians under Serge Koussevitzky that there were bound to be moments of surprise at a tempo here, a crescendo or diminuendo there, and so forth. In particular, for example, the insistent main theme of the last movement pulsated last night where it has had breadth in the Koussevitzkyan treatment. But there was conviction last night, too. And we had an instance of a familiar, recurrent musical phenomenon, that the same musical sentence can have different shades of meaning to musicians of different temperament.

The performance of the Symphony by the musicians of the Pops Orchestra had, for the surroundings, season and temperature, uncommon vitality and even brilliance. These considerations, too, made the audience's applause take on the character of a great ovation. Mr. Hannikainen clearly left behind not only a pleasant taste but also a desire for renewed acquaintance on another and perhaps even more pretentious occasion.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 21 1938

Festival Chairmen Have Enthusiastic Meeting in Lenox

Mrs. W. Bradford West of Pittsfield in Charge of Arrangements For Olin Downes Lectures

Nearly half a hundred community chairmen took upon themselves yesterday with enthusiasm the responsibility of making the 1938 Berkshire Symphonic Festival as outstandingly successful as it was in 937. Most all of them could point with pride to the record increase of more than 30 per cent in their membership list from last year.

Meeting at Curtis Hotel

The opening meeting of the subscription campaign was held at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox following a luncheon. Henry W. Dwight, Festival chairman; Mrs. George W. Edman, executive vice-president; Robert K. Wheeler, Festival trustee; Mr. Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee, stressed the need for continued good work to insure success this year. Posters, unreserved tickets, subscription blanks and other literature were distributed.

Mrs. W. Bradford West of Pittsfield was introduced as the chairman of arrangements for the four lectures to be given at Berkshire Museum by Olin Downes, eminent music editor of the New York Times. These lectures will be at 3 P. M. Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 and tickets may be secured for the series or for single lectures. There is a substantial saving in buying the series tickets. Mrs. West announced that she would be pleased to receive reservations for the lectures. She will have charge of ticket distribution.

Recordings Open to Public

Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt of Dalton invited all the chairmen who could do so to attend the first recorded concert arranged by the Junior League of Pittsfield at the Berkshire Museum this afternoon at 4.30. The general pjublic will be welcome. There will be no charge. There will be six concerts on successive Tuesday afternoons featuring the music to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in August.

MRS. W. BRADFORD WEST
In Charge of Lestures by Olin Downes

HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

76

JUN 22 1938

MUSIC

Summer Season Activities

Summer is not a quiet or dull season for either student or professional musician and the layman will be interested and attracted by a multitude of offerings of high merit in all sections of this country and in some European centers.

Summer opera, summer school and college courses, a variety of festival programs and countless competitions offered in every branch of music are announced for summer.

The Federal Music Project has planned a season of outdoor concerts and operas for the next three months and will utilize the services of more than 10,000 persons in some hundred cities and towns.

Dr. Nikolai Sokoloff, national director, announces his resources for this series include 123 symphony and concert orchestras, 50 dance orchestras and bands, 71 concert bands, 35 opera and choral groups and several recital units.

With nearly all of the symphony orchestras of the project already heavily booked for the summer, some of the scheduled events are of interest. For example, the Syracuse Symphony orchestra will give a series of concerts beginning July 6 at the Syracuse university, and will also be heard at Cornell university. The Westchester orchestra began a series of concerts in White Plains recently that will be continued until Sept. 21. While New York and New Jersey activities are most numerous according to announcements to date, New England has many events scheduled.

Early in July, Boston will have weekly concerts by the Civic Symphony orchestra of Philadelphia in the Grand Court of the Museum of Art. On Boston common there are the daily noon hour concerts by bands with Saturday and Sunday evening programs. The Women's orchestra and other Boston units have outdoor programs.

Nineteen other Massachusetts cities and towns an dnumerous centers of Vermont, Connecticut and New Hampshire will have similar programs throughout the summer.

National Federation Contest

Bulletins for the biennial young artists' contest of the National Federation of Music clubs are available for distribution and will be sent upon request from the office of Mrs. Edmund H. Cahill, at national headquarters, New York City. The final contest will be held at the biennial convention of the National Federation, May 20, 1939, in Baltimore, Md. The winner of first rating in piano, violin and voice will be awarded $1000.

The Schubert Memorial awards to these federation winners consist of an appearance with the Philadelphia orchestra in that city and in New York. This early announcement aids any interested in preparing for this contest.

Middlebury College Music Center

The newest adjunct to Middlebury college is Middlebury Music center which has announced its first season opening July 1 and concluding Aug. 19. Alfred Zighera, violoncello player in the Boston Symphony orchestra, who played in Dr. Koussevitsky's orchestra in Paris before coming to this country, will be a faculty member.

Paul L. Fedorovsky, violinist of the string choir of the Boston Symphony orchestra and his wife, Madame Olga Averino, soprano, both Russian born, and "glad to be alive and in Boston under so great a conductor as Dr Koussevitsky", adds Fedorovsky, are two important members of the Middlebury faculty.

Prof. Walter Piston, of Harvard, will conduct a seminar in advance composition. Sunday evening concerts of vocal and chamber music will be conducted by members of the faculty augmented by appearances of other musicians and dancers.

Courses are to be conducted for academic credit in the form of certificate based on examinations. A student enrolled at the Music Center will be permitted to audit without charge any course in the language school.

E. B. F.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

On Reception Board

Baroness Margaret Le Fevre, Mrs. William Johnston Taylor, Miss Ethel Mitchell, Miss Frances Johnston and Mrs. Frederick McGowan are members of the hostess committee for the reception Count Serge Jean de la Cases will give tomorrow afternoon in the Palm Room on the roof of the Park Central Hotel for Miss Anna Kaskas, contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and for members of the Operatic Art Circle, of which he is the founder.

Miss Kaskas will sing at the Berkshire Music Festival under the baton of Serge Koussevitsky, and at the summer music festival at Silvermine, Conn.

The musical program tomorrow will be contributed by Miss Mildred Boldin, soprano, and Guido Salmaggi, tenor.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 22 1938

Koussevitzky and Disney Honored by Yale Degrees

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 22 (AP)—Yale University conferred honorary degrees today on eleven candidates including Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor-General of Canada, and Walter Elias Disney of Los Angeles, Cal., artist and creator of the film version of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

President Charles Seymour also conferred 1105 degrees in course at the 237th commencement exercises.

Those receiving honorary degrees were: Lord Tweedsmuir, doctor of laws, Walter Elias Disney, master of arts. Thomas Mann, author, doctor of letters.

Stanley Forman Reed, associate justice of the U. S. Supreme Court, doctor of laws.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, doctor of music; Maitland Fuller Griggs, lawyer, art connoisseur and trustee of the Metropolitan and Frick Museums, doctor of humane letters; Eugene Markley Landis, associate professor of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, master of science; Rev. Morgan Phelps Noyes, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Montclair, N. J., doctor of divinity.

Wendell Meredith Stanley, associate member of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research at Princeton University, doctor of science; Rev. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, doctor of laws; President James Lukens McConaugh of Wesleyan University, doctor of laws.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUN 21 1938

ADVISORY BOARD OF FESTIVAL MET

Luncheon-Meeting Was Held at Lenox, Mass., Monday—Local Members Present.

A largely attended luncheon-meeting of the advisory board of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., was held at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, Mass., yesterday.

Mrs. George Edman of Pittsfield., Mass., executive vice president of the organization, presided at the meeting which followed the luncheon. Mrs. Edman read an interesting tabulation of the memberships received to date, and stated that almost all the states of the Union and several sections of Canada were represented in the membership.

Mr. Dwight, the treasurer, stated that a great deal of money has been received but that the budget is, necessarily, much larger this year than heretofore, and made a brief appeal for additional contributions to the building fund.

George Edman, of Pittsfield, Mass., in charge of publicity, stated that the necessity for interest is more vital than ever this year. That upon the showing that is made this will determine the progress that may be looked for another year. That Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, under whose direction the concerts of the festival are to be given, has many interesting things in mind which will be of great help to the organization. Mr. Edman announced that three thousand steel chairs, with padded backs and seats, had been purchased, and that these will be used in the boxes and in the reserved seats in the front section.

Announcement was made of the lectures that are to be given in Pittsfield by Olin Downes, noted music critic, on the afternoons preceding the concerts, and of the records of the music which is to be played at the 1938 festival which may be rented, for a nominal sum, by a committee of the Junior League of Pittsfield which is in charge of this activity. At the close of the meeting many of those present visited the new music shed which is almost completed.

Those present from this vicinity at the luncheon-meeting were Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Mrs. Wendover Neefus and Gerald S. Bliss of this city.

B. Globe June 21/38

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Guest Conductor at Pops

Tauno Hannikainen, a Finnish conductor now making a visit to the United States in connection with the 300th anniversary celebration of the first Finnish settlement in America, was guest leader at the Pops in Symphony Hall last night. Not only was this his Boston debut, but it was said to be his first appearance in this country.

The Second Symphony of his countryman, Jean Sibelius, was appropriate choice for the middle section of the program, which fell to Mr. Hannikainen. Conducting without score but with the customary stick, the guest immediately proved himself a musician to whom gusto means quite as much as matters of technique. He gave the Second Symphony an emotional, rhapsodic interpretation that possessed more of a folkish quality than the cosmopolitan smoothness with which Boston concert-goers are familiar at the hands of other conductors.

Mr. Hannikainen's tempi leaned on the fast side, except for part of the third movement, and sometimes they modified a little some of Sibelius' characteristic phrases. Sibelius himself has said, however, of another of his symphonies that "the tempo is as you feel it." Thus Mr. Hannikainen's pace may be remarked upon but not questioned. Certain details were brought out more plainly than this reviewer has ever heard them before, and if the general nature of his reading was new to Bostonian ears, it was also logical, intense and extremely interesting.

His evident talent found in the Boston Symphony players a worthy instrument. He might well be invited to return here in the future. Last night's audience applauded him rapturously.

The remainder of the program was conducted by Paul Cherkassky. In addition to the symphony, Sibelius was represented by "Finlandia" and "Valse Triste" (the latter as an encore). There were also the Thomas Overture to "Raymond," music by Jaernefelt, also a prominent composer of Finland; a Strauss waltz, and the Valerius-Kremser "Prayer of Thanksgiving."

C. W. D.

FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD - NEWS

JUN 22 1938

Lord Tweedsmuir And Walt Disney Honored by Yale

NEW HAVEN, June 22, (UP)—Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor-General of Canada, and Walt Disney, creator of "Mickey Mouse" and other popular animated motion picture characters, were among the 11 recipients of honorary degrees today at Yale's 237th Commencement.

Lord Tweedsmuir was awarded a degree of Doctor of Laws.

Others awarded degrees included Stanley F. Reed, Washington, associate justice of the U. S. Supreme Court, Doctor of Laws; Thomas Mann, self-exiled German novelist and lecturer, Doctor of Letters, Serge Koussevitsky, Boston, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Doctor of Music, and Rev. Endicott Peabody, Groton, Mass., headmaster of Groton School, Doctor of Laws.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUN 22 1938

DISNEY GIVEN HONOR AT YALE

Tweedsmuir Also Among Those Receiving Degrees at 237th Commencement

New Haven, Conn. — (AP) — Yale University today conferred the degree of doctor of laws on Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada, and that of master of arts on Walt Disney, artist and creator of the film version of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

President Charles Seymour also conferred 1,105 degrees in course the 237th comemnncement.

Others receiving honorary degrees are:

Thomas Mann, author, doctor of letters.

Stanley Forman Reed, associate justice of the U. S. Supreme Court, doctor of laws.

Musician Gets Honor

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symuhony Orchestra, doctor of music.

Maitland Fuller Griggs, lawyer, art connoisseur and trustee of the Metropolitan and Frick Museums, doctor of humane letters.

Eugene Markley Landis, associate prefessor of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, master of science.

The Rev. Morgan Phelps Noyes, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Montclair, N. J., doctor of divinity.

Wendell Meredith Stanley, associate member of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research at Princeton University, doctor of science.

The Rev. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School, doctor of laws.

Praise for Disney

President James Lukens McConaugh of Wesleyan University, doctor of laws.

Prof. William Lyon Phelps, university public orator, in presenting Disney with his degree said:

"He has accomplished something that has defied all the efforts and experiments of the laboratories in zoology and biology; he has given impressive significance to the word anima in animated; he has given animals souls."

Of Lord Tweedsmuir Phelps said.

"It is the simple truth to say that no man in public life today is more beloved or more envied. He is the man every one else would like to be.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

JUN 22 1938

Only Woman Leader Of Boston Symphony Honored at Radcliffe

Cambridge, Mass., June 22 (AP).—President Ada L. Comstock, of Radcliffe College, announced today an honorary membership in Phi Beta Kappa had been conferred on Mlle Nadia Boulanger, of the Ecole Normale de Musique, of Paris, only woman to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mlle. Boulanger was a visiting lecturer in music at Radcliffe during the last year.

A second honorary membership went to Helen Louise Dwight Reid, associate professor and head of the department of history and government at the University of Buffalo. Miss Reid took her bachelor of arts degree at Vassar in 1922 and A.M. and Ph.D. honors at Radcliffe in 1924 and 1933.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 22 1938

YALE AWARDS HONORARY DEGREES TO 11

WALTER DISNEY Artist

EUGENE LANDIS
Scientist

REV. MORGAN NOYES
Pastor

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY
Conductor

MAITLAND GRIGGS
Lawyer

THOMAS MANN
Author

WENDELL STANLEY
Scientist

JAMES McCONAUGHY
President

REV. ENDICOTT PEABODY
Headmaster

HON. STANLEY REED
Justice

LORD TWEEDSMUIR
Governor General

WALT DISNEY, TWEEDSMUIR GET OVATIONS

Recognition Paid Wide Diversity of Talent at Impressive Woolsey Hall Ceremonial

The Right Honorable Lord Tweedsmuir, distinguished governor general of Canada, and Walt Disney, who "labored like a mountain and brought forth a mouse," were among 11 great men invested with honorary degrees by Yale University today in a truly Democratic finale to the pomp and circumstance of the 237th annual commencement.

I nrecognizing a diversity of talents that scaled a range of letters, medicine, music, religion, gveornment and even cartooning, Mother Yale—in the person of her president, Charles Seymour—also honored the newest justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Stanley Reed; Thomas Mann, self-exiled German author and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Degree Recipients

The complete list of those receiving honorary degrees was as follows:

Walt Disney, artist, master of arts.

Eugene Markley Landis, professor of medicine, master of science.

The Rev. Morgan Phelps Noyes, presbyterian minister, doctor of divinity.

Serge Koussevitzky, musician, doctor of music.

Maitland Fuller Griggs, lawyer, doctor of humane letters.

Thomas Mann, author, doctor of letters.

Wendell Meredith Stanley, physician, doctor of science.

President James Lukens McConaughy, head of Wesleyan University, doctor of laws.

The Rev. Endicott Peabody, educator, doctor of laws.

Judge Stanley Forman Reed, Supreme Court justice, doctor of laws.

Lord Tweedsmuir, doctor of laws.

From State

Only one of those honored, Dr. McConaughy, who has been president of Wesleyan since 1925, is from Connecticut.

At the impressive ceremonies preceding the awarding of the honorary degrees before a capacity throng in Woolsey Hall, a total of 1,105 degrees in course also were conferred by President Seymour on graduate students. Of this number, 106 received degrees of doctor of philosophy.

Walt Disney, unassuming creator of Mickey Mouse and Snow White, who will also be honored at Harvard University tomorrow with a similar honorary degree, was the first of the 11 distinguished men on the platform to be awarded his degree and the ovation that greeted him as he advanced with measured steps to the dias behind which sat President Seymour was equalled only by the spontaneous concussion of applause reserved for Lord Tweedsmuir.

Given Ovation

For nearly two minutes, the applauses crashed to the high ceiling while Disney, smiling, waited with bowed head for Prof. William Lyon Phelps, in the role of public orator, to hail him as the man who has "accomplished something that has defied all the efforts of the laboratories of zoology and biology . . . he has given animals souls."

(Continued from Page One)

Present on the platform next to President Seymour, who was officiating at the ceremony for the first time, was James Rowland Angell, former Yale president, who seemed thoroughly to enjoy the proceedings.

Mann Honored

Thomas Mann, greeted as "master craftsman" and successful delineator of the "inner workings of the human soul," also had to pause in the ceremony to acknowledge the tremendous ovation in his honor.

Justice Stanley Reed and Lord Tweedsmuir, who came here from the Government House in Ottawa to receive his degree, sat next to each other and from time to time engaged in dignified conversation while at the other end of the platform, Disney sitting alongside Professor Landis, at times waved his hands expressively in animated conversation while at the same time displaying a lively interest in the French Renaissance beauty of the hall's interior.

When Provost Edgar Furniss presented the candidates for doctor of philosophy degrees by speaking in Latin nearly all of the men to be later honored broke out into broad smiles and clapped heartily when the new doctors moved forwrad for their sheepskins.

Cont.

Professor Phelps Witty

Witty and Droll as ever, Professor Phelps time and again created stirs of laughter with his words. He described Justice Reed's presence as having added relish because as a graduate of Yale he was appointed to the Supreme Court by a Harvard man! It was Professor Phelps who designated Walt Disney as the man who had labored like a mountain to produce a mouse and in referring to Lord Tweedsmuir, he stated slyly that as a typical Scot of the border breed he had survived the climate of his native land.

There was a rustle of appreciation when Lord Tweedsmuir was standing before President Seymour as Professor Phelps asserted with feeling:

"In an insane world maddened by the beating of war drums, the most eloquent spectacle is something that cannot be seen; the inisible boundary line between Canada and the United States, without a fort, a soldier or a gun."

Promptly on the stroke of 10 o'clock the parade began its march through the campus, emerging into Chapel Street through the Vanderbilt gate. As the clock began striking, Nicholas Candido, bugler of the 102nd Regiment Band sounded assembly and the long line got under way.

Crowds Congregate

For a full hour before the parade got under way crowds had been congregating on the Old Campus. Cameras of all types and varieties, amateur and professional, were recording untold yards of pictures commemorating the 237th commencement ceremony.

Groups of graduates, undergraduates and friends chatted happily here and there on the historic campus. Despite lowerink skies no anticipation of rain was evident in the large crowd.

Shortly after the chimes of Battell Chapel heralded the approach of the solemn ceremonies of the commencement program, the procession of dignitaries, members of the corporation and others entered the campus from the Elm Street side.

As the group halted momentarily upon entering the campus, Lord Tweedsmuir and Governor Cross, his partner in the march, engaged in an apparent bit of reminiscence.

Disney in Line

One of he youngest and apparently most nonchalent of the long line of participants in the parade was Walt Disney, famed creator of Mickey Mouse.

Asked by newsmen if Mickey Mouse had any political significance, Disney said that Mickey must be free from any and all political alliances. Dr. Fred Murphy, of Detroit, Disney's marching companion vigorously objected to the questioning of the famous cartoonist.

Marching in a column of two's the long line wended its way down Chapel Street, across Temple and into the Green. Turning back toward Temple Street as it passed Center Church, the dignitaries, honorary degree recipients, alumni and others passed directly on to Woolsey Hall.

Hundreds of spectators lined the street as heavy details of police exercised vigilance in keeping the line of march open.

Headed By Havemeyer

Headed by Prof. L. Havemeyer, carrying the massive mace of the university, the pace of the parade was slow.

A color guard from the 102nd Regiment carried the national and state colors. The band of the regiment was in the vanguard of the parade and lent a last minute air of martial pomp as the procession made its way into Woolsey Hall.

Included among the alumni in the line the classes of '88, '93 and '03 were distinctly outstanding with their blue hatbands and white numerals.

In the order of their appearance in the parade the candidates for degrees as bachelor of laws and graduate degrees in law headed the procession, marshalled by Prof. A. G. Gulliver.

Next came the degree groups of bachelor of fine arts, master of fine arts, bachelor of music, master of music, bachelor of divinity and master of forestry, headed by C. L. V. Meeks and G. H. Hamilton as marshals.

These were followed by candidates for degrees of master of arts, certificates in transportation, master of science, master of engineering and doctor of engineering, with Prof. F. W. Keator and Prof. L. E. Seeley as marshals.

Then came the candidates for master of public health, doctor of public health, master of nursing and doctor of medicine. Marshals of this group were Prof. H. S. Burr and Prof. E. S. Bixler.

Candidates for the degree of doctor of philosophy were marshalled by Prof. H. A. Farr and Prof. E. R. Goodenough. The corporation marshal was Prof. J. M. S. Allison.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 22 1938

78

Eleven Notables Awarded Honorary Degrees By Yale At Exercises In Woolsey Hall

Dr. Phelps Presents Candidates, President Seymour Delivers Citations Commending Recipients

With the customary droll wit that has endeared him to thousands, William Lyon Phelps, Lampson professor of English emeritus, this morning presented the 11 candidates for honorary degrees to President Charles Seymour at the impressive exercises in Woolsey Hall and the latter, in the more measured tones of tradition, admitted them with all rights and privileges.

The presentations by Doctor Phelps and the citations by President Seymour were as follows:

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, MUS. D.
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Professor Phelps:

"Born and married in Russia, a graduate of the Moscow Conservatory, professor at the Conservatory in Moscow, and soloist (on the double bass) of the Imperial Theatre Orchestra. In 1910 he founded and directed until 1918 the Koussevitzky Symphony Orchestra making extensive tours in the empire including three journeys on the Volga River. In 1920 he founded the concerts Koussevitzky in Paris and also conducted orchestras in England, Germany, France and Spain. In 1909 he founded "Musical Editions" for Russian composers. He was twice decorated by the Tsar, and is an officer of the Legion of Honour in France. Since September, 1924, he has been the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He has composed a concerto for double bass and orchestra, has written many pieces for double bass and piano, and has made many transcriptions from classical works.

"He was foreordained to be a conductor, for he has to an exceptionally highly developed degree the instinct for orchestral direction, and is a subtle judge of tone color. With these native powers and with profound knowledge, he has also zeal, enthusiasm, passion; he has the spirit that giveth life to music. He has always encouraged American composition by performing new works often of an experimental kind.

"The two concerts annually made by his orchestra in this very hall are to standing room only; and when a gentleman from Boston happened to remark in the presence of President Angell, that New Haven (being in the provinces) got only two concerts whereas Boston got 60, Doctor Angell replied that whereas two concerts were all that were necessary for New Haven culture, to maintain the same high level in Boston required 60.

"We take pride in welcoming Dr Koussevitzky into the Yale brotherhood."

President Seymour:

"Virtuoso whether upon your favorite instrument or as symphonic leader, creative artist who combines a hundred sounds to produce the harmony of the crystal spheres, inspired interpreter serving the people who would fain listen to great music and understand it, Yale confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Music, and admits you to all its rights and privileges."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 22 1938

Honored by Radcliffe.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., June 22 (A. P.).—President Ada L. Comstock of Radcliffe College announced today an honorary membership in Phi Beta Kappa had been conferred on Mlle. Nadia Boulanger of the Ecole Normale de Musique of Paris, only woman to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A second honorary membership went to Helen Louise Dwight Reid, associate professor and head of the department of history and government at the University of Buffalo. Miss Reid took her bachelor of arts degree at Vassar in 1922 and A. M. and Ph. D. honors at Radcliffe in 1924 and 1933.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

JUN 22 1938

Academic Honors

As recognition of a great contribution to our cultured life and eminence in one of the arts, the conferring of the honorary degree of Doctor of Music by Yale on Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be generally approved.

It is especially fitting that an American university should honor a distinguished musician who has been so generous and panstaking in bringing to performance the works of American composers. The record of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this respect, if we mistake not, has not been surpassed in this country.

The honor lists in our colleges are of more than ordinary interest this season. Harvard includes on the roll Walt Disney, outstanding artist in his medium of the animated cartoon, clearly a man of imagination. Trinity, it is noticed, is honoring Richard Barthelmess, widely known as a screen star, by giving him the B. A. degree which he would have received if he had not left the halls of the institution in Hartford for Hollywood and the movies. A few days ago Dr. Walter Damrosch added another degree to his academic stature.

There is no reason to make comparisons of the respective talents of these artists. Each in his way has contributed something of value to American life.

NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD

JUN 22 1938

HONORARY DEGREES CONFERRED AT YALE

NEW HAVEN, June 22— (AP) — Yale university conferred honorary degrees today on eleven candidates including Lord Tweedsmuir, governor-general of Canada, and Walter Elias Disney of Los Angeles, Calif., artist and creator of the film version of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs.

President Charles Seymour also conferred 1,105 degrees in course at the 237th commencement exercises.

Those receiving honorary degrees were:

Lord Tweedsmuir, doctor of laws.

Walter Elias Disney, master of arts.

Thomas Mann, author, doctor of letters.

Stanley Forman Reed, associate justice of the U. S. supreme court, doctor of laws.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, doctor of music.

Maitland Fuller Griggs, lawyer, art connoisseur and trustee of the Metropolitan and Frick museums.

Eugene Markley Landis, associate professor of medicine at the University of Pennylvania, master of science.

Rev. Morgan Phelps Noyes, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Montclair, N. J., doctor of divinity.

Wendel Meredith Stanley, associate member of the Rockefeller institute for medical research at Princeton, doctor of science.

Rev. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton school, doctor of laws.

President James Lukens McConaugh of Wesleyan university, doctor of laws.

Prof. William Lyon Phelps, University public orator, in presenting Disney with his degree said:

"He has accomplished something that has defied all the efforts and experiments of the laboratories in zoology and biology; he has given impressive significance to the word anima in animated; he has given animals souls."

Of Lord Tweedsmuir Phelps said:

"It is the simple truth to say that no man in public life today is more beloved or more envied. He is the man every one else would like to be."

The degrees in course included 395 bachelors of arts, 159 bachelors of science, 120 bachelors of laws and 106 doctors of philosophy.

MILFORD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 22 1938

Disney Gets Degree As Mickey Mouse Chuckles

By International News Service

NEW HAVEN, June 22—Mickey Mouse chuckled and Snow White, surrounded by her Seven Dwarfs, smiled with delight today as Walt Disney, their creator, received an honorary degree at Yale university's 237th commencement exercises at which 1105 degrees in course were awarded.

Disney, scheduled to get another honorary degree at Harvard university's commencement exercises tomorrow, although he never went to college, was one of 11 prominent persons upon which honors were conferred by Yale president, Charles Seymour.

In awarding Disney the honorary degree of Master of Arts, President Seymour delivered this citation: "Creator of a new language of art, who has brought the joy of deep laughter to millions and, by touching the heart of humanity without distinction of race, has served as ambassador of international goodwill, Yale confers upon you the degree of master of arts, admitting you to all its rights and privileges."

Disney "labored like a mountain and brought forth a mouse—with this mouse he conquered the whole world," said Professor William Lyons Phelps in a biography sketch.

Among others receiving honorary degrees were: Associated United State Supreme Court Justice Stanley F. Reed, Lord Tweedsmuir, governor-general of Canada, Thomas Mann, self-exiled German author, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Rev. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton school.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 23 1938

Koussevitzky Sees Music Shed And Declares That "It is Good"

"It is good;" commented Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after he had thoroughly inspected the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood and tried out its accoustical properties Tuesday. "We shall make great music."

The noted conductor and his orchestra will play for the fifth annual festival the first two week-ends in August, arriving in the Berkshires the day before to continue rehearsals that will start Monday, Aug. 1 in Symphony Hall, Boston. After luncheon at the Red Lion with Moses Smith, music editor of the Boston Transcript; John N. Burke of the Symphony Hall staff and George W. Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee for the Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky left for New Haven where a banquet was given in his honor Tuesday night. Wednesday he received an honorary degree from Yale, his fourth. He has already received degrees from Harvard, Brown and Rutgers.

Crowds continue to visit Tanglewood daily to note the progress made on the shed. It is now complete so far as construction this year is concerned. The shell remains to be painted and in a week or two the new chairs and benches will be installed. Definite announcements concerning parking and location of the box office also will be made soon and instructions will be included with the tickets to be mailed to members and subscribers next

---

RICHMOND, VA.
NEWS LEADER

JUN 23 1938

Yesterday Yale University conferred the honorary degree of Doctor and Music upon Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who has just returned from a European vacation. He and Mme. Koussevitzky are looking for a summer home in the Berkshires where he will conduct a series of summer concerts in the new music shed at Tanglewood, which will house the performances of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival early in August. The 200-acre estate which is to serve as the permanent home of the festival has been donated by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass. What an opportunity to organize a Bayreuth, Salzburg and Swiss festival combination in America! We have lost many opportunities in the past, but the European countries are almost laying them in our lap now and we must not overlook them.

EVANSTON, ILL.
NEWS INDEX

JUN 24 1938

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music-lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the continent.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 24 1938

Paul Althouse, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will sing Siegmund in "Die Walkuere" at the Hollywood bowl on July 12 and 18. On August 4 and 11 he will appear with the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire festival, first in Beethoven's Ninth and then in a

---

STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

JUN 24 1938

YALE SHOWS US

(New Haven Journal-Courier.)

When Professor Phelps presented Serge Koussevitsky for the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, he told of orchestral tours made by the candidate at the head of Russian musicians into Germany, England, Spain. This was in the youth of a man not yet old; yet there were those in Woolsey Hall who could reflect how many millenia ago in the spiritual sense it was that a Russian orchestra could command the artistry and the welcome for such a tour. Thomas Mann, accepting the degree of Doctor of Letters is an exile from his native land. The audience in the great hall applauded most for Mann and Lord Tweedsmuir and Walter Elias Disney.

For Mann and Tweedsmuir and Disney, each in his own way complements the inference of the Koussevitsky citation. Mann stands for the republic of letters of spiritual riches in which there are no tariffs—and no purges; he finds in the United States, and we may take pride in his finding, that judgment by quality and contribution alone which marked the older world. Walt Disney, Professor Phelps remarked, and he was only a little jocular, still serves as an ambassador of good will who has made foreigners like the United States. Lord Tweedsmuir was a sign that friendship and even trust across international boundaries are not wholly dead.

It was very much a commencement ceremony, in a word, to suggest and imply the times. Among the recipients of honorary degrees was the Hon. Stanley F. Reed, who represents a court still independent, still strong in the faith that there is a justice above governments which governments cannot coerce. That faith is no longer held in Thomas Mann's native country, nor in Serge Koussevitsky's. It continues in Lord Tweedsmuir's, from whence, indeed, we have it, though we shall continue to have it not without effort. President McConaughy of Wesleyan University, finally, represents a free university, in a world where they are fewer.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

June 24/38

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music-lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the continent.

GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE

JUN 24 1938

A new Richard Strauss opera "The Day of Peace," will have its world premiere in Munnich on July 24. It is in one act. It will open a five-week festival of Mozart Wagner and Strauss.

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the Continent.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

JUN 23 1938

Yale Shows Us The World

When Professor Phelps presented Serge Koussevitsky for the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, he told of orchestral tours made by the candidate at the head of Russian musicians into Germany, England, Spain. This was in the youth of a man not yet old; yet there were those in Woolsey Hall who could reflect how many millenia ago in the spiritual sense it was that a Russian orchestra could command the artistry and the welcome for such a tour. Thomas Mann, accepting the degree of Doctor of Letters is an exile from his native land. The audience in the great hall applauded most for Mann and Lord Tweedsmuir and Walter Elias Disney.

For Mann and Tweedsmuir and Disney, each in his own way complements the inference of the Koussevitsky citation. Mann stands for the republic of letters and of spiritual riches in which there are no tariffs—and no purges; he finds in the United States, and we may take pride in his finding, that judgment by quality and contribution alone which marked the older world. Walt Disney, Professor Phelps remarked, and he was only a little jocular, still serves as an ambassador of good will who has made foreigners like the United States. Lord Tweedsmuir was a sign that friendship and even trust across international boundaries are not wholly dead.

It was very much a commencement ceremony, in a word, to suggest and imply the times. Among the recipients of honorary degrees was the Hon. Stanley F. Reed, who represents a court still independent, still strong in the faith that there is a justice above governments which governments cannot coerce. That faith is no longer held in Thomas Mann's native country, nor in Serge Koussevitsky's. It continues in Lord Tweedsmuir's, from whence, indeed, we have it, though we shall continue to have it not without effort. President McConaughy of Wesleyan University, finally, represents a free university, in a world where they are fewer.

But free universities have since the Renaissance devoted their freedom to the humane letters of which Maitland Griggs has been a patron; and even more dramatically to that exploration of which Eugene Landis' work in blood circulation and Wendell Stanley's in the process of life itself are representative. Yet it is a freedom not wholly atomistic, not singular, centrifugal; but ordered by those normative faiths for which the Rev. Morgan Noyes stands in the church and the Rev. Endicott Peabody in the school. Dramatically have the Yale awards this year shown us a darkening world; but indicated what strength remains on the side of truth and light.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 23 1938

YALE THRONG PAYS TWEEDSMUIR HONOR

Governor General of Canada, Walt Disney and 9 Others Recent Degrees

499 IN GRADUATE SCHOOL

Dr. Angell Praises Seymour to Alumni—Graduates Gave $238,367 in Year

By W. A. MACDONALD
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 22.—Here in old New England, where formal education in America began, Yale University heard Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor General of Canada, suggest that Canadians and Americans be less self-conscious about their friendship and awarded honorary degrees to him, to Walt Disney and to nine others at the 237th commencement exercises.

President Seymour conferred 1105 degrees in course, including 499 today in the graduate and professional schools at the exercises this morning in Woolsey Hall. Three thousand persons fanned themselves with programs while the degrees were awarded and Professor William Lyon Phelps spoke of Mr. Disney as the man who "labored like a mountain and brought forth a mouse, with which he conquered the whole world."

Of Lord Tweedsmuir Dr. Phelps said: "He may have received greater honors from his own country, but we give him all we have and with it our hearts."

Mr. Disney was first of the eleven to get his degree and Lord Tweedsmuir was the last, but the applause for them exceeded that given to the others, who included Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Bos[illegible]ony Orchestra; Thomas Mann, the German author; Stanley F. Reed, '06, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court; Eugene M. Landis, Associate Professor of Medicine, University of Pennsylvania; the Rev. Morgan Phelps Noyes, '14, pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Montclair; Maitland F. Griggs, '96, benefactor of education in the fine arts; Wendell M. Stanley, associate member of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research at Princeton University; James L. McConaughy, '09, president of Wesleyan University, and Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School.

June 23/38 NEW YORK HERALD TRIBU

Mickey Mouse's Creator Receives Degree at Yale

Associated Press photo
Walt Disney, center, motion picture producer, who received the honorary degree of Master of Arts yesterday at New Haven

---

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Doctor of Music

PROFESSOR PHELPS—Born and married in Russia, a graduate of the Moscow Conservatory, professor at the Conservatory of Moscow and soloist (on the double bass) of the Imperial Treater orchestra. In 1910 he founded and directed until 1918 the Koussevitzky Symphony Orchestra, making extensive tours in the empire, including three journeys on the Volga River. In 1920 he founded the Concerts Koussevitzky in Paris and also conducted orcehstras in England, Germany, France and Spain. In 1909 he founded "Musical Editions" for Russian composers. He was twice decorated by the Czar and is an officer of the Legion of Honor in France. Since September, 1924, he has been the conductor of the Bostony Symphony Orchestra. He has composed a concerto for double bass and orchestra, has written many pieces for double bass and piano, and has made many transcriptions from classical works.

He was foreordained to be a conductor, for he has to an exceptionally highly developed degree the instinct for orchestral direction and is a subtle judge of tone color. With these native powers and with profound knowledge he has also zeal, enthusiasm, passion; he has the spirit that giveth life to music. He also has always encouraged American compositions by performing new works, often of an experimental kind.

The two concerts annually made by his orchestra in this very hall are to standing room only, and when a gentleman from Boston happened to remark in the presence of President Angell that NewHaven (being in the provinces) got only two concerts, whereas Boston got sixty, Dr. Angell replied that whereas two concerts were all that were necessary for New Haven culture, to maintain the same high level in Boston required sixty.

We take pride in welcoming Dr. Koussevitzky into the Yale Brotherhood.

RESIDENT SEYMOUR — Virtuoso whether upon your favorite instrument or as symphonic leader, creative artist who combines a hundred sounds to produce the harmony of the crystal spheres, inspired interpreter serving the people who would fain listen to great music and understand it, Yale confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Music and admits you to all its rights and privileges.

Yale Bestows Honorary M. A. On Walt Disney

19

Reed, Thomas Mann, Lord Tweedsmuir Get Degrees With 499 Professional and Graduate Students

Special to the Herald Tribune

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 22.—A mild-mannered man who has made milloins of persons laugh, shared honors today at Yale University's 237th commencement with ten distinguished men, including a statesman, one of the country's leading jurists, two physicians, an internationally renowned novelist and two educators. Yale gave Walt Disney, creator of "Snow White" and "Mickey Mouse," an honorary degree of Master of Arts. In doing so, the university edged out Harvard by one day. Mr. Disney will be honored similarly tomorrow in Cambridge, Mass.

Yale was unstinting in its praise of Mr. Disney, commending him, his genius, his art and his accomplishments. Professor William Lyon Phelps, the university orator, presented Disney for the degree.

"He has proved that popular proverbs can be paradoxical," said Professor Phelps in his citation, "for he has labored like a mountain and brought forth a mouse. With this mouse he has conquered the world."

The university awarded degrees to 499 graduate and professional studdents, bringing to 1,105 the total of degrees conferred in the last two days. Yesterday 606 seniors of Yale College, the Sheffield Scientific School and the Yale School of Engineering received their degrees.

In addition to Mr. Disney, the following received honorary degrees at today's exercises:

Master of Science

DR. EUGENE MARKLEY LANDIS, associate professor of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania.

Doctor of Divinity

THE REV. MORGAN PHELPS NOYES, '14, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, Montclair, N. J.

Doctor of Music

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

JUN 25 1938

* * *

Paul Althouse, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will sing Siegmund in "Die Walkuere" at the Hollywood Bowl on July 12th and 13th. On August 4th and 11th he will appear with the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire [illegible]stival, first in Beethoven's Ninth and then in a Wagnerian program. Toscha Seidel, violinist, will be soloist at the Hollywood Bowl on August 19th.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUN 23 1938

Yale Men Hear Tweedsmuir on Border Policy

Governor General Advises Canadians and Americans to Work Together Instead of Analyzing Each Other

Special to the Herald Tribune

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 22.—Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor General of Canada, addressing 1,500 Yale men at the alumni luncheon, which closed the university's 237th commencement today, warned against being "too self-conscious" about Canadian-American friendship.

"Don't let's be always pulling up the plants," he said, "to see how the roots are getting on."

Guests at the luncheon included the eleven men who received honorary degrees at this morning's commencement exercises in Woolsey Hall, among whom were Walt Disney, creator of "Snow White" and "Mickey Mouse"; Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an[illegible] Thomas Mann, novelist and winner of the Nobel Prize [illegible]ure.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1938.

Times Wide World

RECIPIENTS OF HONORARY DEGREES WITH OFFICIALS AT YALE EXERCISES

In the front row are Maitland Fuller Griggs, Thomas Mann, Governor Wilbur Cross, Dr. Charles Seymour, president of Yale; Governor General Lord Tweedsmuir of Canada and the Rev. Endicott Peabody, headmaster of Groton School. In the middle row are Professor William Lyon Phelps, Wendell M. Stanley, Walter E. Disney and Serge Koussevitzky. In the rear row are Associate Justice Stanley F. Reed of the United States Supreme Court, Eugene Markley Landis, James Lukens McConaughy, and the Rev. Morgan Phelps Noyes.

80

WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUN 24 1938

Tall Tower Topics

BY THE MAN IN THE TOWER

Honorary Degrees.... Some of the citations accompanying the presentation of honorary degrees the other day at Yale were descriptive and to the point. Walter Elias Disney's was: "Creator of a new language of art, who has brought the joy of deep laughter to millions and touching the heart of humanity without distinction of race, has served as ambassador of international good-will, Yale confers upon you the degree of Master of Arts." Serge Koussevitzky: "Virtuoso, whether upon your favorite instrument or as a symphonic leader, creative artist who combines a hundred sounds to produce the harmony of the crystal spheres, inspired interpreter serving the people who would fain listen to great music and understand it.. Yale confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Music." Lord Tweedsmuir: "Brilliant historian and biographer, beloved novelist, distinguished public servant, versatile as 'Richard Hannay,' reliable as 'Mr. Standfast,' representative of a commonwealth of the free peoples whom we trust, your steps have been set in 'The Path of the King.'. Yale proudly confers upon you the degree of Doctor of Laws." As a nice and spontaneous gesture the entire gathering rose en masse when Lord Tweedsmuir's citation was read.

MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

JUN 25 1938

Berkshire Acoustics Certified by Expert

Stockbridge, Mass.—Acoustic properties of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky will be heard August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, should be "entirely satisfactory" says Professor Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Professor Fay was retained by the Festival and his conclusions are based on several tests made during the progress of construction.

Music lovers who filled the huge tent last year at the time of the dramatic contest between the orchestra and the elements will find comfort in this portion of Professor Fay's report:

"Finally the noise made by a fairly heavy shower of rain on the roof was not sufficient to cause any annoyance even in the empty auditorium."

Professor Fay's complete report follows:

"I am glad to report that the tests we made at Tanglewood on June 11 indicate that the acoustic properties of the Auditorium should be entirely satisfactory.

"It is, of course, impossible to predict exactly from measurements made in an empty auditorium how music will sound in each part of the building when an audience is present, but it is quite possible to find from such tests any major faults.

"Briefly, our measurements showed the following facts.

"When a steady sound was generated on any part of the stage, the intensity received was remarkably uniform over the entire seating space. With an audience present, it is certain that there will be a reduction in intensity in the seats more distant from the stage, but there is no reason to believe that this reduction will be excessive."

DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT & LEADER

JUN 26 1938

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

... conductor of the Boston Symphony this week was given the honorary degree of Doctor of Music by Yale university. Mr. Koussevitzky is now in the Berkshires inspecting the new music shed at Tanglefoot which will house the Berkshire Symphonic festival this fall. The building is almost completed and the work of landscaping has begun.

NEWS

Columbia, Pa

JUN 25 1938

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music-lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the continent.

* * *

FRANCE has just named the 18 centuries old Roman theater at Orange the official open air extension of the Opera, national theater of France. With the naming of Jacques Rouche, director of the Paris Opera, as director of the Orange theater, and the decision to use the actors of the French State Theater for a mass performance of "Carmen," France has linked her modern art with the Roman art from which it sprang.

The theater of Orange, constructed under Emperor Adrian about 120 A. D., is one of the world's biggest open-air theatres.

This year's season will be especially dedicated to the French composer, George Bizet, but will also include Shakespearean plays and the works of Wagner, Beethoven, Mozart, Verdi, Racine, Berlioz and Schubert.

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUN 25 1938

KOUSSEVITZKY AWARDED DEGREE

Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and conductor of the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, was awarded the degree of doctor of music at the recent commencement at Yale University. And Prof. William Lyon Phelps, University orator, paid him many fine tributes, one outstanding one being, "He has always encouraged American compositions by performing new works, often of an experimental kind." A number of Hudsonians had the pleasure of meeting and talking with Dr. Koussevitzky at a tea held a few weeks ago at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, Mass.

---

les' Vital Film

The Arts in Boston

Arthur Fiedler
Who Will Conduct His 500th Pop Concert in Symphony Hall on the Evening of July 1

B. Globe June /38

MUSIC
SYMPHONY HALL
Guest Conductor at Pops

Charles O'Connell, whose versatility has brought him prominence as author of books about music, as conductor, orchestrator and expert in the making of records, was guest leader at the Pops Concert in Symphony Hall last night. The occasion was also Holy Cross Night, which lent especial interest to Mr. O'Connell's appearance, since he is a graduate of that college.

In a program that kept well apart from conventionality and that gave due consideration to lighter musical fare, Mr. O'Connell brought evident pleasure to an audience that filled the hall. Beginning with the march from Wagner's "Tannhaeuser," he traversed a suite of dances from various hands and periods, a transcription of the Cordoba from Albeniz' "Iberia," Rimsky-Korsakov's "Russian Easter" Overture, an amusing compilation of "Americana," likewise by several composers; Debussy's "Clair de Lune" in an orchestral version by Lucien Cailliet (whose work figured elsewhere on the program), pieces by Arcadelt-McDonald and Sibelius, and finished with the "Entrance of the Gods Into Valhalla" from Wagner's "The Rhinegold."

Particularly in compositions of zest and brilliance, Mr. O'Connell gave a good account of his powers, though such delicate music as "Clair de Lune" testified to his regard for a gossamer instrumental texture. His tempi in the "Russian Easter" Overture, however, rather emphasized the episodic nature of the music, and his pace and orchestral balance during the closing Wagner excerpt might have been better adjusted.

Joseph Paul Smith, baritone, was soloist with the orchestra in the familiar Prologue from "Pagliacci," and in a setting of The Lord's Prayer. Soloist, conductor, and players were all resoundingly applauded.

C. W. D.

Esplanade Music to Begin July 7

The tenth anniversary series of free concerts on the Esplanade by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians will begin July 7 and continue nightly except Saturdays for almost a month, Arthur Fiedler, the conductor, announced today.

Financial difficulties had delayed definite word that the concerts would continue, but Mr. Fiedler said he was sure the public response would be sufficient to carry the expenses. Nightly attendance has at times reached 20,000.

Contributions may be sent to Esplanade Concerts Fund, Merchants National Bank, 28 State street, Boston.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

June 26/38

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the continent.

CAMERAS TO CLICK AT POPS TONIGHT

Flash Bulbs to Be Allowed Part of Evening

The click of camera shutters will add to the percussion section of the Pops orchestra at Symphony Hall tonight, where a camera night will be staged. The use of flash bulbs will be allowed during part of the performance and spotlights will brighten the orchestra. Merchandise orders will award those who make the best pictures of the evening.

With this camera night attraction will be a print exhibition in the first balcony foyer. The exhibition will include selected prints submitted to the New England Camera Club council by its member clubs.

These include: The Boston Camera Club, Camera Association of the Boston City Club, Camera Club of Providence Engineering Society, Camera Club of Rhode Island, the Camera Pictorialists of Providence, Colby Camera Club, Greater Lynn Camera Club, Hartford County Camera Club, Lawrence Camera Club, Lowell Camera Club, Nashua Camera Club, North Shore Camera Club of Beverly and the Norton Camera Club.

Others are: Photo-Pictorialists of Springfield, Woonsocket Camera Club, Worcester Photo Club, Amherst Camera Club, 35mm. Club of Boston, the "Y" Camera Club of Boston, the Boston Young Men's Christian Union Camera Club and the Somerville Camera Club.

One candidate for speed honors was the news photographer who used a 35mm. camera for special work. In his car he carried a changing bag and vacuum bottles with developer and hypo. His assignment finished, he loaded the film into a tank in the changing bag, poured in the developer, set the tank on the car floor and drove for the office. When the time was up, out went the developer and in went the hypo. The film would be cleared when he got back. A quick rinse and a print from a wet negative finished the job.

POPS CANDID .... Camera Carriers
Flash Bulb "shots" will be the winners in competition.
6 BULBS 60c
Fine Grain Developing, Printing and Enlarging will assure protection.
9 CAMERA SERVICE-MEN
Photographers Themselves,
Serve You Here. PLAN THE NIGHT'S EVENT AT CLAUS GELOTTE
CAMERA EXCHANGE
HARVARD SQ., CAMB., Mass.
Opp. Widener Lib.—KIR. 2366
Repairs--Photo Supplies--Delivery

BERKSHIRE COUNTY PHOTOGRAPHIC EXHIBIT

Co-Feature with Berkshire Symphonic Festival

The first annual Berkshire county photographic exhibition is being arranged by the Berkshire Museum Camera Club of Pittsfield as a co-feature with the Berkshire Symphonci Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, where Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will be a major attraction.

Nineteen of the country's top-flight salon exhibitors have accepted the general invitation to submit prints. The exhibition dates will be July 31 to Aug. 14, with July 16 as the final day on which entries will be received. The salon will take place at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

One interesting section will include a collection of photographs from Edwin Hale Lincoln, civil war veteran whose photography of botanical subjects won him the gold medal of the American Orchid Society.

It was mentioned in this column last week that the Pop Concert of Friday evening would be the 500th to be directed by Arthur Fiedler. The following night Mr. Fiedler will conclude his ninth season as director of these concerts which, more than ever before, have lived up to what their abbreviated name implies. In point of attendance this season has been the largest yet, and it has been possible to make this statement, if memory does not err, regarding each preceding one under Mr. Fiedler's leadership.

Success in any line depends upon several factors. To Mr. Fiedler's abilities as conductor and his ingratiating personality have been added a remarkable knack for building the kind of programmes that the somewhat oddly assorted Pops audience, collectively, likes to hear. The increasingly numerous and varied "special nights" have also helped considerably.

To mark his 500th concert Mr. Fiedler might have stepped outside the usual routine of his programmes and put on some work of large dimensions, some piece or pieces out of the ordinary. Instead, he chose the more modest and wiser course and assembled a list which is typical of the rank and file. It may be studied in detail elsewhere on this page.

This season of Pop Concerts has been unusually rich in guest-conductors. The last of these invited directors is to be Charles O'Connell of Philadelphia, one of the assistant conductors of the Philadelphia Orchestra and musical director of the Victor Talking Machine Company, with which both the Boston Symphony proper and the Pops orchestra have made so productive and profitable an alliance.

Last season's Pop Concerts saw the first Afro-American night with special music and soloists. Its second will occur tomorrow evening with William Sexton, tenor, Ina Baithwaite, pianist and Mildred Davenport, dancer, as the assisting artists.

PROGRAMME OF THE POPS CONCERTS

MONDAY EVENING

Wedding March from "The Golden Cock" ... Rimsky-Korsakov
Largo from "Xerxes" ... Handel
"By the Pool at the Third Rosses" ... Burleigh
William Sexton, Tenor
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" ... Saint-Saens
Afro-American Symphony (Two Movements) ... William Grant Still
Bolero ... Ravel
Piano Solo:
  Pinwheels ... Palmgren
  Rhapsody ... Palmgren
  Polonaise in E ... Liszt
Ina Braithwaite
Two Negro Spirituals:
  "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen"
  "Deep River" ... Burleigh
Dance Interpretations by Mildred Davenport
Banjo ... Gottschalk
"Strike Up the Band" ... Gershwin

TUESDAY EVENING

Charles O'Connell, Guest Conductor
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser" ... Wagner
Suite of Dances:
  Gigue ... Bach
  Passacaglia ... Purcell
  Minuet ... Beethoven
  Waltz ... Tchaikovsky
  Rhumba ... McDonald
Cordoba, from the Suite "Iberia" ... Albeniz
Songs with Orchestra:
  Prologue from "Pagliacci" ... Leoncavello
  The Lord's Prayer ... Malotte
  Soloist: Joseph Paul Smith, Baritone
Overture, "The Russian Easter" ... Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria ... Arcadelt-McDonald
Americana:
  Turkey in the Straw ... Guion
  Fugato on a Well-known Theme—McBride
  Pop Goes the Weasel
  Cake-Walk ... McDonald
"Clair de Lune" ... Debussy
Romance in D flat ... Sibelius
Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla, from "Das Rheingold" ... Wagner

WEDNESDAY EVENING

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Overture to "Ruslan and Ludmilla" Glinka
Irish Tune from County Derry
Arranged by Grainger
Soviet Iron Works ... Mossolov
Farandole from "L'Arlesienne" ... Bizet
Waltz, "Wine, Woman and Song" ... Strauss
The Animals' Carnival, Grand Zoological Fantasia ... Saint-Saens
  Pianos: Jesus Maria Sanroma-Leo Litvin
Third Movement from the "Pathetic" Symphony No. 6 ... Tchaikovsky
"Old King Cole" ... Baynton-Power
March of the Little Lead Soldiers ... Pierne
Trepak, Russian Dance, from the Ballet "Nutcracker" ... Tchaikovsky

THURSDAY EVENING

Old Timers' Night
March, "Our Director" ... Bigelow
Gems from Gilbert and Sullivan
Arranged by Seredy
Mosquito Parade ... Whitney
Songs of the Old Days
A Hunt in the Black Forest, Descriptive Episode ... Voelker
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn ... Valerius-Kremser
Song Fest, Medley
March, Only One Vienna ... Schrammel
Stein Song ... Bullard
Old-Time Favorites

FRIDAY EVENING

Arthur Fiedler's 500th Pop Concert
March, "Schechenyi Indulo" ... Fahrbach
Overture to "Oberon" ... Weber
Country Gardens ... Grainger
"Waltz of the Flowers" from the Ballet "Nutcracker" ... Tchaikovsky
Austrian Peasant Dances ... Schonherr
Meditation from "Thais" ... Massenet
  Violin solo: Julius Theodorowicz
Marche Slave ... Tchaikovsky
"Estudiantina," Waltzes ... Waldteufel
"The Toy Trumpet" ... Scott
Russian Sailors' Dance, from "Red Poppy" ... Gliere

SATURDAY EVENING

Closing Night
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever" Sousa
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" ... Mozart
Barcarolle from "The Tales of Hoffmann" ... Offenbach
Suite, "Per Gynt" ... Grieg
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" ... Paisiello
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" ... Wagner
Rhapsody in Blue ... Gershwin
  Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Sixth Hungarian Dance ... Brahms
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango ... Gade
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn ... Valerius-Kremser

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 25 1938

Expert Says Festival Shed Acoustics "Satisfactory"

Professor Fay of MIT Finds Heavy Rain Not Sufficient To Cause Annoyance

Acoustic properties of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky will be heard August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, should be "entirely satisfactory" says Professor Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Professor Fay was retained by the Festival and his conclusions are based on several tests made during the process of construction.

Music lovers who filled the huge tent last year at the time of the dramatic contest between the orchestra and the elements will find comfort in this portion of Professor Fay's report:

No Annoyance From Rain

"Finally the noise made by a fairly heavy shower of rain on the roof was not sufficient to cause annoyance even in the empty auditorium."

Professof Fay's complete report follows:

"I am glad to report that the tests we made at Tanglewood June 11 indicate that the acoustic properties of the Auditorium should be entirely satisfactory.

"It is, of course, impossible to predict exactly from measurements made in an empty auditorium how music will sound in each part of the building when an audience is present, but it is quite possible to find from such tests any major faults.

"Briefly, our measurements showed the following facts.

Intensity Uniform

"When a steady sound was generated on any part of the stage, the intensity received was remarkably uniform over the entire seating space. With an audience present, it is certain that there will be a reduction in intensity in the seats more distant from the stage, but there is no reason to believe that this reduction will be excessive.

"The sound of an impact on the stage was observed to decrease very uniformly to inaudibility. This fact indicates freedom from serious echoes and dead spots,—at least for that part of the pitch range in which such effects are noticeable. There was, however, a slight echo but only of extremely sharp impacts, in the outer seating region. This echo appeared to come from the outer portion of the colonnade roof. If this effect should prove to be annoying when an audience is present, and I do not believe it will, it can be readily reduced.

"Finally, the noise made by a fairly heavy shower of rain on the roof was not sufficient to cause any annoyance even in the empty auditorium.

Reflector, Success

"It appears that the tilted reflecting surface in front of the back wall is serving the double purpose for which it was designed: To prevent the focussing of reflected sound onto the stage and front seats, and to reinforce the sound in the region of the back seats.

'In view of these results, I have no further recommendations to suggest. I await with great interest the reaction test: The reaction of the audience and musicians to the first performance."

High School Girl Writes Essay on Berkshire Festival

Miss Katharine F. Nutt, salutatorian in a class of 251 at the diamond jubilee commencement of Wakefield High School, this month, spoke on "The Berkshire Festival, Our Heritage of Music." Miss Nutt asserted that New England ideals have created a force which is strong enough to make dreams become realities. She traced development of the Festival from its inception in 1934, weaving in Tanglewood and Hawthorne's association with the Festival's permanent home. She concluded: "The Berkshire Festival is as American as the soil itself."

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES - PICAYUNE

JUN 26 1938

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the continent.

France has just named the 18-centuries-old Roman theater at Orange the official open air extension of the Opera, national theater of France. With the naming of Jacques Rouche, director of the Paris Opera, as director of the Orange theater, and the decision to use the actors of the French State theater for a mass performance of "Carmen," France has linked her modern art with the Roman art from which it sprang.

The theater of Orange, constructed under Emperor Adrian about 120 A. D., is one of the world's biggest open-air theaters.

This year's season will be especially dedicated to the French composer, George Bizet, but will also include Shakespearean plays and the works of Wagner, Beethoven, Mozart, Verdi, Racine, Berlioz and Schubert.

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES

JUN 28 1938

Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has reported that acoustics of the new orchestra shed at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., will be satisfactory for the forthcoming Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, will present the festival program on Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUN 26 1938

Not Enough Musicians For Europe's Orchestra

BOSTON, Mass., June 25 (UP).—Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

NEW CASTLE, IND.
COURIER - TIMES

JUN 27 1938

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony orchestra conductor, says that during his recent trip to Europe he found that music-lovers there enjoy hearing American orchestras play the great European classics.

Koussevitzky says that though Europe has many accomplished musicians, there are not enough to meet the heavy demands of the numerous orchestras on the continent.

* * *

France has just named the 18 centuries old Roman theatre at Orange the official open air extension of the Opera, national theatre of France. With the naming of Jacques Roche, director of the Paris Opera, as director of the Orange theatre, and the decision to use the actors of the French State theatre for a mass performance of "Carmen," France has linked her modern art with the Roman art from which it sprang.

The theatre of Orange, constructed under Emperor Adrian about 120 A. D., is one of the world's biggest open-air theatres.

This year's season will be especially dedicated to the French composer, George Bizet, but will also include Shakespearean plays and the works of Wagner, Beethoven, Mozart, Verdi, Racine, Berlioz and Schubert.

* * *

France has finally decided to establish her own national musical center, which, it is hoped, will one day draw more world visitors than Salzburg or Bayreuth. After weeks of discussion of the ban placed on Salzburg by some of the world's most famous musicians, Versailles has been chosen as the French musical center.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUN 26 1938

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

NO LESS than three violin concertos have been released this month by Victor: Fritz Kreisler's arrangement of the first movement of Paganini's in D major, with the transcriber as soloist, accompanied by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy's direction; Schumann's in D minor, performed by Yehudi Menuhin with the assistance of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra with John Barbirolli conducting, and Prokofieff's second concerto in G minor, Op. 63, set forth by Jascha Heifetz, aided by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Sergei Koussevitzky. The last named work is by all odds the most important of the three.

Koussevitzky's Modest Request

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, would like to make a European tour with the orchestra.

"Give me $100,000," he said, "and I shall take them next season."

This newspaper has fought hard for the preservation of the arts during the dark days of the depression. Unless we can save for civilization the refining influences, the people will find themselves crushed by a materialistic order.

Nevertheless, in times like these, we can think of far better uses for $100,000, publicly donated, than the spending of it in Europe for the artistic entertainment of people who jauntily send us semi-annual messages telling us they have no intention of paying what they owe us.

With many talented artists living on short rations in this country, it is better that the European musical junket be postponed.

B. Trans. June 25/38

DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

JUN 30 1938

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will gi[illegible]id camera concert soon at one of its "pops" on the Esplanade. One number will be the "Thunder and Lightning" Overture which allows for pyrotechical effects in the dark.

-Pop Concerts

81

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Symphony Hall Pop Concerts Entering Seventh Week

The Pop concerts at Symphony Hall, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, are entering the seventh week of the season. The concert tomorrow night has been taken over entirely by Boston University; all other nights of the week are open to the public.

Wednesday there will be an all-Italian program, including soloists in opera arias. The season's Request Program will be repeated on Thursday. Friday will bring the annual Children's Night. Two soloists—Eleanor Steber, soprano, and Esther Asher, pianist—and first performance of Paul White's new Suite, "Four Spokes from the Hub," are to be features of Saturday's concert.

Programs for the week follow:

Monday. Boston University Night. Not open to the public.

Tuesday. Marche Militaire, "Unfinished" Symphony, Second Movement, Schubert; Intermezzo from "Goyescas," Granados; Hora Staccato (Roumanian), Dinicu-Heifetz; Fantasia, "Carmen," Bizet; Eili, Eili, Arranged by Jacchia; solo trumpet, Roger Voisin; Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "The Incredible Flutist," a Dance Play, Piston; Hans Wiener and his dancers with orchestra.

Wednesday. Overture to "The Secret of Suzanne," Wolf-Ferrari; Prelude to "La Traviata," Verdi; Aria, "Una Furtiva Lagrima," from "L'Elisir d'Amore," Donizetti; tenor solo, Francesco Albanese; Fantasia, "Tosca," Puccini; Overture to "The Barber of Seville," Paisiello; Overture to "The Barber of Seville," Rossini; Ballet Music from "Aida," Verdi; Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome," Respighi; Aria of Musetta, from "La Boheme," Puccini; soprano, Alba Alessandrini; "Il Bacio," Waltz, Arditi.

Thursday. Request Program repeated. March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; Largo, from "Xerxes," Handel; Finlandia, Symphonic Poem, Sibelius; "The Animals' Carnival," Grand Zoological Fantasia, Saint-Saens, pianos: J. M. Sanroma-L. Litwin; Bolero, Ravel; Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin; J. M. Sanroma, soloist; Night and Day, Porter; Prayer of Thanksgiving (Old Dutch Hymn), Valerius-Kremser.

Friday. "Up the Street," march, Morse; "Toy" symphony, Haydn; "A Box of Tin Soldiers," Brenta; "The Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; Three German Dances, Mozart; Sandman's Song and Evening Prayer, from "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck; Finale, Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Churchill-Bodge; "Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn, Valerius-Kremser; Farandole from "L'Arlesienne," Bizet.

Saturday. Introduction to Act III, "Lohegrin," Wagner; Nocturne (first performance), Dorothea Dean; Scherzo, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; Aria from "La Forza del Destino," "Pace, pace, mio Dio," Verdi, soloist: Eleanor Steber, soprano; Four Spokes From the Hub (first performance), Paul White; Dances from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat," de Falla; Pianoforte Concerto No. 1 in F sharp minor, Rachmaninoff, soloist; Esther Asher; "Espana," waltzes, Waldteufel; Perpetuum Mobile, Strauss; Divertimento (finale), Ibert.

Prof. Taune H. Hannikainen, conductor of the Turku Symphony and the Helsinki Opera in Finland, will be guest conductor at the Pops in Symphony Hall, Monday, June 20. He will direct, midway in the evening, the Second Symphony by Sibelius. The rest of the program will be conducted by Paul Cherkassky. Prof. Hannikainen, who is a 'cellist as well, has come to the United States as guest of the Finnish American Delaware Tercentenary Committee, and will make appearances at various concerts commemorating the landing of the Finns in America in 1638.

B. Trans. June 24/38

O'Connell Guest Conductor at Pops

Charles O'Connell, guest conductor at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall last night, arranged a program containing considerable freshness and interest. The heart of it lay in two groups of pieces put together because of a common trait. One was a Suite of Dances, consisting of items, arranged and original, by Bach, Purcell, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Harl McDonald. The other, called "Americana," contained "Turkey in the Straw," McBride's Fugato, "Pop Goes the Weasel" and McDonald's "Cakewalk."

There were humor and virility in the gustily played American Suite, though Lucien Cailliet did not know when to stop in setting "Pop Goes the Weasel." The Dance Suite, containing excellent music, seemed arbitrarily assembled. Cailliet's additions to the simple Beethoven Minuet were too much for this attestant. Nor was Mr. O'Connell's arrangement of the subsequent "Cordoba" by Albeniz particularly apt. Much more welcome was his simpler presentation of the familiar air from Purcell's "Dido."

Partly because of the character of the transcriptions of the Messrs. Cailliet and O'Connell and partly perhaps because of the conductor's immediate wishes, the Pops Orchestra took on, particularly in the early part of the program, something of the peculiarly brilliant sonority associated with the Philadelphia Orchestra. The playing elsewhere, however, contained much that was routine or sloppy. But this may very likely be set down to tired nerves and muscles at the end of a long season of music-making and in the midst of daily recording sessions.

Among the other numbers on the program were Rimsky-Korsakov's "Russian Easter," Mr. O'Connell's setting of the Debussy "Clair de lune" and the "Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla" from "Das Rheingold." Joseph Paul Smith sang tastefully and musically, though in a voice that could not always compete successfully with the accompany-orchestra, the Prologue to "Pagliacci" and a setting of "The Lord's Prayer" by Malotte, who did not add to the majesty of the text. Nor did the setting itself or the subsequent added item seem to be in place at a Pop concert.

The performers were heartily applauded by the large audience, consisting of friends of Holy Cross, of which Mr. O'Connell himself is a graduate. M. S.

At Pops Tonight

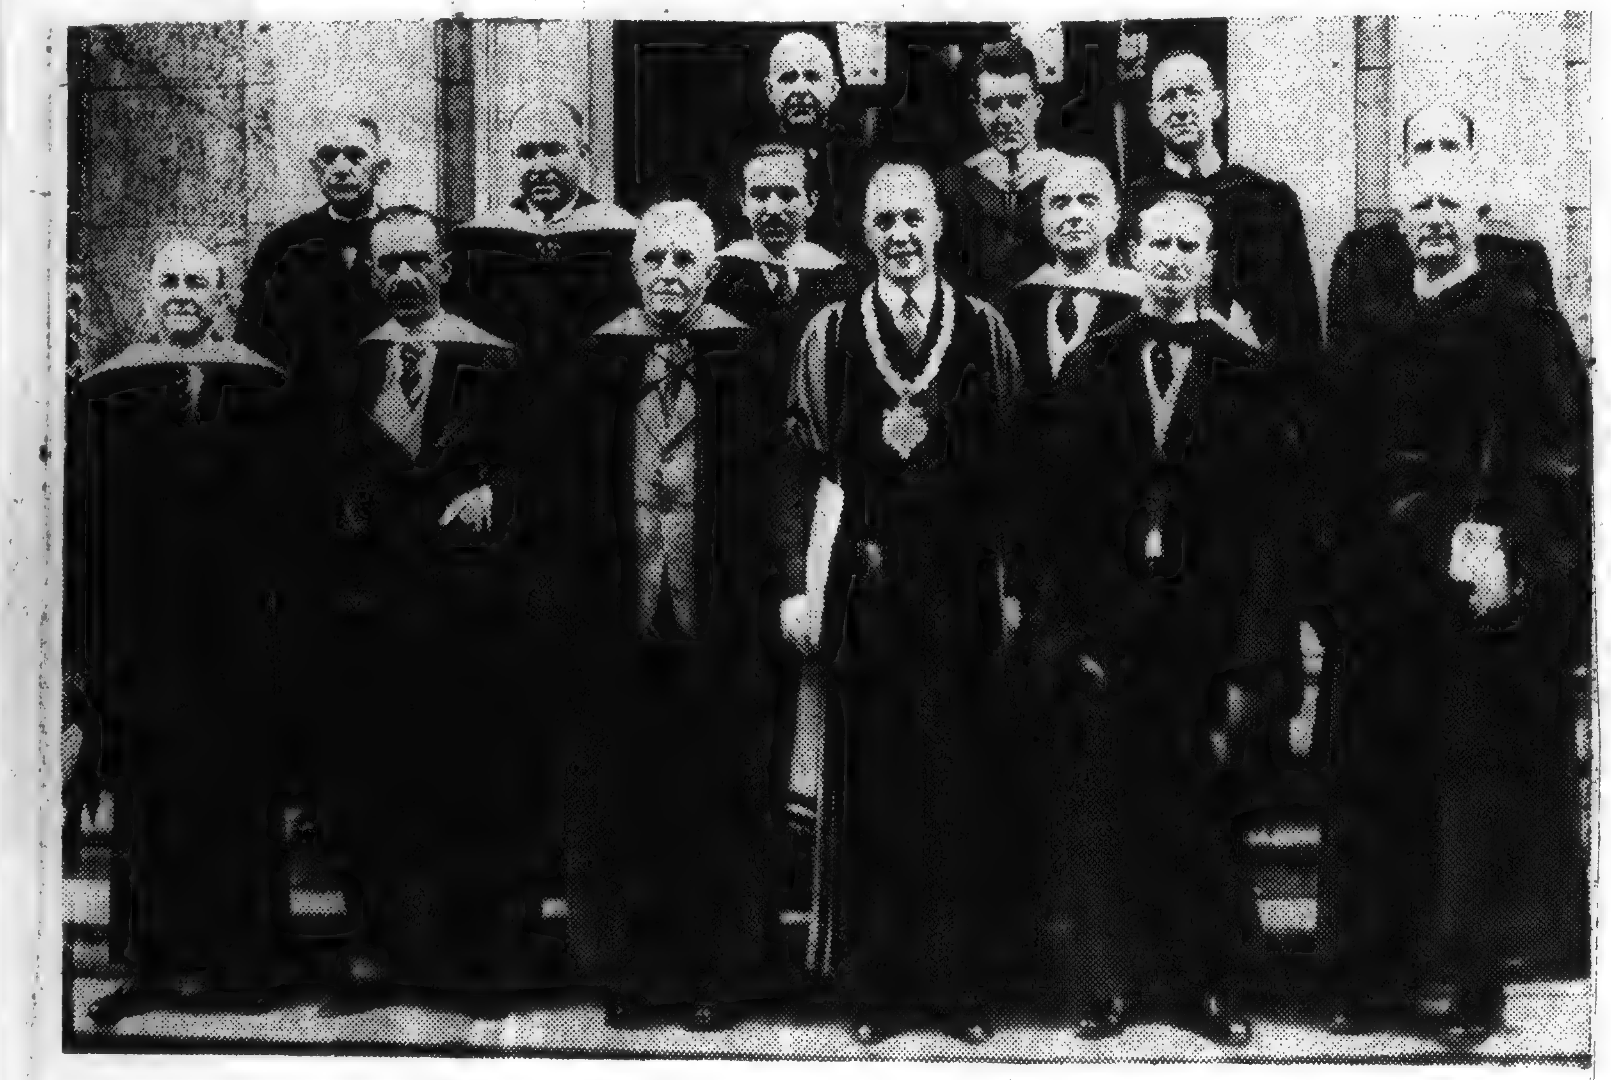
Arthur Fiedler will lead the Boston Pops Orchestra through the following program in Symphony Hall this evening:

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" ... Wagner
Overture to "Russian and Ludmilla" ... Glinka
Irish Tune from County Derry ... Arranged by Grainger
Soviet Iron Works ... Mossolov
Farandole from "L'Arlesienne" ... Bizet
Waltz, "Wine, Woman and Song" ... Strauss
The Animals' Carnival ... Saint-Saens
Pianos: Jesus Maria Sanroma-Leo Litwin
Third Movement from the "Pathetic" Symphony ... Tschaikowsky
Old King Cole ... Baynton-Power
March of the Little Lead Soldiers ... Pierne
Trepak, from the Ballet "Nutcracker" ... Tschaikowsky

82

DAYTON, O.
HERALD

JUN 24 1938



BIG NAMES FROM ALL FIELDS

NEW HAVEN, Conn.—Recipients of honorary degrees at Yale's commencement exercises are pictured grouped about Charles Seymour, the university president, on the steps of Woolsey Hall where they received their "sheepskins." Left to right in front are: Maitland Gribbs, novelist Thomas Mann, Governor W. L. Cross of Connecticut, President Seymour, Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada, and Rev. Endicott Peabody. Second row, left to right: Professor William Lyon Phelps, Wendell Stanley, Walt Disney, creator of Mickey Mouse; pianist Serge Koussevitsky, and the Rev. Morgan Noyes. In the rear, left to right, are: Justice Stanley Reed, Eugene Landis of the SEC and James McConaughy, president of Wesleyan.

BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

JUN 27 1938

ROME, GA.
NEWS-TRIBUNE

JUN 26 1938

COHOES, N. Y.
AMERICAN

JUN 24 1938

HOBOKEN, N. J.
JERSEY OBSERVER

JUN 27 1938

These papers ran picture like one above.

UNDER HUNTINGTON AVE.

B. Herald - June 29/38

The plans for the extension of the Huntington avenue subway are attractive. We have under construction a subway from Copley square to a point near the Mechanics Building. The act passed by the General Court and now accepted by the city council authorizes an extension beyond Symphony Hall, with an underpass at Massachusetts avenue. The plans call for a double-track underground way to a point beyond Gainsboro street, with stations at Mechanics Building and Symphony Hall. The motor car underpass would extend from Norway street also beyond Gainsboro, so that the latter street would be left entirely clear for traffic.

Thus, inbound motorists would enter the underpass about two blocks before reaching Massachusetts avenue, and leave at Norway street. The removal of the parking space in Huntington avenue, of the Boylston street tracks and of the present subway entrance at Arlington street would provide a wide, unobstructed thoroughfare all the way into the heart of the city. Outbound drivers would have the same facilities in reverse order, a smooth way, without car tracks, clear out beyond Gainsboro street.

What about its cost?

The subway now under construction costs $2,000,000, of which $1,250,000 is furnished by the United States and the balance is financed by the city in forty-five-year sinking fund bonds. That obligation is now in the tax rate. The total cost of the extension would be $4,000,000, and of the underpass $830,000. The subway charge would be met two-thirds by the federal treasury and one-third by the city, also, in the form of forty-five-year sinking fund bonds. For the underpass, the United States would furnish $500,000 and the city would issue $300,000 in ten-year serial bonds.

The act provides that the city shall build the subway and the Elevated shall lease it, paying a rental only when it has no deficit. The total cost of the whole work, from Copley square to Gainsboro street would be about $6,830,000, of which the city would pay a little more than a third, or $2,430,000. Altogether aside from the announcement that the new project would supply 4000 workers with wages for two years, and considering the matter from the financial viewpoint alone, it is not easy to see how we shall ever be able to get a long-wanted betterment on more favorable terms.

Week of Pops

B. Post - June 5/38

MUSIC AND MUSICIAN

Request Night at the Pops; Programs for the Week

Tonight will be the annual Request Night at the Pops in Symphony Hall and the last Sunday concert of the season. The proceeds will be devoted to the orchestra's pension fund.

Tomorrow will bring Old Timers' Night, usually one of the most popular of the year, in which the audience will be invited to lift their voices in favorite songs of the old days. Thursday will be the annual Tufts Night and Friday has been taken over by the Republican Club.

The soloist on Saturday will be Albion Metcalf, appearing in the Fantasia of Tchaikovsky for piano and orchestra, which is to have its first performance at the Pops.

Arthur Fiedler announces the following programs for the week:

Tonight, request program. March, "Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes, Strauss; Largo, from "Xerxes," Handel; "Finlandia," Symphonic Poem, Sibelius; The Animals' Carnival, Grand Zoological Fantasia, piano soloists: J. M. Sanroma and L. Litwin, Saint-Saens; Bolero, Ravel; "Rhapsody in Blue," soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Gershwin; "Night and Day," Porter; Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn, Valerius-Kremser; Encores: Tango, "Jealousy," Gade; The Toy Trumpet, Scott; Mosquito Dance, White; Pizzicati, from "Sylvia," Delibes.

Monday, Old Timers' Night. "La Sorella," March, Borel-Clerc; Overture to "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; "La Paloma" ("The Dove"), Yradier; Selection from "The Mikado," Sullivan; Waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Volstedt; "La Golondrina" ("The Swallow"), Mexican Folk Song (Arranged by Findlay); "Song Fest," Medley; "A Hunt in the Black Forest," Descriptive Episode, Voelker; "The Glow Worm," Lincke; Songs of the Old Days.

Tuesday, Triumphal March from "Aida," Verdi; Overture, "The Roman Carnival," Berlioz; "Molly on the Shore," Grainger; "Danse Macabre," Tone Poem, Saint-Saens; the I. B. M. Symphony, Giannini; Largo from "Xerxes," Handel; Invitation to the Dance, Weber-Berlioz; "Cagliostro," Waltzes, Strauss; La Comparsa (Cuban Carnival Procession), Lecuona-Gould— "Pomp and Circumstance," March, Elgar.

Wednesday. March, "Only One Vienna," Schrammel; Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; "The Troika" (From "The Seasons"), Tchaikovsky; Hungarian Dances, Brahms; Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or," Rimsky-Korsakov; Ballet Suite, Rameau-Mottl; Finale, Fourth Symphony; Tchaidkovsky; "New Vienna," Waltzes, Strauss; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner; Prelude in G minor, Rachmaninoff; To a Water Lily, MacDowell; Gypsy Dance from "Carmen," Bizet.

Thursday, Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overture to "The Bartered Bride," Smetana; Hora Staccato (Roumanish), Dinicu-Heifetz; Magic Fire Music (Finale of "Die Walkure"), Wagner; Bolero, Ravel; L. R. Lewis, '87, conducting: Intercollegiate Inklings, L. R. Lewis, '87; Tuftonia's Day, E. W. Hayes, '16; Class Song of 1938, horn solo by Willem Valkenier, W. A. Johnson, '38; That Mascot, P. B. Lewis, '18; Spell It Out, A. T. Williams, '19; "Princess Ida," Selection, Sullivan; "Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes, Strauss; "Wintergreen for President," Gershwin; Dear Alma Mater.

Friday. "Washington Post," March, Sousa; Overture to "Raymond," Thomas; Fugato on a Well-known Theme, McBride; Ballet Suite from "Aida," Verdi; "Where the Citrons Bloom," Waltzes, Strauss; Judex, Gounod; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Siszt; Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Churchill-Bodge; "Night and Day," Porter; American Fantasy, Herbert.

Saturday. Military Polonaise, Chopin-Glazounov; Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "At the mill," Gillet- Cailliet; "In War Time," from the Indian Suite, MacDowell; Fantasia for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 56, soloist: Albion Metcalf, Tchaikovsky; Marche Slave, Tchaikovsky; New England Federation of Men's Glee Clubs, Donald Gammons, conductor, "The Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner.

Complete Pops Programs for Week

B. Globe - June 5/38

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra will begin the seventh week of Pop concerts on Monday, "Boston University Night," for which the entire house has been taken. Among other features of the week will be the repetition of the ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," on Tuesday, "Italian Night" on Wednesday, repetition of the "Request" program on Thursday and the annual "New England Conservatory Night" on Saturday. The programs, including that for this evening, follow in detail:

Monday Evening

Boston University Night
(Entire house taken)

Tuesday Evening

Marche Militaire .... Schubert
"Unfinished" Symphony, Second Movement .... Schuber
Intermezzo from "Goyescas" .... Granado
Hora Staccato (Rumanian) .. Dinicu-Heifet
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bize
Eili, Eili .... Arranged by Jacchi
Solo trumpet: Roger Voisin
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicola
"The Incredible Flutist," a Dance Play .... Pisto
Hans Wiener and his dancers with orchestra

Wednesday Evening

Overture to "The Secret of Suzanne" Wolf-Ferrar
Prelude to "La Traviata" .... Verd
Aria, "Una Furtiva Lagrima," from "L'Elisir d'Amore" .... Donizett
Tenor solo: Francesco Albanese
Fantasia, "Tosca" .... Puccin
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Paisiell
Overture to "The Barber of Seville" Rossin
Ballet Music from "Aida" .... Verd
Symphonic Poem, "Pines of Rome" Respigh
Aria of Musetta from "La Boheme" Puccini
Soprano: Alba Alessandrini
"Il Bacio," Waltz .... Arditi

Thursday Evening

Request Program

March, "Pomp and Circumstance" .. Elgar
By the Beautiful Blue Danube ..... Strauss
Largo, from "Xerxes" .... Handel
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem .... Sibelius
The Animals' Carnival ...... Saint-Saens
Pianos: J. M. Sanroma, L. Litwin
Bolero .... Ravel
Rhapsody in Blue .... Gershwin
J. M. Sanroma
Night and Day .... Porter
Prayer of Thanksgiving (Old Dutch Hymn) .... Valerius-Kremser

Friday Evening

"Up the Street," March .... Morse
"Toy" Symphony .... Haydn
A Box of Tin Soldiers .... Brenta
The Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
Three German Dances .... Mozart
Sandman's Song and Evening Prayer, from "Hansel and Gretel" . Humperdinck
Finale, Fourth Symphony .. Tschaikowsky
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill-Bodge
Prayer of Thanksgiving (Old Dutch Hymn) .... Valerius-Kremser
Farandole from "L'Arlesienne" .... Bizet

Saturday Evening

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Nocturne .... Dorothea Dean
(First performance)
Scherzo, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" Mendelssohn
Aria from "La Forza del Destino" .. Verdi
Soloist: Eleanor Steber, soprano
Four Spokes from the Hub .... Paul White
(First performance)
Dances from the Ballet "The Three-Cornered Hat" .... de Falla
Pianoforte Concerto No. 1 in F-sharp minor .... Rachmaninoff
Soloist: Esther Asher
"Espana," Waltzes .... Waldteufel
Perpetuum Mobile .... Strauss
Divertimento (Finale)

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

JUL 2 - 1938

PROKOFIEFF

The Prokofieff concerto is not so far a cry from tradition as the reputation of this dynamic contemporary composer might lead one to expect. Altho there are the shifts in tonality characteristic of the moderns, the concerto is, in both structure and emotional content, allied to its famous predecessors in this form.

We have heard few modern works for which we felt so immediate and confident an enthusiasm. Our times have produced many sophisticated craftsmen in music, but the technical devices in this concerto grow out of basic musical ideas of great force and originality. The second movement—doubtless one of the most beautiful slow movements in modern music—will probably draw the greatest response from listeners.

Jascha Heifetz gives an impeccable performance with the solid assistance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky. This is definitely an album not to be missed.

LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

JUN 29 1938

Music and The Drama

KOUSSEVITZKY VIEWS TANGLEWOOD

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is one of the finest orchestra conductors in the world. He can play the double bass. In rehearsal he frequently sings to convey a point to his musicians. It developed last week that he can whistle, too, writes Moses Smith in the Boston Transcript.

He gave his whistling performance on Tuesday at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, where on six evenings in August an audience of 5000 will gather nightly to hear the third annual series of concerts by the Boston Symphonic Orchestra and its leader.

A new music shed has risen on the estate in the past few months, and on his way to New Haven to receive an honorary degree at Yale University's Commencement on Wednesday, Dr. Koussevitzky dropped in to take a look at it. He wanted to test the acoustics.

After a brief stroll from the caretaker's house through the fine formal gardens of Tanglewood we proceeded to the Shed. which is on a field at some distance from the site of last year's "Tent." Dr. Koussevitzky expressed himself as happy over the change because it will enable the audience, seated in the Shed, to command one of the most picturesque views afforded at Tanglewood. For the Shed, it should be recalled, is an enormous fan-shaped structure open at the sides. It combines, that is, most of the advantages of an outdoor theater with solid protection against the hazards of New England's mid-Summer squalls.

"I would like," began Dr. Kousevtizky, and then he hesitated. He lapsed into the more convenient French, because he could not think of the word "whistle." "Je vais siffler." It was arranged that I listen at several stations in the Shed, while he repeated a tune from the stage. The "tune," repeated each time, of course, with the same intensity—otherwise the experiment would have been quite worthless—was something that I was unable to recognize. It was a fragment which, if crooned, might have been a snatch of a lullaby or expression of endearment. Perhaps it was something recaptured from the conductor's early Russian days.

The experiment, so far as I was concerned, was quite satisfactory. From points far and near the stage, in the middle and at the sides of the Shed, the tones seemed to have equal intensity. Then it was the conductor's turn to listen, and mine to whistle. He covered several hundred yards, frequently calling for my whistled phrase, before he broke out enthusiastically. Clearly this was no fake or perfunctory expression of satisfaction.

To make assurance doubly sure, Dr. Koussevitzky asked me and two others who had joined us—John Burk of Symphony Hall and George Edman, secretary of the Festival Committee—to take our several stations while he sang. The tune was a lovely one—again I did not recognize it—and I could tell from the quality of his voice that he was singing softly, dropping several times to hardly a murmur. The "reception" was remarkable, the only serious interference coming from the stuttering motor of a truck nearby, the driver of which had not been warned about our experiments. The other two observers, indeed, could scarcely believe that Dr. Koussevitzky had been employing a quiet tone.

We had been in the shed for some time and it was only on coming out that we were reminded that it was a very hot day. Under the roof of the almost completed shed the temperature was surprisingly moderate. The men at work were engaged in finishing operations—as far as the shed will be finished this year. We went into the conductor's room—complete with shower—and the tuning-room for the musicians. It was clear that the establishment was ample.

THE BOSTON GLOBE—WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, 1938

THE ONCE OVER

By H. I. Phillips

Commencement at Yale

Hark! The praises ring at Yale—
Cheers for Eli rise and die;
Tweedsmuir, Disney get degrees,
Donald Duck, he gets his "Y."

There in stately Woolsey Hall
Come the great to Eli's house;
Koussevitzky, Maitland Griggs,
Justice Reed . . . and Mickey Mouse

See the candidates parade,
Honored highly by the Blue:
Wendell Stanley, Dr. Noyes,
Peabody . . . and Dopey, too!

NEWS

JUL 1 - 1938

The World of Music

New York, July 1—The "Under the Stars" summer season of music is getting fully under way throughout the country, with indications that more and better outdoor concerts will be given this year than ever before.

The Lewisohn Stadium concerts, a pioneer in the field, opened in New York last week under Jose Iturbi, directing the Philharmonic-Symphony players, with Albert Spalding, violinist, as soloist. It was the 21st season for the organization.

But for the threatening weather, the audience of nearly 10,000 which attended would have been greater. The music was magnificent but the atmosphere preserved that air of informality which adds so much to the charm of summer performances. Mayor La Guardia, who made a brief speech, typified that spirit when he remarked that one of the chief jobs of a mayor is to throw out the first ball at a baseball opening; so he threw out the first baton by formally presenting the conductor's stick to Iturbi.

In Chicago, Ravinia park, which grew from a suburban railway line's entertainment park into a famous music center, opened the third season of its revived life with an impressive roster of artists. The conductors are to be Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Symphony; Artur Rodzinski of the Cleveland Symphony; Eugene Goossens of the Cincinnati Symphony, and Willem Van Hoogstraten.

More than 260 guarantors subscribed $41,000 to insure the Chicago season.

Arthur Fiedler, founder of Boston's Esplanade concerts, is making preparations to celebrate their tenth anniversary on July 7.

Establishing the concerts experimentally in 1929, amid "cheerful predictions' 'of their failure, Fiedler has seen them attain high favor with truly cosmopolitan audiences.

Strangers are impressed by the quiet attentiveness of the outdoor audiences, large groups comprising many children, their parents, youthful sweethearts, elderly music lovers—representing many nationalities.

The annual series of concerts are free to the public. The musicians are from the Boston Symphony orchestra. The concerts are made possible by hundreds of moderate-sized contributions without recourse to an endowment or financial "angels."

Three-fourths of the gifts arrive by mail. The other fourth is deposited by listeners in "fund boxes" on the grounds.

The acoustic shell is situated on the Esplanade beside the Charles river.

Extensive tours are planned for the Philadelphia orchestra during the 1938-39 season.

As in the past, the orchestra will present 10 subscription concerts in New York and five each in Washington and Baltimore, but several longer trips are planned during the regular season.

In November the more than 100 musicians will travel westward for concerts at Harrisburg, Pa., Chicago, Fort Wayne, Ind., Toledo, O., and Pittsburg.

A December tour will take the orchestra south to the Carolinas for engagements at Columbia, Durham, Greensboro, Winston-Salem and Ashville. It will be followed in January by a swing further south for concerts at Savannah, Ga., Jacksonville, Fla., two in New Orleans, Atlanta, and Knoxville, Tenn.

The orchestra will make a late winter tour to New England for engagements at Springfield and Worcester, Mass.

Return engagements at Hartford, Ct., and Northampton, Mass., also are scheduled and the orchestra will make a special appearance in New York city.

Soloists and special attractions scheduled for the 1938-39 season include Pianists Walter Gieseking, Boris Golschmann, Hortense Monath and Sergei Rachmaninoff; Violinists Erica Morini, Jascha Heifetz, Joseph Szigeti and Efrem Zimbalist; 'Cellist Emanuel Feuermann; Vocalists Marian Anderson, Lauritz Melchior and Friedrich Schorr, the Coolidge String quartet, the Balle Russe de Monte Carlo and the Philadelphia Ballet.

Eugene Ormandy will conduct during the major portion of the season, sharing the podium with three guest conductors—Georges Enesco, Vladimir Golschmann and Saul Caston—and possibly Leopold Stokowski, for whom a group of concerts have been reserved should he be able to come here late in the season.

* * *

The Francin Boott prize of $100, awarded annually at Harvard university for the best composition in concerted vocal music, has been presented this year to Everett B. Helm of Minneapolis, Minn., a fourth-year student in the Harvard graduate school of arts and sciences.

* * *

San Francisco critics hailed with relish the premiere there of an operatic burlesque, "Fernando del Nonsentsico," by Felix Borowski.

"The audience laughed easily and heartily and applauded vociferously throughout three acts of grand burlesque," the News reported. . . . "Its story has neither rime nor meaning nor any purpose than to give a good spoofing to antiquated operatic customs."

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

JUL 9 - 1938

Proof that after a decade of concerts on the Charles river esplanade in Boston the institution may be regarded as permanent is seen in the fact that the Boston Symphony orchestra has taken over the management. And there is further assurance in the news that a $200,000 granite shell, in memory of Edward Hatch, is to be built in time for next season's concerts. To Arthur Fiedler, who organized the concerts and has aroused support for them each year since the start, belongs much of the credit for an interesting development.

VISITORS ATTENDING

While not generally known the Esplanade concerts are becoming quite an attraction for visitors from other States. In Boston overnight and looking for something to do, Bostonians are directing them to the musical treat beside the Charles River. Naturally, all who come to town have heard of the Symphony Orchestra. And having listened to a Fiedler concert they are amazed the crowds are not bigger. There must be thousands of Bostonians who have never "bothered" to attend. Too bad they are missing such entertainment that thrills vacation guests.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1938

B. Post

FINE IDEA

Arthur Fiedler, with 50 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will stage three concerts for children at the Esplanade, beginning next Friday. The programmes are designed for juvenile ears, and are an innovation in musical circles. It has been noticed that children are particularly attracted to the regular evening concerts. The action is staging morning concerts for their benefit is considerate and appropriate.

CONCERTS ON ESPLANADE AGAIN

Arthur Fiedler to Lead Orchestra on the Charlesbank

B. Post — July 7/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

ON THURSDAY evening, less than a week after the final Pop Concert of the season, the concerts on the Charles River Esplanade will begin their 10th season under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, and will continue through the remainder of the month. This year, for the first time, these concerts will be officially recognized by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and, in a sense, sponsored by that organization. However, since there is no revenue directly from them the need for outside subscriptions by no means disappears under the new arrangement.

What with the regular season, the Pops, the Berkshire Festival in August, and the Esplanade concerts, those members of the orchestra who play in all four series are gainfully employed for most of the year; while the members of many another American symphony orchestra are on their own for six months or more.

It took Mr. Fiedler two years to convince his first backers that orchestral concerts in the open would really go. But go they did, as everyone knows and, incidentally, they put Mr. Fiedler on the musical map, making his succession to the leadership of the Pop Concerts almost a matter of course.

When Mr. Fiedler found that his vast audience could take it, he ventured into the more serious side of symphonic music. In 1935 he accomplished all of the symphonies of Beethoven, with the necessary omission of the choral Finale of the Ninth. The four symphonies of Brahms followed the next season, and last year it was the turn of the last three symphonies of Tchaikovsky.

This season two important anniversaries will, in measure, condition the programmes at the Esplanade. One of these is the 125th anniversary of the birth of Wagner, which fell on May 25, last, and the other is the tercentenary of the founding in Delaware of the coloney known as New Sweden, now very much in the public eye. Music by Wagner abounds in the programme of the opening night, printed elsewhere on this page, and since the Finns were also represented in New Sweden, music by Sibelius, as well as that by a Swedish composer or two, will be in evidence later. It is said that Mr. Fiedler is angling for the services of a Finnish conductor, now in this country, to appear as guest. That the music of Wagner should be accompanied on the first programme by the initial movement of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony is, of course, appropriate enough.

• • • •

Vacationing, and otherwise occupied in Euorpe this summer, Fabien Sevitzky will be unable to direct the New Hampshire Seacoast Festival, for the success of which he has hitherto been so largely responsible. His place will be taken by Norman Leavitt. Last year Mr. Leavitt, who is concert singer as well as conductor, was the solo baritone in the performance of Mozart's Requiem. Weather permitting, the Festival will again be held on the Opera Field of the Hobson estate at Little Boar's Head, and the dates are July 30 and 31.

Those participating in the Sunday programme will be the New Hampshire State Symphony Orchestra, the United New Hampshire Chorus and Royal Dadmun, baritone. Earl Clay will conduct the orchestra. On Saturday Ted Shawn and his men dancers will appear in characteristic programme.

• • • •

Announcement has been received of another New England Festival, that of the Worcester County Musical Association, its 79th, to be held in the Worcester Municipal Auditorium from Oct. 3 to 8. Again Albert Stoessel will be the director. The programmes of Oct. 3, 4, 6, and 7 will be choral and orchestral, that of Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 5, designed for young people, orchestral only. The Festival will conclude with a stage presentation of "Rigoletto." Among the soloists of the week will be Harold Bauer, pianist, and Bidu Sayao, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Five other members of that organization, Joseph Antoine, Charles Hackett, Donald Dickson, John Gurney and Lucille Browning, will take part in the performance of Verdi's opera.

Most of the items on Mr. Stoessel's programmes will be familiar to the visiting Bostonians. The principal exceptions to this generalization are three works for chorus and orchestra: Nathaniel Dett's "The Ordering of Moses," Vaughan-Williams' "Toward the Unknown Region" and Rachmaninoff's choral symphony, "The Bells," after Edgar Allen Poe. The last-named item should prove of particular interest, though it has never achieved any wide celebrity. Indeed, hearing it for the first time, Lawrence Gilman of the New York Herald-Tribune remarked, in effect, that Mr. Rachmaninoff was an excellent pianist!

• • • •

ESPLANADE CONCERTS

THURSDAY, JULY 7, at 8:30 p. m.

Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg from "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica," First movement, Allegro con brio .... Beethoven
Largo from "Xerxes" .... Handel
Overture to "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Dreams, a study for "Tristan and Isolde" Wagner
Violin solo: Gaston Elcus
Prize Song from "The Mastersingers of Nuremburg" (arranged by Wilhemj) Wagner
The Ride of the Valkyries from "Die Walkure" .... Wagner

FIRDAY, JULY 8, at 8:30 p. m.

Military March .... Schubert
Symphony in B minor "Unfinished," First movement, Allegro Moderato .... Schubert
Irish Tune from County Derry .... Grainger
Symphonic Poem, "Danse Macabre" Saint-Saens
By the Beautiful Blue Danube, Waltzes Strauss
Ballet Music from "Faust" ...... Gounod
Valse—Dance of Phryne—Bacchanale
"Spring" (for string orchestra) ...... Grieg
Russian Sailors' Dance, from "Red Poppy" Gliere

83

Feeding 15,000

B. Her. Jly /38

A multitude of music lovers are delighted that the 10th season of Esplanade concerts has begun. They provide the one opportunity in New England for enjoying at close quarters a first-rate symphony orchestra without cost. The throngs attending furnish proof of the wide appreciation of the privilege. They are hungry and thirsty for exactly what is offered them. Many are not circumstanced to buy tickets for themselves, as is obvious to those who scan the crowd. Others there are, however, who have the means to attend all the concerts of the year in the best seats.

There is nothing exclusive about the performances and the charm of the out-of-doors adds to the delight of those who listen. Many cannot forget the evening when the orchestra had played the Magic Fire from Wagner's Valkyrie and then nature itself furnished an encore by a magnificent storm of lightning without thunder, something no opera house could offer.

The programs are a rare blend of great music with that which, without claim to such characterization, is likable. Those who revel in the offerings on the Esplanade are coming to the opinion that Arthur Fiedler is on the way to being a great conductor.

Esplanade Concerts Will Feature Wagner

In connection with the celebration of the 10th anniversary of the Esplanade concerts, which Arthur Fiedler plans to open on July 7, the popular conductor announced last night his programmes would give prominence to the music of Richard Wagner.

In 1935, Mr. Fiedler first tried giving the Esplanade concert programmes a special emphasis on one composer. That was a Beethoven year. All nine of Beethoven's symphonies were played, only the vocal parts at the end of the ninth being omitted. The four symphonies of Brahms were introduced in 1936, and last year the last three and greatest of Tchaikovsky's six symphonies were added. With concentration on Wagner this summer, Esplanade concert listeners will have completed a review of four of the most notable composers in history.

For the maintenance of these free concerts, all members of the public, who can possibly do so, are invited to send contributions to the Esplanade Concerts Fund, in care of the trust department of the Merchants National Bank, 28 State street.

ESPLANADE CONCERTS

To the Editor of the Post:

Sir—The great out-of-doors provides the best-known source of sustenance and vigor for both plant and human life, with some few conspicuous exceptions in both kingdoms. It was the out-of-doors idea that brought out the Esplanade concert series under the impetus of Arthur Fiedler. In the beginning, fears such as rank rowdyism, vagely scattered music and insufficient support were rampant. But the fears have scattered and the concerts are still intact. Evidently the fruits of this experiment, and others, have been so satisfactory that a leading economist, speaking at a religious conference recently, said religion must come out-of-doors. The Esplanade concert series was sown out-of-doors and has reaped the lasting attention of multitudes of music lovers.

MIRIAM H. CRAMER.
Cambridge, July 18.

AN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, FRIDAY, JULY 1, 1938

84

Rehearsing and Advising

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

John B. Sanromá

Arthur Fiedler, Conductor

Upper — Showing Players What Is Wanted: Private Talk With One of Them

Fiedler Prepares to Direct His 500th Concert at 'Pops'

To most people, conducting one's 500th program of such an institution as the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pop Concerts would deserve at the very least a small red circle on the calendar of a career.

To Arthur Fiedler, who achieves the distinction tonight, it will merely be the next-to-the-last concert of the 53rd season, and as such doesn't even warrant a special program. The fact of the matter is that making excellent Pops programs has long since become a high art with Mr. Fiedler. He can balance Grieg against Gershwin, MacDowell against McBride, Bach against Boyce, Schubert against Shostakovitch, or Ravel against Romberg with the nicety of a chemist and his scales.

So it is not strange that sheer numerical achievement looks small, compared with other implications of tomorrow's concert. A relentless researcher at Symphony Hall has compiled an array of statistics which makes a corporation treasurer's report look almost naïve. For instance—

Mr. Fiedler has led the Pops with very few breaks for nine seasons. His absence for a concert or two has always meant a fall-off at the box-office.

He has conducted more music of every type—classical, semi-classical, popular, jazz—than any other Pops conductor.

Innovations

He was virtually the innovator of performing complete concerti, entire symphonies, ballet music with ballet dancers, besides introducing such popular occasions as Afro-American Night and Old-Timers' Night, at which the tentacular candelabra of Symphony Hall tremble gaily to such old favorites as "A Bicycle Built for Two," "Sweet Adeline," "Keep the Home Fires Burning" and "Smiles," sung by the audience.

Mr. Fiedler's Pops recordings of Johann Strauss's waltzes are said to be one of the biggest record sellers to be issued recently and at a time and in a world supposedly delirious with swing. But to descend to the earthier modes of statistics:

Under Mr. Fiedler, 23 complete concerti for orchestra and one to four pianos, along with complete symphonies by Beethoven, Boyce, Franck, Gianini, Haydn, Prokofieff, Schubert, and Tchaikovsky, have been presented. There have also been performances of single movements.

An "incomplete summary" offered by the same researcher lists 74 marches (including Elgar's "Pomp and Circumstance" No. 5), 76 overtures, 10 complete symphonies, 72 suites, 12 operatic fantasias, 33 musical comedy selections, 26 complete piano concertos, 44 waltzes (including 15 by Johann Strauss, two by Joseph, two by Richard and six by Waldteufel), and 306 miscellaneous compositions, not to mention 255 different encores. The number of repetitions—taking "The Toy Trumpet" or "Snow White" as ready examples—is fairly staggering. The very briefest and most peremptory random list of composers embraces such names as Wagner, de Falla, Enesco, Wood, Rameau, Ibert, Respighi, Holst, Taylor, Sullivan, Krenek, Handel and Weber besides those already mentioned.

Small wonder that other events, such as the oncoming Esplanade Concerts, preoccupy Mr. Fiedler against too much excitement over so slight a thing as a 500th performance. Besides his other services to the Pops and to Boston, he has commissioned works like Walter Piston's first ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," performed recently by Hans Wiener and his Company; Paul White's "Four Spokes From the Hub" and "Swing Stuff," by Robert McBride, of Vermont, orchestrated from his piano lampoon. Last year, Mr. Fiedler introduced Mr. McBride's "Fugato on a Well Known Theme," an ingenious bit of satire, still a favorite laugh-getter this year.

Keeping Players at Home

These are the Pops in their 53rd season. What of their beginning?

The "Promenade Concerts" were started under the regime of Wilhelm Gericke, with the enthusiastic support of Maj. Henry L. Higginson, to give the players a longer working year, and to keep them together in summer. The orchestra, founded in 1881, suffered frequently because good players strayed off in search of summer employment and never came back. Gericke's idea was to integrate the players and to build an esprit de corps.

"You have a fine body of musicians," he is said to have told Major Higginson, "but they are not yet an orchestra."

There were no refreshments at the first concerts but the idea was soon introduced; the chairs on the floor came out and the tables came in. The name was changed to Popular Concerts and then to "Pops," anticipating perhaps the electric sign which now blinks above Symphony Hall.

The Pops bear a tradition built by many fine musicians and fine conductors—Adamowski, Strube, Maguarre, Zach, Casella—but none has wielded the baton for so long as Arthur Fiedler. At a time when the theater business is munching disconsolately on crusts, the Pops are eating cake—with icing. George E. Judd, the manager of Symphony Hall affairs, remarked the other day that business has never been better.

So his 500th performance arrives and Mr. Fiedler remains to all outward appearances unruffled.

Asked what he intended to do about it, he looked up from a score and replied tersely, "Nothing."

What his friends may have in mind is another—and as yet an unanswered—question.

ESPLANADE CONCERTS

When Arthur Fiedler and his colleagues of the Boston Symphony orchestra began their open air Esplanade concerts nine years ago, the venture seemed hopeless. The uncertainties of the weather, the lack of seats and an auditorium, the absence of an admission charge, the possibility of disturbances, and the novelty of al fresco symphony playing seemed to foretell a hard struggle for survival. Considerable effort has been necessary, but the night concerts are now an established feature of the Boston summer. The reputation of the performances has spread throughout the country, partly on account of the large number of students from a distance in our summer schools. The series which began last night, with a large crowd listening decorously, will probably be the most successful of all. And it is hoped that listeners will be more liberal than heretofore. The average contribution has been extremely small.

Other large cities, too, have discovered that open air summer music is what the community wants. Towns and small cities likewise have adopted the custom. It is an outgrowth here in Boston of the innovation which began with Pop concerts in Music Hall. In many places, playing by well selected groups has replaced concerts which used to be given with gusto by the local brass bands.

Our European cousins have been enjoying symphony music outdoors for many years, and probably the practice is so well established now in the United States that it will continue indefinitely. Certainly it has such a soothing, civilizing influence that Boston can hardly afford to let it lapse.

HUGE AUDIENCE ON ESPLANADE

Magnificent Concert Features Wagner's Music

The biggest of first night crowds banked the greensward in a solid mass for the opening last night of the 10th anniversary season of the Esplanade concerts, with a bright moon riding high and a fine sailing breeze out of the east to make a perfect summer occasion.

A programme featuring the music of Richard Wagner, and announcement that the entire season of Esplanade concerts this year would continue to feature his works marked recognition of the 125th anniversary of the great composer's birth, brought response of full rounds of applause from an appreciative audience.

During the night several important announcements were made for Boston music lovers. First, that the management of the Esplanade concerts, which Conductor Arthur Fiedler and his company of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians have made one of the outstanding successes of the music world in America, has been taken over by the Symphony Orchestra's organization.

Second, announcement was made that the services of Conductor Fiedler and the orchestra have reached a point of public appreciation which has warranted the State in making an initial, small appropriation towards support of the concerts. And third, that the present acoustic shell is to be replaced next year, and may be ready for next summer's concerts, by a $200,000 permanent stone structure, 50 per cent larger than now, with suitable accommodations for the musicians.

THE CHARLES RIVER BASIN

The efforts of Joseph Lee to stimulate interest in a wider use of the Charles River Basin, particularly in the matter of encouraging the building of small sailboats, is commendable. The basin has never fulfilled expectations. This beautiful expanse of water is one of the prime attractions of the city.

But, there seem to be difficulties in the way of making it a great water playground. The chief obstacle is the development of the automobile, which lures persons out of the city on week-ends. With the beaches so easy of access and the fondness of the people of Boston and the suburbs for the salt water, the lack of interest in the basin is partly explained.

Some years ago, before the development of the Basin, rowing was a major sport in and around Boston. There were a dozen or more rowing clubs with eight-oared shell crews, pairs and single scullers. Some great scullers were developed here, national champions among them. Large crowds turned out for the regattas and the star oarsmen were popular figures.

But aside from the college crews this activity is at an end. Interest in rowing is at a low ebb and it is doubtful if it can be revived.

Mr. Lee is particularly interested in sailing. There has been some activity in the line of small boats principally due to the enthusiastic members of the Frostbite fleet and the sailing dinghy fleet of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Mr. Lee's suggestion that the Metropolitan District Commission either purchase small sailing boats or provide the materials so that schoolboys may build their own is of rather doubtful value. While it may be in line with certain government activities it hardly seems quite fair to pay in whole or in part for sailboats for an admittedly small number of people. If 500 young men should take advantage of such an offer that would be a very small proportion of the population. As for canoeing, such a sport would for safety's sake need waters more quiet than in the Basin.

There is also some danger in the handling of sailboats by inexperienced persons.

The chief attraction of the Basin is the Esplanade. This gives great pleasure to a very large number of persons. There may be ways in which the pleasure can be added to. The Esplanade concerts are an example of what can be done. They draw, not any small select group, but thousands of people.

Better bathing facilities could be provided. Perhaps a large open air tearoom could be subsidized and made popular. Sunday afternoon band concerts would be an attraction. The concert shell might be utilized for theatrical performances. Shows like the old time Punch and Judy affairs could be arranged for children.

These things would help to popularize the Basin.

Fiedler Is Honored At 500th Concert

B. Globe July 2/38

Arthur Fiedler conducted his 500th Pop concert in Symphony Hall last night. The occasion was appropriately observed midway in the evening when Mr. Fiedler was surprised by performance of a brass fanfare especially composed by Prof. Walter Piston of Harvard, and at the end of the program when a huge wreath was borne upon the stage. In addition, "A 500 F" was spelled out in electric lights in front of the Symphony Hall organ pipes.

Incidentally Mr. Fiedler, who will bring the 53d season of the Pops to a close tonight, has had the longest term of any conductor in the history of the concerts. This is his ninth season. The conductor's father, formerly a member of the orchestra, was present last night.

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD

JUL 7 - 1938

Mrs. Archie Bray on Berkshire Committee

The annual Berkshire Festival of Music will be held during the first two weeks of August at Tanglewood, Mass. The association has announced that on the two weekends included in the festival period Sergei Koussevitsky, famous Russian composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its appearance at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Archie W. Bray of Spring Avenue is local representative of the association and is a member of the advisory committee. She recently attended a luncheon of the association at Lenox, Mass., along with Mrs. William C. Johnson, Mrs. Robert Bussler and Mrs. Oslan Arnold.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 2 - 1938

The New Records

Heifetz and Prokofieff—Dvorak by the Roths—Singles—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

From a most unexpected source, a new work of startling quality has been brought to the attention of music lovers. It is the second violin concerto of Serge Prokofieff completed in 1935, and recorded for Victor by Jascha Heifetz and the Boston Orchestra under Serg~~e Koussev~~itzky. Not only is it a work of remarkable bite and vigor; it is also possessed of more genuine melodic distinction than any other score by this composer that comes to mind.

If this score is a true indication of Prokofieff's recent trend in composition, he has turned his back on the idiom developed by Stravinsky and himself, and returned to the fount of his fathers—the spring of folk-melody which sustained such of his great predecessors as Tschaikowsky and Glazounow. Even if he has written nothing else in this manner, it will remain an amazing contrast with the first violin concerto (recorded a year ago by Szigeti for Columbia)—probably the two most unlike concerti ever written for a solo instrument by one man.

As in the instance of the earlier work, Prokofieff has been ideally served by his interpreters. One can think of no violinist better equipped to recreate its blended romanticism and technical intricacies than Heifetz, who has done no finer phonographic job than this one. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra also play in a way to gladden any composer's heart. As proof of the quality of this album, it may be said that the recording alone would justify its place in any collection, even were the music less worthy.

Dvorak by the Roths.

It is an interesting example of the pointless distinctions between various musical forms that a dozen persons know Dvorak's "New World" symphony for each one that is familiar with his "American" quartet. And that despite the fact that the quartet is no more "difficult" to absorb, and has even better tunes than the symphony. Those who doubt the truth of this may confirm it by a hearing of the new version from Columbia played by the Roths.

One could hardly find more convincing support for such an argument because the Roth performance is just about the best they have put on records. Perhaps because they share the background of Dvorak (and this work is far more Slavic, of course, than it is American) the playing is rich in genuine spirit, and splendidly sensitive to the particularly warm and human emotion of Dvorak. Moreover, it is an excellent specimen of quartet playing as such, and a beautiful example of contemporary recording.

Singles.

Connoisseurs of band records have not had much to divert them recently, but Victor No. 4392 should be to their taste. It is a coupling of two Sousa marches "Stars and Stripes Forever" and "Semper Fidelis," played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler with paralyzing energy and breadth. The chronicle of records by this partnership has been a succession of increasing brilliant efforts, but this is quite the most vivid and electrifying record, as recording, that any studio has issued—at least, until next week.

For those purists who insist that their band records be band records, there is consolation in Columbia 366-M, which offers the band of His Majesty's Grenadier Guards in two marches. Curiously one of them is the Annapolis tradional "Anchors Aweigh," played with something less than the true Franklin Field fervor, and the other is Sousa's "Liberty Bell," one of the best of his lesser-known pieces. The recording is acceptable, but not more than that.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUL 3 - 1938

Berkshire Festival To Open Aug. 4

This year the Berkshire Festival will inaugurate its most important season on Aug. 4. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct. The Cecilia chorus and distinguished soloists will appear and Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will give four lectures in the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield. There will be numerous other cultural attractions.

In 1934 Henry Hadley inaugurated his conception of an American music festival. In 1936 Dr. Koussevitzky gave three concerts and six in 1937. Meanwhile in those four years the attendance had doubled from 2,500 to over 5,000 a concert. Stockbridge was giving the public what it wanted. Not even at Bayreuth was more enthusiasm shown than by the devotees of music who attended the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The works to be included in the program are Beethoven's Sixth and Ninth symphonies, Sibelius' First and Tchaikovsky's Sixth symphonies, a Brahms symphony to be selected, a Wagner program drawn from the operas "Walkuere" and "Siegfried," the Brahms-Haydn Variations, Sibelius' "Tapiola," Debussy's "La Mer," Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kitej," Respighi's "Pines of Rome," Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Rhapsody," Ravel's "Mother Goose," Copland's "Music for the Theater" and Walter Piston's "Concerto for Orchestra."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 1 - 1938

Music Critics To Descend on Berkshires for August Festival

Music critics, feature writers and magazine representatives are giving the Berkshires considerable attention this summer and their activities will come to a climax with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge in August.

The Festival office in Stockbridge reports that even more newspapers and magazines than last year will be represented at the concerts this summer. At least three Canadian newspapers will be represented. Time Magazine, Esquire, Cue, Harper's Bazaar, Musical America, Musical Courier, the New Yorker, Yankee, are among the magazines on the 1938 list so far. Practically all the metropolitan papers will send representatives as well as newspapers in Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Syracuse, Chicago, New York State, New Jersey and New England. It is believed the gathering will be the largest of the Fourth Estate in the history of the county. Last year more than 50 newspapers and magazines were represented at the concert. Western Union ran direct wires to Tanglewood.

Members' and subscribers' tickets will be mailed from the office in Stockbridge starting next week. Music lovers wishing to attend the concerts may communicate with their local chairmen or with the office in Stockbridge for complete information.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

JUL 2 - 1938

World's Leading Violinists

By ROBERT C. BAGAR.

Three of the world's greatest living violinists are currently prominent in things phonographic, thanks to the latest Victor releases. An unusual situation, especially so since all three play concerti, and under the same banner, it is, nevertheless, one in which gramophiles will revel.

Thus we have Fritz Kreisler playing, with the assistance of the Philadelphia Orchestra under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, his own arrangement of the first movement from Paganini's concerto in D major; Yehudi Menuhin, together with John Barbirolli and the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, offering the Schumann concerto in D minor, and Jascha Heifetz, plus the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Kou~~ssevitzky conducting~~, presenting the Prokofieff concerto in G minor, op. 63.

Of course, if the three celebrated artists had all been concerned with the same work and, to add to the oneness, aided by the same orchestra, there would have been a great temptation for the listener to pit the art of one against that of the other, all to the greater glory of comparison, despite the dictum to the effect they are odious. Hence, we have no measuring rod to go by, granted that only in such an arrangement of circumstances might one do his most infallible judging

---

TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD

JUL 6 - 1938

Mrs. Archie Bray, A Member of Committee

The annual Berkshire Festival of Music will be held during the first two weeks of August at Tanglewood, Mass. The association has announced that on the two weekends included in the festival period Sergei Koussevitzky, famous Russian composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its appearance at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Archie W. Bray of Spring Avenue is local representative of the association and is a member of the advisory committee. She recently attended a luncheon of the association at Lenox, Mass., along with Mrs. William C. Johnson, Mrs. Robert Bussler and Mrs. Orlan Arnold.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY NEWS

JUL 7 - 1938

Music Festival At Stockbridge

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open Aug. 4 at Stockbridge, Mass. The Boston Symphony, under Serge ~~Kousse~~vitzky, and soloists including Paul Althouse, Norman Cordon, Anna Kaskas and Jeannette Vreeland, will take part.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 2 - 1938

Many Music Critics And Feature Writers Coming To Music Fete

Music critics, feature writers and magazine representatives are giving the Berkshires considerable attention this summer and their activities will come to a climax with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglew[illegible] and Stockbridge in August.

The Festival office in Stockbridge reports that even more newspapers and magazines than last year will be represented at the concerts this summer. At least three Canadian newspapers will be represented. Time magazine, Esquire, Cue, Harper's Bazaar, the New Yorker, Yankee are among the magazines on the 1938 list so far. Practically all the metropolitan papers will send representatives as well as newspapers in Pittsburgh, Chicago, New York state, New Jersey and New England. It is believed the gathering will be the largest of the Fourth Estate in the history of the county. Last year more than 50 newspapers and magazines were represented at the concert. Western Union ran direct wires to Tanglewood.

Members' and subscribers' tickets will be mailed from the office in Stockbridge starting next week. Music lovers wishing to attend the concerts may communicate with their local chairmen or with the office in Stockbridge for complete information.

In North Berkshire in charge of subscriptions are Mrs. S. W. Potter for North Adams; Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett and Mrs. James E. Cashin for Adams and Charles L. Safford and Roderick Danaher for Williamstown.

POST

Bridgeport Conn

JUL 3 - 1938

More Recordings

Two other current recordings will go down in record history as important mile stones in the perpetuation of concert music!—a Victor recording of Redding's Jascha Heifetz playing the cherished new Prokoffief violin concerto with the Boston Symphony orchestra and a Gramaphone Shop release made by the American Record company here of "The Passion Music" of Heinrich Schuetz, great predecessor of Johann Sebastian Bach.

The Prokoffief concerto should be included in the library of every serious music lover for it stands probably as the most significant mature work of the composer whom many musicians and critics see today as the only living writer capable of filling the boots of the giants of the last generation just now passing from the contemporary scene—Claude Debussy, Richard Strauss, and Jan Sibelius.

Serge Prokoffief is 47 years old, a Rusisan, who, like many of his countrymen, has been something of an expatriate for many years. Of late, however, he has been reinstated by the Soviet and although his concerto was given its premiere in Madrid, it was written in 1935 in Russia.

Prokoffief long has been known as a composer with a limitless bag of tonal tricks which included an effective use of orchestral instruments as well as an ability to assume almost any known style of composition. The stages of his development have included a bare musical Cubism, a Stravinskyesque barbarism, evolving into a strict neo-classicism found in his "Classical symphony", deliberately imitating the spirit of the 18th century. All his work has been characterized by brilliant wit. His present stage of development began in about 1934 when he began to allow an emotional quality to creep into his brittle, clever music. His heroic style developed until in his violin concerto he has achieved a mellowness which bears close resemblance to the style of Brahms peppered with the type of harmonic and rhythmic modernisms which have characterized Prokoffief's styles during his early development.

The concerto is written, roughly at least, in the old classical style of the sonata form for the first movement with a sort of theme and variations, —ternary second movement and rondo third. The harmonic scheme is diatonic with chromatic aberrations and a free plan of modulation. The main themes are set squarely in a recognizable tonality.

Schuetz Passion Music

HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 7 - 1938

Paul Althouse, tenor, Norman Gordon, bass, and Beal Hober, soprano, will appear with the Boston symphony orchestra, and Serge Kouss~~evitsky at the~~ fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival next month.

Mr. Althouse, a native of Reading, Pa., is one of America's outstanding interpreters of Wagnerian heroic roles. He made his debut with the Metropolitan under Toscanini in the American premiere of "Boris Godounoff," and was the first American tenor to appear in leading opera roles at the Metropolitan without any previous foreign training. He appeared as soloist with the New York Philharmonic symphony orchestra under Toscanini in 1932 in a program of Wagnerian excerpts and in 1934 made his his "re-debut" at the Metropolitan in the role of Siegfmund, in which he will appear at the festival.

Mr. Gordon, bass-baritone, was born in Washington, D. C., and started his singing career as a choir boy in Charlotte, N. C. While at the University of North Carolina he began the serious study of music (and also played in a saxaphone quartet with Hal Kemp.) He studied for fou years at the Nashville Conservatory of Music and appeared with the San Carlo opera company in Chicago, the Chicago Grand Opera company, the Detroit civic opera, the St. Louis opera company, the Philadelphia Symphony, the Canadian grand opera association, and the Minneapolis opera, before being engaged by the Metropolitan opera in New York.

This completes the list of soloists who will participate in the inaugural of the Festival's new shed at "Tanglewood," the others being, Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan opera contralto,, and Jeannette Vreeland soprano. Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon will sing with the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston at the opening concert when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," will be performed. Miss Hober will sing August 11 in the all-Wagner program. That evening the orchestra will play the final scene of the first act from "Die Walgurie" and Act 3 of "Siegfried." In "Die Kalkurie" Miss Hober will sing the role of Sieglinde and Mr. Althouse the role of Siegmund. In "Siegfried" Mr. Cordon will be in the role of Wotan; Miss Kaskas, Erda; Mr. Althouse, Siegfried; and Miss Hober, "Bruennhilde."

On Monday evening Solon Robinson, of the Smith College Summer School of Music, will give a piano free and open to the public, and the recital in Sage Hall. The concert is program will be as follows:

Beethoven: Sonato, Op. 53.

Debussy: Reflets dans l'eau; La Serenade Interrompue; La terrasse des audiences au clair de lune; General Lavine (eccentric).

Ravel: Ondine.

Schumann: Etudes Symphoniques.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

JUL 6 - 1938

The fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival begins the first of August. The Festival has had a success from its very beginning, four years ago. Its first two seasons were under Henry Hadley, with composite orchestras, but its greatest achievements began two years ago with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky. In the same setting that Hawthorne wrote his beloved "Tanglewood Tales," the festival now has a permanent home. Concerts take place Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. The Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Hills may come to mean as much in the world's music as the festivals at Bayreuth and Salzburg.

The Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge is one of the earliest and most successful of the eastern Summer theatres.

A few miles north, at Pittsfield, the South Mountain Quartet draws its audiences, and to the south, the Gordon String Quartet gives distinguished programs twice a week. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give four of his delightful informal music talks, dealing largely with the program of the Festival at the Pittsfield Museum.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 3 - 1938

86

RECENT RECORDINGS

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

THREE of the six albums in Victor's current list contain concertos for violin and orchestra. It is both significant and refreshing to find not only that all these are domestic recordings, but two of them were made by the original soloists and orchestras within a week of their first American performances. Yehudi Menuhin and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony (Barbirolli) play the recovered Schumann D minor; Fritz Kreisler and the Philadelphia Orchestra (Ormandy), a rearranged movement from the Paganini in D, and Jascha Heifetz with the Boston Symphony (Koussevitzky), Prokofieff's Second in G minor (Op. 63).

As may be remembered, the unearthing of the Schumann concerto in the Berlin State Library was announced as with trumpets. A much publicized broadcast and its enthusiastic endorsement by Menuhin worked considerable injustice upon it. Had it started life normally and grown old in the respectability of a regular opus number, it would probably have achieved comfortable obscurity among Schumann's minor essays. Its recording, if undertaken, would have been one of those occasional acts of charity performed in off seasons.

Arriving after so much heralding and on the heels of last month's quite exceptional set of Schumann's Second symphony, played by the Philadelphia Orchestra, the concerto proves singularly disappointing. It brings to mind the crueler and, in the main, most unjustified generalities leveled at Schumann by his critics. When they are not ponderous and involved, the flank movements become obvious, and the rich adagio linking them is neither long enough nor strong enough to save the day. That both Menuhin and Barbirolli are in fine form and the orchestra records with grand fullness only increases the disappointment.

The combination of Kreisler and Paganini suggests many qualities, and their set contains them all. The concerto has been a favorite with virtuosi before this, but Kreisler, not content with the dry and thin orchestration of the original, has thickened the gravy considerably. One result is that much of the excruciatingly difficult stuff put down by Paganini under the illusion that none but he could play it and which usually has no more than a futile fascination, is given reason and a logical place in the whole.

That Kreisler has detached a single movement, the first, from the concerto does not mean that this is merely a fragment or that the four sides lack variety. As well as the pyrotechnics, there are lush airs, persuasively handled, and cleverly conceived cadenzas of the soloist's own. We cannot say for how many years Mr. Kreisler has been making records, but, as such things go, it is a long time. Recently he has done a few concertos and this is his first album with a domestic orchestra. It seems a pity that this great artist should have waited so long and that we could not have had these when, in his prime, he was content to furnish only ten-inch Viennese titbits for the gramophone.

It is not too much to say that the Prokofieff interested us more than the other two combined. At one time Prokofieff was wont to say that no composer could create after his thirty-fifth year. After the first violin concerto—recorded by Szigeti and the London Philharmonic under Sir Thomas Beecham in Columbia Album No. 244—and considering that Prokofieff was born in 1891, we were prepared for a let-down and were happily disappointed. This second concerto was completed nine years after the composer had crossed the line he had laid down, and in more than one way proves him to be an exception to his own rule.

Take it whichever way you prefer, Prokofieff is either of unbounded versatility or has experimented seriously along extraordinarily diversified lines. He has long since passed through his purely sensational or fantastic phase, but what he did in that manner has not been wasted. He finds some startling harmonic progressions here, but they are never strained, are always beautifully logical means to other ends. The same forcefulness is still evident, tempered, as compared with what he was doing fifteen years ago, of all brutality. In this case one can agree with the soloist's declaration that the concerto will rank with the five or six that may be called great.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 3 - 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL'S NEW SHED

TESTS made recently indicate that the acoustic properties of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood, Mass., where the ~~Boston Symph~~ony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky will be heard Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, should prove entirely satisfactory. This is the conclusion reached by Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who was retained by the festival authorities. Professor Fay not only is satisfied with the acoustics of the auditorium, but also stated in a recent report that "the noise made by a fairly heavy shower of rain on the roof was not sufficient to cause any annoyance."

"It is, of course, impossible to predict exactly from measurements made in an empty auditorium how music will sound in each part of the building when an audience is present, but it is quite possible to find from such tests any major faults," Professor Fay stated.

The measurements showed that when a sound was generated on any part of the stage the intensity received was "remarkably uniform over the entire seating capacity." Professor Fay is certain that with an audience present "there will be a reduction in intensity in the seats more distant from the stage, but there is no reason to believe that this reduction will be excessive."

The sound of an impact on the stage was found by Professor Fay to decrease uniformly to inaudibility. This fact, he declared, indicates freedom from serious echoes and dead spots—at least for that part of the pitch range in which such effects are noticeable. There was, however, a slight echo but only of extremely sharp impacts, in the outer seating region. This echo, he said, appeared to come from the outer portion of the colonnade roof.

"If this effect should prove to be annoying when an audience is present, and I do not believe it will, it can be reduced," he affirmed.

It is also Professor Fay's conviction that "the tilted reflecting surface in front of the back wall is serving the double purpose for which it was designed: to prevent the "focusing of reflected sound onto the stage and front seats and to reinforce the sound in the region of the back seats."

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES - UNION

JUL 8 - 1938

In Mayfair With

—Nancy Van Dyck—

Berkshire Festival

THE annual Berkshire Festival of Music will be held during the first two weeks of August at Tanglewood, Mass., according to an announcement received here.

On the two week-ends included in the festival period, Serge Koussevitsky, famous Russian ~~composer~~ and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony orchestra in its appearance at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Archie W. Bray, of Spring avenue, Troy, is a member of the advisory committee of the Festival association and this week attended a luncheon of the association held at the Lenox Country club at Lenox, at which time plans were completed for the event.

Mrs. William C. Johnson, Mrs. Robert Bussier and Mrs. Orlan Arnold, also of Troy, were other guests at the luncheon, accompanying Mrs. Bray.

SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

JUL 8 - 1938

SET PROGRAM FOR FESTIVAL

Complete List Of Soloists For Opening Concert In Berkshires

Paul Althouse, tenor, Norman Cordon, bass, and Beal Hober, soprano, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month.

This completes the list of soloists who will participate in the inaugural of the Festival's new shed at "Tanglewood," the others being, Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan opera contralto; Jeannette Vreeland, soprano. Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon will sing with the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston at the opening concert when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott", will be performed. Miss Hober will sing August 11 in the all-Wagner program. That evening the orchestra will play the final scene of the first act from "Die Walkurie" and Act 3 of "Siegfried." In "Die Walkurie," Miss Hober will sing the role of Sieglinde and Mr. Althouse the role of Siegmund. In "Siegfried" Mr. Cordon will be in the role of Wotan; Miss Kaskas, Erda; Mr. Althouse, Siegfried; and Miss Hober, "Bruennhilde".

The concerts will open Thursday evening, August 4 at 8:30 and will continue through Saturday at the same hour and Sunday at 3:30. There will then be an interval until the 11th when three more concerts will be presented that night and Saturday and Sunday afternoon the 14th.

The Festival office in Stockbridge announces that all details for the coming concerts are well in hand. Because of the erection of the huge music shed seating 5700 people, parking arrangements have been revised. The great acreage at "Tanglewood" provided ample parking space that will afford facilities even more advantageous than in 1937.

A Music Doctor Examines

B. Trans. July 2, 1938

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
Standing against the stage in the shed at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which he will conduct beginning Aug. 4.

Concert Plans

Arthur Fiedler and musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin their tenth season of concerts on the Charles River Esplanade next Thursday evening. The concerts are scheduled to be given each night except Saturdays for a little less than four weeks. None of the programs, which are expected to lean heavily on Wagner in this 125th anniversary of that composer's birth, had been received in time for inclusion in this place.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN - TELEGRAPH

JUL 3 - 1938

On the Records

By MICHAEL SHAW, JR.

THREE OF THE WORLD'S leading violin virtuosos create considerable news, in addition to displaying that individual proficiency associated with their names, by their latest recordings.

Jascha Heifetz, aided by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, makes the initial engraving of Prokofieff's "Concerto No. 2, in G Minor" (Victor Set M-450; six sides), and a contemporary composer carries off unprecedented honors.

Beethoven, Brahms, Tschaikowsky and Elgar each wrote one great violin concerto. So did Prokofieff in his "D Major." But in his latest opus he has done it again, a thing those other worthies never accomplished.

Gorgeous Lyricism

Again we have atonality, yet it never is lugged in by its ears, nor is there anything reminiscent of his earlier piece. Ingenius favor is not lured with mere ingenuity, as the second movement's truly gorgeous lyricism and stunning instrumentation bears witness.

Formidities dart on every hand. Their very abundance seems to have made Heifetz so intent on showing nothing comes too hard for him to play that there are moments when we could wish for a more yielding tone, but both he and Koussevitzky achieve a veritable tour de force with the brilliant finale's exacting passages in 7-4 and 5-4.

Music Festivals on Summer Scene

B. Trans. July 2/38

Interest in the approaching Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood is even greater than last year, if figures mean anything. The membership campaign closed with a list of 2314 and a box sale of 136, as against 1750 and 121 respectively last year. And the box sale, it should be remembered, still continues. More than two hundred subscriptions for seats had been received, furthermore, before the formal inauguration of the subscription sale earlier in the week.

Among the early applicants were people from Oklahoma, California and Canada. The distinguished visitors will include, among many others, Mr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski. The conductor of the Cleveland orchestra, it appears, has bought a farm in Stockbridge for a summer home.

Dr. Koussevitzky himself, who had flirted with the idea of taking a house in the Berkshires for at least the duration of the Festival, has decided to postpone his choice at least for a year. In the meanwhile he will again be ensconced, next August as last, in the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 8 - 1938

CONCERT SHELL PLANNED

BOSTON, July 8 (UP)—A $200,000 granite and concrete dome-shaped shell will replace the present wooden one for next year's outdoor esplanade concerts on the banks of Charles River, Chairman Eugene Hultman of the Metropolitan District Commission told 15,000 music lovers at the opening of the 10th season of concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians last night.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 3 - 1938

86

RECENT RECORDINGS

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

THREE of the six albums in Victor's current list contain concertos for violin and orchestra. It is both significant and refreshing to find not only that all these are domestic recordings, but two of them were made by the original soloists and orchestras within a week of their first American performances. Yehudi Menuhin and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony (Barbirolli) play the recovered Schumann D minor; Fritz Kreisler and the Philadelphia Orchestra (Ormandy), a rearranged movement from the Paganini in D, and Jascha Heifetz with the Boston Symphony (Koussevitzky), Prokofieff's Second in G minor (Op. 63).

As may be remembered, the unearthing of the Schumann concerto in the Berlin State Library was announced as with trumpets. A much publicized broadcast and its enthusiastic endorsement by Menuhin worked considerable injustice upon it. Had it started life normally and grown old in the respectability of a regular opus number, it would probably have achieved comfortable obscurity among Schumann's minor essays. Its recording, if undertaken, would have been one of those occasional acts of charity performed in off seasons.

Arriving after so much heralding and on the heels of last month's quite exceptional set of Schumann's Second symphony, played by the Philadelphia Orchestra, the concerto proves singularly disappointing. It brings to mind the crueler and, in the main, most unjustified generalities leveled at Schumann by his critics. When they are not ponderous and involved, the flank movements become obvious, and the rich adagio linking them is neither long enough nor strong enough to save the day. That both Menuhin and Barbirolli are in fine form and the orchestra records with grand fullness only increases the disappointment.

The combination of Kreisler and Paganini suggests many qualities, and their set contains them all. The concerto has been a favorite with virtuosi before this, but Kreisler, not content with the dry and thin orchestration of the original, has thickened the gravy considerably. One result is that much of the excruciatingly difficult stuff put down by Paganini under the illusion that none but he could play it and which usually has no more than a futile fascination, is given reason and a logical place in the whole.

That Kreisler has detached a single movement, the first, from the concerto does not mean that this is merely a fragment or that the four sides lack variety. As well as the pyrotechnics, there are lush airs, persuasively handled, and cleverly conceived cadenzas of the soloist's own. We cannot say for how many years Mr. Kreisler has been making records, but, as such things go, it is a long time. Recently he has done a few concertos and this is his first album with a domestic orchestra. It seems a pity that this great artist should have waited so long and that we could not have had these when, in his prime, he was content to furnish only ten-inch Viennese titbits for the gramophone.

It is not too much to say that the Prokofieff interested us more than the other two combined. At one time Prokofieff was wont to say that no composer could create after his thirty-fifth year. After the first violin concerto—recorded by Szigeti and the London Philharmonic under Sir Thomas Beecham in Columbia Album No. 244—and considering that Prokofieff was born in 1891, we were prepared for a let-down and were happily disappointed. This second concerto was completed nine years after the composer had crossed the line he had laid down, and in more than one way proves him to be an exception to his own rule.

Take it whichever way you prefer, Prokofieff is either of unbounded versatilit, or has experimented seriously along extraordinarily diversified lines. He has long since passed through his purely sensational or fantastic phase, but what he did in that manner has not been wasted. He finds some startling harmonic progressions here, but they are never strained, are always beautifully logical means to other ends. The same forcefulness is still evident, tempered, as compared with what he was doing fifteen years ago, of all brutality. In this case one can agree with the soloist's declaration that the concerto will rank with the five or six that may be called great.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 3 - 1938

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL'S NEW SHED

TESTS made recently indicate that the acoustic properties of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new shed at Tanglewood, Mass., where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky will be heard Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, should prove entirely satisfactory. This is the conclusion reached by Professor Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who was retained by the festival authorities. Professor Fay not only is satisfied with the acoustics of the auditorium, but also stated in a recent report that "the noise made by a fairly heavy shower of rain on the roof was not sufficient to cause any annoyance."

"It is, of course, impossible to predict exactly from measurements made in an empty auditorium how music will sound in each part of the building when an audience is present, but it is quite possible to find from such tests any major faults," Professor Fay stated.

The measurements showed that when a sound was generated on any part of the stage the intensity received was "remarkably uniform over the entire seating capacity." Professor Fay is certain that with an audience present "there will be a reduction in intensity in the seats more distant from the stage, but there is no reason to believe that this reduction will be excessive."

The sound of an impact on the stage was found by Professor Fay to decrease uniformly to inaudibility. This fact, he declared, indicates freedom from serious echoes and dead spots—at least for that part of the pitch range in which such effects are noticeable. There was, however, a slight echo but only of extremely sharp impacts, in the outer seating region. This echo, he said, appeared to come from the outer portion of the colonnade roof.

"If this effect should prove to be annoying when an audience is present, and I do not believe it will, it can be reduced," he affirmed.

It is also Professor Fay's conviction that "the tilted reflecting surface in front of the back wall is serving the double purpose for which it was designed: to prevent the "focusing of reflected sound onto the stage and front seats and to reinforce the sound in the region of the back seats."

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES - UNION

JUL 8 - 1938

In Mayfair With

—Nancy Van Dyck—

Berkshire Festival

THE annual Berkshire Festival of Music will be held during the first two weeks of August at Tanglewood, Mass., according to an announcement received here.

On the two week-ends included in the festival period, Serge Koussevitsky, famous Russian composer and conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony orchestra in its appearance at Tanglewood.

Mrs. Archie W. Bray, of Spring avenue, Troy, is a member of the advisory committee of the Festival association and this week attended a luncheon of the association held at the Lenox Country club at Lenox, at which time plans were completed for the event.

Mrs. William C. Johnson, Mrs. Robert Bussier and Mrs. Orlan Arnold, also of Troy, were other guests at the luncheon, accompanying Mrs. Bray.

SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

JUL 8 - 1938

SET PROGRAM FOR FESTIVAL

Complete List Of Soloists For Opening Concert In Berkshires

Paul Althouse, tenor, Norman Cordon, bass, and Beal Hober, soprano, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month.

This completes the list of soloists who will participate in the inaugural of the Festival's new shed at "Tanglewood," the others being, Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan opera contralto; Jeannette Vreeland, soprano. Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon will sing with the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston at the opening concert when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott", will be performed. Miss Hober will sing August 11 in the all-Wagner program. That evening the orchestra will play the final scene of the first act from "Die Walkurie" and Act 3 of "Siegfried." In "Die Walkurie," Miss Hober will sing the role of Sieglinde and Mr. Althouse the role of Siegmund. In "Siegfried" Mr. Cordon will be in the role of Wotan; Miss Kaskas, Erda; Mr. Althouse, Siegfried; and Miss Hober, "Bruennhilde".

The concerts will open Thursday evening, August 4 at 8:30 and will continue through Saturday at the same hour and Sunday at 3:30. There will then be an interval until the 11th when three more concerts will be presented that night and Saturday and Sunday afternoon the 14th.

The Festival office in Stockbridge announces that all details for the coming concerts are well in hand. Because of the erection of the huge music shed seating 5700 people, parking arrangements have been revised. The great acreage at "Tanglewood" provided ample parking space that will afford facilities even more advantageous than in 1937.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN - TELEGRAPH

JUL 3 - 1938

On the Records

By MICHAEL SHAW, JR.

THREE OF THE WORLD'S leading violin virtuosos create considerable news, in addition to displaying that individual proficiency associated with their names, by their latest recordings.

Jascha Heifetz, aided by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, makes the initial engraving of Prokofieff's "Concerto No. 2, in G Minor" (Victor Set M-450; six sides), and a contemporary composer carries off unprecedented honors.

Beethoven, Brahms, Tschaikowsky and Elgar each wrote one great violin concerto. So did Prokofieff in his "D Major." But in his latest opus he has done it again, a thing those other worthies never accomplished.

Gorgeous Lyricism

Again we have atonality, yet it never is lugged in by its ears, nor is there anything reminiscent of his earlier piece. Ingenius favor is not lured with mere ingenuity, as the second movement's truly gorgeous lyricism and stunning instrumentation bears witness.

Formidities dart on every hand. Their very abundance seems to have made Heifetz so intent on showing nothing comes too hard for him to play that there are moments when we could wish for a more yielding tone, but both he and Koussevitzky achieve a veritable tour de force with the brilliant finale's exacting passages in 7-4 and 5-4.

A Music Doctor Examines

B. Trans. July 2, 1938

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Standing against the stage in the shed at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which he will conduct beginning Aug. 4.

Music Festivals on Summer Scene

B. Trans. July 8/38

Interest in the approaching Berkshire Symphonic Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood is even greater than last year, if figures mean anything. The membership campaign closed with a list of 2314 and a box sale of 136, as against 1750 and 121 respectively last year. And the box sale, it should be remembered, still continues. More than two hundred subscriptions for seats had been received, furthermore, before the formal inauguration of the subscription sale earlier in the week.

Among the early applicants were people from Oklahoma, California and Canada. The distinguished visitors will include, among many others, Mr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski. The conductor of the Cleveland orchestra, it appears, has bought a farm in Stockbridge for a summer home.

Dr. Koussevitzky himself, who had flirted with the idea of taking a house in the Berkshires for at least the duration of the Festival, has decided to postpone his choice at least for a year. In the meanwhile he will again be ensconced, next August as last, in the Berkshires Hunt and Country Club.

Concert Plans

Arthur Fiedler and musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin their tenth season of concerts on the Charles River Esplanade next Thursday evening. The concerts are scheduled to be given each night except Saturdays for a little less than four weeks. None of the programs, which are expected to lean heavily on Wagner in this 125th anniversary of that composer's birth, had been received in time for inclusion in this place.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 8 - 1938

CONCERT SHELL PLANNED

BOSTON, July 8 (UP)—A $200,000 granite and concrete dome-shaped shell will replace the present wooden one for next year's outdoor esplanade concerts on the banks of Charles River, Chairman Eugene Hultman of the Metropolitan District Commission told 15,000 music lovers at the opening of the 10th season of concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians last night.

Last TP of

Mrs. Spalding's article

87

HARPERS BAZAAR
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL -- 1938

K zky conducting—in a circus tent

by Mary Pyle Spalding
(Mrs. Albert Spalding)

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Do not grieve too much about your beloved Salzburg. There is something to take its place here, in America, in a part of the country where American tradition finds its finest expression. The fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival begins the first of August. The Festival had a success from its very beginning, four years ago. Its first two seasons were under Henry Hadley, with composite orchestras, but its greatest achievements began two years ago with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky. As its success has grown, the Festival has outstripped its original locations and capacities. Now it has a permanent home, a dignified beautiful old estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. It was in this very same setting that Hawthorne wrote his beloved "Tanglewood Tales." This section of the Berkshire Hills is magnificent. The hills show the greens of virgin pines, maples and birches, and the valleys are dotted with broad, friendly farms. The scenery is but a setting for the splendor of the music. Last summer five thousand people gathered in a gigantic circus tent to hear Dr. Koussevitzky conduct Beethoven, Brahms and Wagner. The sun turned the tent into a dome of golden topaz, (Continued on page 103)

A model of the new pavilion, to be dedicated this season

Background for great music—the Taconic Range

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

(Continued from page 78)

stenciled with the branches of the big trees overhead, and in the orchestra's pauses, one heard the crickets and an occasional inspired bird give back the echo. It was a scene of true musical enchantment, entirely unpretentious and rural. People lay about on the lawns listening, lost on the waves of sound. Many of these people had never heard such music, and one might have feared, here and there, an unruly disturbance, but there was only the most rapt and devotional attitude in all that great crowd. Pilgrims to Salzburg could have made no more appreciative audience.

One evening, last summer, the elements got the better of Wagner. A succession of thunderstorms outdid even the Valkyrie's Ride, and it became apparent that something more substantial than the tent must be provided. By popular subscription from all over the country—twenty-five States responded — money was raised last autumn to build an adequate music shed, big enough to house the thousands who will come this year. The open, unhampered feeling of the tent has been preserved, for one can gaze out on the surrounding countryside between the pillars which support the roof, and feel the summer winds blow through refreshingly.

For the inauguration of the new building and the opening of this year's Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen two Chorals by Bach and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, in which the orchestra will be assisted by the Saint Cecilia Society of Boston. To hear those sublime Choruses swell forth and mount upward in the very heart of nature will be indeed a soul-stirring experience. The other programs are beautifully chosen and typical of a New York or Boston performance. One will be composed of two excerpts from Wagner's operas, probably "Die Walküre" and "Siegfried," with excellent singers filling the roles.

There are other diversions near at hand, too. The Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge is one of the earliest and most successful of the Eastern summer theatres. A few miles north, Pittsfield, the South M [illegible] tet draws its audiences, and to the south, the Gordon String Quartet gives distinguished programs twice a week. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give four of his delightful informal music talks, dealing largely with the programs of the Festival at the Pittsfield Museum. There are drives to towns like old Deerfield, where the houses have been untouched, and one exclaims with joy at being led back a century into such harmony and peace. There is Greylock, too, the tallest of the mountains, from which one looks out over the swelling panorama of the Green Mountains of Vermont and the Mohawk Trail leading into New Hampshire. Or one can drive over into New York State, to New Lebanon, and see the last of the Shaker communities.

There are famous old hotels at which you can stay—the Curtis House at Lenox, the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge, the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington, the Maples at Pittsfield and many others. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival Association, at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, occupies itself with finding lodgings at all prices for those who are eager to come but know nothing about the vicinity. The motor trip from New York may be over any one of three excellent routes, and there are three ways of coming by train—one connecting with the trunk lines of Chicago-New York and Chicago-Boston.

The prices vary, but with the Membership Plan there are tickets costing as little as a dollar a concert. Concerts in Series A take place August 4th, 6th and 7th; in Series B, August 11th, 13th and 14th. Reservations for tickets and accommodations may be made through the Bristed Manning Travel Service.

The Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Hills may come to mean as much in the world's music as the festivals at Bayreuth and Salzburg. America is still without prejudice or hatreds, and artists must find their way to us in increasing numbers. Through this two weeks' Festival, we may open the way to a new and vigorous advance in music that most universal and inter- [illegible] of all the arts.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 9 - 1938

Noted Singers To Appear At Festival

PAUL ALTHOUSE, tenor, Norman Cordon, bass, and Beal Hober, soprano, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month.

This completes the list of soloists who will participate in the inaugural of the festival's new shed at "Tanglewood," the others being Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan Opera contralto; Jeanette Vreeland, soprano. Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon will sing with the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston at the opening concert when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," will be performed.

Miss Hober will sing Aug. 11 in the all-Wagner program. That evening the orchestra will play the final scene of the first act from "Die Walkurie" and Act 3 of "Siegfried." In "Die Walkurie" Miss Hober will sing the role of Sieglinde and Mr. Althouse the role of Siegmund. In "Siegfried" Mr. Cordon will be in the role of Wotan; Miss Kaskas, Erda; Mr. Althouse, Siegfried, and Miss Hober, "Bruennhilde."

The concerts will open Thursday evening, Aug. 4, at 8:30, and will continue through Saturday at the same hour and Sunday at 3:30. There will then be an interval until the 11th when three more concerts will be presented that night and Saturday and Sunday afternoon the 14th.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1938

Festival Booth To Open on South Street

The Pittsfield booth for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be opened on South Street July 20 according to Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for the subscription campaign in Pittsfield.

In the meantime, tickets for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the new music shed at Tanglewood the first two weekends next month, may be obtained from Mrs. Underwood or at the Open Book and the book department of England Brothers.

Sub-chairmen for the Festival will meet Monday and Mrs. Underwood says she would appreciate an encouraging response over the weekend to bolster the Pittsfield report for that day.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, is spending the weekend in the Berkshires. With him is Lucian Prince, author of the editorial, "Cathedral in a Shed," which appeared in the Boston Globe in May and was re-printed by a number of newspapers.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

JUL 9 - 1938

Proof that after a decade of concerts on the Charles river esplanade in Boston the institution may be regarded as permanent is seen in the fact that the Boston Symphony orchestra has taken over the management. And there is further assurance in the news that a $200,000 granite shell, in memory of Edward Hatch, is to be built in time for next season's concerts. To Arthur Fiedler, who organized the concerts and has aroused support for them each year since the start, belongs much of the credit for an interesting development.

HARPERS BAZAAR
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL -- 1938

87

Kou[illegible]itzky conducting—in a circus tent

by Mary Pyle Spalding
(Mrs. Albert Spalding)

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Do not grieve too much about your beloved Salzburg. There is something to take its place here, in America, in a part of the country where American tradition finds its finest expression. The fifth season of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival begins the first of August. The Festival had a success from its very beginning, four years ago. Its first two seasons were under Henry Hadley, with composite orchestras, but its greatest achievements began two years ago with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Sergeï Koussevitzky. As its success has grown, the Festival has outstripped its original locations and capacities. Now it has a permanent home, a dignified beautiful old estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. It was in this very same setting that Hawthorne wrote his beloved "Tanglewood Tales." This section of the Berkshire Hills is magnificent. The hills show the greens of virgin pines, maples and birches, and the valleys are dotted with broad, friendly farms. The scenery is but a setting for the splendor of the music. Last summer five thousand people gathered in a gigantic circus tent to hear Dr. Koussevitzky conduct Beethoven, Brahms and Wagner. The sun turned the tent into a dome of golden topaz, (Continued on page 103)

A model of the new pavilion, to be dedicated this season

Background for great music—the Taconic Range

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

(Continued from page 78)

stenciled with the branches of the big trees overhead, and in the orchestra's pauses, one heard the crickets and an occasional inspired bird give back the echo. It was a scene of true musical enchantment, entirely unpretentious and rural. People lay about on the lawns listening, lost on the waves of sound. Many of these people had never heard such music, and one might have feared, here and there, an unruly disturbance, but there was only the most rapt and devotional attitude in all that great crowd. Pilgrims to Salzburg could have made no more appreciative audience.

One evening, last summer, the elements got the better of Wagner. A succession of thunderstorms outdid even the Valkyrie's Ride, and it became apparent that something more substantial than the tent must be provided. By popular subscription from all over the country—twenty-five States responded—money was raised last autumn to build an adequate music shed, big enough to house the thousands who will come this year. The open, unhampered feeling of the tent has been preserved, for one can gaze out on the surrounding countryside between the pillars which support the roof, and feel the summer winds blow through refreshingly.

For the inauguration of the new building and the opening of this year's Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen two Chorals by Bach and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, in which the orchestra will be assisted by the Saint Cecilia Society of Boston. To hear those sublime Choruses swell forth and mount upward in the very heart of nature will be indeed a soul-stirring experience. The other programs are beautifully chosen and typical of a New York or Boston performance. One will be composed of two excerpts from Wagner's operas, probably "Die Walküre" and "Siegfried," with excellent singers filling the roles.

There are other diversions near at hand, too. The Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge is one of the earliest and most successful of the Eastern summer theatres. A few miles north, at Pittsfield, the South Mountain Quartet draws its audiences, and to the south, the Gordon String Quartet gives distinguished programs twice a week. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give four of his delightful informal music talks, dealing largely with the programs of the Festival at the Pittsfield Museum. There are drives to towns like old Deerfield, where the houses have been untouched, and one exclaims with joy at being led back a century into such harmony and peace. There is Greylock, too, the tallest of the mountains, from which one looks out over the swelling panorama of the Green Mountains of Vermont and the Mohawk Trail leading into New Hampshire. Or one can drive over into New York State, to New Lebanon, and see the last of the Shaker communities.

There are famous old hotels at which you can stay—the Curtis House at Lenox, the Red Lion Inn at Stockbridge, the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington, the Maples at Pittsfield and many others. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival Association, at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, occupies itself with finding lodgings at all prices for those who are eager to come but know nothing about the vicinity. The motor trip from New York may be over any one of three excellent routes, and there are three ways of coming by train—one connecting with the trunk lines of Chicago-New York and Chicago-Boston.

The prices vary, but with the Membership Plan there are tickets costing as little as a dollar a concert. Concerts in Series A take place August 4th, 6th and 7th; in Series B, August 11th, 13th and 14th. Reservations for tickets and accommodations may be made through the Bristed Manning Travel Service.

The Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Hills may come to mean as much in the world's music as the festivals at Bayreuth and Salzburg. America is still without prejudice or hatreds, and artists must find their way to us in increasing numbers. Through this two weeks' Festival, we may open the way to a new and vigorous advance in music—that most universal and interracial of all the arts.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 9 - 193

Noted Singers To Appear At Festival

PAUL ALTHOUSE, tenor, Norman Cordon, bass, and Beal Hober, soprano, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month.

This completes the list of soloists who will participate in the inaugural of the festival's new shed at "Tanglewood," the others being Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan Opera contralto; Jeanette Vreeland, soprano. Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon will sing with the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston at the opening concert when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," will be performed.

Miss Hober will sing Aug. 11 in the all-Wagner program. That evening the orchestra will play the final scene of the first act from "Die Walkurie" and Act 3 of "Siegfried." In "Die Walkurie" Miss Hober will sing the role of Sieglinde and Mr. Althouse the role of Siegmund. In "Siegfried" Mr. Cordon will be in the role of Wotan; Miss Kaskas, Erda; Mr. Althouse, Siegfried, and Miss Hober, "Bruennhilde."

The concerts will open Thursday evening, Aug. 4, at 8:30, and will continue through Saturday at the same hour and Sunday at 3:30. There will then be an interval until the 11th when three more concerts will be presented that night and Saturday and Sunday afternoon the 14th.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1938

Festival Booth To Open on South Street

The Pittsfield booth for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be opened on South Street July 20 according to Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for the subscription campaign in Pittsfield.

In the meantime, tickets for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the new music shed at Tanglewood the first two weekends next month, may be obtained from Mrs. Underwood or at the Open Book and the book department of England Brothers.

Sub-chairmen for the Festival will meet Monday and Mrs. Underwood says she would appreciate an encouraging response over the weekend to bolster the Pittsfield report for that day.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, is spending the weekend in the Berkshires. With him is Lucian Prince, author of the editorial, "Cathedral in a Shed," which appeared in the Boston Globe in May and was re-printed by a number of newspapers.

LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

JUL 9 - 1938

Proof that after a decade of concerts on the Charles river esplanade in Boston the institution may be regarded as permanent is seen in the fact that the Boston Symphony orchestra has taken over the management. And there is further assurance in the news that a $200,000 granite shell, in memory of Edward Hatch, is to be built in time for next season's concerts. To Arthur Fiedler, who organized the concerts and has aroused support for them each year since the start, belongs much of the credit for an interesting development.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, JULY 8, 1938

CONCERTS OPEN ON ESPLANADE

Record Throng of 15,000 Attends Opening Night By Symphony

(Continued from First Page)

for their chairs and rugs. There were nearly 1000 people there by 7 o'clock, although the concert was not scheduled to start until 8:30 P. M.

Obviously as excited over the start of the 10th season as he was over the first, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, reminisced with members of the orchestra before the concert. He recalled that there was "practically a gale" on that 4th of July 10 years ago, a wind that sent sheets of music into the Charles river and caused the engineers who had built the temporary wooden shell many anxious moments as they debated the advisability of stopping the concert before the platform fell in.

MEMORIES ENJOYED

"There was the night an old lady came up on the green in front of the shell and danced the 'Blue Danube' waltz," Fiedler remembered. "She was pretty good for a woman of her age!" He laughed heartily when someone reminded him that during one concert a swarm of gnats had descended upon the crowd, causing considerable discomfort—but created near tragedy for the men in the wind section of the orchestra who had to struggle to keep their minds on music while their instruments and mouths were being filled with the insects.

"The best thing about the 10 years is tonight," Fiedler said afterwards. "There was no rustling of programs, or anything like that. The people seemed expectant, ready for the music. It was thrilling!"

Although the concert season officially opened when Fiedler raised his baton for Wagner's "Entrance of the guests into the Wartburg, from 'Tannhauser'," for many the start was early in the evening when they were allowed to borrow books commenting on the music which was to be played. Miss Dorothy Tremble Moyer of the division of university extension of the state department of education spoke on Wagnerian music before the concert.

The sunset lingered over the Charles river for the first two numbers played by the orchestra. The first encore, Bach's "Air on the G String," was played after the second number, the first movement from Beethoven's third symphony.

It was while Gaston Elcus was playing the violin solo from Handel's "Largo from 'Xerxes'" that the sun completely disappeared and a single star shone brightly above the river, where a flotilla of 20 small boats was anchored for the concert.

HULTMAN SPEAKS

During the intermission Comr. Hultman made the announcement concerning the new shell which, he said, would be 50 per cent. larger and more modern than the present one. He also announced that the management of the concerts has been taken over by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mayor Maurice J. Tobin suggested the steel shell be removed to another part of the city, either Franklin park or World War Memorial park in East Boston, to provide a setting for concerts by WPA musicians. He offered Comr. Hultman a dollar as the first contribution for such a transfer.

Paul A. Dever, attorney-general, who was credited by Comr. Hultman with having discovered the "somnambulant" Hatch trust fund which will be used for the new shell spoke briefly, expressing the hope that music, "an international language," might make "its contribution to the day when above the strife of the world men may come to a better understanding of each other."

AT ESPLANADE CONCERT OPENING

With a deft touch Max Polster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tunes his kettle drums before last night's concert, which opened the Esplanade season with an all-Wagnerian program.

BOSTON GLOBE—FRIDAY, JULY 8, 1938

Season's Opening Esplanade Concert Attracts Throng of 15,000 Persons

PART OF GREAT CROWD AT OPENING ESPLANADE CONCERT

Last evening was a gala occasion on the Charles River Esplanade, where Arthur Fiedler and an orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians began the 10th season of free, open-air concerts. The audience was estimated at from 13,000 to 15,000 persons. The dignitaries present included Mayor Tobin, Atty. Gen. Dever, Chairman Hultman of the Metropolitan District Commission, as well as several trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There were congratulatory speeches as well as music, and from Chairman Hultman came the news that an improved shell will be built for next season, and that this year, for the first time, the state has made a small appropriation toward maintenance of the concerts.

Mr. Fiedler, who in nine years as conductor of the Pops and the Esplanade concerts has carried music to an enormous number of people, was greeted with the utmost enthusiasm when he stepped upon the stage. Frequent and cordial applause was his continuing reward through the evening.

Since July 4, 1929, when the first Esplanade concert was played, these programs have gained fame the nation over. They have come to be regarded as a fixture of the Summer season in Boston. Then, as now, they drew people in all walks of life from many sections of the city, people who came and stood on the grass or rented camp chairs for a dime, and listened to orchestral music amid informal surroundings.

Last night, as usual, the huge throng was spread out before the acoustic shell near the foot of Mt. Vernon st.

The intent stillness with which the program was received was testimony to the public appreciation of the enterprise. Quiet was also maintained by another section of the audience, aboard 20 or more boats drawn up in the river near the bank. Even airplanes from the East Boston Airport which would normally pass over the Esplanade were, it was reported, instructed to give that part of the city a wide berth.

There must be many musicians in the present orchestra who were there in 1929, but one of them is playing her first season on the Esplanade. She is Louise Came, harpist, who joined the Boston Symphony last Fall.

The opening program of the 10th season included a composition heard at the very first concert: Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" Overture.

Last evening began with the "Entrance of the Guests Into the Wartburg," also from "Tannhaeuser," and included four other Wagner pieces, the Introduction to Act 3 of "Lohengrin," a transcription of the song "Dreams," based on material from the second act of "Tristan and Isolde," the "Prize Song" from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" and "The Ride of the Valkyries'" out of "Die Walkuere." The program likewise contained the first movement of Beethovens "Heroic" Symphony and the familiar, so-called "Largo" of Handel.

If the Esplanade concerts began tentatively, they have continued to grow in stature. This year the management of them has been taken over by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are also to receive the prestige of a permanent shell, to be built at a cost of $200,000. The shell will be of concrete and granite, and will furnish a seating capacity 50 percent greater than that of the shell now in use. The money for the project, as Atty. Gen. Dever explained, will come from a trust fund established by the late Maria Hatch as a memorial to her brother, Edward Hatch. The fund was one of several which, Mr. Dever continued, had not been utilized, as was discovered by investigation.

Mayor Tobin, during congratulatory remarks, suggested that the concerts be moved to such parks as Franklin or the World War Memorial in East Boston where others could enjoy them.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was represented by four trustees: Bentley W. Warren, president; Henry B. Sawyer, vice president; Allston Burr and Edward A. Taft.

Mrs. Dorothy Tremble Moyer, of the lecture staff of the University Extension, State Department of Education, spoke upon "Richard Wagner and His Study of Beethoven," shortly before the concert began. The lecture was one of a series to be given by various speakers during the season.

Commissioner Hultman voiced a wish that Mr. Fiedler and his orchestra will be playing on the Esplanade 10 years hence. In view of what has been accomplished during the last nine years, that wish will more than likely turn out to be prophecy.—C. W. D.

B Globe

Feeding 15,000

July 8/38

A multitude of music lovers are delighted that the 10th season of Esplanade concerts has begun. They provide the one opportunity in New England for enjoying at close quarters a first-rate symphony orchestra without cost. The throngs attending furnish proof of the wide appreciation of the privilege. They are hungry and thirsty for exactly what is offered them. Many are not circumstanced to buy tickets for themselves, as is obvious to those who scan the crowd. Others there are, however, who have the means to attend all the concerts of the year in the best seats.

There is nothing exclusive about the performances and the charm of the out-of-doors adds to the delight of those who listen. Many cannot forget the evening when the orchestra had played the Magic Fire from Wagner's Valkyrie and then nature itself furnished an encore by a magnificent storm of lightning without thunder, something no opera house could offer.

The programs are a rare blend of great music with that which, without claim to such characterization, is likable. Those who revel in the offerings on the Esplanade are coming to the opinion that Arthur Fiedler is on the way to being a great conductor.

THE CHARLES RIVER BASIN

B Post
July 8/38

The efforts of Joseph Lee to stimulate interest in a wider use of the Charles River Basin, particularly in the matter of encouraging the building of small sailboats, is commendable. The basin has never fulfilled expectations. This beautiful expanse of water is one of the prime attractions of the city.

But, there seem to be difficulties in the way of making it a great water playground. The chief obstacle is the development of the automobile, which lures persons out of the city on week-ends. With the beaches so easy of access and the fondness of the people of Boston and the suburbs for the salt water, the lack of interest in the basin is partly explained.

Some years ago, before the development of the Basin, rowing was a major sport in and around Boston. There were a dozen or more rowing clubs with eight-oared shell crews, pairs and single scullers. Some great scullers were developed here, national champions among them. Large crowds turned out for the regattas and the star oarsmen were popular figures.

But aside from the college crews this activity is at an end. Interest in rowing is at a low ebb and it is doubtful if it can be revived.

Mr. Lee is particularly interested in sailing. There has been some activity in the line of small boats principally due to the enthusiastic members of the Frostbite fleet and the sailing dinghy fleet of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Mr. Lee's suggestion that the Metropolitan District Commission either purchase small sailing boats or provide the materials so that schoolboys may build their own is of rather doubtful value. While it may be in line with certain government activities it hardly seems quite fair to pay in whole or in part for sailboats for an admittedly small number of people. If 500 young men should take advantage of such an offer that would be a very small proportion of the population. As for canoeing, such a sport would for safety's sake need waters more quiet than in the Basin.

There is also some danger in the handling of sailboats by inexperienced persons.

The chief attraction of the Basin is the Esplanade. This gives great pleasure to a very large number of persons. There may be ways in which the pleasure can be added to. The Esplanade concerts are an example of what can be done. They draw, not any small select group, but thousands of people.

Better bathing facilities could be provided. Perhaps a large open air tearoom could be subsidized and made popular. Sunday afternoon band concerts would be an attraction. The concert shell might be utilized for theatrical performances. Shows like the old time Punch and Judy affairs could be arranged for children.

These things would help to popularize the Basin.

89

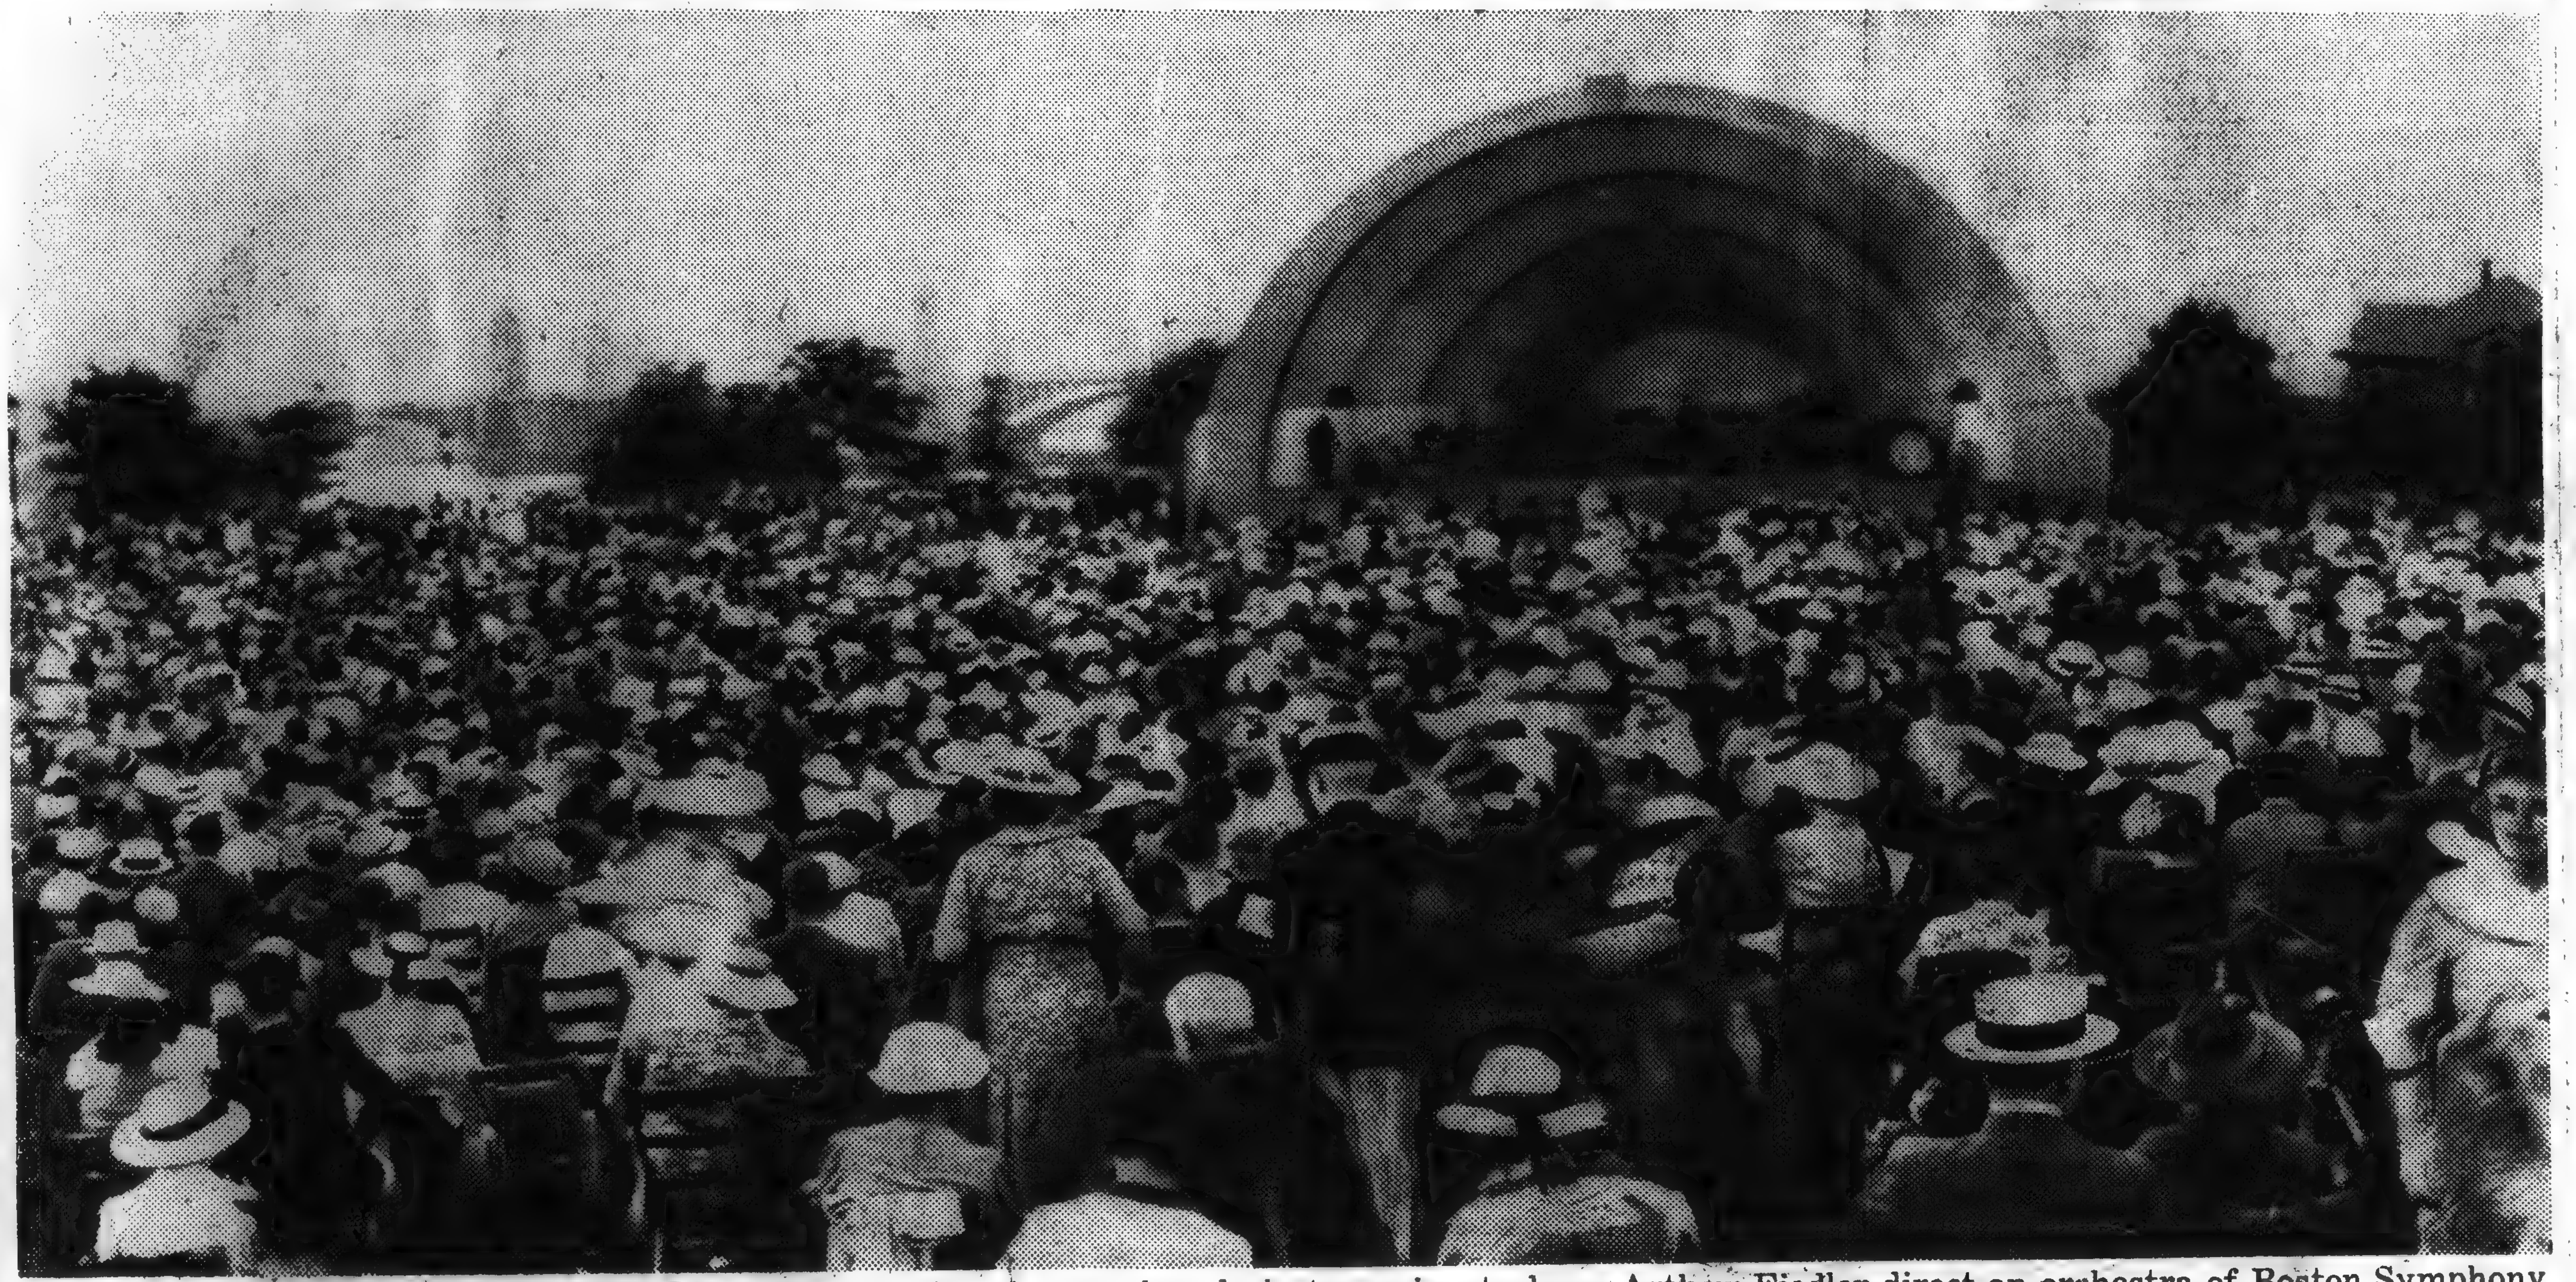
E BOSTON HERALD

8 BOSTON, FRIDAY, JULY 8, 1938—TWENTY-FOUR PAGES ★ ★ ★ ★ TWO CENTS in Metropolitan Boston THREE CENTS ELSEWHERE

R GIVEN WRONG B

lice Exonerated in Drowning

AT FIRST OF THIS SEASON'S SERIES OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS



Part of the huge throng which gathered on the Charles river esplanade last evening to hear Arthur Fiedler direct an orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians.

ESPLANADE CONCERTS

8/38

When Arthur Fiedler and his colleagues of the Boston Symphony orchestra began their open air Esplanade concerts nine years ago, the venture seemed hopeless. The uncertainties of the weather, the lack of seats and an auditorium, the absence of an admission charge, the possibility of disturbances, and the novelty of al fresco symphony playing seemed to foretell a hard struggle for survival. Considerable effort has been necessary, but the night concerts are now an established feature of the Boston summer. The reputation of the performances has spread throughout the country, partly on account of the large number of students from a distance in our summer schools. The series which began last night, with a large crowd listening decorously, will probably be the most successful of all. And it is hoped that listeners will be more liberal than heretofore. The average contribution has been extremely small.

Other large cities, too, have discovered that open air summer music is what the community wants. Towns and small cities likewise have adopted the custom. It is an outgrowth here in Boston of the innovation which began with Pop concerts in Music Hall. In many places, playing by well selected groups has replaced concerts which used to be given with gusto by the local brass bands.

Our European cousins have been enjoying symphony music outdoors for many years, and probably the practice is so well established now in the United States that it will continue indefinitely. Certainly it has such a soothing, civilizing influence that Boston can hardly afford to let it lapse.

CONCERTS OPEN ON ESPLANADE

Record Throng of 15,000 Attends Opening Night By Symphony

PERMANENT SHELL WILL BE ERECTED

A record crowd of more than 15,000 music lovers last night cheered the opening of the 10th season of the Esplanade concerts and the announcement that next year there would be a permanent stone shell for the outdoor concerts by the symphony orchestra.

A $200,000 granite and concrete dome-shaped shell, complete with modern acoustical devices, dressing and storage rooms, will be erected in time for next year's concerts, Eugene C. Hultman of the metropolitan district commission told the cheering crowd which packed the green on the esplanade besides the Charles river.

MEMORIAL TO HATCH

The shell, designed by Richard Shaw, architect, with the assistance of Dr. William R. Barss, acoustical expert, will be named in memory of Edward Hatch. The funds were made available by a "somnambulant public trust fund" created by the late Maria Hatch some years ago for the purpose of erecting a public memorial in honor of her brother.

As early as 5 o'clock last night people began to arrive on the Esplanade to obtain choice positions

(Continued on Page Two)

(see first clipping on opposite page for continuation)

HUGE AUDIENCE ON ESPLANADE

Magnificent Concert Features Wagner's Music

B. Post July 8/38

The biggest of first night crowds banked the greensward in a solid mass for the opening last night of the 10th anniversary season of the Esplanade concerts, with a bright moon riding high and a fine sailing breeze out of the east to make a perfect summer occasion.

A programme featuring the music of Richard Wagner, and announcement that the entire season of Esplanade concerts this year would continue to feature his works marked recognition of the 125th anniversary of the great composer's birth, brought response of full rounds of applause from an appreciative audience.

During the night several important announcements were made for Boston music lovers. First, that the management of the Esplanade concerts, which Conductor Arthur Fiedler and his company of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians have made one of the outstanding successes of the music world in America, has been taken over by the Symphony Orchestra's organization.

Second, announcement was made that the services of Conductor Fiedler and the orchestra have reached a point of public appreciation which has warranted the State in making an initial, small appropriation towards support of the concerts. And third, that the present acoustic shell is to be replaced next year, and may be ready for next summer's concerts, by a $200,000 permanent stone structure, 50 per cent larger than now, with suitable accommodations for the musicians.

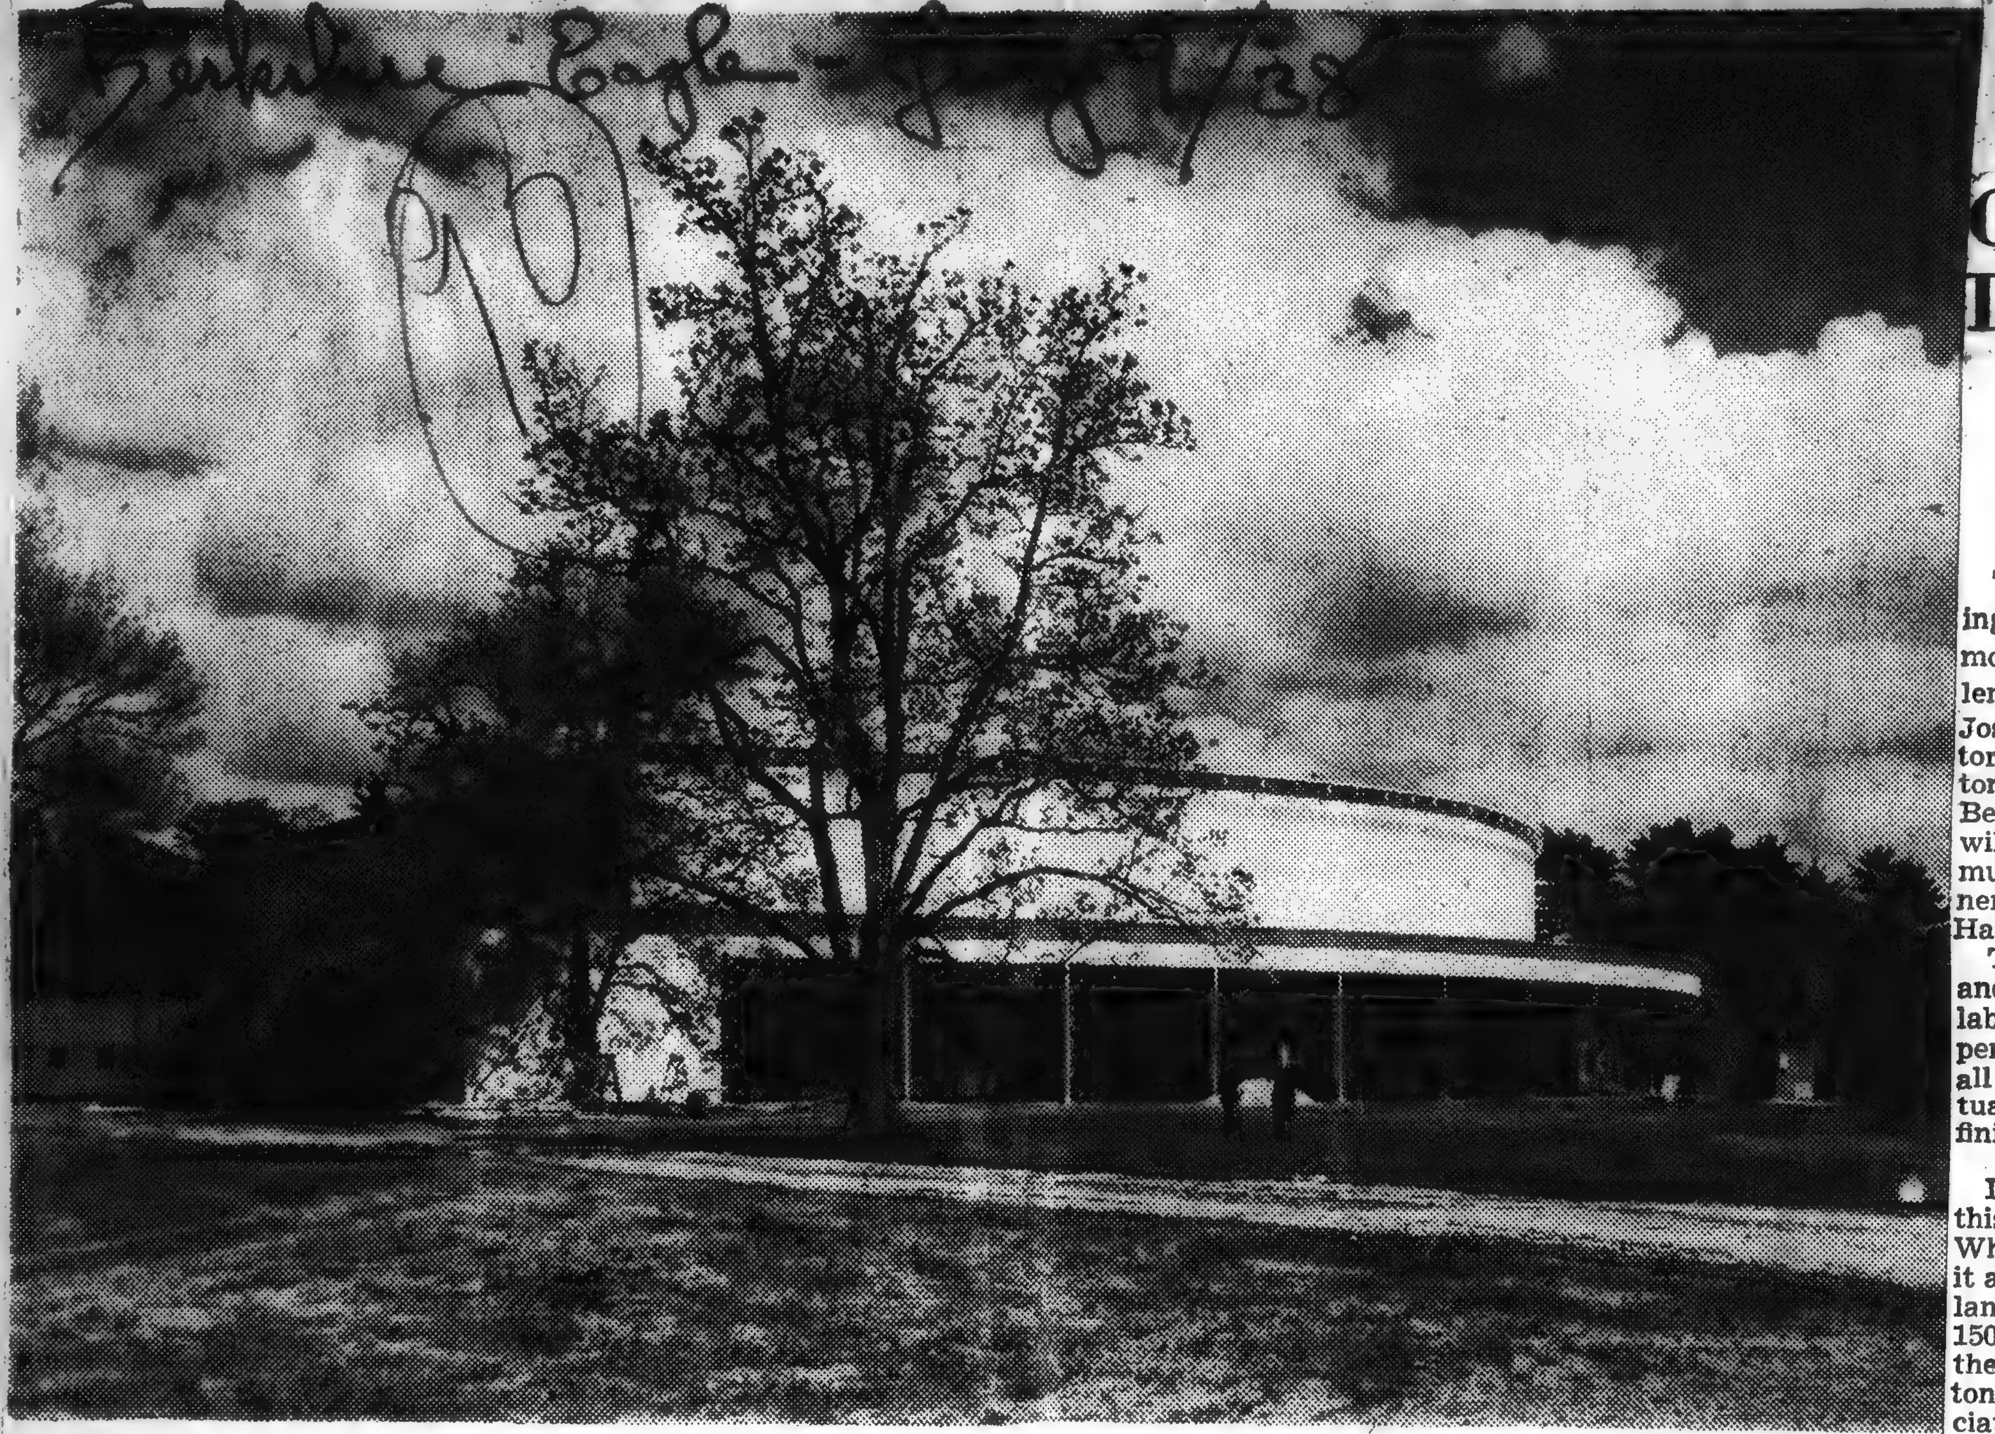
LEE OPPOSED TO MARBLE SHELL

In an open letter addressed to Attorney-General Paul A. Dever, School Committeeman Joseph Lee yesterday protested the application of $200,000 from the Hatch Fund for the erection of a marble concert shell on the Esplanade.

Mr. Lee characterized the announcement as "another sign of the indifference to the children and the adults of the city" and attacked Attorney-General Dever, Chairman Eugene C. Hultman of the Metropolitan District Commission and the White Fund trustees charging that they have ignored the provisions of the funds.

Structure Awaits Culture at Tanglewood

Berkshire Eagle – July 6/38



The music shed at "Tanglewood," Lenox, has been completed by Contractors Graves & Hemmes of Great Barrington. Seats are being placed and other details are now being cared for in anticipation of the concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival which take place in early August.

Engineer Joseph Franz of Stockbridge who directed the construction and who had much to do with the general plans. To him much credit is due.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 9 - 1938

Concert of Hammers Is Ending at Music Shed

Structural Work Finished "Tanglewood" Is Nearly Ready for Cultural Festival

The chorus of hammers is subsiding at "Tanglewood." In less than a month now the busy hum will be silenced altogether. Then Engineer Joseph Franz will give way to Director Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Then the Berkshire Symphonic Festival again will hold sway and the enchanting music of Beethoven, Brahms, Wagner, Sibelius, Prokofriff, Resphigi, Hadley and others will be heard.

Then a dream of music lovers far and wide, will be realized. Then the labors of steelworkers, masons, carpenters, electricians, plumbers and all others who had a part in the actual building of this shed will be finished for this year at least.

Huge Structure

It has been a tremendous task, this building of the music shed. When one considers the hugeness of it all, covering an acre and a half of land, utilizing '308 tons of steel, 150,000 of board feet of lumber for the roofing alone and loading 2500 tons on its footings, one must appreciate the immensity of the undertaking.

Engineer Franz's Labor of Love

All this was done under the careful, able guidance of Engineer Joseph Franz of Stockbridge. Since November, when he drew preliminary plans, Mr. Franz has practically lived Tanglewood and the music shed. It has been a labor of love for him, a labor that was inspired by his love of music and his devotion to his engineering profession. He wanted the shed to be built right, and because of this he watched every structural detail.

Famed Architect

Plans originally were drawn by Eliel Saarinen, noted Finnish architect of Cranbrook, Mich. He also chose the location of the building. His plans, purchased by the Festival trustees, formed the basis for those perfected by Mr. Franz.

After the plans were submitted to the Festival directors in early December, and the Boston Symphony director later in the month, bids were asked and work was started under the direction of Graves & Hemmes of Great Barrington Jan. 1.

Five Working Months

Mr. Franz estimates that actually five working months were utilized, taking into consideration layoffs because of weather and waiting for the arrival of material.

Contend With Weather

Concrete for the footings was poured in winter and it was necessary to keep the quick setting cement covered to protect it from freezing. All this brought extra work on the builders. Holding the huge network of steel girders there are 78 piers and 156 anchorbolts to sustain the columns. The steel arrived in April when the ground was thawing and it was no easy task to get it into place. The largest girder, forming an important part of the proscenium arch in front of the stage, is 96½ feet long and weighs six and a half tons: The steel erection under the drills and triphammers of expert workmen required three weeks.

Acre and Half Roof

Next came the roof construction with 150,000 feet of lumber to be matched and placed. Other construction including the sides utilized 15,000 more feet of lumber. The 66,000 square feet of roof is covered with three layers of felt. On top of the felt is asphalt. In other words, there is enough felt in the roof to lay a path three feet wide from the festival office in Stockbridge 12½ miles to Pittsfield.

This roof covering is intended to provide excellent protection from rain and snow and also to deaden the sound of rain or hail pattering on the roof during a concert. No longer will patrons fear the elements getting the better of Wagner during the presentation of "Die Walkure." Remember last year?

The Stage

The stage, located considerably lower than the front colonnade, allows for a gradual slope. The stage is 35 feet deep with a 60-foot front. It is 45 feet wide in the rear. The back and sides are of plywood arranged to throw the sound into the most distant corners of the auditorium.

Against the rear wall, high above the heads of the patrons, is a concave reflector made from 7000 square feet of commodore wall board and set at an angle of 32 degrees. From the stage, or shell to the rear of the inside columns, the distance is 176 feet.

The inside arch measures 315 feet and has a radius of 236 feet, while the outside arch is 404 feet long with a radius of 263 feet. Homosote board was used on the outside walls, 30,000 square feet of it.

The Lighting

The electrical work was done by Henry A. Jones of Lenox. The auditorium is lighted by 25 500-watt birdseye bulbs and there are 17 200-watt lights in the colonnade. The stage is lighted by 15 300-watt bulbs that are concealed from public view. Five 1000-watt flood lights are to be used in lighting the grounds immediately in the vicinity of the building. Mr. Jones and his men now are installing 30 more flood lights in the parking area and the Tanglewood gardens.

The total electric load used in the building is 40 killowatts (per hour) or enough electricity to light 50 ordinary homes. The outside lights will require an equal amount of current. Mr. Jones and his men used miles of BX (metal covered) wire. The Southern Berkshire Power & Electric Company ran a line from the highway to accommodate this new important customer.

Jack McDonald of Stockbridge had the sub-contract for the tinning and used 1286 feet of toincan metal gutters with down conductors every 20 feet. Each of these is 20 feet long.

Dressing Room

In addition to the shell itself a tuning room was constructed in back of the stage for the accommodation of the orchestra members. There is hot water from an electric hot water heater. Similar equipment is provided in the room built for Dr. Koussevitzky.

Offices and rest rooms have been provided at the entrance, on either side of the colonnade. The plumbing fixtures were furnished and installed by Sears-Roebuck & Company of Pittsfield.

There are three separate sewage disposal plants on the premises, 1000 feet of six-inch tile piping having been used for sanitary and storm drains. More than 1000 feet of water mains were installed for the several hydrants from which there are 450 feet of fire lines.

The grounds have been graded and seeded, 5000 cubic yards of soil having been moved in the process.

Come August 1 all will be in readiness. The seating is now being arranged, the chairs having arrived this week.

Workers and Material

The "deformed" steel used in the shed was supplied by the Peirson Hardware Company of Pittsfield which also supplied builders finished hardware. The studio boards for the studio room were supplied by Thomas & Palmer of Great Barrington. The grading was done by Rudolph Straleau of Sheffield. The Stockbridge Coal and Grain Company of Stockbridge supplied the cement for all foundations and piers with sand supplied by the Berkshire Gravel Company of Lenox Dale. The acre and half of roofing was done by D. J. Wooliver & Sons of Lakeway Drive, Pittsfield. With the steel supplied by the Bethlehem Steel Company the Peirson Hardware Company acted as agents for the Pennsylvania concern.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUL 12 1938

Serge Koussevitzky

Conductor who will appear at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August

---

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 11 1938

Cincinnati Lauds Kaskas' Singing

Anna Kaskas, Hartford's brilliant member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, won high praise from critics and music lovers in Cincinnati last week when she appeared with other Metropolitan artists in the Zoo Summer Opera.

Miss Kaskas sang the role of Adalgisa in "Norma," with Rose Bampton in the stellar role. Her fine contralto voice immensely pleased the audience. She was requested to sing Amneris in "Aida," but previous engagements in Canada made it necessary for her to decline.

Miss Kaskas, in addition to engagements, will be busy all summer rehearsing numbers that are to be sung in the fall. Among them is the Messa Solemnas, which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is to present.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL

JUL 10 1938

Grace Notes Upon Records

Jascha Heifetz & Modern Music Prokofieffs' Master Concerto for Violin

By Robert H. Bull

THE MODERN COMPOSER, especially if he is from the U. S. S. R., is looked askance. On the one hand, conservatives believe that simply good music, without political implications, is lightly regarded by the Soviet Republics. On the other, there are radicals who believe that nothing should be done, even in harmony, if it is not related to the experimental regime in government.

Between the extremes, of course, are the rationalists who rather conclude that valid music, even in Russia, should reflect contemporary life, but need not be mechanized.

* * *

It is in this middle area, perhaps, that one can best catalogue Sergei Prokofief, a great Russian pianist who, since his birth in 1891, has done some work that ranks with the best of any nation.

Prokofieff's "Concerto No. 2 in G Minor," in the opinion of the renowned Jascha Heifetz, is one of the world's great violin concertos.

It was completed in 1935 and performed for the first time in America last December.

Then Heifetz played it, with the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

It is this work, recorded by the same orchestra and Heifetz, which is currently offered by Victor in album form (M-450), as a contribution of today in musical art.

* * *

Anlytically, one should describe the Concerto's three movements, with the explanation that they are in roughly conventional form, in which the composer draws on the beauties that were revealed by Beethoven and Brahms and Sibelius.

Sometimes there are strange and harsh harmonies, suggestive of the conflicts of modern life and of the grief of foreboding fate.

But Prokofief is progressive-minded, and his music, in sensible fashion, is convincing in stirring beauty.

* * *

The first movement suggests the classical. The sole violin gives out a definite theme, and for a brief while is unaccompanied. Then the melodious orchestral strings develop a second rhythmical figure, and the movement goes on in sonata form.

* * *

In the second movement, many intricate rhythms and harmonies are evolved with marvelous clarity, in a romantic and lyrical fabric. It was during this movement that the Boston audience was moved so emotionally.

* * *

In the third and concluding movement, a new style is created.

It has no continuous melody, but a multitude of swift, powerful, changing rhythms.

91

'Je Vais Siffler'

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Shed Survives Koussevitzky's Whistling Solo

Director Charms Critic and Seals Acoustics of Tanglewood

B. [illegible] July 7/38

By Moses Smith

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is one of the finest orchestra conductors in the world. He can play the double bass. In rehearsal he frequently sings to convey a point to his musicians. It developed this week that he can whistle, too.

He gave his whistling performance on Tuesday at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, where on six evenings in August an audience of 5000 will gather nightly to hear the third annual series of concerts by the Boston Symphonic Orchestra and its leader.

A new music shed has risen on the estate in the past few months, and on his way to New Haven to receive an honorary degree at Yale University's Commencement on Wednesday, Dr. Koussevitzky dropped in to take a look at it. He wanted to test the acoustics.

After a brief stroll from the caretaker's house through the fine formal gardens of Tanglewood we proceeded to the Shed, which is on a field at some distance from the site of last year's "Tent." Dr. Koussevitzky expressed himself as happy over the change because it will enable the audience, seated in the Shed, to command one of the most picturesque views afforded at Tanglewood. For the Shed, it should be recalled, is an enormous fan-shaped structure open at the sides. It combines, that is, most of the advantages of an outdoor theater with solid protection against the hazards of New England's mid-summer squalls.

"Je Vais Siffler"

"I would like," began Dr. Koussevtizky, and then he hesitated. He lapsed into the more convenient French, because he could not think of the word "whistle." "Je vais siffler." It was arranged that I listen at several stations in the Shed, while he repeated a tune from the stage. The "tune," repeated each time, of course, with the same intensity—otherwise the experiment would have been quite worthless—was something that I was unable to recognize. It was a fragment which, if crooned, might have been a snatch of a lullaby or expression of endearment. Perhaps it was something recaptured from the conductor's early Russian days.

The experiment, so far as I was concerned, was quite satisfactory. From points far and near the stage, in the middle

Continued on Page 8—Column 1

Koussevitzky Gives a Whistling Solo

Continued from Page One

and at the sides of the Shed, the tones seemed to have equal intensity. Then it was the conductor's turn to listen, and mine to whistle. He covered several hundred yards, frequently calling for my whistled phrase, before he broke out enthusiastically. Clearly this was no fake or perfunctory expression of satisfaction. It was my turn to be chagrined, because the conductor had not recognized the tune. (Too many cigarettes.)

The conductor was given a copy of the conclusions of Professor Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, retained by the Festival Committee to test the acoustics of the Shed. The report indicated "that the acoustic properties of the Auditorium should be entirely satisfactory. It is, of course, impossible to predict exactly from measurements made in an auditorium how music will sound in each part of the building when an audience is present, but it is quite possible to find from such tests any major faults."

No Dead Spots

Professor Fay went on to say that "when a steady sound was generated on any part of the stage, the intensity received was remarkably uniform over the entire seating space." There are, he found, no serious echoes or dead spots, and even such minor defects as might show up when the audience is present can readily be reduced. Fortunately, there was a fairly heavy shower (which worked havoc last year) while he was there. The noise, wrote Professor Fay, "was not sufficient to cause any annoyance even in the empty auditorium."

To make assurance doubly sure, Dr. Koussevitzky asked me and two others who had joined us—John Burk of Symphony Hall and George Edman, secretary of the Festival Committee—to take our several stations while he sang. The tune was a lovely one—again I did not recognize it—and I could tell from the quality of his voice that he was singing softly, dropping several times to hardly a murmur. The "reception" was remarkable, the only serious interference coming from the stuttering motor of a truck nearby, the driver of which had not been warned about our experiments. The other two observers, indeed, could scarcely believe that Dr. Koussevitzky had been employing a quiet tone.

We had been in the shed for some time and it was only on coming out that we were reminded that it was a very hot day. Under the roof of the almost completed shed the temperature was surprisingly moderate. The men at work were engaged in finishing operations—as far as the shed will be finished this year. We went into the conductor's room—complete with shower—and the tuning-room for the musicians. It was clear that the establishment was ample.

As for the Esplanade

On the way back and at lunch we talked. I should have preferred to listen, but Dr. Koussevitzky wanted the "news." I mentioned the fact that the newspapers of the preceding day had carried first announcement of the tenth season of the Esplanade concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky was immediately excited.

"Especially," he said, "because the concerts are for the first time under the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We are now giving concerts for all classes of people. For those who cannot afford the regular winter concerts we have long had the Pops. Now the Symphony Orchestra will give concerts even for those who cannot afford to pay at all."

The conductor of the Symphony Orchestra believes that it is unique in this respect, and in the length of seasonal employment for the musicians. The Festival has increased this in recent years, so that those who wish may play under a single management most of the year round, with a needed vacation only between the end of the Festival and the beginning of the main season.

At mention of the Yale Commencement Dr. Koussevitzky spoke of Walt Disney. he was not merely enthusiastic about "Snow White." He regards Disney as a unique creative artist of the screen, because Disney has not merely employed the screen to imitate life or other arts, but has created an art in the screen's own terms.

After the Yale Commencement, Dr. Koussevitzky said, he would return to Saratoga to await the rehearsals for the Festival.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

JUL 10 1938

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

THE question has been raised as to the calibre of the Boston Pops Orchestra, some people edging away from their recordings with the belief it is a small concert group. On the contrary, every man is a regular member of the Boston Symphony which Koussevitzky directs during the winter season. During the summer an extensive series is offered in Symphony Hall which are more in the order of promenade concerts, offering lighter fare. It is this same series which is broadcast on Wednesday nights in the summer. Arthur Fiedler, associate conductor of the Boston Orchestra, is in full charge during the series. Descended from a long line of great musicians, he has gained a reputation as one of the finest of the young American conductors. The list offered by the Boston Pops is rapidly approaching in size that of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and it is a real break for the record buyer to be able to obtain performances as outstanding in every way as either of the other two eastern groups at 50 cents less a disc.

Victor has recorded five waltzes of Johann Strauss by the Boston Pops, "Wine, Women, and Song," "Wiener Blut," "Artist's Life," "Emperor Waltz" and "Fruhlingstimmen." Perhaps these versions will not be found by some to "sob" with quite the requisite intensity, but I am highly pleased with them. It is a splendid selection that has been made and will take precedence over any other versions in the domestic catalogs. Victor et 445. $7.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

JUL 24 1938

Right on the Records

By Rudolph Nelson

Here are two popular favorites, nicely arranged and played by this group from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Pop Goes the Weasel"—Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting, Victor Record 4397.

The old fiddler's tune is used as a theme for these humorous symphonic variations. From start to finish, "Pop Goes The Weasel" is deftly maneuvered through many interesting forms not usually associated with this type of music. The theme appears in music-box style, as a minuet, in ugal form and in jazz idiom. It may not be important musically, but it's a lot of fun.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

JUL 10 1938

Music Notes

By GEORGE
SCHAUN

Concerts This Week

Berkshire Festival To Fore Artistically

If one looks instead toward the serious delights of the symphony and chamber music, then there is even more plentiful news. This summer, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extending from August 4 to 14 under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, will no doubt take first place, artistically, as it apparently did by general agreement last year. The festival association's immense tent, when it was set up on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., was seemingly strong, but the stormy weather of last summer was almost the undoing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its distinguished audiences. Now the much-discussed tent is a thing of the past and a large open-air auditorium has been constructed to avoid damage to feminine finery.

Today, too, as symphony seasons start in various communities, Mrs. Coolidge's fine summer series of chamber music concerts begins at Pittsfield, Mass., and will continue until September 23 when the final program will be given by the Roth Quartet. This week, too, will mark the beginning of a long opera and symphony season at Chautauqua, while some of the smaller and scantily publicized festivals are typified by the series of Saturday afternoon concerts to be given until September in an outdoor ampitheater at Woodstock, N. Y.

In the pioneer days of Theodore Thomas, one could have counted the really significant summer concert and opera series of America on the fingers of two hands. Now, a reasonably complete list would cover many sheets of paper. For what it is worth, however, estimates of the audiences that attended musical affairs last summer range as high as twenty-five millions—and there is no one to say that the figure should not be much higher.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUL 10 1938

Berkshire Festival Completes Solo List

Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass, and Beal Hober, soprano, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month.

[illegible] of soloists [illegible] inaugural [illegible] at "Tan[illegible]ing Anna [illegible] Opera contralto, and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano. Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon will sing with the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston at the opening concert when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," will be performed. Miss Hober will sing Aug. 11 in the all-Wagner program.

The concerts will open Thursday evening, Aug. 4, and will continue through the following Sunday. There will then be an interval until the 11th when three more concerts will be presented that night, Saturday and Sunday afternoon.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 12 1938

Concert Shed For Berkshire Fete Finished

Symphonic Festival's New Hall at Tanglewood to Accommodate 5,000; to Open August 4th

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new concert shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been finished and it is attracting many visitors. On Sunday morning many persons on driving trips through the beautiful country took the short detour from the main highway to go to Tanglewood to see the new concert hall, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by its famous leader, Serge Koussevitzky, will begin the festival program on Thursday, August 4.

Driving up the lane that leads from the gate, visitors park their car in the field or beside the roadway. After going in over the lawn that surrounds the house, one finds the great new building to the left of the former entrance way. It is located near a grove of old trees and far enough to the side so that the vistas of Tanglewood and the view of the lake are not obscured.

The light colored roof stands on steel pillars and is upheld by a network of construction which resembles a bridge, though there are frequent pillars. The sides are open so that the distances seem smaller than they are. All around the sides of the building there are broad spaces roofed over and these will later be used for seating space if the demand necessitates more places for the audience.

New chairs, which are clamped down to metal strips and some of the old benches will seat the audiences of perhaps 5,000 which will attend the musical programs this summer. The stage for the musicians is as large as their home stage in Symphony hall, Boston. The lighting and acoustics are said to be perfect.

If you go to Tanglewood on one of these informal visits and you wait around probably some official of the building company will come along and explain everything you want to ask about, the design, the construction and all about it. They are all enthusiastic about it. The permanent floor and other features will be added to the building later.

Tickets are being sold, for the full season, for one series or for single concerts. In Schenectady the reservations are being made at the Cluett and Sons music in State street. The programs will be as follows:

Series Programs

Series A—Thursday, August 4, at 8:30 o'clock. Chorus and chorale from the cantata, "Ein Feste Burg ist Unser Gott," Bach; Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy," Beethoven, the Cecilia Society of Boston and soloists assisting.

Saturday, August 6 at 8:30. Symphony in E flat, by Haydn; "Le Mer," Debussy; Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Sibelius.

Sunday afternoon, August 7, at 3:30 o'clock. "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra, Mozart; Symphony in E minor, Brahms; "Music for the Theater," Copland; "Ma Mere l'Oye" (Mother Goose) five children's pieces, Ravel; symphonic poem, "The Pines of Rome," Respighi.

Series B—Thursday, August 11, 8:30 o'clock. "Die Walkure," introduction to act 3, "The Ride of the Valkyries," act 3 final scene, Wagner; act 3, "Siegfried," Wagner, four soloists assisting.

Saturday, August 13, 8:30, Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Beethoven; "Angelus," from Symphony No. 3, in B minor, Hadley; Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetic, Tchaikowsky.

Sunday afternoon, August 14, 3:30. Symphony in B flat, Schumann; "Tapiola," tone poem for orchestra, Sibelius; Symphony No. 2 in D major, Brahms.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give four lectures in connection with the symphony festival.

91

'Je Vais Siffler'

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Shed Survives Koussevitzky's Whistling Solo

Director Charms Critic and Seals Acoustics of Tanglewood

B. Trans. July 7/38

By Moses Smith

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is one of the finest orchestra conductors in the world. He can play the double bass. In rehearsal he frequently sings to convey a point to his musicians. It developed this week that he can whistle, too.

He gave his whistling performance on Tuesday at Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, where on six evenings in August an audience of 5000 will gather nightly to hear the third annual series of concerts by the Boston Symphonic Orchestra and its leader.

A new music shed has risen on the estate in the past few months, and on his way to New Haven to receive an honorary degree at Yale University's Commencement on Wednesday, Dr. Koussevitzky dropped in to take a look at it. He wanted to test the acoustics.

After a brief stroll from the caretaker's house through the fine formal gardens of Tanglewood we proceeded to the Shed, which is on a field at some distance from the site of last year's "Tent." Dr. Koussevitzky expressed himself as happy over the change because it will enable the audience, seated in the Shed, to command one of the most picturesque views afforded at Tanglewood. For the Shed, it should be recalled, is an enormous fan-shaped structure open at the sides. It combines, that is, most of the advantages of an outdoor theater with solid protection against the hazards of New England's mid-summer squalls.

"Je Vais Siffler"

"I would like," began Dr. Koussevtizky, and then he hesitated. He lapsed into the more convenient French, because he could not think of the word "whistle." "Je vais siffler." It was arranged that I listen at several stations in the Shed, while he repeated a tune from the stage. The "tune," repeated each time, of course, with the same intensity—otherwise the experiment would have been quite worthless—was something that I was unable to recognize. It was a fragment which, if crooned, might have been a snatch of a lullaby or expression of endearment. Perhaps it was something recaptured from the conductor's early Russian days.

The experiment, so far as I was concerned, was quite satisfactory. From points far and near the stage, in the middle

Continued on Page 8—Column 1

Koussevitzky Gives a Whistling Solo

Continued from Page One

and at the sides of the Shed, the tones seemed to have equal intensity. Then it was the conductor's turn to listen, and mine to whistle. He covered several hundred yards, frequently calling for my whistled phrase, before he broke out enthusiastically. Clearly this was no fake or perfunctory expression of satisfaction. It was my turn to be chagrined, because the conductor had not recognized the tune. (Too many cigarettes.)

The conductor was given a copy of the conclusions of Professor Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, retained by the Festival Committee to test the acoustics of the Shed. The report indicated "that the acoustic properties of the Auditorium should be entirely satisfactory. It is, of course, impossible to predict exactly from measurements made in an auditorium how music will sound in each part of the building when an audience is present, but it is quite possible to find from such tests any major faults."

No Dead Spots

Professor Fay went on to say that "when a steady sound was generated on any part of the stage, the intensity received was remarkably uniform over the entire seating space." There are, he found, no serious echoes or dead spots, and even such minor defects as might show up when the audience is present can readily be reduced. Fortunately, there was a fairly heavy shower (which worked havoc last year) while he was there. The noise, wrote Professor Fay, "was not sufficient to cause any annoyance even in the empty auditorium."

To make assurance doubly sure, Dr. Koussevitzky asked me and two others who had joined us—John Burk of Symphony Hall and George Edman, secretary of the Festival Committee—to take our several stations while he sang. The tune was a lovely one—again I did not recognize it—and I could tell from the quality of his voice that he was singing softly, dropping several times to hardly a murmur. The "reception" was remarkable, the only serious interference coming from the stuttering motor of a truck nearby, the driver of which had not been warned about our experiments. The other two observers, indeed, could scarcely believe that Dr. Koussevitzky had been employing a quiet tone.

We had been in the shed for some time and it was only on coming out that we were reminded that it was a very hot day. Under the roof of the almost completed shed the temperature was surprisingly moderate. The men at work were engaged in finishing operations—as far as the shed will be finished this year. We went into the conductor's room—complete with shower—and the tuning-room for the musicians. It was clear that the establishment was ample.

As for the Esplanade

On the way back and at lunch we talked. I should have preferred to listen, but Dr. Koussevitzky wanted the "news." I mentioned the fact that the newspapers of the preceding day had carried first announcement of the tenth season of the Esplanade concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky was immediately excited.

"Especially," he said, "because the concerts are for the first time under the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. We are now giving concerts for all classes of people. For those who cannot afford the regular winter concerts we have long had the Pops. Now the Symphony Orchestra will give concerts even for those who cannot afford to pay at all."

The conductor of the Symphony Orchestra believes that it is unique in this respect, and in the length of seasonal employment for the musicians. The Festival has increased this in recent years, so that those who wish may play under a single management most of the year round, with a needed vacation only between the end of the Festival and the beginning of the main season.

At mention of the Yale Commencement Dr. Koussevitzky spoke of Walt Disney. he was not merely enthusiastic about "Snow White." He regards Disney as a unique creative artist of the screen, because Disney has not merely employed the screen to imitate life or other arts, but has created an art in the screen's own terms.

After the Yale Commencement, Dr. Koussevitzky said, he would return to Saratoga to await the rehearsals for the Festival.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER

JUL 10 1938

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

THE question has been raised as to the calibre of the Boston Pops Orchestra, some people edging away from their recordings with the belief it is a small concert group. On the contrary, every man is a regular member of the Boston Symphony which Koussevitzky directs during the winter season. During the summer an extensive series is offered in Symphony Hall which are more in the order of promenade concerts, offering lighter fare. It is this same series which is broadcast on Wednesday nights in the summer. Arthur Fiedler, associate conductor of the Boston Orchestra, is in full charge during the series. Descended from a long line of great musicians, he has gained a reputation as one of the finest of the young American conductors. The list offered by the Boston Pops is rapidly approaching in size that of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and it is a real break for the record buyer to be able to obtain performances as outstanding in every way as either of the other two eastern groups at 50 cents less a disc.

Victor has recorded five waltzes of Johann Strauss by the Boston Pops, "Wine, Women, and Song," "Wiener Blut," "Artist's Life," "Emperor Waltz" and "Fruhlingstimmen." Perhaps these versions will not be found by some to "sob" with quite the requisite intensity, but I am highly pleased with them. It is a splendid selection that has been made and will take precedence over any other versions in the domestic catalogs. Victor et 445. $7.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

JUL 24 1938

R

es. Naturally, the flir
s don't score on ever they work on. No o
how many catch on b
ir financial ears are pi

Here are two popular favorites, nicely arranged and played by this group from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Pop Goes the Weasel"—Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting, Victor Record 4397.

The old fiddler's tune is used as a theme for these humorous symphonic variations. From start to finish, "Pop Goes The Weasel" is deftly maneuvered through many interesting forms not usually associated with this type of music. The theme appears in music-box style, as a minuet, in ugal form and in jazz idiom. It may not be important musically, but it's a lot of fun.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

JUL 10 1938

Music Notes

By GEORGE
SCHAUN

Concerts This Week

Berkshire Festival To Fore Artistically

If one looks instead toward the serious delights of the symphony and chamber music, then there is even more plentiful news. This summer, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, extending from August 4 to 14 under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky, will no doubt take first place, artistically, as it apparently did by general agreement last year. The festival association's immense tent, when it was set up on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass., was seemingly strong, but the stormy weather of last summer was almost the undoing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its distinguished audiences. Now the much-discussed tent is a thing of the past and a large open-air auditorium has been constructed to avoid damage to feminine finery.

Today, too, as symphony seasons start in various communities, Mrs. Coolidge's fine summer series of chamber music concerts begins at Pittsfield, Mass., and will continue until September 23 when the final program will be given by the Roth Quartet. This week, too, will mark the beginning of a long opera and symphony season at Chautauqua, while some of the smaller and scantily publicized festivals are typified by the series of Saturday afternoon concerts to be given until September in an outdoor ampitheater at Woodstock, N. Y.

In the pioneer days of Theodore Thomas, one could have counted the really significant summer concert and opera series of America on the fingers of two hands. Now, a reasonably complete list would cover many sheets of paper. For what it is worth, however, estimates of the audiences that attended musical affairs last summer range as high as twenty-five millions—and there is no one to say that the figure should not be much higher.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUL 10 1938

Berkshire Festival Completes Solo List

Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass, and Beal Hober, soprano, will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month.

This completes the list of soloists who will participate in the inaugural of the Festival's new shed at "Tanglewood," the others being Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan Opera contralto, and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano. Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon will sing with the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston at the opening concert when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," will be performed. Miss Hober will sing Aug. 11 in the all-Wagner program.

The concerts will open Thursday evening, Aug. 4, and will continue through the following Sunday. There will then be an interval until the 11th when three more concerts will be presented that night, Saturday and Sunday afternoon.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 12 1938

Concert Shed For Berkshire Fete Finished

Symphonic Festival's New Hall at Tanglewood to Accommodate 5,000; to Open August 4th

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new concert shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been finished and it is attracting many visitors. On Sunday morning many persons on driving trips through the beautiful country took the short detour from the main highway to go to Tanglewood to see the new concert hall, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by its famous leader, Serge Koussevitzky, will begin the festival program on Thursday, August 4.

Driving up the lane that leads from the gate, visitors park their car in the field or beside the roadway. After going in over the lawn that surrounds the house, one finds the great new building to the left of the former entrance way. It is located near a grove of old trees and far enough to the side so that the vistas of Tanglewood and the view of the lake are not obscured.

The light colored roof stands on steel pillars and is upheld by a network of construction which resembles a bridge, though there are frequent pillars. The sides are open so that the distances seem smaller than they are. All around the sides of the building there are broad spaces roofed over and these will later be used for seating space if the demand necessitates more places for the audience.

New chairs, which are clamped down to metal strips and some of the old benches will seat the audiences of perhaps 5,000 which will attend the musical programs this summer. The stage for the musicians is as large as their home stage in Symphony hall, Boston. The lighting and acoustics are said to be perfect.

If you go to Tanglewood on one of these informal visits and you wait around probably some official of the building company will come along and explain everything you want to ask about, the design, the construction and all about it. They are all enthusiastic about it. The permanent floor and other features will be added to the building later.

Tickets are being sold, for the full season, for one series or for single concerts. In Schenectady the reservations are being made at the Cluett and Sons music in State street. The programs will be as follows:

Series Programs

Series A—Thursday, August 4, at 8:30 o'clock. Chorus and chorale from the cantata, "Ein Feste Burg ist Unser Gott," Bach; Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy," Beethoven, the Cecilia Society of Boston and soloists assisting.

Saturday, August 6 at 8:30. Symphony in E flat, by Haydn; "Le Mer," Debussy; Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Sibelius.

Sunday afternoon, August 7, at 3:30 o'clock. "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra, Mozart; Symphony in E minor, Brahms; "Music for the Theater," Copland; "Ma Mere l'Oye" (Mother Goose) five children's pieces, Ravel; symphonic poem, "The Pines of Rome," Respighi.

Series B—Thursday, August 11, 8:30 o'clock. "Die Walkure," introduction to act 3, "The Ride of the Valkyries," act 3 final scene, Wagner; act 3, "Siegfried," Wagner, four soloists assisting.

Saturday, August 13, 8:30, Symphony No. 6, in F major, "Pastoral," Beethoven; "Angelus," from Symphony No. 3, in B minor, Hadley; Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetic, Tchaikowsky.

Sunday afternoon, August 14, 3:30. Symphony in B flat, Schumann; "Tapiola," tone poem for orchestra, Sibelius; Symphony No. 2 in D major, Brahms.

Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give four lectures in connection with the symphony festival.

THE SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY UNION AND REPUBLICAN, SPRINGFIELD, M

Music Shed Rises at Tanglewood Marking Nev

Structure Built for Boston Symphony Series Of Annual Concerts Will Seat 5000—Tests Show It to Be Noise Proof

By BENJAMIN BUXTON

THE recently completed music shed at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, which will house the Berkshire Symphonic festival during its fifth series of concerts the first and second weekends of August, stands as a symbol of living music in America. The very attitude of the festival directors toward the structure and the concerts that are to take place under its ample, fan-shaped roof, indicates that it is no monument to a dead past but is rather a shining and courageous leader, looking into the future with an eagerness tempered only by an intelligent caution.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival is of America, but more especially of New England, although its fame has reached all parts of the country. Not only in the prodigal beauty of the Berkshire hills, but in the canniness with which the trustees plan its course, in their efficient elimination of error from year to year, in the careful economy with which the financial details are handled, it is indigenous to New England and inseparable from it.

The spirit of the Berkshires and the people that live there and work toward the success, both present and future, of the festival, is one of friendly cooperation. No social line is drawn—everyone is an enthusiastic salesman and no one is too proud to distribute circulars, sell tickets, give generously of whatever services may be asked.

Built Subject to Change

The simple design of the shed bears witness to the earnestness of the enterprise. Purely functional in its purpose, with steel rafters frankly displayed in the interior, it is a shed—not a temple. It is by no means regarded as a finished product. It has been put together in such a way that if during the coming series the acoustics or any other details fail to suit the needs of the orchestra and audiences, drastic changes can be made.

Opera, for instance, is no more than a remote possibility for the festival, and will perhaps never be tried, but construction has been planned so that if later the lyric drama is to form a part of the curriculum, a few changes in the area near the stage will provide the necessary space for scenery and effects.

Thus, with the flexibility of a youthful, expanding organization, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival of America works busily on its current problems, solves them with the shrewdness of a New Englander, and turns toward the future with bright imagination. That it has been eminently successful is shown by a glance at the programs from one year to the next. Each year something new has been added—something to make it come closer to the severely high ideals of its directors and to acquire a permanently established, well-integrated organization.

And change in the festival plans has not come to a halt. The usual season of six concerts may later be increased; the addition of a school for orchestral conductors during the summer months is definitely being planned; the correlation of the many other artistic projects in the Berkshires is already being mapped out.

Four Years Ago

Four years ago in May the festival idea was suggested by the late Dr Henry Hadley, American composer-conductor. The plan, after being presented to seasonal and year-around residents in the Berkshires, was examined with characteristic New England skepticism, and accepted by them. In June, 1934, the plans finally got under way. Sponsors were given the use of the Dan Hanna estate at Interlaken in the township of Stockbridge. A shell was built in the horse show ring on the farm, and, with the assistance of federal funds, benches were constructed.

A group of 65 members from the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra was assembled under the direction of Dr Hadley and in August were presented a series of three concerts to audiences estimated at between 1800 and 2000.

Guarantors of this first year were as follows: Norval H. Busey, Jr., of Lee and New York city; Mrs Bruce Crane of Dalton; Mrs Charles C. Griswold of Stockbridge and New York; John R. Hopkins of Stockbridge; Mrs Halstead Lindsley of Lenox and New York; Mrs John B. Lloyd of Lee and Philadelphia; Mrs Arthur Frederic Schermerhorn of Lenox and New York; Clark W. Tobin of Stockbridge and New York.

Breadth of Charter

In the fall of 1934 the festival was incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts with the broadest kind of a charter, "to encourage education in the arts, to organize, conduct and support an annual musical festival, to provide opportunities for developing musical talents, to engage in any other activities that will legitimately aid and further art. There is no capital stock and the corporation is not conducted for the purpose of profit but to contribute to the development of art and music." (From the by-laws of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc.)

The first officers were as follows: Honorary president, Mrs Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge; president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith; vice-presidents, Mrs Carlos M. de Heredia, Norval H. Busey, Jr., Mrs Owen Johnson; clerk, George W. Edman; treasurer, John C. Lynch.

The 1935 festival, held again at the Hanna farm under Dr Hadley's leadership, had the added attractions of the Berkshire Musical association chorus, directed by Horace Hunt of Dalton, and Rudolph Ganz, pianist. As a precaution against the uncertain New England weather, a tent seating 3000 persons was rented and erected. This was a wise move, since at the final concert, the elements let themselves loose, soaking the horseshow ring and the outdoor stage.

Additional benches had been built for the second festival and further assistance was provided by a small federal grant through the cooperation of Owen Johnson. Attendance was slightly larger than the previous year, but finances, in 1935 continued to present a major problem.

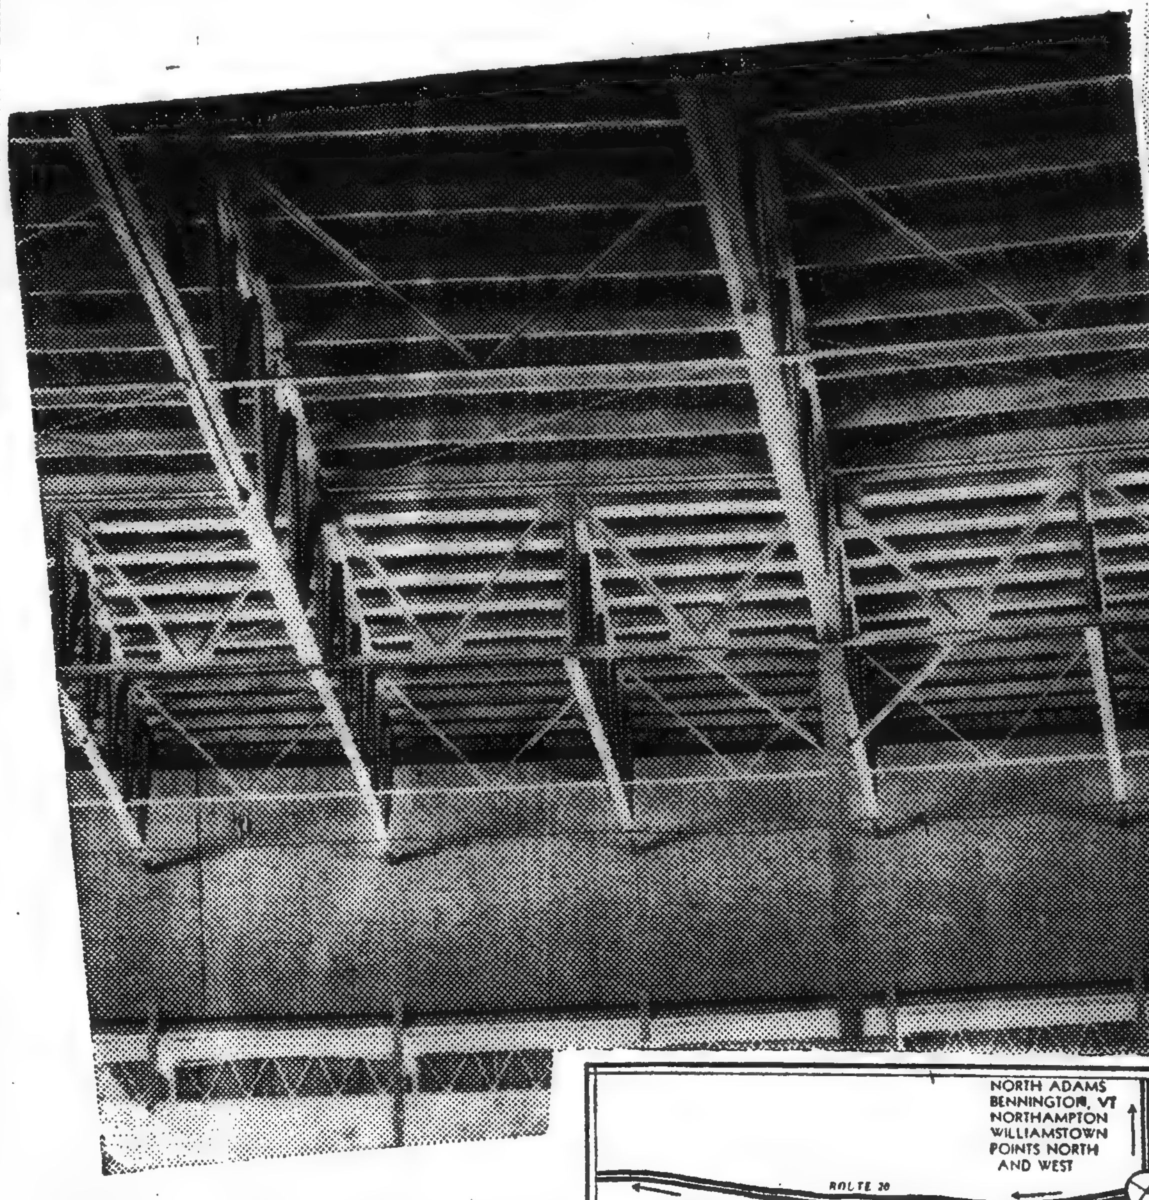
The first two years thus brought the first phase of the festival to a conclusion. But all enterprise, especially that which is new, must change in order to live. Recognizing the fact that complete artistic success would depend to a large extent on a unit organization, the directors started negotiations with George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony, and that orchestra was invited to present the third series of concerts in 1936.

The plan of the Berkshire festival was received with enthusiasm by Dr Koussevitzky, who had been one of the prime movers in a similar project in Russia just before the outbreak of the revolution. So in this way, an ideal conceived more than 20 years before in a foreign country, was at last to come to its realization in the Berkshires of America.

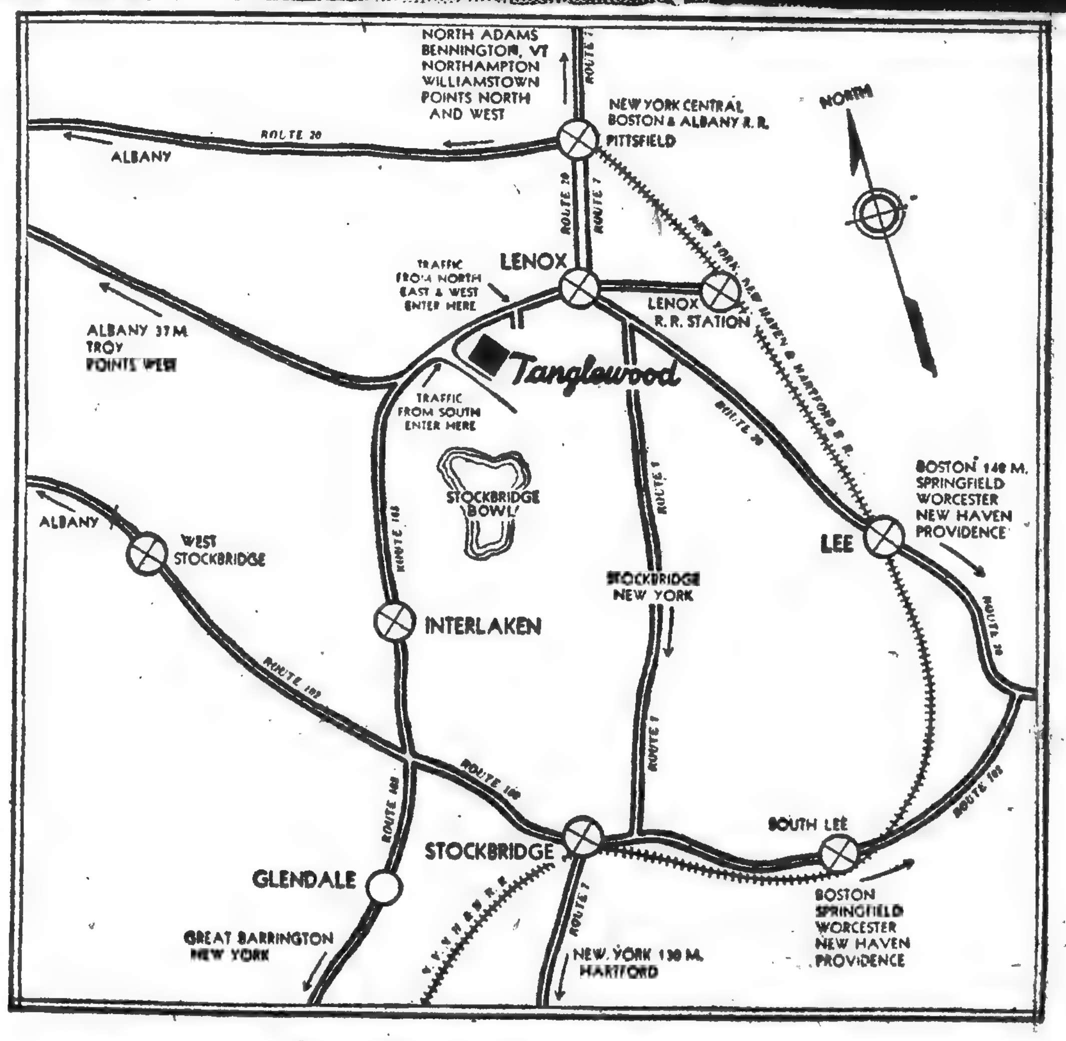
The Boston orchestra gave its first series of concerts in 1936 at Holmwood, estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson, owing to the purchase of the Hanna farm by Mrs Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Cleveland. Mrs Miller, always a supporter of the festival, offered the festival its original home, but it was decided to change the location.

Cont.

Candid Camera Shot of Dr Koussevitzky In a Moment of Explanation.



Interior Looking Toward Steel-Beamed Ceiling



Roads Leading to Tanglewood

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUL 15 1938

FESTIVAL PRESIDENT AT TANGLEWOOD

Back from Europe after a several weeks' vacation, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, drove up to Tanglewood yesterday to inspect the shed built for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"I was delighted with the building and its location, as I am sure everyone else is who has visited Tanglewood," said Miss Robinson Smith. "It will be a thrilling experience to attend the opening concert August 4, when Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra inaugurate the building with the chorale and chorus from Bach's cantata, 'A Mighty Fortress Is Our God'."

Construction for 1938 has ended, but that does not mean the building is finished, Miss Robinson Smith pointed out. "We have raised $80,000 in the short period of a few months without the aid of any outside agency. This money has come from all parts of the country, but the bulk of it has come from the Berkshires and nearby. This money has been spent to provide the essentials this year—protection from sun and rain. There is no floor, no sides, and the stage is only temporary.

"More money is needed to provide other essentials. It must be raised to insure the permanency of the Festival. The eyes of the world are upon the Berkshires, I know. I have just returned from Europe, where once great festivals flourished, but where today conditions are not as settled as we would wish. We have an opportunity here that must not be missed.

"Now, as for subscriptions, I hope everyone will realize they will be given preference over single concert tickets in assignment of reserved seats. Reserved seats are going fast and to avoid disappointment, it would be well to make reservations either through the office or local chairmen at once."

MONTCLAIR, N. J.
SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES

JUL 15 1938

Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, opus 6, number 10, has been added to the program of the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Thursday night, Aug. 4. This concert will mark the opening of the new concert shed at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass. The complete program for that concert includes:

Chorale from Johann Sebastian Bach's Cantata, "Ein Feste Burg Is Unser Gott," with the audience joining in the singing and the Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston carrying the main burden of the vocal music; first chorus from the same cantata, the Handel Concerto and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with the Cecilia Society chorus taking part in the fourth movement. The instrumental part of the program will be done by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Soloists will be Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass.

AUBURN, N. Y.
CITIZEN - ADVERTISER

JUL 15 1938

Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Auburnians and their near neighbors motoring through or vacationing in the Berkshires next month will no doubt be interested in Berkshire Symphonic festival, an annual event established four years ago and showing steady growth in scope and talent. The Symphonic Festival's new music shed will be inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 15 1938

Mrs. Robeson at Crawford House

Special to the Herald Tribune

CRAWFORD NOTCH, N. H., July 14.—Today's arrivals at the Crawford House included Mrs. Andrew Robeson, of Newport, R. I.; Dr. and Mrs. Henry C. Cowles and her sister, Miss Mabel T. Fuller, who motored from New York, and Mr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for moun[illegible]

Mr. Lincoln Ellsworth, with Ralph Greenwood, [illegible]ord House guide, ascended Mount Washington today. Mr. and Mrs. Ellsworth dined here with Lady Golsan yesterday.

Mr. Henry B. Closson, Orange, N. J.; Mr. Charles A. Mead, Norwalk, Conn.; Mrs. Hugh Burr Gray, Boston, and Mrs. James H. Gray, Michigan; Mrs. George S. Haskell, Evanston, Ill., and Miss Henriette Rusch, Chicago; the Misses Annie and Irene Probert, Bridgeport, Conn., gave luncheons today at the hotel.

93

ASS.: JULY 3, 1938

Era in Berkshire Festival

Expansion of Western Massachusetts Project In Five Years Focuses National Interest On New England

Ext. from

The year 1936 was important not only for the increasing interest shown by the public but for the offer of Tanglewood, estate of Mrs Gorham Brooks, to the Boston Symphony as a permanent place for the festival. Now, with a new location, an orchestra of the first rank, and for the first time in its existence an increasing financial security, the organization could anticipate in 1937 a future much brighter than ever before.

Festival Enters New Phase

Entering the next important period of its young history, the festival went ahead with rapid strides. As though suddenly aware that the new-born was aggressive and must have attention, last year music lovers from 32 states, Canada and Europe crowded the highways leading to Tanglewood. More than 50 newspapers and magazines sent representatives. For the first time, a number of the concerts were broadcast over a coast-to-coast network with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who this year will again lecture on the festival programs at the Berkshire Museum of Art. Western Union installed a branch office to handle newspaper coverage. The great influx of people made it difficult to find lodgings in Stockbridge, Lenox and Pittsfield.

Always mindful of the artistic excellence of the festival, the directors turned their attention once more to the mechanical details and the listening qualities of the improved and larger tent, which seated 5000 persons. The old shell, which had been revamped when moved to Holmwood, was again overhauled and reshaped to meet the requirements of Dr Koussevitzky. From the beginning, the shell, constructed by local carpenters under the direction of Joseph Franz, an engineer and festival trustee, has given complete satisfaction. Much care had been taken and in 1937 it demonstrated how perfectly it had been built, since in no place in the tent was there a "dead spot."

Most important of all happenings during the 1937 series was the cloudburst, which furnished, unbidden, a persistent and distressing obligato to the all-Wagner concert. New England wetaher had again made itself vocal, and this time seemed to thunder a command to abandon the tent for a more permanent structure as a protection from the elements.

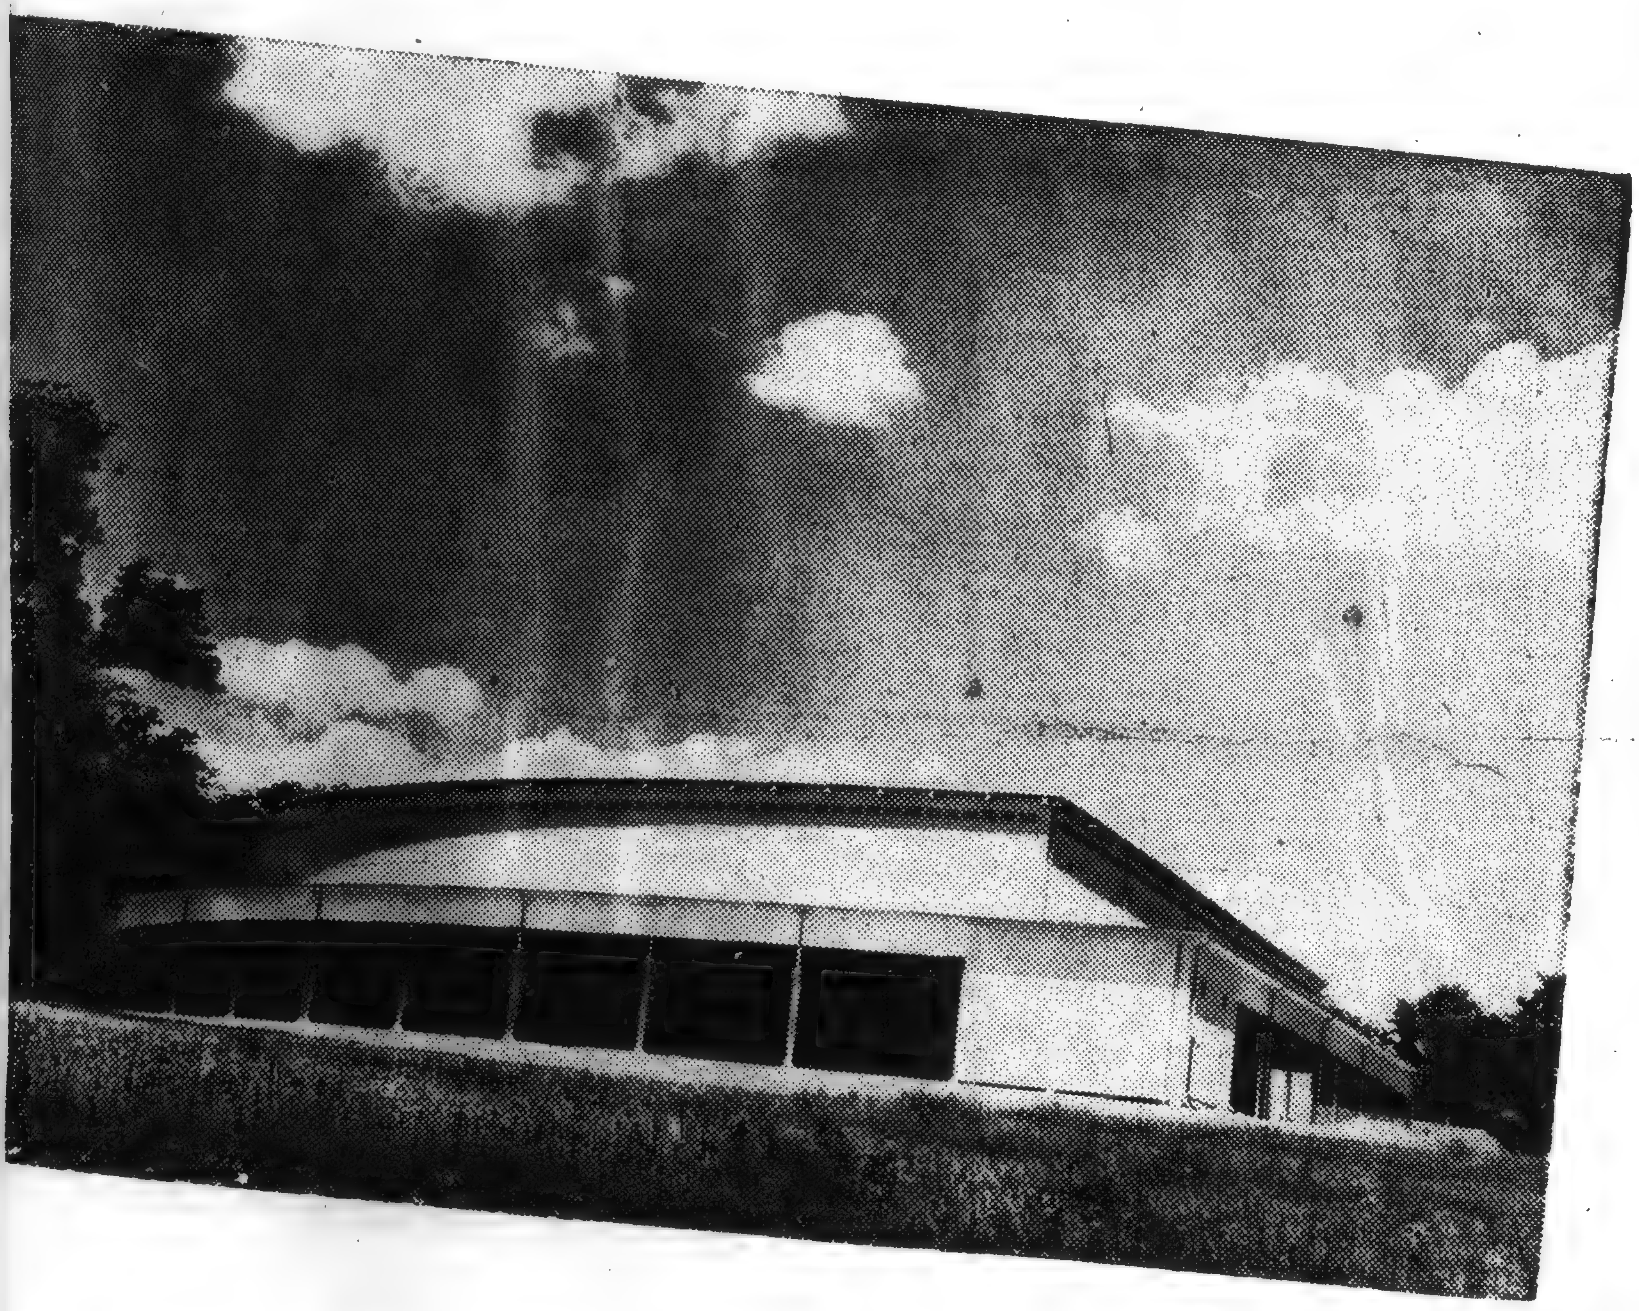
Shed Erected

Now again more growing pains. The story is told as quickly as the succession of events that followed: An intensive campaign for money; a sum of more than $80,000 raised in the space of a few months for a music shed; December 20, the trustees approved revised plans for the shed; December 28, plans approved by the orchestra trustees; December 31, ground broken; March, steel for shed delivered; April, shed completed to plans called for this year. Eventual completion, including a permanent floor, stage, etc., will come when more funds are available. The seating capacity is 5000 and 3000 steel chairs with padded seats and backs have been bought.

The shed's acoustics has received the most careful consideration. Prof Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who was retained by the festival to make tests during the process of construction, has reported that acoustics should be "entirely satisfactory."

Excerpts of his report are as follows: "The noise made by a fairly heavy shower of rain on the roof was not sufficient to cause any annoyance, even in the empty auditorium. It is impossible to predict exactly from measurements made in an empty auditorium how music will sound in each part of the building when an audience is present, but it is quite possible to find from such tests any major faults.

"It appears that the tilted reflecting surface in front of the back wall is serving the double purpose for which it was designed: To present the focussing of reflected sound onto the stage and front seats, and to reinforce the sound in the region of the back seats. In view of these results, I have no further recommendations to suggest. I await with great interest the reaction test: The reaction of the audience and musicians to the first performance."



Here Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Present Fifth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday and Saturday Nights, August 4, 6, 11 and 13 and Sunday afternoons, August 7 and 14.

VACATION MOTORISTS GIVEN HEALTH HINTS

San Francisco—(AP)—A code of health rules for vacation motorists has been drawn up by the United States public health service. It includes:

Don't slump in the seat—it's hard on your back.

Avoid eye strain.

Drive slowly on rough roads and relax when taking bumps.

Have foot pedals or seat comfortably adjusted in relation to the length of your legs.

Rest at intervals.

Eat sparingly while driving, especially in warm weather.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 12 1938

Festival Tickets Are Mailed

Two Rehearsals, Aug. 6 and 13 For Members

STOCKBRIDGE, July 12—Tickets for the six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 were mailed to the 2300 members last night. With the tickets went a letter of suggestions for parking and a diagram of the layout at Tanglegood where the concerts will be given.

Tickets for Rehearsals

In addition there were tickets for the rehearsal given as a privilege to members and patrons. Because of the many members, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, is arranging two rehearsals for the privilege. They will be on Aug. 6 and Aug. 13, at 10 A. M. Members subscribing to one series of concerts will be entitled to one rehearsal only. Members subscribing to both series may attend both rehearsals.

On the rehearsal ticket is printed: "Important. Please be in your seats by 10 o'clock and do not leave while the orchestra is playing."

The rehearsals will be supervised as closely as if they were regular performances. Willard M. Sistare, chairman of ushers, will have his large force of ticket takers and ushers on hand both Saturdays.

Chairmen Meet

Sub-chairmen met at the Berkshire Garden Center yesterday afternoon to report on subscriptions and single ticket sales. Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, reported that through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor, a Festival trustee, a ticket booth for use in Pittsfield was being built and would be installed on South Street the end of the month. She also reported having tickets on sale at several places in Pittsfield. Most encouraging were the increased subscriptions from distance places. Joseph Franz reported on progress made with the new shed at Tanglewood. George W. Edman reported for the co-ordinating committee. Mrs. Edman, executive vice president, urged all chairmen to do their utmost to bring an impressive report at the next meeting to be held in about two weeks.

Early Reservations Advised

Because of the increasing mail at the Festival office asking for reservations, it was suggested to chairmen that they should advise music lovers in their territories to take out subscriptions or single tickets as soon as possible, if they wish to secure the best locations. Members had first choice in the order of receipt of applications. Subscribers are now being assigned seats in the order of their applications. They will be given preference over those taking single tickets.

Koussevitzky Alters Festival Programs

Work by Prokofieff Will Replace Sibelius Tone Poem at Concert of the Boston Symphony

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," orchestral suite, Op. 60, will replace Sibelius's "Tapiola" on the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's closing concert on August 14. Prokofieff composed his music for the film of the same name. On August 13 Mrs. Henry Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York will be guests of the festival trustees. The program will commence with "Angelus" from Hadley's third symphony in B minor, Op. 60. The revised programs for the series follow:

Thursday, August 4

Chorale from cantata "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott"; first chorus from "Eine feste Burg" .... Bach
Concerto Grosso, Op. 6, No. 10, D minor .... Handel
Symphony No. 9 .... Beethoven
Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler, conductor, Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass.

Saturday, August 6

Symphony, E flat No. 99 (B & H No. 3) .... Haydn
La Mer .... Debussy
Symphony No. 1, E minor, Op. 39 .... Sibelius

Sunday, August 7

Eine kleine Nachtmusik (K. 525) .... Mozart
Symphony No. 4, E minor, Op. 98 .... Brahms
Music for the Theater .... Copland
Ma Mere l'Oye .... Ravel
Pines of Rome .... Respighi

Thursday, August 11

Walkuere, Act 1, final scene .... Wagner
Sieglinde, Beal Hober
Siegmund, Paul Althouse
Siegfried, Act III .... Wagner
Wanderer .... Norman Cordon
Erda .... Anna Kaskas
Siegfried .... Paul Althouse
Bruennhilde .... Beal Hober

Saturday, August 13

Angelus, from Symphony No. 3, Op. 60 .... Hadley
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral" .... Beethoven
Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique" .... Tchaikovsky

Sunday, August 14

Symphony No. 1, B flat .... Schumann
Liet. Kije .... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2, D major .... Brahms

All concerts, excepting those of August 7 and 14, which begin at 3:30 in the afternoon, take place in the evening at 8:30. Reservations for either series of concerts or for single concerts and for four lectures by Olin Downes, may be made by writing to the Berkshire Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass.

JUL 14 1938

Mr. Osborne Plays On Esplanade

Mr. Chester Osborne, director of the Lexington High School Band, has been selected by Conductor Arthur Fiedler, to play in the trumpet section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is playing ~~at the~~ Esplanade Concerts every night except Saturday, through July. To be chosen to this distinguished group of musicians is a great honor and shows appreciation of Mr. Osborne's talent.

This summer, Mr. Osborne is giving a course at Boston University in instrumental music.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 14 1938

Tickets Mailed For 6 Concerts By Symphony

Privilege of Watching Rehearsal Goes With Each Concert Series

STOCKBRIDGE, July 14—Tickets for the six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 were mailed to the 2,300 members this week. With the tickets went a letter of suggestions for parking and a diagram of the layout at Tanglegood where the concerts will be given.

In addition there were tickets for the rehearsal given as a privilege to members and patrons. Because of the many members, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, is arranging two rehearsals for the privilege. They will be on August 6 and August 13, at 10 a. m. Members subscribing to one series of concerts will be entitled to one rehearsal only. Members subscribing to both series may attend both rehearsals.

On the rehearsal ticket is printed:

"Important. Please be in your seats by 10 o'clock and do not leave while the orchestra is playing."

12 years, Job H. Montgomery, Camas closely as if they were regular performances. Willard M. Sistare, chairman of ushers, will have his large force of ticket takers and ushers on hand both Saturdays.

Because of the increasing mail at the Festival office asking for reservations, it was suggested to chairmen that they should advise music lovers in their territories to take out subscriptions or single tickets as soon as possible, if they wish to secure the best locations. Members had first choice in the order of receipt of applications. Subscribers are now being assigned seats in the order of their applications. They will be given preference over those taking single tickets.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS

JUL 13 1938

A SNAPP OF MUSIQUE

You can not have escaped the fact that civic groups have a "safety week," that fruit growers have an "apple week", and that manufacturers have a "mouse trap week." The phonograph companies have obviously borrowed the idea, and have then expanded it into a "violinists' summer."

The Heifetz recording of the Franck A Major Sonata was released in June by Victor, and the Szigeti recording of the Brahms D Minor was released by Columbia the same month. Victor's July list has not only Heifetz as one of its stars, but also Menuhin and Kreisler.

Heifetz plays Prokofieff's second Concerto, in G Minor, with the help of the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting. ~~Prokofieff~~ has passed through his period of imitating other composers, and has passed through his period of trying to startle listeners with wild sounds. The Concerto has its inharmonious measures, to be sure, but these measures have meaning, so are not discordant for the sake of any possible "effect." The music, indeed, is frequently lovely, nearly always intense and stirring, and seldom "empty." Its progress and its substance are contemporary, in the better meaning of that word, for the composer has done his own thinking, and his head is pretty clear as well as substantial. Heifetz and the Bostonians are consummate (album 450).

Menuhin records the D Minor Schumann Concerto which, received so much publicity this last winter. The Philharmonic-Symphony, John Barbirolli conducting, takes care of the orchestra score. If you read the newspapers, you already know that the Concerto has been labeled inferior Schumann. It seems to be the product of a tired and bewildered mind, which sometimes had spurts of energy resulting in good music, and which sometimes relied wholly on technical skill resulting in arid and obvious music. Parts of the slow movement approach the true Schumann, but too much of the opening and closing movements are unworthy of the composer's great gifts. Menuhin plays magnificently, of course, but even his genius is not enough. The Concerto is a "museum piece" rather than vital music, and that's a pity (album 451).

Kreisler recorded the first movement of the Paganini D Major Concerto, first rescoring the orchestral accompaniment. This listener has not heard the recording, but other reviewers have spoken highly of it (album 361).

W. W.

93

Era in Berkshire Festival

Expansion of Western Massachusetts Project In Five Years Focuses National Interest On New England

The year 1936 was important not only for the increasing interest shown by the public but for the offer of Tanglewood, estate of Mrs Gorham Brooks, to the Boston Symphony as a permanent place for the festival. Now, with a new location, an orchestra of the first rank, and for the first time in its existence an increasing financial security, the organization could anticipate in 1937 a future much brighter than ever before.

Festival Enters New Phase

Entering the next important period of its young history, the festival went ahead with rapid strides. As though suddenly aware that the new-born was aggressive and must have attention, last year music lovers from 32 states, Canada and Europe crowded the highways leading to Tanglewood. More than 50 newspapers and magazines sent representatives. For the first time, a number of the concerts were broadcast over a coast-to-coast network with Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, who this year will again lecture on the festival programs at the Berkshire Museum of Art. Western Union installed a branch office to handle newspaper coverage. The great influx of people made it difficult to find lodgings in Stockbridge, Lenox and Pittsfield.

Always mindful of the artistic excellence of the festival, the directors turned their attention once more to the mechanical details and the listening qualities of the improved and larger tent, which seated 5000 persons. The old shell, which had been revamped when moved to Holmwood, was again overhauled and reshaped to meet the requirements of Dr Koussevitzky. From the beginning, the shell, constructed by local carpenters under the direction of Joseph Franz, an engineer and festival trustee, has given complete satisfaction. Much care had been taken and in 1937 it demonstrated how perfectly it had been built, since in no place in the tent was there a "dead spot."

Most important of all happenings during the 1937 series was the cloudburst, which furnished, unbidden, a persistent and distressing obligato to the all-Wagner concert. New England wetaher had again made itself vocal, and this time seemed to thunder a command to abandon the tent for a more permanent structure as a protection from the elements.

Shed Erected

New again more growing pains. The story is told as quickly as the succession of events that followed: An intensive campaign for money; a sum of more than $80,000 raised in the space of a few months for a music shed; December 20, the trustees approved revised plans for the shed; December 28, plans approved by the orchestra trustees; December 31, ground broken; March, steel for shed delivered; April, shed completed to plans called for this year. Eventual completion, including a permanent floor, stage, etc., will come when more funds are available. The seating capacity is 5000 and 3000 steel chairs with padded seats and backs have been bought.

The shed's acoustics has received the most careful consideration. Prof Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who was retained by the festival to make tests during the process of construction, has reported that acoustics should be "entirely satisfactory."

Excerpts of his report are as follows: "The noise made by a fairly heavy shower of rain on the roof was not sufficient to cause any annoyance, even in the empty auditorium. It is impossible to predict exactly from measurements made in an empty auditorium how music will sound in each part of the building when an audience is present, but it is quite possible to find from such tests any major faults.

"It appears that the tilted reflecting surface in front of the back wall is serving the double purpose for which it was designed: To present the focussing of reflected sound onto the stage and front seats, and to reinforce the sound in the region of the back seats. In view of these results, I have no further recommendations to suggest. I await with great interest the reaction test: The reaction of the audience and musicians to the first performance."

Here Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Present Fifth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday and Saturday Nights, August 4, 6, 11 and 13 and Sunday afternoons, August 7 and 14.

VACATION MOTORISTS GIVEN HEALTH HINTS

San Francisco—(AP)—A code of health rules for vacation motorists has been drawn up by the United States public health service. It includes:

Don't slump in the seat—it's hard on your back.

Avoid eye strain.

Drive slowly on rough roads and relax when taking bumps.

Have foot pedals or seat comfortably adjusted in relation to the length of your legs.

Rest at intervals.

Eat sparingly while driving, especially in warm weather.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 12 1938

Festival Tickets Are Mailed

Two Rehearsals, Aug. 6 and 13 For Members

STOCKBRIDGE, July 12—Tickets for the six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 were mailed to the 2300 members last night. With the tickets went a letter of suggestions for parking and a diagram of the layout at Tanglegood where the concerts will be given.

Tickets for Rehearsals

In addition there were tickets for the rehearsal given as a privilege to members and patrons. Because of the many members, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, is arranging two rehearsals for the privilege. They will be on Aug. 6 and Aug. 13, at 10 A. M. Members subscribing to one series of concerts will be entitled to one rehearsal only. Members subscribing to both series may attend both rehearsals.

On the rehearsal ticket is printed: "Important. Please be in your seats by 10 o'clock and do not leave while the orchestra is playing."

The rehearsals will be supervised as closely as if they were regular performances. Willard M. Sistare, chairman of ushers, will have his large force of ticket takers and ushers on hand both Saturdays.

Chairmen Meet

Sub-chairmen met at the Berkshire Garden Center yesterday afternoon to report on subscriptions and single ticket sales. Mrs. Louis E. Underwood, chairman for Pittsfield, reported that through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor, a Festival trustee, a ticket booth for use in Pittsfield was being built and would be installed on South Street the end of the month. She also reported having tickets on sale at several places in Pittsfield. Most encouraging were the increased subscriptions from distance places. Joseph Franz reported on progress made with the new shed at Tanglewood. George W. Edman reported for the co-ordinating committee. Mrs. Edman, executive vice president, urged all chairmen to do their utmost to bring an impressive report at the next meeting to be held in about two weeks.

Early Reservations Advised

Because of the increasing mail at the Festival office asking for reservations, it was suggested to chairmen that they should advise music lovers in their territories to take out subscriptions or single tickets as soon as possible, if they wish to secure the best locations. Members had first choice in the order of receipt of applications. Subscribers are now being assigned seats in the order of their applications. They will be given preference over those taking single tickets.

Koussevitzky Alters Festival Programs

Work by Prokofieff Will Replace Sibelius Tone Poem at Concert of the Boston Symphony

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," orchestral suite, Op. 60, will replace Sibelius's "Tapiola" on the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's closing concert on August 14. Prokofieff composed his music for the film of the same name. On August 13 Mrs. Henry Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York will be guests of the festival trustees. The program will commence with "Angelus" from Hadley's third symphony in B minor, Op. 60. The revised programs for the series follow:

Thursday, August 4

Chorale from cantata "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott"; first chorus from "Eine feste Burg" .... Bach
Concerto Grosso, Op. 6, No. 10, D minor .... Handel
Symphony No. 9 .... Beethoven
Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass.

Saturday, August 6

Symphony, E flat No. 99 (B & H No. 3) .... Haydn
La Mer .... Debussy
Symphony No. 1, E minor, Op. 39 .... Sibelius

Sunday, August 7

Eine kleine Nachtmusik (K. 525) .... Mozart
Symphony No. 4, E minor, Op. 98 .... Brahms
Music for the Theater .... Copland
Ma Mere l'Oye .... Ravel
Pines of Rome .... Respighi

Thursday, August 11

Walkuere, Act 1, final scene .... Wagner
Sieglinde, Beal Hober
Siegmund, Paul Althouse
Siegfried, Act III .... Wagner
Wanderer .... Norman Cordon
Erda .... Anna Kaskas
Siegfried .... Paul Althouse
Bruennhilde .... Beal Hober

Saturday, August 13

Angelus, from Symphony No. 3, Op. 60 .... Hadley
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral" .... Beethoven
Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique" .... Tchaikovsky

Sunday, August 14

Symphony No. 1, B flat .... Schumann
Liet. Kije .... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2, D major .... Brahms

All concerts, excepting those of August 7 and 14, which begin at 3:30 in the afternoon, take place in the evening at 8:30. Reservations for either series of concerts or for single concerts and for four lectures by Olin Downes, may be made by writing to the Berkshire Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass.

Minute - Man
Lexington, Mass

JUL 14 1938

Mr. Osborne Plays On Esplanade

Mr. Chester Osborne, director of the Lexington High School Band, has been selected by Conductor Arthur Fiedler, to play in the trumpet section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is playing at the Esplanade Concerts every night except Saturday, through July. To be chosen to this distinguished group of musicians is a great honor and shows appreciation of Mr. Osborne's talent.

This summer, Mr. Osborne is giving a course at Boston University in instrumental music.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS

JUL 13 1938

A SNAPP OF MUSIQUE

You can not have escaped the fact that civic groups have a "safety week," that fruit growers have an "apple week," and that manufacturers have a "mouse trap week." The phonograph companies have obviously borrowed the idea, and have then expanded it into a "violinists' summer."

The Heifetz recording of the Franck A Major Sonata was released in June by Victor, and the Szigeti recording of the Brahms D Minor was released by Columbia the same month. Victor's July list has not only Heifetz as one of its stars, but also Menuhin and Kreisler.

Heifetz plays Prokofieff's second Concerto, in G Minor, with the help of the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky conducting. Prokofieff has passed through his period of imitating other composers, and has passed through his period of trying to startle listeners with wild sounds. The Concerto has its inharmonious measures, to be sure, but these measures have meaning, so are not discordant for the sake of any possible "effect." The music, indeed, is frequently lovely, nearly always intense and stirring, and seldom "empty." Its progress and its substance are contemporary, in the better meaning of that word, for the composer has done his own thinking, and his head is pretty clear as well as substantial. Heifetz and the Bostonians are consummate (album 450).

Menuhin records the D Minor Schumann Concerto which, received so much publicity this last winter. The Philharmonic-Symphony, John Barbirolli conducting, takes care of the orchestra score. If you read the newspapers, you already know that the Concerto has been labeled inferior Schumann. It seems to be the product of a tired and bewildered mind, which sometimes had spurts of energy resulting in good music, and which sometimes relied wholly on technical skill resulting in arid and obvious music. Parts of the slow movement approach the true Schumann, but too much of the opening and closing movements are unworthy of the composer's great gifts. Menuhin plays magnificently, of course, but even his genius is not enough. The Concerto is a "museum piece" rather than vital music, and that's a pity (album 451).

Kreisler recorded the first movement of the Paganini D Major Concerto, first rescoring the orchestral accompaniment. This listener has not heard the recording, but other reviewers have spoken highly of it (album 261).

W. W.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 14 1938

Tickets Mailed For 6 Concerts By Symphony

Privilege of Watching Rehearsal Goes With Each Concert Series

STOCKBRIDGE, July 14—Tickets for the six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 were mailed to the 2,300 members this week. With the tickets went a letter of suggestions for parking and a diagram of the layout at Tanglegood where the concerts will be given.

In addition there were tickets for the rehearsal given as a privilege to members and patrons. Because of the many members, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, is arranging two rehearsals for the privilege. They will be on August 6 and August 13, at 10 a. m. Members subscribing to one series of concerts will be entitled to one rehearsal only. Members subscribing to both series may attend both rehearsals.

On the rehearsal ticket is printed:

"Important. Please be in your seats by 10 o'clock and do not leave while the orchestra is playing."

12 years, Job H. Montgomery, Cam- as closely as if they were regular performances. Willard M. Sistare, chairman of ushers, will have his large force of ticket takers and ushers on hand both Saturdays.

Because of the increasing mail at the Festival office asking for reservations, it was suggested to chairmen that they should advise music lovers in their territories to take out subscriptions or single tickets as soon as possible, if they wish to secure the best locations. Members had first choice in the order of receipt of applications. Subscribers are now being assigned seats in the order of their applications. They will be given preference over those taking single tickets.

$200,000 Concert Shell for Esplanade

GM

PRESENT SHELL TO CITY
Left to right, William J. Hickey, Jr., of Brookline, architect; Arthur Fiedler, and Dr. W. R. Barss, sound expert, at Esplanade concert last night as shell was presented to the city of Boston.

$200,000 SHELL FOR ESPLANADE

B. Post — July 7/38

Will Be Built With Funds Left to Hub by Maria Hatch

To more than 20,000 music lovers packed in solidly before the concert shell on the Esplanade last night, William J. Hickey, Jr., trustee of the estate of the late Maria Hatch, announced that between $200,000 and $250,000 of a special bequest she left to Boston will be used to construct a magnificent colored granite shell, approximately on the site of the present structure.

Continued on Page 3—First Col.

Continued From First Page

The huge audience, one of the largest, if not the largest, ever to gather on the bank of the Charles River to listen to the concert orchestra of Boston Symphony Orchestra players, applauded, and applauded again as Mr. Hickey presented a duplicate set of blueprints to Conductor Arthur Fiedler.

Two well known Boston architects and an M. I. T. acoustics engineer, Dr. W. R. Barss, have completed general plans of the permanent new shell, and construction of it, according to Mr. Hickey, will probably start next September, with the work completed in time for Mr. Fiedler's popular concerts next summer.

Boston has acquired title to the present $10,000 shell for the consideration of $1 and will move it as soon as the summer is over to World War Memorial Park in East Boston. The new structure will be erected about 30 feet back from where the shell stands now and will be much larger.

Intended as Permanent

Mr. Barss said that the inside dimensions of the new concert structure are planned to be 50 feet high, 75 feet wide and 40 feet deep. The building will contain dressing rooms for the musicians and Mr. Fiedler, as well as other conveniences, and it is intended to be a permanent thing of beauty and usefulness for Bostonians.

The money, Mr. Hickey explained, was left in the will of Maria Hatch in 1927. Nothing was done about it until Attorney-General Paul A. Dever looked into it some time ago and appointed two trustees to carry out the terms of Miss Hatch's will. It was her will that a memorial be erected to her brother, Edward Hatch—a memorial that would be a beauty spot in Boston as well as a pleasure to all persons. The new and costly shell will be known as the Edward Hatch Memorial.

The announcement came last night at the conclusion of Conductor Fiedler's 10th season of public concerts beside the Charles River in the West End of Boston. In spite of the record-breaking rainy weather the orchestra missed but one concert out of 22 evening performances. The weather was so bad on some of the evenings that the players of wooden instruments feared serious damage. The dampness affected the strings, the glue, and the tone of the instruments.

In addition to being Mr. Fiedler's 10th season, this summer saw his inauguration of a schedule of outdoor concerts for children. He expressed himself last night as satisfied and pleased at the quiet and appreciative attention given his concerts by his audiences. He feels that Boston has accepted the summer Esplanade concerts and is loyal to them. Mr. Fiedler is going soon to Haiti for a vacation.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 15 1938

Lanesboro

Festival Tickets Now on Sale

LANESBORO, July 15.—The local committee for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, of which Miss Margery Whiting is chairman, has placed both subscription and single tickets for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood on sale with Mrs. Burt Brundage at the Dutch Kitchen and Mrs. Robert P. Gardner at the Swedish Coffee Shop. Tickets also may be obtained from members of the committee, Mrs. F. P. Felton of Berkshire, Mrs. B. R. Hermann and Miss Whiting. In view of the demand for seats, the committee advises local music lovers to act promptly, particularly where reserved seats are desired. Miss Whiting will be pleased to give personal attention in securing the best possible seats if she is notified soon.

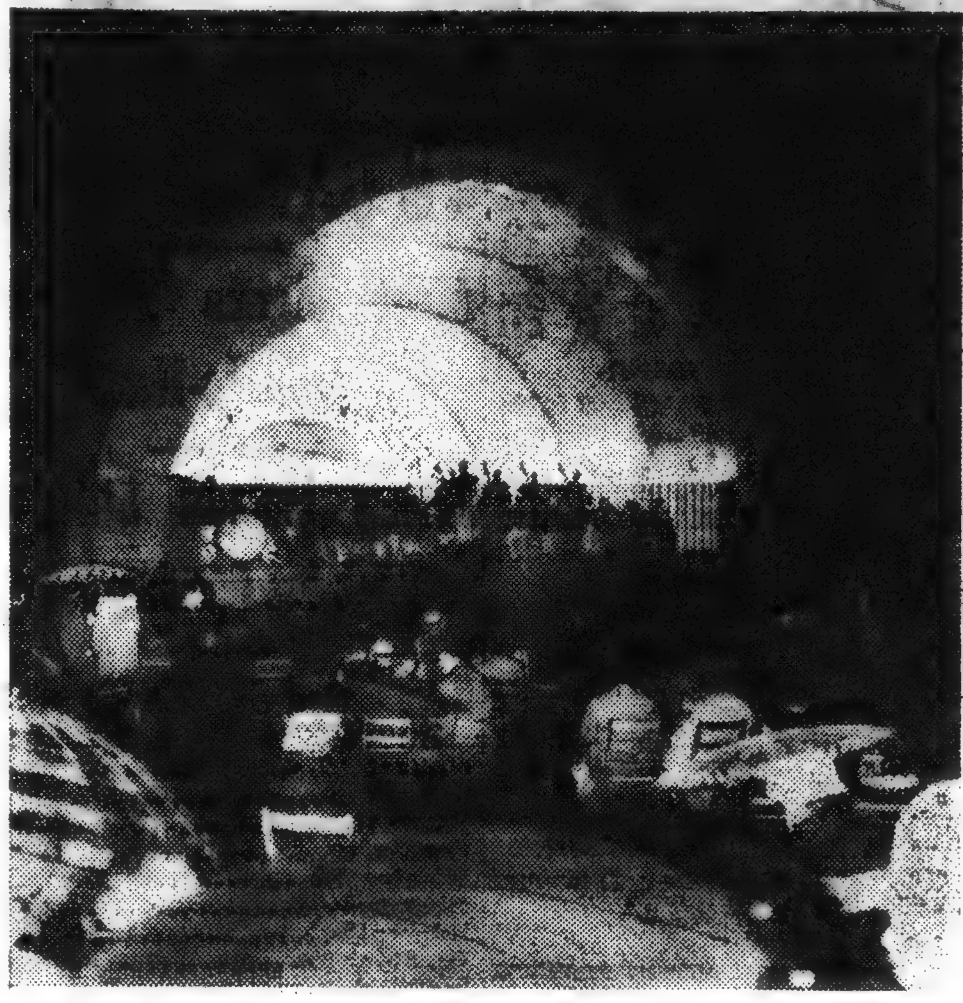
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 17 1938

TRAVELERS TO the Berkshire Symphony festival, next month, will find ample arrangements for parking, according to word from the festival office in Stockbridge. The huge music shed will accommodate 5700 people, and the great acreage at "Tanglewood," the estate on which it was erected this past year, will be supplemented by two large fields bordering West street in Lenox on Route 183. This extra space will have several entrances and exits. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is preparing to conduct his fifth annual festival, beginning on Aug. 4.

B. Globe — July 13/38

Fiedler Praises 500 Who Brave Rain to Hear Esplanade Concert



MUSIC IN THE RAIN

Sheltered by umbrellas or makeshift raincoats of newspapers from a persistent rain that fell upon them most of the evening, 500-odd lovers of finer music sat on camp stools or stood patiently on the wet grass of the Charles River Esplanade last night listening to another of Arthur Fiedler's Summertime concerts.

The small crowd which braved the rain remained throughout the full-length concert, appreciatively clapping wet hands after each well-executed piece and obtaining as many encores as any earlier concert crowd this season. No number was cut from tonight's program, although the intermission was made a little shorter.

"There's an audience that really loves music," Fiedler told a visitor with a gesture toward the damp gathering of young and old music followers. The 50 Boston Symphony musicians in his orchestra were of the same mind.

Fiedler announced the program of the first of the special concerts for children, which he will present on three mornings from 10 to 11 o'clock on the Esplanade concert grounds. This series is to begin this Friday, July 15, and continue on Wednesday the 20th and the following Wednesday. The program:

"Pomp and Circumstance," Elgar; first movement, Beethoven's Fifth Symphony; "Sleigh Ride," Mozart; "Morning Mood" and "The Imps Are Chasing Peer Gynt," Grieg; Largo, "Messiah," Handel; "Hippo Dance" and "Mosquito Dance," White; "Espana," Waldteufel; "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

Festival Season Plays At Berkshire Playhouse

Jane Wyatt in "Stage Door" and Violet Hemming in "Susan and God," will be the attractions at the Berkshire playhouse, Stockbridge, Mass., during the two weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at "Tanglewood," according to Director William Miles.

Many reservations for the theatre already have been made by music lovers who are coming from great distances to hear the concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14.

For Jane Wyatt, an appearance at the Berkshire playhouse is in the nature of a home-coming. Programs of 1931 show that she appeared there in ingenue roles in "Pygmalion," "Monkey" and "Hay Fever," among other plays. Since then she has risen to an important position in both the legitimate theatre and in pictures. In the latter field her work in "Lost Horizon" was outstanding, while Broadway has seen her in leading roles in "The Bishop Misbehaves," "For Services Rendered" and "Lost Horizons."

"Stage Door," in which Jane Wyatt will be seen at the Berkshire playhouse, is one of Edna Ferber's and George Kaufman's most successful collaborations. It ran a year on Broadway and another on the road. The role of Terry Randall, a struggling young actress, is an ideal one for Miss Wyatt, and the story is universal in its appeal to both young and old.

"Susan and God," in which Violet Hemming will star the second week of the festival, is of particular interest to Berkshire audiences, as it was while visiting in the Berkshires at the same time the Oxford Movement was conducting its first North American assembly there in 1936 that Rachel Crothers got the idea for this play. A brilliant comedy, with a strong undercurrent of drama and a keen analysis of human frailties, "Susan and God" is one of last season's successes.

Among the plays in which Miss Hemming has been in stellar roles in New York are "The Lie," "Under Fire," "Spring Cleaning," "The Jest," "This Thing Called Love," "There's Always Juliet," "Yes, My Darling Daughter," and the all-star revivals of "The Rivals" and "Trelawney of the Wells."

During festival weeks, performances will be given at the Berkshire playhouse every night, except Sunday, at 8:45, and on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons at 2:30.

EVANSVILLE, IND.
COURIER

JUL 17 1938

Notes of Music

By Mary McCormick

THE fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival of six concerts will be held at Stockbridge, Mass., August 4 through 14. Appearing with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitsky will be Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass; Beale Hober, soprano; Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan contralto, and the Cecelia Chorus of Boston.

The opening program will offer Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott", and Handel's Concerto Grosso in D Minor. An all-Wagner program is scheduled for the night of August 11 when the final scene of Act I from "Die Walkure" and the third act of "Siegfried" will be presented.

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije", written for the Russian film of the same name, and which has been extremely popular in Boston, will be heard at the closing concert. The program on August 13 will be dedicated to Henry Hadley, first conductor of the festival with Hadley's "Angelus" from the Symphony No. 3 in B Minor being featured. The festival will also offer four lectures by the critic, Olin Downes.

N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 14 1938

FESTIVAL LEADER AT "TANGLEWOOD"

Mrs. Robinson Smith "Delighted" With Shed

BACK FROM EUROPE

Although Ample Accommodations Are Available, Building is Not Finished, President Declares.

Back from Europe after a several weeks' vacation, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival drove up to Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, today to inspect the shed built for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"I was delighted with the building and its location, as I am sure everyone else is who has visited 'Tanglewood'," said Miss Robinson Smith. "It will be a thrilling experience to attend the opening concert August 4 when Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra inaugurate the building with the chorale and chorus from Bach's cantata, 'A Mighty Fortress Is Our God'."

Construction for 1938 has ended, but that does not mean the building is finished, Miss Robinson Smith pointed out. "We have raised $80,000 in the short period of a few months without the aid of any outside agency. This money has come from all parts of the country but the bulk of it has come from the Berkshires and nearby. This money has been spent to provide the essentials this year—protection from sun and rain and good acoustics.

"More money is needed to provide other essentials. It must be raised to insure the permanency of the Festival. The eyes of the world are upon the Berkshires. I have just returned from Europe where great festivals flourish. We have a great opportunity here because of the great interest of Dr. Koussevitsky and the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and we must not overlook it.

"As for subscriptions, they are being assigned in the order of application and are given preference of course over single concert tickets. Because of the increasing demand, it would be well for those planning to attend the Festival to send in reservations at once to avoid disappointment in obtaining reserved seats.

"Although hotels in Lenox and Stockbridge are rapidly filling for the concerts, there are still plenty of accommodations in inns and private homes and Pittsfield, where there are two excellent hotels, is only six miles from 'Tanglewood'."

CONCERTS FOR CHILDREN

What a happy idea it is to have Esplanade concerts for children—and free! These programs, played by Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Symphony orchestra group, will do more than entertain the young audience. They will educate the youth to the best there is in music by giving them a sample of it. They will be advantageous to the poor and the rich, and the accompanying elders will also learn a thing or two about harmony. In addition, these morning concerts will build up a body of supporters for the symphony orchestra itself, will further popularize it, and ought, in time, to quicken the flow of funds for its support.

The close attention which children give to grand opera, on the rare occasions when they have an opportunity to hear it, will probably be apparent again when the up-and-coming generation clusters in front of the Esplanade shell next Friday at 10 o'clock, and on July 20 and 27. And that unity of interest and endeavor which makes the difference between a city which is merely big and one which is truly great and metropolitan will surely be promoted by this fine venture.

Boston Herald July 13 '38

95

What Post Readers Say

B. Post - July 13/38

Contributors to this column are urged to use brevity in their communications. Occasionally over-long letters are not used because of lack of space. Short letters—the shorter the better—are recommended.

ESPLANADE SHELL

To the Editor of the Post:

Sir—May I voice my protest at the proposed spending of the sum of $200,000 on a new marble shell for the Esplanade concerts?

It seems to me that at a time when the city is claiming it is necessary to close branch libraries, curtailing playground supervision, and turn down suggestions for improving recreational facilities in Boston because of the avowed lack of funds, that the spending of this huge sum of money for a shell which will not in itself improve the outdoor concert music, will be used one month during the year, and by no means necessary, is a thoughtless, and ironic gesture.

If the administration wishes to endear itself to the people of Boston, it will realize that hundreds and thousands will benefit by the use of this money for better recreational facilities for the North End, and will sing its praises, whereas many many would be disgusted spending money in this other fashion.

We cannot believe that the city fathers are serious about this. It is my understanding that this fund, from which this sum suddenly appeared, was to be spent on beautifying the city. If it were spent on cleaning up the slum areas of the North End, or at least providing some play space and sports fields for the inhabitants of the ugliest section of the city, it would be admirably carry out its purpose.

It seems to me that the present scheme shows a lack of real knowledge of the best interest of the people. What does the administration want to do? Perpetuate its memory by a wasteful memorial, or really endear itself to Bostonians by first and foremost serving the real crying needs of the city?

Let's wait until the depression is over, the housing situation is cleaned up, our people have a chance to really breath and play, before we talk of marble shells!

HILDA L. HULBERT.

337 Charles Street, Boston.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 16 1938

Music Festival First Two Week-Ends In August

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which is playing at the Berkshire symphonic festival the first two week-ends of August, has announced an attractive addtion to the program for the first concert Aug. 4. The Handel Concerto Grosse will be included as well as the other numbers previously announced. The program for the last concert in the series on Aug. 14 has been changed. The Prokofieff Lieutenant Kije Suite will be substituted for the scheduled Tapiola of Sibelius.

Mr. Koussevitzky will open the rehearsals on Saturday, Aug. 13, at 10 o'clock to those holding five dollar memberships. This unusual opportunity adds a great deal of interest to a membership.

Olin Downes, eminent music critic of the New York Times, will be in Lenox, where the festival shed is located on the Tanglewood estate, to deliver a series of lectures on the music played by the Boston Symphony at the festival concerts. Mr. Downes, an interesting and discerning critic, will give his talks on afternoons preceding the concerts, commenting on the music which is to follow.

Tickets may be secured in Amherst for both the concerts and the Downes lectures at Miss Chapman's Gift Nook on Main street. Miss Chapman will be glad to supply information about prices, other attractions in the Berkshires and the location of the festival shed at Tanglewood.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

JUL 17 1938

Boston Orchestra To Play at Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Fifth Year of Activity to Be Inaugurated Under Dr. Koussevitzky's Leadership; New Music Shed to Seat 5000

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

The dream of a great American music fete, uncompromising in artistic aim and beautiful in setting, is being realized in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival performances that will have their fifth annual presentation Aug. 4, 6-7 and Aug. 11, 12-13, on the scenic historic estate, "Tanglewood," between Stockbridge and Lenox, Massachusetts.

Here, in the heart of the Berkshire Hills the Boston Symphony and its eminent leader, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, assisted by soloists and the Cecilia Society chorus directed by Arthur Fiedler, will be the attraction for thousands of music lovers who will come from various parts of the United States to attend one of the outstanding series of musical programs ever offered at a summer festival.

Mr. Lewando

Of importantance is the announcement of construction of a music shed seat-5000 people and covering an acre and a half. Eventually a permanent stage and permanent floor will be built.

Professor Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, retained by the Festival Committee to conduct accoustical tests during construction, has just issued a report which indicate that the acoustical properties of the auditorium should be entirely satisfactory.

* * *

From a modest start the Berkshire Festival has developed to a high point of endeavor and won unqualified support. The late Henry Hadley founded this festival in 1934. He envisaged a typical American Festival evolving gradually into an institution establishing traditions and in keeping with high standards.

Three concerts were given by 65 members of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony to audiences of from 1800 to 2000.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra came on the scene in 1936 when three concerts were played. The following year, 1937, the number of concerts was increased to six and played over a period of two weeks as at present. These events were far-reaching in influence and the audiences doubled in number, more than 5000 attending each concert.

This insistent public demand for seats continues apace this year, every one of the 160 boxes already having been subscribed.

The concerts this year will be given on the first two Thursday and Saturday evenings in August at 8:30 p. m. and on the first two Sunday afternoons at 3:30 p. m.

The program of Aug. 4 embraces the Bach chorale and chorus from cantata 80, "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott," with the audience being requested to jain in singing the second verse of the chorus; and Beethoven's great 9th symphony with the final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy in which the Cecilia Chorus will collaborate. The soloists in this work will be Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse, Jeannette Vreeland and Norman Cordon.

The Saturday, Aug. 6, program comprises Haydn's symphony in E flat, No. 99 (B. & H. No. 3; Debussy's La Mere, and the Sibelius 1st symphony.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 7, the offerings will be Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik; Brahms' 4th symphony; Coplan's Music for the Theater, Ravel's Mother Goose, and Respighi's Pines of Rome.

A Wagnerian program is listed for Thursday, Aug. 11, and include the introduction and final scene of act 3 of Die Walkyrie, and th third act of Siegfried in concer form. Soloists will be Beal Hobe Norman Cordon, Paul Althouse an Anna Kaskas.

The Saturday, Aug. 13, event w feature Beethoven's 6th symphon the Andante tranquillo from Hen Hadley's 3rd symphony in B-mino and Tschaikowsky's 6th (Pathetique) symphoyn.

The final concert, Sunday, Au 14, brings to performance Schumann's 1st symphony in B-flat; Sibelius' tone poem, Tapiola, an Brahms' symphony No. 2, in D major.

* * *

Geraldine Farrar, retired Metropolitan Opera soprano, has been elected one of 12 women trustee of the New England Conservatory

---

DIRECTS AT FESTIVAL

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Dr. Koussevitzky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will direct six performances at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass., during the forepart of August.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 17 1938

Acoustic conditions in the new Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction next month, should be "entirely satisfactory," according to a report by Professor Richard D. Fay, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, after tests made in June.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Globe - July /38

Fifth Berkshire Festival Begins Thursday Evening

The fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will begin next Thursday evening in the new music shed on "Tanglewood" estate, located in the Berkshire Hills between Lenox and Stockbridge. There will be six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conductor.

The first program will not only be a dedication of the new shed, built this last Spring, but it will also mark the first departure from strictly symphonic music in the three seasons that the Festival has been presented by the Boston Symphony. The high point of the evening will be the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven. The choral finale on Schiller's "Ode To Joy," will be sung by the Cecilia Society of Boston, Arthur Fiedler conductor. The soloists will be Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. The program will include a chorale and the opening chorus from Bach's cantata "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," and Handel's Tenth Concerto Grosso, in D minor, Op. 6. Dedicatory speeches are to be made by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival association, and Bentley W. Warren, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony.

Of further interest in broadening of the Festival programs will be concert performance Aug. 11, of Act 3 from Wagner's music-drama "Siegfried." The roles will be taken as follows: Bruennhilde, Beal Hober, soprano; Siegfried, Paul Althouse; Erda, Anna Kaskas, contralto; Wotan, Norman Cordon. Miss Hober and Mr. Althouse will also be heard that evening as Sieglinde and Siegmund in the concluding scene from the first Act of "The Valkyrie."

The concerts will be given in two groups of three, on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13, at 8:30, and on the Sunday afternoons of Aug. 7 and 14 at 3:30.

This week's programs, apart from the first follow:

Saturday—Haydn: Symphony in E-flat, No. 99; Debussy: "The Sea," three symphonic sketches; Sibelius: First Symphony.

Sunday—Mozart: "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik"; Brahms: Fourth Symphony; Aaron Copland: "Music For the Theatre"; Ravel: "Mother Goose" Suite; Respighi: Symphonic Poem, "The Pines of Rome."

Final Esplanade Concert

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the final Esplanade concert of the 10th season at 8:30 tonight. The program follows:

Berlioz: Hungarian March from "The Damnation of Faust"; Rossini: Overture to "The Barber of Seville"; Bolzoni: Minuet (for strings); Tchaikovsky: "1812" Overture; Wagner: Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"; Bach-Wilhelmj: "Air on the G-string"; Lecuona-Grofe: "Malaguena"; Valerius: "Prayer of Thanksgiving."

The weather was not kind during the 10th season of Esplanade concerts, and several times audiences received slight or thorough scakings, although but one complete evening concert, half of another and the second concert for children were completely washed away. A few other evening programs had to be shortened when rain blew into the acoustic shell. Strangely enough not one program during Boston's rainy week had to be canceled entirely.

In view of the enterprise of Mr. Fiedler and his orchestra, who appear at the shell for every scheduled concert, no matter what the weather, and who will play so long as there is an audience and rain does not wet the instruments, the reported decrease in the number of donors and the amount of contributions, is disappointing. That these concerts have been widely appreciated for a decade is obvious. The fact is further emphasized by the presence of thousands of children at the concerts given especially for them, an innovation made this Summer. The best expression of appreciation would seem to be cash donations, no matter how large or small. It is said that, against the 700 donors last year, only 400 have been heard from to date this season, and that the receipts from the fund boxes on the Esplanade have so far been 50 percent under those a year ago. The state did a fine thing in granting a sum of money to the concerts, but support from the general public is needed. Contributions may still be sent to The Esplanade Concerts Fund, Merchants National Bank of Boston, 28 State st.

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER

JUL 17 1938

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

SCHUBERT—Symphony No. 8 in B minor (The Unfinished); played by the London Philharmonic Orchestra, direction of Sir Thomas Beecham. Columbia set 330 $5.

If we may be permitted the liberty of speaking of song writing for orchestra, there is no one who will deny that the Schubert "Unfinished Symphony" is the greatest example ever penned. It is essentially a lyric work, every bar a testament to the genius of the world's supreme melodist. There is not a person boasting the slightest knowledge of music who does not find himself carried away by the tenderness and utter lyricism of the music.

It is the very song-like character which Beecham so carefully molds, as against the dramatic surge found in the Koussevitzky-Boston version, which is to be desired, and the quiet meditation of the slow movement demands a slower pace such as Beecham gives it. The choice of recording will rest with the individual, for some will want the more impassioned reading of Koussevitzky as against the more effective, to my mind, vocal treatment given by Beecham. The recording in either case is unquestioned.

PAGANINI-KREISLER: Concerto No. 1 in D major; played by Fritz Kreisler, violin, and the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. Victor set 361. $4.50.

Several years ago we had a recording of this concerto by Menuhin with the three complete movements as transcribed by Wilhelmj. It was Kreisler's idea to streamline the work, so he accordingly has used only the first movement and has reworked the orchestration, adding wind instruments to the original strings and using his own harmonic and contrapuntal idiosyncrasies. The result is very tasteful, and I am not so sure that we are losing anything by dropping the second and last movements. Its creator, Paganini would be pleased with it in this guise.

It is nothing short of a marvel to find that Kreisler commands an impeccable technique at such an advanced age. His fingers and bow arm are as true as at any time in his life, and we find that his interpretative powers have mellowed with his years of experience, giving us the very essence of his interpretative genius. No violinist today possesses such a vibrant, luscious tone. The Philadelphia Orchestra lives up completely to its reputation; the balance is perfect and the recording, from the Philadelphia Academy of Music, is absolutely lifelike. A brilliant half-hour of superb violin playing.

HAYDN—Trio in D major (B. & H. No. 30); played by Albert-Leveque, piano, Rene le Roy, flute, and Lucien Kirsch, cello. Musicraft set 8. $3.50.

Haydn wrote three trios for this combination at the request of a London publisher, and it has been said that these are the finest chamber music pieces he wrote for the flute. They are delightful in every sense of the word, not at all heavy; two lively end movements set off a lyric middle section. The principal parts are allotted to the piano, with the flute furnishing a florid obbligato. The performers do a splendid job, and the tone and balance are admirable. A welcome addition, bringing us something away from the beaten path.

Popular Records

It was only last Sunday that I called particular attention to Sammy Kaye's first Victor. Another is here this week, two fox trots done in a remarkably smooth style, "When Twilight Comes" and "One More Dream." Both tunes are best sellers, and Sammy's treatment of them will keep them at the top of the list for some time to come. Charlie Wilson does the vocal in the first with some swell electric guitar playing by Lloyd Gillion, while the Three Barons vocalize in the latter tune.

The platter that takes my ear this week is a Brunswick by Heidt's boys, doing the best version to date of "Sugar Blues" and backing it with the McCoy number, "Ridin' to Glory on a Trumpet," featuring the Three Trumpeteers. If this isn't real brass work, I want to be told.

If you are looking for a true-to-form colored version of "Flat Foot Floogee," get the Louis Armstrong-Mills Bros. disc put out by Decca. The record is worth double for this side alone. The Mills Bros. offer "Caravan" on the reverse. The Paul Taylor Choristers assist Bing Crosby in "Darling Nellie Gray," while Eddie Dunstedter at the organ helps along Bing with "When Mother Nature Sings Her Lullaby."

The rest of the lists:

GOODMAN—"My Melancholy Baby" and "Wrappin' It Up."

DOROTHY LAMOUR — "Tonight Will Live" and "On a Tropic Night."

PRIMA—"You Call It Madness" and "Nothing's Too Good for You."

ROSENKRATNZ—"Song Is Ended" and "When Day Is Done."

CLINTON—"Harmonica Hop" and "Foo to You."

MORGAN—"Sheik of Araby" and "Way Down Yonder in New Orleans."

BERIGAN—"Pied Piper" and "Ten Easy Lessons."

ANDREWS SISTERS — "Pagan Love Song" and "Oh, Ma-Ma."

ANDREWS SISTERS—"Says My Heart" and "Oh, Faithless Maid."

Cont. over

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JUL 17 1938

Great Artists in Records Show Violin Achievement

Kreisler With Ormandy and Heifetz Combined With Koussevitzky.

By Alice Eversman.

THE Victor Co. is to be congratulated for releasing two such interesting and outstanding works at the same time as the Paganini "Concerto No. 1 in D Major," transcribed by Fritz Kreisler and played by him and the Philadelphia Orchestra under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, and the "Concerto No. 2 in G Minor, Opus 63," by Serge Prokofieff, performed by Jascha Heifetz and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Here you have two works representing the old and the new in violin composition, played by the foremost artists of the day.

Fritz Kreisler has taken this first and only known movement of the Paganini concerto, and what he has done to it is little short of marvelous. In studying Kreisler's compositions and transcriptions, one is astounded at the genius of the man and is hard put to decide whether he is greater as a soloist or as a composer. No violinist today fulfills both metiers so perfectly as does this unmatchable master.

The Paganini concerto has been for many years a show piece for violinists and little else. Its technical difficulties set the stamp on the powers of an artist or a student, but it had not much more than its virtuoso flare to interest the public. Kreisler has taken it and made of it a truly thrilling work, both as to what he has done with the violin part and for his orchestration. No composer today has quite the sense of the dramatic that Kreisler has and this gift he has brought to bear on the concerto, so that it has a lift to it that cheers the spirit.

HE HAS used the principal melodic theme time and again, first in the violin part and many times in the orchestra, yet its recurrence is so timely that it is never boresome. The several virtuoso passages he has treated so as to give great variety to them and to bring into play the entire range of the violin. His playing of it is superb, fiery and dazzling and richly toned with the inimitable Kreisler quality. He is ably matched by Mr. Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra. In fact, one feels that here is an ideal combination of similarly inspired artists who have allowed themselves to be carried away by the youthful vigor, the temperamental swing and the high artistry of the veteran of the violin.

Playing the Prokofieff concerto is also discovering a kindred spirit in modern dress. For here, too, is the dramatic and the melodic feeling that makes for great music. Heifetz is reported as saying that this concerto of the Soviet composer is one of the few great concertos written for the violin and certainly it is not difficult to agree with him after hearing his interpretation. The concerto was composed a little over two years ago and performed for the first time by Robert Soetens and the Madrid Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of that great conductor, Enrique Arbos, on December 1, 1935. Jascha Heifetz introduced it to America in December, 1937, when he played it with the Boston Symphony at Symphony Hall, Boston. A few days later he recorded it with the orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitsky.

THE fact that Prokfieff is a modernist and of the Soviet way of thinking may lead people to believe that his work must necessarily be both ultra-modern and propagandist in character. But when you listen to the second movement in particular—a movement which, believe it or not, moved the Boston audience to tears—you cannot help but be convinced that here is a composer who transcends all nationalism or era dating and speaks the language of the musical great. It is superb music, the kind which mingles a heart-stirring warmth with a rich musical substance that no true lover of music can resist.

The composer, who is a top-ranking pianist by special profession, has written in many taxing passages. These technical passages are the only ones that bear the touch of modernism, and a modernism that is original and intriguing. But beside these pyrotechnic measures he has put bits of exquisite cantabile that are nothing short of the inspiration of genius. His orchestral writing is also magnificent, full and sonorous, although he leads out with the violin predominating. The entire work is rich in strength, freshness and truth, and how often can these attributes be connected with the ultra-moderns?

HEIFETZ'S playing of it has a release from all inhibition which the artist seldom reaches. His tone is unusually lovely with a warmth and vibrancy in those lovely catabile passages that is unearthly in its beauty. The tricky technical moments are child's play, of course, for Heifetz, but they, too, have a deeper source than ordinarily directs his virtuoso display. It is a glorious addition to the violin literature, combining the best in modern dress with the beautiful old fundamentals which few can bring themselves to renounce in the name of musical progress. And, of course, nothing could be finer than the work of the Boston Symphony guided by a man who has done so much to promote new composers, and who has never been wrong in his estimate of them.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 17 1938

MUSIC

◆

'Lieutenant Kije' Added To Berkshire Festival Program

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" orchestra suite, Op. 60, has been added to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival program for next month by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. This composition has met with enthusiastic response from audiences in Boston and in cities touched by the orchestra on its tours last season. It will be given performance at the closing concert Aug. 14. It was written for the Russian film of the same name.

"Kije" replaces "Tapiola," a composition by Sibelius. The First Symphony by Sibelius will be given Saturday, Aug. 6. Handel's Concerto Grosso in D Minor Op. 6, No. 10, has been added to the program for the opening concert Aug. 4, when the Festival's shed at "Tanglewood" will be inaugurated.

The other numbers on the opening program will include Bach's chorale and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. In this opening program the Cecilia chorus of Boston with Jeannette Vreeland, Paul Althouse, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon, will sing with the orchestra. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be Dr. Koussevitzky's answer to the troubled conditions in Europe. In the final movement the chorus and quartet of vocalists sing words by Schiller which glorify the brotherhood of man.

The program Aug. 13 will open with "Angelus," from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B Minor Op. 60. This program is dedicated to the alte Dr. Hadley, who was the first conductor of the Berkshire Festival. That evening Mrs. Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley Foundation of New York will be guests of the Festival trustees.

Back from Europe after a several weeks' vacation, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of New York and Stockbridge, president of the festival, drove up to Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, yesterday, to inspect the shed built for the concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

"I was delighted with the building and its location, as I am sure everyone else is who has vistied 'Tanglewood,' said Miss Robinson Smith. It will be a thrilling experience to attend the opening concert Aug. 4, when Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra inaugurate the building with the chorale and chorus from Bach's cantata, 'A Mighty Fortress Is Our God'."

Construction for 1938 has ended but that does not meant the building is finished, Miss Robinson Smith pointed out. "We have raised $80,000 in the short period of a few months without the aid of any outside agency. This money has come from all parts of the country but the bulk of it has come from the Berkshires and nearby. This money has been spent to provide the essentials this year—protection from sun and rain, and good acoustics.

"More money is needed to provide other essentials. It must be raised to insure the permanency of the festival."

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

JUL 17 1938

Right on the Records

By Rudolph Nelson

Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Opus 63, by Serge Prokofieff—Jascha Heifetz, violinist, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conducting (Victor Album M-450).

This concerto is a contemporary work, but if you think that that indicates a lack of gracious melody, warm rich harmonies or fascinating rhythms, you are mistaken.

The second movement is profoundly emotional. The first is less so but tremendously attractive, nevertheless, and the third movement, with its completely fascinating rhythms, is quite impossible to resist.

It is hardly necessary to comment on the brilliance of Heifetz's performance, and here he had the collaboration of one of the world's greatest orchestras, directed by Dr. Koussevitsky, whose sympathy for and understanding of this music are equal to Heifetz's. This is an outstanding recording.

Les Preludes, by Liszt—The Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting (Victor Album M-453).

In all the vast world of symphonic music, few compositions are better known than "Les Preludes." It has been recorded many times, but here is the performance that far exceeds in excellence anything released previously. Few recordings have such color, such widely ranging dynamics, such contrasts of mood and such orchestral splendors. We recommend it highly.

New Victor Popular Releases

"My Margarita" and "See Sharp," foxtrots—Richard Himber and his Essex House Orchestra, No. 25890.

Himber's newly revamped dance band has been attracting much favorable comment in its numerous broadcasts because of a different and highly pleasing style. On this record the band plays one of the most promising hits of the day, coupled with an attractive arrangement of Chopin's Waltz in C-sharp minor, masquerading under the title, "See Sharp." Both tunes are recorded at a medium tempo, featuring the pyramiding figures of the six-man brass section and the velvety trombone trio which characterizes this new Himber dance music.

"Spring Is Here" and "Down the Old Ox Road," vocadances—Maxine Sullivan, with Claude Thornhill and orchestra, No. 25894.

"Down the Old Ox Road," will be remembered from a Bing Crosby film hit of five years ago. Thornhill, with a small but good orchestra, furnishes excellent accompaniment for the inimitable Miss Sullivan.

"What Do You Know About Love?" and "Meet the Beat of My Heart," foxtrots—Hal Kemp and his orchestra, No. 25893. Here is a good double of sweet dance music.

"The Sunny Side of Things" and "Put Your Heart in a Song," foxtrots—Larry Clinton and his orchestra, No. 25892. This is a pair of songs from the new film, "Breaking the Ice." Frank Churchill, who was responsible for the "Snow White" melodies, wrote these numbers.

"There's Honey on the Moon Tonight" and "Fair and Square," foxtrots—"Fats" Waller and his Rhythm, No. 25891. Waller should have maintained his augmented orchestra with which he made a few records a short while ago. The usual "Waller and his Rhythm" setup has grown monotonous.

Readers interested in additional information regarding records are invited to write Rudolph Nelson, in care of the Free Press, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 17 1938

EVENTS AT BERKSHIRE

THE complete revised programs of the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, in Tanglewood, Mass., differ from the originally contemplated schedule by an addition and a substitution. Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 6, No. 10, has been added to the list of the opening concert and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite replaces Sibelius's "Tapiola" at the closing event of the series. The concert on Aug. 13 will be dedicated to the memory of Henry Hadley, the first conductor of the festival, and on that occasion the "Angelus" from his Third symphony will be performed.

On the first night at the dedication of the new shed the program as it now stands will begin with the chorale from Bach's cantata No. 80, "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott." The audiences will be invited to join in the singing of this selection, after which the initial chous from the same cantata will be sung by the Cecilia Society of Boston. The Handel Concerto Grosso already mentioned will complete the first half of this program. The rest of the concert will be devoted to Beethoven's Ninth symphony, in which the orchestra will be assisted by the Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler conductor, and a solo [illegible] composed of Jeannette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, Paul Althouse and Norman Cordon.

Saturday night, Aug. 6, the offerings will be Haydn's symphony in E flat major, No. 99 (B. & H. No. 3); Debussy's "La Mer" and Sibelius's First symphony. The following afternoon the works to be presented will be Mozart's "Eine kleine Nachtmusik," the Brahms Fourth symphony, Aaron Copland's "Music for the Theatre," Ravel's "Ma Mère l'Oye" and Respighi's "Pini di Roma."

Thursday night, Aug. 11, there will be a Wagner concert, which will be given over to the final scene from Act I of "Die Walkuere," sung by Beale Hober, soprano, and Paul Althouse, tenor, and the third act of "Siegfried." In the latter the vocalists will be Miss Hober (Bruennhilde), Mr. Althouse (Siegfried), Miss Kaskas (Erda) and Mr. Cordon (The Wanderer).

At the concert in memory of Henry Hadley, Aug. 13, the "Angelus" from his Third symphony will be followed by Beethoven's Sixth symphony and the "Pathetic" symphony of Tchaikovsky.

The final concert, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, will bring forward two more symphonies, the Second of Brahms and that by Schumann in B flat major, between which the Prokofieff "Lieutenant Kije" suite will be performed.

Reservations for the concerts and information concerning them and other cultural attractions in the Berkshire region may be secured by addressing the Berkshire Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

JUL 19 1938

Berkshire Music Festival

The complete revised programs of the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14, in Tangiewood, Mass., adds Handel's ~~Concerto Grosso in D~~ minor, Op. 6, No. 10, and Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite replaces Sibelius' "Tapiola" at the closing event. Aug. 13's concert is dedicated to the memory of Henry Hadley, first festival conductor and his "Angelus" from his Third symphony will be performed.

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUL 17 1938

Famous Stars To Be Heard At Music Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 16 Paul Althouse, tenor, Norman Cordon, bass, and Beal Hober, soprano, will appear with the Boston Symphony orchestra and ~~Serge~~ Koussevitzky at the fifth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival next month.

This completes the list of soloists who will participate in the inaugural of the Festival's new shed at "Tanglewood," the others being, Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan opera contralto; Jeannette Vreeland, soprano. Miss Vreeland, Miss Kaskas, Mr. Althouse and Mr. Cordon will sing with the Cecilia Society chorus of Boston at the opening concert when Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Bach's choral and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg. unser Gott," will be performed.

Miss Hober will sing Aug. 11 in the all-Wagner program. That evening the orchestra will play the final scene of the first act from "Die Walkurie" and Act 3 of "Siegfried." In "Die Walkurie" Miss Hober will sing the role of Sieglinde and Mr. Althouse the role of Siegmund. In "Siegfried" Mr. Cordon will be in the role of Wotan; Miss Kaskas, Erda; Mr. Althouse, Siegfried; and Miss Hober, "Bruenhilde."

The concerts will open Thursday evening, Aug. 4 at 8:30 and will continue through Saturday at the same hour and Sunday at 3:30.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 17 1938

Koussevitzky Alters Festival Programs

Work by Prokofieff Will Replace Sibelius Tone Poem at Concert of the Boston Symphony

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," orchestral suite, Op. 60, will replace Sibelius's "Tapiola" on the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's closing concert on August 14. Prokofieff composed his music for the film of the same name. On August 13 Mrs. Henry Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York will be guests of the festival trustees. The program will commence with "Angelus" from Hadley's third symphony in B minor, Op. 60. The revised programs for the series follow:

Thursday, August 4

Chorale from cantata "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott"; first chorus from "Eine feste Burg"	Bach
Concerto Grosso, Op. 6, No. 10, D minor	Handel
Symphony No. 9	Beethoven

Cecila Society, Arthur Fiedler, conductor; Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass.

Saturday, August 6

Symphony, E flat No. 99 (B & H No. 3)	Haydn
La Mer	Debussy
Symphony No. 1, E minor, Op. 39	Sibelius

Sunday, August 7

Eine kleine Nachtmusik (K. 525)	Mozart
Symphony No. 4, E minor, Op. 98	Brahms
Music for the Theater	Copland
Ma Mère l'Oye	Ravel
Pines of Rome	Respighi

Thursday, August 11

Walkuere, Act 1, final scene	Wagner
Sieglinde, Beal Hober Siegmund, Paul Althouse
Siegfried, Act III	Wagner
Wanderer	Norman Cordon
Erda	Anna Kaskas
Siegfried	Paul Althouse
Bruennhilde	Beal Hober

Saturday, August 13

Angelus, from Symphony No. 3, Op. 60	Hadley
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"	Beethoven
Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique"	Tchaikovsky

Sunday, August 14

Symphony No. 1, B flat	Schumann
Liet. Kije	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2, D major	Brahms

All concerts, excepting those of August 7 and 14, which begin at 3:30 in the afternoon, take place in the evening at 8:30. Reservations for either series of concerts or for single concerts and for four lectures by Olin Downes, may be made by writing to the Berkshire Festival, Inc., at Stockbridge, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 17 1938

FESTIVAL SURVEY

Summer Events in America Create New Fields of Artistic Activity

By OLIN DOWNES

AN aspect of American musical development which may be even more indicative than the impressive programs of the wintertime of the shift of the musical balance of power between America and Europe is the growth and multiplication of our Summer music festivals, open-air concert series, and opera and ballet performances. We have as yet no Summer musical festival which parallels in repertory those given in Salzburg, Munich and other European centers, although the Berkshire Symphonic Festival now given each August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under [illegible] Koussevitzky, and planned by Dr. Koussevitzky to greatly extend its scope in the years to come, is a movement obviously headed in that direction. And the New York World's Fair of 1939 is planning a six months' music festival of far wider repertory than any of the institutions mentioned.

* * *

We have had for many years certain great festivals, such as the Cincinnati Biennial May Festival, the Ann Arbor Music Festival, the Bethlehem Bach Festival, which take place in the warm months, and the Worcester (Mass.) Music Festival, which transpires in early Fall, with other established festivals of lesser proportions.

Aside from these, the most important and popular musical institutions of the summertime are the open-air series of symphonic concerts in various centers, from the Lewisohn Stadium on the Eastern coast to the Hollywood Bowl on the West. More lately opera has become popular as a component element of symphonic series, and for special seasons of open-air entertainment. At the Stadium the programs have not confined themselves to "Aida" and "Carmen." "Boris Godunoff" and Strauss's "Salome" have vied with the symphonic lists. A considerable operatic repertory is heard in different parts of the country in the Summertime.

* * *

Appealing to select but also to numerous audiences are the chamber music festivals given from coast to coast, the greater number of these owing their existence to the beneficent offices of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the founder of the Berkshire Chamber Music Festivals held at Pittsfield and inaugurated by her twenty years ago, which have assembled in successive seasons most of the leading chamber music organizations of the day. An offshoot of this festival is the one given annually in the Fall in the Music Room of the Library of Congress in Washington. The complete list of chamber music series given in Summer as well as Winter would be lengthy, if only confined to territory immediately adjacent to New York and neighboring Eastern States, as the series given by the Jacques Gordon Quartet at Music Mountain; by Hugo Kortschak and others at Cummington, Mass.; the numerous programs offered in connection with the Summer terms of universities, music schools and educational institutions, such as the Summer season at Chautauqua, N. Y. The Yaddo Festival held at Saratoga Springs for a period of several weeks of August and September has a special character in the conditions it offers not only for performance but for creative effort by American composers.

These and similar developments will continue—unhappily at the expense of Europe. The great German music festivals are losing patronage and they now operate under limited resources. The same thing will now apply to the Salzburg music festival since Austria's absorption by Germany, with the resultant injurious effects of politics upon artistic production. When Bayreuth and Munich, because of political agencies, began to lose international patronage, Salzburg, with Toscanini as its inspiring head, took their place. Now Salzburg is facing difficult days, while an increasing number of musicians, the majority Jews, but an important minority musicians of other races, leave places of intolerance for the hospitable American shores. In a word, the tide of Summer visitants to musical festivals is certain to turn westward instead of eastward in the years immediately before us, and give American effort an additional stimulus in this field.

* * *

The big American festivals have their position and public. Of even greater promise is the mushroom rapidity with which small new festivals are springing up on every hand. They indicate the popular zest for this form of activity. This article cannot pretend to enumerate all the new Summer musical activities which have been inaugurated, even in the last two years. In that time the Essex County Symphony Society of Newark, N. J., which Alexander Smallens directed this year, has become an institution to reckon with, representing musical activities of the city and adjacent counties in New Jersey. The National Symphony Orchestra, under Hans Kindler at Washington, has become a Summer as well as Winter institution of great benefit to the public. It now organizes a new series of "Sunset Symphonies" at the Potomac Watergate near the Lincoln Memorial the concerts given in a beautiful setting which utilizes the river for the occasion.

The concerts given on the Charles River Embankment by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, following the earlier "Pop" season in Symphony Hall, are now an official part of the orchestra's season. Milwaukee announces the dedication of the new Emil Blatz music shell at Washington Park. Accompanying this gift to the city the Park Commission has engaged for the programs "such artists," runs the press announcement, "as Lotte Lehmann, Jessica Dragonette, Richard Bonelli and John Carter."

William Matheus Sullivan's Dunrovin Music Festival, which has completed its first season, represents special effort. Portions of Mozart's operas have been given with performances of chamber music and compositions in smaller forms suitable to the intimate character of the auditorium where the performances are given. The young and vigorous Silvermine Festival is one that assembles not only musicians, but workers in various arts. The nucleus of this festival is the presence of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra and the festival chorus assembled for the occasion. The Westchester Music Festival is an older, bigger and influential institution.

* * *

Here are the Friends of Music of the Lower Connecticut Valley. They announce their second series of Summer concerts under the direction of Ronald Murat. The Putnam Valley Board of Education, cooperating with the Federal Music Project, has arranged a series of symphonic concerts by the Westchester Philharmonic Orchestra. These take place at the Putnam Valley Central School Stadium, on Oscawana Road. The opening concert includes the Beethoven "Egmont" overture, the Bach-Stoessel chorale, "O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden," the Mozart A major concerto, with Augusta Scheiber as soloist, and other works by Liszt, Ravel and J. Strauss.

At Hartford a Summer season of open-air opera begins in the park's new amphitheatre, the performances produced by Alfredo Salmaggi, commencing on July 23. These are near-by events, taking place in the effete East. But Carmel-by-the-Sea in California has now its own Bach Festival, a beginning which is modest, but which will have, as those who have been there know, an extremely intelligent and cultivated clientele to rely upon, and a public exceptionally interested in music.

* * *

In other words, music in America is no longer a question of a few symphony orchestras and a great opera company which function with solemnity and éclat for the social leaders and the cognoscenti of principal cities in the wintertime. Nor is it a question of a limited public attending Winter concerts and forgetting music for the rest of the year, as allegedly respectable people go to church on Sundays and turn to devilment and the enthusiastic mulcting of their fellow-citizens on the other days of the week. Music is not seasonally adjourned. Summer vacationists have less and less need of going overseas for representative musical entertainment. More communities are discovering the fun of having music festivals within their own means and facilities, making the summertime and the vacation period richer than ever before. And this is the sort of thing that makes for the full musical life of the nation.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION - STAR

7/18/38

Moment Musicale

By MAUD WELIN

BACK from Europe after a several weeks' vacation, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, President of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, drove up to Tanglewood to inspect the shed built for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Construction for 1938 has ended, but that does not mean the building is finished," Miss Smith pointed out. "We have raised $80,000 in a few months without the aid of any outside agency. This money has come from all parts of the country, but the bulk of it has come from the Berkshires and nearby. It has been spent to provide the essentials this year—protection from sun and rain, and good acoustics."

Subscriptions are being assigned in the order of application and are given preference, of course, over single concert tickets. Because of the increasing demand, it would be well for those planning to attend the Festival to send in reservations at once.

The complete program follows:

August 4, at 8:30 p. m.
Chorale from the Cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" Bach
First Chorus from the Cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott"
Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 6, No. 10 Handel
Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's "Ode to Joy" Beethoven
Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler, Conductor
Soloists: Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas
Anna Kaskas, contralto; Paul Althouse, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass

Saturday, August 6, at 8:30 P. M.
Symphony in E flat, No. 99 Haydn
"La Mer," Three Symphonic Sketches Debussy
Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39 Sibelius

August 7, at 3:30 P. M.
"Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Serenade for Spring Orchestra Mozart
Symphony in E Minor, Op. 98, No. 4 Brahms
Music for the Theater Copland
"Ma Merer l'Oye," Five Children's Pieces Ravel
Symphonic Poem, "Pini di Roma" Respighi

August 11, at 8:30 P. M.
"Die Walkure" Wagner
Act 1: Final Scene
Sieglinde, Beale Hober, soprano
Siegmund, Paul Althouse, tenor
Act 3: "Siegfried"
The Wanderer, Norman Cordon
Erda, Anna Kaskas
Siegfried, Paul Althouse
Bruennhilde, Beal Hober

August 13, at 8:30 P. M.
"Angelus," Andante tranquillo, from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor Henry Hadley
Symphony No. 6, in F major, Op. 68, "Pastoral" Beethoven
Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetic," Op. 74 Tchaikovsky

August 14, at 3:30 P. M.
Symphony in B flat, No. 1, Op. 38 Schumann
"Lieutenant Kije," Orchestral Suite Prokofieff
Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73 Brahms

THE Spa series of free Sunday afternoon symphony concerts by the Knickerbocker Orchestra, a Federal Music Project under the Works Progress Administration, is attracting many music lovers to the State Spa at Saratoga Springs. The initial concert drew an audience of about 500. The orchestra, led by Ole Windingstad, Norwegian-born conductor, is seated on the south portico of the Hall of Springs, with the audience in the sunken esplanade between the Hall and the Simon Baruch Research Institute. The reflecting pool makes a most effective background.

The concerts are scheduled for 4 p. m. There will be 10 in the series. Two of the concerts will be marked by the presentation of guest artists.

COLUMBUS, O.
DISPATCH

JUL 17 1938

Berkshire Symphony Festival

● The fifth annual Berkshire symphonic festival will be held the first two weeks in August at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Six concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, will give four lectures at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 p. m. Programs for the festival follow:

SERIES A

Thursday Evening, Aug. 4, at 8:30
Bach.....Chorus and Chorale from the Cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott," No. 80.
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 9 in D minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op. 125. Cecilia Society Chorus of Boston and Soloists.
Saturday Evening, Aug. 6, at 8:30
Haydn.....Symphony in E flat, No. 99.
Debussy....."La Mer," Three Symphonic Sketches.
Sibelius.....Symphony No. 1 in E minor, Op. 39.
Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 7, at 3:30
Mozart....."Eine Kleine Nachimusik." Serenade for String Orchestra (K 525).
Brahms.....Symphony in E Minor, No. 4, Op. 98.
Copland.....Music for the Theater.
Ravel....."Ma Mere l'Oye ("Mother Goose") Five Children's Pieces
Respighi.....Symphonic Poem, "The Pines of Rome"

SERIES B

Thursday Evening, Aug. 11, at 8:30
Wagner....."Die Walkure" Introduction to Act III, "The Ride of the Valkyries." Act III, Final Scene.
Wagner.....Act III, "Siegfried" Four Soloists
Saturday Evening, Aug. 13, at 8:30
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 6, in F major, Op. 68, "Pastoral."
Hadley....."Angelus" from the Symphony No. 3 in B-minor, Op. 60.
Tchaikovsky.....Symphony No. 6, in B-minor, "Pathetic," Op. 74.
Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 14, at 3:30
Schumann.....Symphony in B-flat No. 1, Op. 38.
Sibelius....."Tapiola," a Tone Poem for Orchestra.
Brahms.....Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73.

Information concerning tickets may be obtained by writing the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 17 1938

92

Festival Announces Changes in Programs

Prokofieff's "Lieut Kije" orchestra suite, Op. 60, has been added to the Berkshire Symphonic festival program for next month by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. This composition has met with enthusiastic response from audiences in Boston and in cities touched by the orchestra on its tours the past season. It will be given performance at the closing concert August 14. It was written for the Russian film of the same name.

"Kije" replaces "Tapiola," a composition by Sibelius. The First Symphony by Sibelius will be given Saturday, August 6. Handel's Concerto Grosso in D-minor, has been added to the program for the opening concert August 4, when the festival's shed at "Tanglewood" will be inaugurated.

The other numbers on the opening program will include "Bach's chorale and first chorus from the cantata "Ein feste Burg ist uhser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth symphony. In this opening program the Cecilia chorus of Boston with Jeannette Vreeland, Paul Althouse, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon, will sing with the orchestra. Beethoven's Ninth symphony will be Dr Koussevitzky's answer to the troubled conditions in Europe. In the final movement the chorus and quartet of vocalists sing words by Schiller which glorify the brotherhood of man.

The program August 13 will open with "Angelus," from Henry Hadley's symphony No 3 in B-minor Op. 60. This program is dedicated to the late Dr Hadley, who was the first conductor of the Berkshire festival. That evening Mrs Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley foundation in New York will be guests of the festival trustees.

Reservations for either series of concerts or for single concerts on the festival programs and for four lectures by Olin Downes, critic, may be made by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., at Stockbridge. Complete information about other cultural attractions in the Berkshires and accommodations may also be secured from the Festival office.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 18 1938

SYMPHONY WILL PLAY RUSSIAN WORK

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" orchestra suite, Op. 60, has been added to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival program for next month by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This composition has met with enthusiastic response from audiences in Boston and in cities touched by the orchestra on its tours the past season. It will be given performance at the closing concert Aug. 14. It was written for the Russian film of the same name.

"Kije" replaces "Tapiola", a composition by Sibelius. The First Symphony by Sibelius will be given Saturday, Aug. 6. Handel's Concerto Grosso in D Minor Op. 6, No. 10, has been added to the program for the opening concert Aug. 4, when the Festival's shed at "Tanglewood" will be inaugurated.

The other numbers on the opening program will include "Bach's chorale and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. In this opening program the Cecilia Chorus of Boston with Jeannette Vreelandn, Paul Althouse, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon, will sing with the orchestra. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be Dr. Koussevitzky's answer to the troubled conditions in Europe. In the final movement the chorus and quartet of vocalists sing words by Schiller which glorify the brotherhood of man.

The program Aug. 13 will open with "Angelus", from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B Minor Op. 60. This program is dedicated to the late Dr. Hadley, who was the first conductor of the Berkshire Festival. That evening Mrs. Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York will be guests of the Festival trustee.

918

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 1 9 1938

A Visitor Muses At Tanglewood

(Lucian Price in the Boston Globe)

STOCKBRIDGE, July 16—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival which began life only four years ago in a lowly circus tent has now a stately home. Last Sunday a thousand persons came to see the new Music Shed at "Tanglewood," the estate near Lenox where Hawthorne lived and wrote, and which has been given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Though the concerts are still nearly three weeks off, the building itself is an attraction. Justly so. Dignified, simple, admirably designed, its acoustics are miraculous, and its size (it will seat more than 5000 persons) is hard to realize. Shaped like a wedge of pie, Symphony Hall in Boston would go into its length once with room to spare, and its width would hold two Symphony Halls. Yet a whisper on the stage is audible anywhere in it, even when empty of people, and without an echo or a dead spot.

* * *

It Has Everything

Scenically, the estate itself is a gem. "Tanglewood" has been untangled. Sleek lawns, noble groves, formal gardens, a comfortable old mansion of mid-19th century style, it has everything: frontage on a sizable lake, meadows, woods, and mountain views. It is quite as storybooky in its own way as "The House of the Seven Gables" which Hawthorne wrote here in 1850-51, in a little red house (destroyed by fire half a century ago), as a bronze tablet set into a bowlder near its site informs the visitor.

Down by the lake shore in deep woods is an aboriginal pine, six feet through the trunk and 22 feet in circumference; not far from it is an Indian Fire Pit, between two ancient trees, a ring of big stones about six feet across and perhaps five feet deep, where Sachems and Big Medicines used to hold powwow, one of few such known in New England. And not the least choice spot on the estate is that plantation of templed trees, the Hawthorne Pines, foyer and promenade to the Music Shed.

Music makes a classless society. The Berkshire community has unified all forces for these festivals. Its trustees are as well from the permanent as from summer residents; its committees work like beavers without pay; its 62 ushers are volunteers, with a waiting list; its motor traffic is ruled by twoscore members of the American Legion plus the sheriff and deputy, all of whom got drenched to their hides in last year's cloudburst without a syllable of grumbling. There are local committees for the festival in 55 cities and towns of New England and in states as far off as Florida and California, and in parts of Canada.

Working for the festival is an impulse which seems to generate like spontaneous combustion. Last August people came from 32 states, from Canada and from Europe. Fifty newspapers and magazines sent their writers; telegraph and telephone wires were run into the old mansion where comfortable press quarters are fitted up in what was once its library; and of course for lodgings the crowd overflows Lenox, Stockbridge and Pittsfield into surrounding towns.

* * *

Hub of Musical World

Berkshire County has sometimes seemed geographically isolated from the rest of the state, a bit like an orphan child. It might once have been said to be bounded on the south by Connecticut, on the west by New York State, on the north by Vermont, and on the east by the State of Massachusetts. But these festivals make it a hub of the musical world. The gain is mutual, for in going to the Berkshires the Boston Symphony Orchestra becomes much more a New England Symphony Orchestra, if not a national possession as well.

The Music Shed is a water shed, but with a difference: this water flows uphill. Everybody has heard of the famous barn so situated that a raindrop falling on one side of its ridgepole flows into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, while a drop falling on the other side flows into the Gulf of Mexico. But they both reach the same ocean. Perched on the water shed between Boston and New York, this Berkshire Music Shed is a meeting of waters where every human raindrop finds its way into the same mighty ocean of music.

Audiences at these festivals always speak of the added pleasure of listening to music amidst a summer landscape. If true under a circus tent, the spell will be the more potent in this clean, bright auditorium open on three sides to sunlit or starlit meadows bordered by deep woods, or to lawns like green velours shadowed by goodly groves and the Hawthorne Pines. For the whole estate is a happy work of nature beautified by man. Its formal gardens are enclosed by hedges of clipped hemlock that have taken two generations of care to grow, arranged in terraces at varying levels, two of them being centered with pools and fountains whose cool splashing is a pleasant sound on a warm day.

To see this estate on a moonlit night of summer, the white walls and columns of the Music Shed gleaming like a classic temple in a sacred grove, is like walking bodily inside the frame and canvas of some romantic landscape painting in the style of Claude Lorraine. The pines rise columnar and black, lighted by gleams of white moonshine; the broad lawns are flooded with its blueish pallor; below, down the long slopes of meadow and woodland the lake is a pale glimmering of silver; and all round rise the dim gigantic shapes of mountains in that moon-glamoured haze which a summer night con-ures like a magician up, from woods and water. The air is heavy with the fragrance of linden trees n full bloom and a few night birds re calling. "Tanglewood" by moonght is the "Nocturne" from Menelssohn's music for "Midsummer ight's Dream."

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 1 8 1938

SYMPHONY WILL PLAY RUSSIAN WORK

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" orchestra suite, Op. 60, has been added to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival program for next month by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This composition has met with enthusiastic response from audiences in Boston and in cities touched by the orchestra on its tours the past season. It will be given performance at the closing concert Aug. 14. It was written for the Russian film of the same name.

"Kije" replaces "Tapiola", a composition by Sibelius. The First Symphony by Sibelius will be given Saturday, Aug. 6. Handel's Concerto Grosso in D Minor Op. 6, No. 10, has been added to the program for the opening concert Aug. 4, when the Festival's shed at "Tanglewood" will be inaugurated.

The other numbers on the opening program will include "Bach's chorale and first chorus from the cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. In this opening program the Cecilia Chorus of Boston with Jeannette Vreelandn, Paul Althouse, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon, will sing with the orchestra. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be Dr. Koussevitzky's answer to the troubled conditions in Europe. In the final movement the chorus and quartet of vocalists sing words by Schiller which glorify the brotherhood of man.

The program Aug. 13 will open with "Angelus", from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B Minor Op. 60. This program is dedicated to the late Dr. Hadley, who was the first conductor of the Berkshire Festival. That evening Mrs. Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York will be guests of the Festival trustee.

GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE

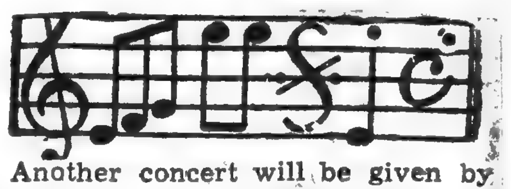
JUL 2 2 1938

Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of Aug. 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

3

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 1 9 1938



Another concert will be given by the Smith college Summer School of Music Thursday evening at Sage hall. Marion DeRonde, cellist, Aurelio Giorni, pianist, and Anis Fulihan, pianist, will present the following program:

Sonata in G minor, by Beethoven.
Sonata in F major, Mozart.
Symphonic Variations, by Boellman.
Epithalame, by Kantouris.
Mediterranean Pieces, by Fuleihan.
El Pano moruno, Polo, Asturiana; by Manuel deFalla.
Granadina, by Joaquin Nin.

The concerts are free and open to the public.

A number of changes have been made in the program of the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood,, August 4-14. Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," orchestra suite Opus 60 will be given at the closing concert August 14 instead of "Tapiola," by Sibelius. Handel's Concerto Grosso in D, Minor Opus 6, No. 10 has been added to the program for the opening concert August 4, when the new shed at Tanglewood will be inaugurated.

The other numbers on the opening program will be Bach's chorale and first chorus from the cantata "Ein Feste Burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia Chorus of Boston, Arthur Fiedler conductor, and a solo quartet composed of Jeannette Vreeland, Paul Althouse, Anna Haskas, and Norman Condon will sing with the orchestra.

On Saturday evening, August 6, the program will be Haydn's Symphony in E flat, No. 99. Debussy's "La Mer;" and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1. Sunday afternoon there will be "Eine Gleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra by Mozart; Brahms' Symphony in E Minor No. 4, opus 98; Music for the theatre by Copland; "Ma Mere l'Oye" by Ravel; and Aespighi's symphonic poe, "Pini di Roma."

The next week an all-Wagner program will be presented Thursday night, August 11. The final scene of Act 1 of "Die Walkure" will be sung by Beale Hober, soprano, and Paul Althouse, tenor; and the entire third act of "Siegfried" will be sung by Norman Sordon, Anna Kaskas. Paul Althouse, and Beale Hober.

The Saturday evening concert, August 13, will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival, and will open with his "Augelus" from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor, Opus 60. Beethoven"s Sixth ("Pastoral") symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth ("Pathetique") Symphony will complete the program.

The final concert Sunday afternoon concert will include Schumann's Symphony in B flat, No. 1; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite; and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

JUN 2 2 1938

Radcliffe Gives Honor to Woman Musician

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., June 22. (AP)—President Ada L. Comstock of Radcliffe College announced today an honorary membership in Phi Beta Kappa had been conferred on Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, of the Ecole Normale de Musique, of Paris, only woman to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mlle. Boulanger was a visiting lecturer in music at Radcliffe during the past year.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

July 22, 1938

Dr Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of August 13 by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 2 1 1938

Large Committee at Work For Olin Downes Lectures

Mrs. W. Bradford West Assisted By 22 Associates—Festival Booth Open on South Street

Mrs. W. Bradford West, who is chairman for the lectures to be given by Olin Downes of the New York Times for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, reports that there is widespread interest in the lectures and today urged all who wish to be assured of seats to communicate with her or members of her committee as soon as possible.

At Museum

These lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield at 3 P. M., Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13, will feature the music to be played at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. There is a substantial saving in purchasing tickets for the entire series of four lectures. Music lovers who heard the lectures last year were enthusiastic over the presentation by Mr. Downes.

Members of Committee

Members of Mrs. West's committee are Mrs. Roger Wellington, Mrs. Thomas Plunkett, Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate, Miss Virginia Rhodes, Mrs. Stanley P. Benton, Miss Lucy Ballard, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Miss Marie Sylvester, Mrs. Michael L. Eisner, Mrs. J. Colville Vance, Mrs. Harry Jones, Mrs. Henry D. Brigham, Mrs. Stanley Clark, Mrs. Briggs Gettys, Miss Elizabeth Bliss, Mrs. M. H. Walker, Mrs. Peter Pianarosa, Mrs. James D. Colt, Mrs. V. E. Goodwin, Miss Julia Wink, Mrs. Robert McCracken, Mrs. Edward Denouf.

Committee Meets

The Pittsfield committee for the Festival met yesterday afternoon with the chairman, Mrs. Louis E. Underwood at her home on Crofut Street. Members of this committee will have charge of the booth placed on South Street for the accommodation of local residents and visitors. Unreserved seats will be on sale at the booth and orders will be taken for reserved seats. The building was donated by Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor. The building was designed by M. M. Thrane.

Mrs. Underwood reported today that there was an increasing demand for subscription tickets and urged all music lovers who wish reserved seats to act at once since the number is limited.

RECORD
Amherst Mass

JUL 2 0 1938

Addition to Festival Concert For Aug. 4th Noted at Tanglewood

Handel Concerto Grasso Placed On Program—Downes to Lecture

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is playing at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two week ends of August, has announced an attractive addition to the program for the first concert on August 4th. The Handel Concerto Grosso will be included in the program for the last concert in the second series on August 14th has been changed. The Prokofieff Lieutenant Kije Suite will be substituted for the scheduled Sibelius Tapiola.

Mr Koussevitzky will open rehearsals on Saturdays, August 6th and 13th, at 10 o'clock in the morning to those holding $5 memberships. This unusual opportunity to see a great orchestra at work informally adds a great deal of interest to a membership.

Olin Downes, eminent music critic of the New York Times, will be in Lenox, Massachusetts where the Festival shed is located on the Tanglewood estate, to deliver a series of lectures on the music played by the Boston Symphony at the Festival concerts. Mr. Downes, a discerning and interesting critic, will give his talks on afternoons preceding the concerts, commenting on the music which is to follow.

Miss Chapman, of the Gift Nook on Main Street, has tickets for the Festival and the Olin Downes lectures. She will be glad to supply information as to prices, other attractions in the Berkshires, and the location of the Festival shed at Tanglewood. You are invited to drop in at the Gift Nook with your questions.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 2 1 1938

MR. SINCLAIR LEWIS ON BOSTON.

Mr. Sinclair Lewis has spoken on Boston. He condemns it as "lacking in culture and the civilized enjoyments of life." Cambridge, across the Charles, from Boston gets a bit of the Lewis acid also. Cambridge too has retreated from the paths of learning and righteousness. All this is a preliminary to Mr. Lewis' debut on the stage as the leading player in his own, "It Can't Happen Here." His wife, the brilliant Dorothy Thompson, is coming down for the opening at the Cohasset Summer theatre next week.

Of course Boston has changed a bit since the days when William Ellery Channing was calling it from the pulpit "the gentlest and sweetest place on earth." It has taken the vast social and scientific changes of our modern existence in stride. The day when it was moulding ground for American literary thought has passed indeed. The era of Emerson, Hawthorne, Lowell, Longfellow, Holmes, Whittier, Prescott, Motley and Parkman is gone to be sure.

But Boston is no city of unusual wickedness. Its Museum of Fine Arts, Mr. Lewis, is perhaps the finest in the United States. Its public library is world known. The Boston Symphony is still first rate and in season the stage is well patronized.

And does Mr. Lewis know that the Red Sox are in third place, only three games from the top? That is noteworthy and the naughty Boston of today is agog about it.

98

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 1 9 1938

A Visitor Muses At Tanglewood

(Lucian Price in the Boston Globe)

STOCKBRIDGE, July 16—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival which began life only four years ago in a lowly circus tent has now a stately home. Last Sunday a thousand persons came to see the new Music Shed at "Tanglewood," the estate near Lenox where Hawthorne lived and wrote, and which has been given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Though the concerts are still nearly three weeks off, the building itself is an attraction. Justly so. Dignified, simple, admirably designed, its acoustics are miraculous, and its size (it will seat more than 5000 persons) is hard to realize. Shaped like a wedge of pie, Symphony Hall in Boston would go into its length once with room to spare, and its width would hold two Symphony Halls. Yet a whisper on the stage is audible anywhere in it, even when empty of people, and without an echo or a dead spot.

* * *

It Has Everything

Scenically, the estate itself is a gem. "Tanglewood" has been untangled. Sleek lawns, noble groves, formal gardens, a comfortable old mansion of mid-19th century style, it has everything: frontage on a sizable lake, meadows, woods, and mountain views. It is quite as storybooky in its own way as "The House of the Seven Gables" which Hawthorne wrote here in 1850-51, in a little red house (destroyed by fire half a century ago), as a bronze tablet set into a bowlder near its site informs the visitor.

Down by the lake shore in deep woods is an aboriginal pine, six feet through the trunk and 22 feet in circumference; not far from it is an Indian Fire Pit, between two ancient trees, a ring of big stones about six feet across and perhaps five feet deep, where Sachems and Big Medicines used to hold powwow, one of few such known in New England. And not the least choice spot on the estate is that plantation of templed trees, the Hawthorne Pines, foyer and promenade to the Music Shed.

Music makes a classless society. The Berkshire community has unified all forces for these festivals. Its trustees are as well from the permanent as from summer residents; its committees work like beavers without pay; its 62 ushers are volunteers, with a waiting list; its motor traffic is ruled by twoscore members of the American Legion plus the sheriff and deputy, all of whom got drenched to their hides in last year's cloudburst without a syllable of grumbling. There are local committees for the festival in 55 cities and towns of New England and in states as far off as Florida and California, and in parts of Canada.

Working for the festival is an impulse which seems to generate like spontaneous combustion. Last August people came from 32 states, from Canada and from Europe. Fifty newspapers and magazines sent their writers; telegraph and telephone wires were run into the old mansion where comfortable press quarters are fitted up in what was once its library; and of course for lodgings the crowd overflows Lenox, Stockbridge and Pittsfield into surrounding towns.

* * *

Hub of Musical World

Berkshire County has sometimes seemed geographically isolated from the rest of the state, a bit like an orphan child. It might once have been said to be bounded on the south by Connecticut, on the west by New York State, on the north by Vermont, and on the east by the State of Massachusetts. But these festivals make it a hub of the musical world. The gain is mutual, "for in going to the Berkshires the Boston Symphony Orchestra becomes much more a New England Symphony Orchestra, if not a national possession as well.

The Music Shed is a water shed, but with a difference: this water flows uphill. Everybody has heard of the famous barn so situated that a raindrop falling on one side of its ridgepole flows into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, while a drop falling on the other side flows into the Gulf of Mexico. But they both reach the same ocean. Perched on the water shed between Boston and New York, this Berkshire Music Shed is a meeting of waters where every human raindrop finds its way into the same mighty ocean of music.

Audiences at these festivals always speak of the added pleasure of listening to music amidst a summer landscape. If true under a circus tent, the spell will be the more potent in this clean, bright auditorium open on three sides to sunlit or starlit meadows bordered by deep woods, or to lawns like green velours shadowed by goodly groves and the Hawthorne Pines. For the whole estate is a happy work of nature beautified by man. Its formal gardens are enclosed by hedges of clipped hemlock that have taken two generations of care to grow, arranged in terraces at varying levels, two of them being centered with pools and fountains whose cool splashing is a pleasant sound on a warm day.

To see this estate on a moonlit night of summer, the white walls and columns of the Music Shed gleaming like a classic temple in a sacred grove, is like walking bodily inside the frame and canvas of some romantic landscape painting in the style of Claude Lorraine. The pines rise columnar and black, lighted by gleams of white moonshine; the broad lawns are flooded with its blueish pallor; below, down the long slopes of meadow and woodland the lake is a pale glimmering of silver; and all round rise the dim gigantic shapes of mountains in that moon-glamoured haze which a summer night conjures like a magician up, from woods and water. The air is heavy with the fragrance of linden trees in full bloom and a few night birds are calling. "Tanglewood" by moonlight is the "Nocturne" from Mendelssohn's music for "Midsummer Night's Dream."

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
JUL 1 8 1938

SYMPHONY WILL PLAY RUSSIAN WORK

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" orchestra suite, Op. 60, has been added to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival program for next month by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This composition has met with enthusiastic response from audiences in Boston and in cities touched by the orchestra on its tours the past season. It will be given performance at the closing concert Aug. 14. It was written for the Russian film of the same name.

"Kije" replaces "Tapiola", a composition by Sibelius. The First Symphony by Sibelius will be given Saturday, Aug. 6. Handel's Concerto Grosso in D Minor Op. 6, No. 10, has been added to the program for the opening concert Aug. 4, when the Festival's shed at "Tanglewood" will be inaugurated.

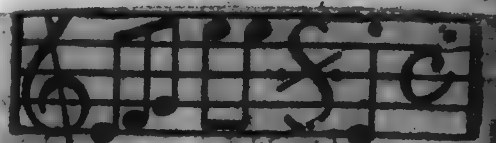
The other numbers on the opening program will include "Bach's chorale and first chorus from the cantata, 'Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. In this opening program the Cecilia Chorus of Boston with Jeannette Vreelandn, Paul Althouse, Anna Kaskas and Norman Cordon, will sing with the orchestra. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be Dr. Koussevitzky's answer to the troubled conditions in Europe. In the final movement the chorus and quartet of vocalists sing words by Schiller which glorify the brotherhood of man.

The program Aug. 13 will open with "Angelus", from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B Minor Op. 60. This program is dedicated to the late Dr. Hadley, who was the first conductor of the Berkshire Festival. That evening Mrs. Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York will be guests of the Festival trustees.

GALVESTON, TEX.
TRIBUNE
JUL 2 2 1938

Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of Aug. 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram
JUL 1 9 1938



Another concert will be given by the Smith college Summer School of Music Thursday evening at Sage hall. Marion DeRonde, cellist, Aurelio Giorni, pianist, and Anis Fulihan, pianist, will present the following program:

Sonata in G minor, by Beethoven.
Sonata in F major, Mozart.
Symphonic Variations, by Boellman.
Epithalame, by Kantouris.
Mediterranean Pieces, by Fuleihan.
El Pano moruno, Polo, Asturiana; by Manuel deFalla.
Granadina, by Joaquin Nin.

The concerts are free and open to the public.

A number of changes have been made in the program of the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, August 4-14. Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," orchestra suite Opus 60 will be given at the closing concert August 14 instead of "Tapiola," by Sibelius. Handel's Concerto Grosso in D, Minor Opus 6, No. 10 has been added to the program for the opening concert August 4, when the new shed at Tanglewood will be inaugurated.

The other numbers on the opening program will be Bach's chorale and first chorus from the cantata "Ein Feste Burg ist unser Gott" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Cecilia Chorus of Boston, Arthur Fiedler conductor, and a solo quartet composed of Jeannette Vreeland, Paul Althouse, Anna Haskas, and Norman Condon will sing with the orchestra.

On Saturday evening, August 6, the program will be Haydn's Symphony in E flat, No. 99; Debussy's "La Mer;" and Sibelius' Symphony No. 1. Sunday afternoon there will be "Eine Gleine Nachtmusik," serenade for string orchestra by Mozart; Brahms' Symphony in E Minor No. 4, opus 98; Music for the theatre by Copland; "Ma Mere l'Oye" by Ravel; and Aespighi's symphonic poe, "Pini di Roma."

The next week an all-Wagner program will be presented Thursday night, August 11. The final scene of Act 1 of "Die Walkure" will be sung by Beale Hober, soprano, and Paul Althouse, tenor; and the entire third act of "Siegfried" will be sung by Norman Sordon, Anna Kaskas. Paul Althouse, and Beale Hober.

The Saturday evening concert, August 13, will be dedicated to the late Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival, and will open with his "Augelus" from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor, Opus 60. Beethoven"s Sixth ("Pastoral") symphony and Tchaikovsky's Sixth ("Pathetique") Symphony will complete the program.

The final concert Sunday afternoon concert will include Schumann's Symphony in B flat, No. 1; Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite; and Brahms' Symphony No. 2.

BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS
JUN 22 1938

Radcliffe Gives Honor to Woman Musician

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., June 22. (AP)—President Ada L. Comstock of Radcliffe College announced today an honorary membership in Phi Beta Kappa had been conferred on Mlle. Nadia Boulanger, of the Ecole Normale de Musique, of Paris, only woman to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mlle. Boulanger was a visiting lecturer in music at Radcliffe during the past year.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
July 22, 1938

Dr Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of August 13 by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 21 1938

Large Committee at Work For Olin Downes Lectures

Mrs. W. Bradford West Assisted By 22 Associates—Festival Booth Open on South Street

Mrs. W. Bradford West, who is chairman for the lectures to be given by Olin Downes of the New York Times for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, reports that there is widespread interest in the lectures and today urged all who wish to be assured of seats to communicate with her or members of her committee as soon as possible.

At Museum

These lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield at 3 P. M., Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13, will feature the music to be played at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. There is a substantial saving in purchasing tickets for the entire series of four lectures. Music lovers who heard the lectures last year were enthusiastic over the presentation by Mr. Downes.

Members of Committee

Members of Mrs. West's committee are Mrs. Roger Wellington, Mrs. Thomas Plunkett, Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate, Miss Virginia Rhodes, Mrs. Stanley P. Benton, Miss Lucy Ballard, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Miss Marie Sylvester, Mrs. Michael L. Eisner, Mrs. J. Colville Vance, Mrs. Harry Jones, Mrs. Henry D. Brigham, Mrs. Stanley Clark, Mrs. Briggs Gettys, Miss Elizabeth Bliss, Mrs. M. H. Walker, Mrs. Peter Pianarosa, Mrs. James D. Colt, Mrs. V. E. Goodwin, Miss Julia Wink, Mrs. Robert McCracken, Mrs. Edward Denouf.

Committee Meets

The Pittsfield committee for the Festival met yesterday afternoon with the chairman, Mrs. Louis E. Underwood at her home on Crofut Street. Members of this committee will have charge of the booth placed on South Street, for the accommodation of local residents and visitors. Unreserved seats will be on sale at the booth and orders will be taken for reserved seats. The building was donated by Mrs. Elisabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor. The building was designed by M. M. Thrane.

Mrs. Underwood reported today that there was an increasing demand for subscription tickets and urged all music lovers who wish reserved seats to act at once since the number is limited.

RECORD
Amherst Mass
JUL 2 0 1938

Addition to Festival Concert For Aug. 4th Noted at Tanglewood

Handel Concerto Grasso Placed On Program—Downes to Lecture

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which is playing at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two week ends of August, has announced an attractive addition to the program for the first concert on August 4th. The Handel Concerto Grosso will be included in the program for the last concert in the second series on August 14th has been changed. The Prokofieff Lieutenant Kije Suite will be substituted for the scheduled Sibelius Tapiola.

Mr Koussevitzky will open rehearsals on Saturdays, August 6th and 13th, at 10 o'clock in the morning to those holding $5 memberships. This unusual opportunity to see a great orchestra at work informally adds a great deal of interest to a membership.

Olin Downes, eminent music critic of the New York Times, will be in Lenox, Massachusetts where the Festival shed is located on the Tanglewood estate, to deliver a series of lectures on the music played by the Boston Symphony at the Festival concerts. Mr. Downes, a discerning and interesting critic, will give his talks on afternoons preceding the concerts, commenting on the music which is to follow.

Miss Chapman, of the Gift Nook on Main Street, has tickets for the Festival and the Olin Downes lectures. She will be glad to supply information as to prices, other attractions in the Berkshires, and the location of the Festival shed at Tanglewood. You are invited to drop in at the Gift Nook with your questions.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 21 1938

MR. SINCLAIR LEWIS ON BOSTON.

Mr. Sinclair Lewis has spoken on Boston. He condemns it as "lacking in culture and the civilized enjoyments of life." Cambridge, across the Charles, from Boston gets a bit of the Lewis acid also. Cambridge too has retreated from the paths of learning and righteousness. All this is a preliminary to Mr. Lewis' debut on the stage as the leading player in his own, "It Can't Happen Here." His wife, the brilliant Dorothy Thompson, is coming down for the opening at the Cohasset Summer theatre next week.

Of course Boston has changed a bit since the days when William Ellery Channing was calling it from the pulpit "the gentlest and sweetest place on earth." It has taken the vast social and scientific changes of our modern existence in stride. The day when it was moulding ground for American literary thought has passed indeed. The era of Emerson, Hawthorne, Lowell, Longfellow, Holmes, Whittier, Prescott, Motley and Parkman is gone to be sure.

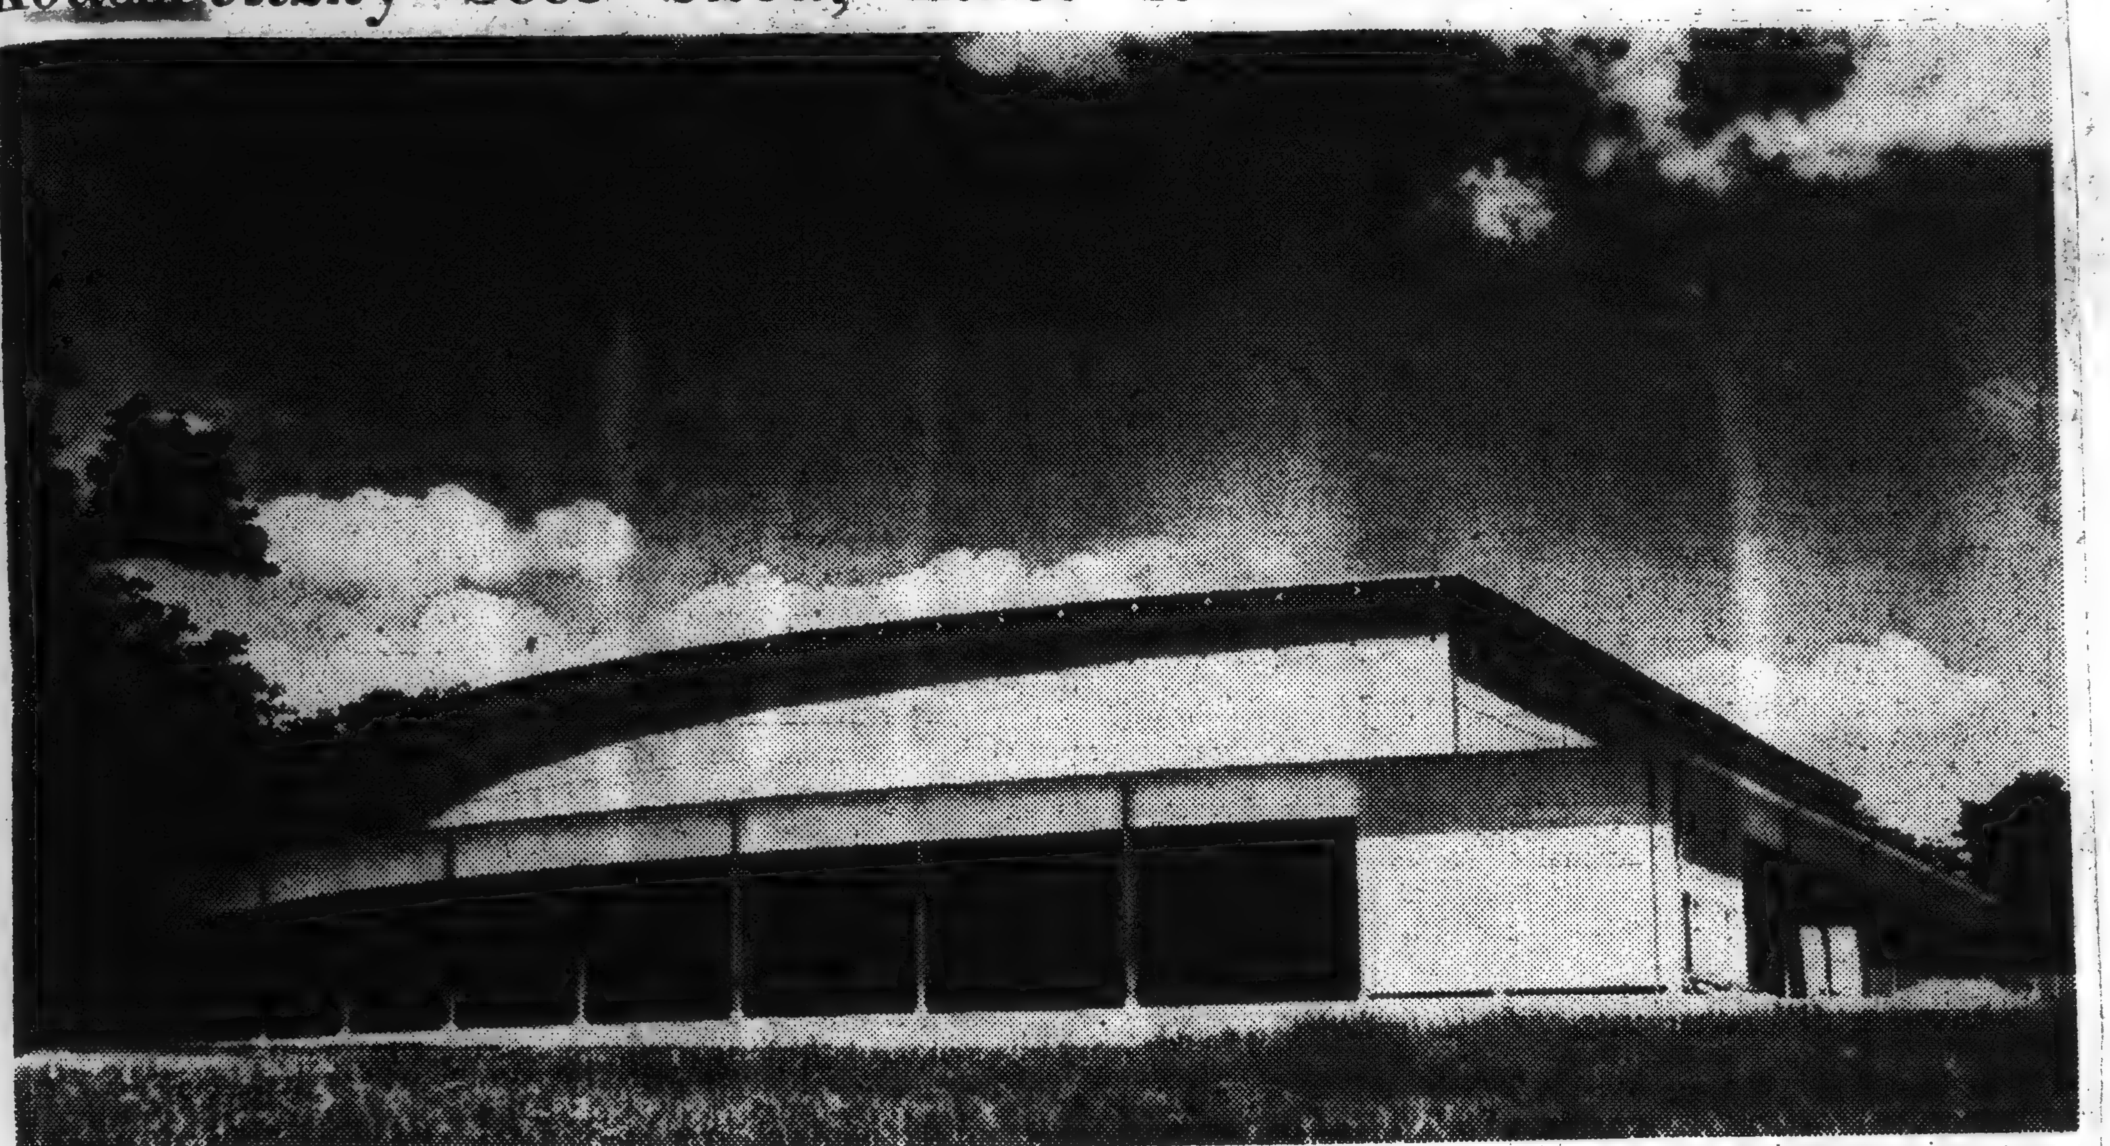
But Boston is no city of unusual wickedness. Its Museum of Fine Arts, Mr. Lewis, is perhaps the finest in the United States. Its public library is world known. The Boston Symphony is still first rate and in season the stage is well patronized.

And does Mr. Lewis know that the Red Sox are in third place, only three games from the top? That is noteworthy and the naughty Boston of today is agog about it.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 22 1938

Koussevitzky Sees Shed, Likes It



The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood is virtually completed so far as this year's construction is concerned. The above photograph was taken from a point near Hawthorne Street.

Koussevitzky Says Shed "Is Good"

Maestro Stops at Tanglewood on Way To New Haven

"It is good," commented Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after he had thoroughly inspected the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood and tried out its acoustical properties yesterday. 'We shall make great music."

The noted conductor and his orchestra will play for the fifth annual festival the first two weekends in August, arriving in the Berkshires the day before to continue rehearsals that will start Monday, Aug. 1 in Symphony Hall, Boston. After luncheon at the Red Lion with Moses Smith, music editor of the Boston Transcript; John N. Burke of the Symphony Hall staff and George W. Edman, chairman of the co-ordinating committee for the Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky left for New Haven where a banquet was given in his honor last night. Today he received an honorary degree from Yale, his fourth. He has already received degrees from Harvard, Brown and Rutgers.

Crowds continue to visit Tanglewood daily to note the progress made on the shed. It is now complete so far as construction this year is concerned. The shell remains to be painted and in a week or two the new chairs and benches will be installed. Definite announcements concerning parking and location of the box office also will be made soon and instructions will be included with the tickets to be mailed to members and subscribers next month.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Sympony Orchestra, inspected the building at Tanglewood yesterday and approved of its appearance and acoustics.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 22 1938

"Lieut Kije" To Be Played At Museum

Final Junior League Concert Tuesday at 4.30

Music lovers attending the free concert of recorded music at the Berkshire Museum, arranged by the arts department of the Junior League Tuesday at 4.30, will hear among other records, Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The recording was made this year following the Midwest tour by the orchestra. On tour the composition was played three times and was received with enthusiasm. It is based on the Russian film of the same title.

This concert will be the final one in the series of six which have featured music to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston orchestra next month. The arrangements have been in charge of Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt of Dalton, assisted by Miss Kathleen Plunkett.

The other numbers on the program, conforming to the final Festival program, will be: Schumann's Symphony in B Flat and the Brahms Symphony No. 2.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 23 1938

Anna Kaskas To Sing Erda In New Shed

Six Concerts Will Cover First Two August Weekends

By CARL LINDSTROM

The Berkshire Festival approaches.

Hartford's affinity with this stimulating cultural enterprise is enhanced this year by the presence among the soloists of Anna Kaskas and the clear indication that more persons from this city will attend the concerts than ever before. The Festival enters on a new phase also.

There is this to be said about bad weather—that it can become historic. Quickly comes to mind the blizzard of 1888, the thunderstorm during which the great soul of Beethoven took its flight, the flood of 1936 which was more productive of documents than dikes, the famous Connecticut Valley hailstorm less than a decade ago, and so on through the calendar of disordered elements. And much as we all respond to sunlight and smiling skies, was there ever a famous fair day? Perhaps, but the purpose now is to add another storm to history's collection.

When Elements Raged

One sultry August evening of last year the Berkshire Storm King rolled up his heavy artillery and laid torrential siege to an idyllic spot called "Tanglewood" near Lenox. It so happened that one of the world's most illustrious orchestras and Doctor Serge Koussevitzky had just begun an all-Wagner program under the shelter of a huge tent which, while acoustically kind to the music, was by that very token also highly receptive to the drum fire of rain which interrupted the performance of "Forest Murmurings." The music was stopped and begun again many times. The face of Doctor Koussevitzky as he kept appearing before the audience was a study in mixed emotion. From good-humored acceptance, saddened resignation, flashes of irritability and temperament, to a grave and inflexible resolution.

Such high resolve was not at once apparent, but today it has concrete form. At Tanglewood in the Berkshires there stands a new music shed, built at a cost of $80,000 publicly subscribed and affording a permanent summer shelter for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which shall be proof against any kind of weather. It will be formally dedicated to its purpose on the evening of August 4 with the Bach Chorale "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott." On the program also will be Beethoven's great Ninth Symphony.

That evening last year will not soon be forgotten. Those who were there somehow knew that, to compensate for the relatively small disappointment of a marred program, they were privileged to be present at a dramatic beginning of larger things.

Funds from Many States

The Berkshire cultural community is an extremely large one. Lindsborg, Bethlehem, Ann Arbor are known the country over, but they are communities which have made themselves known and attracted musical visitors. The Berkshire Music Hall was built by funds contributed by persons from many states. It belongs to them and they are the ones who make their pilgrimage there for new aesthetic life.

"This money has come from all parts of the country," says Miss Gertrude Robinson, president of the festival, "but the bulk of it has come from the Berkshires and nearby. The $80,000 has been spent to provide the essentials this year—protection from sun and rain and for good acoustics."

The shed with its plain design and uncovered steel rafters is not regarded as a finished product. Changes can be made to suit the possibly changing function of the Festival. Should opera be contemplated, the structure can be remodeled to provide the necessary stage.

The new shed will seat 5,000 persons—somewhat more than the tent accommodated last year—and there is reason to believe that all seats will be taken for the six concerts, the subscriptions having been unusually heavy this year.

August 4 to 14

The six concerts will cover the first two weekends of August: Thursday, Aug. 4, Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 6 and 7; Thursday, Aug. 11 and Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 13 and 14. The Sunday concerts will be held at 3:30 in the afternoon.

There will be a departure from the usual type of program on the second Thursday, when the entire first act of Wagner's "The Walkuere" and Act III of "Siegfried" will be presented with soloists, among whom will be Anna Kaskas, who will sing the role of Erda in the last named. She will also sing in the choral part of the Ninth Symphony on Aug. 4. Other soloists will be Jeannette Vreeland, Paul Althouse, Norman Cordon and Beal Hober. The Cecilia Society of Boston, conducted by Arthur Fiedler of Boston, will take the chorus in the Ninth Symphony.

August 4, at 8:30

Bach ... Chorale from the Cantata, "Ein feste Burg ist unser Gott."
Handel ... Concerto Grosso in D Minor, Op. 6, No. 10
Beethoven ... Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, with final chorus on Schiller's Ode to Joy, Op 125.
Cecilia Society, Arthur Fiedler, Conductor.
Jeannette Vreeland, Soprano; Paul Althouse, Tenor; Anna Kaskas, Contralto; Norman Cordon, Bass.

August 6, at 8:30

Haydn...Symphony in E-flat, No. 99 (B. & H. No. 3)
Debussy...'La Mer" Three Symphonic Sketches
Sibelius...Symphony No. 1 in E Minor, Op. 39

August 7, at 3:30

Mozart..."Eine Kleine Nachtmusik," Serenade for String Orchestra (K. 525)
Brahms...Symphony in E-minor, No. 4, Op. 98.
Copland...Music for the Theater.
Ravel..."Ma Mere l'Oye" (Mother Goose) Five Children's Pieces
Respighi . . . Symphonic Poem, 'Pini di Roma" (Pines of Rome").

August 11, at 8:30

Wagner..."Die Walkure"
Act 1 Final Scene
Sieglinde ...Beale Hober, Soprano
Seigmund ...Paul Althouse, tenor
Wagner . . . Act III "Siegfried"
The Wanderer (Wotan Norman Cordon
Erda Anna Kaskas
Siegfried Paul Althouse
Bruennhilde Beal Hober

August 13, at 8:30

Henry Hadley...'Angelus" Andante tranquillo) from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor, Op. 60
Beethoven...Symphony No. 6, in F major, Op. 68, "Pastoral."
Tchaikovsky...Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetic," Op. 74.

August 14 at 3:30

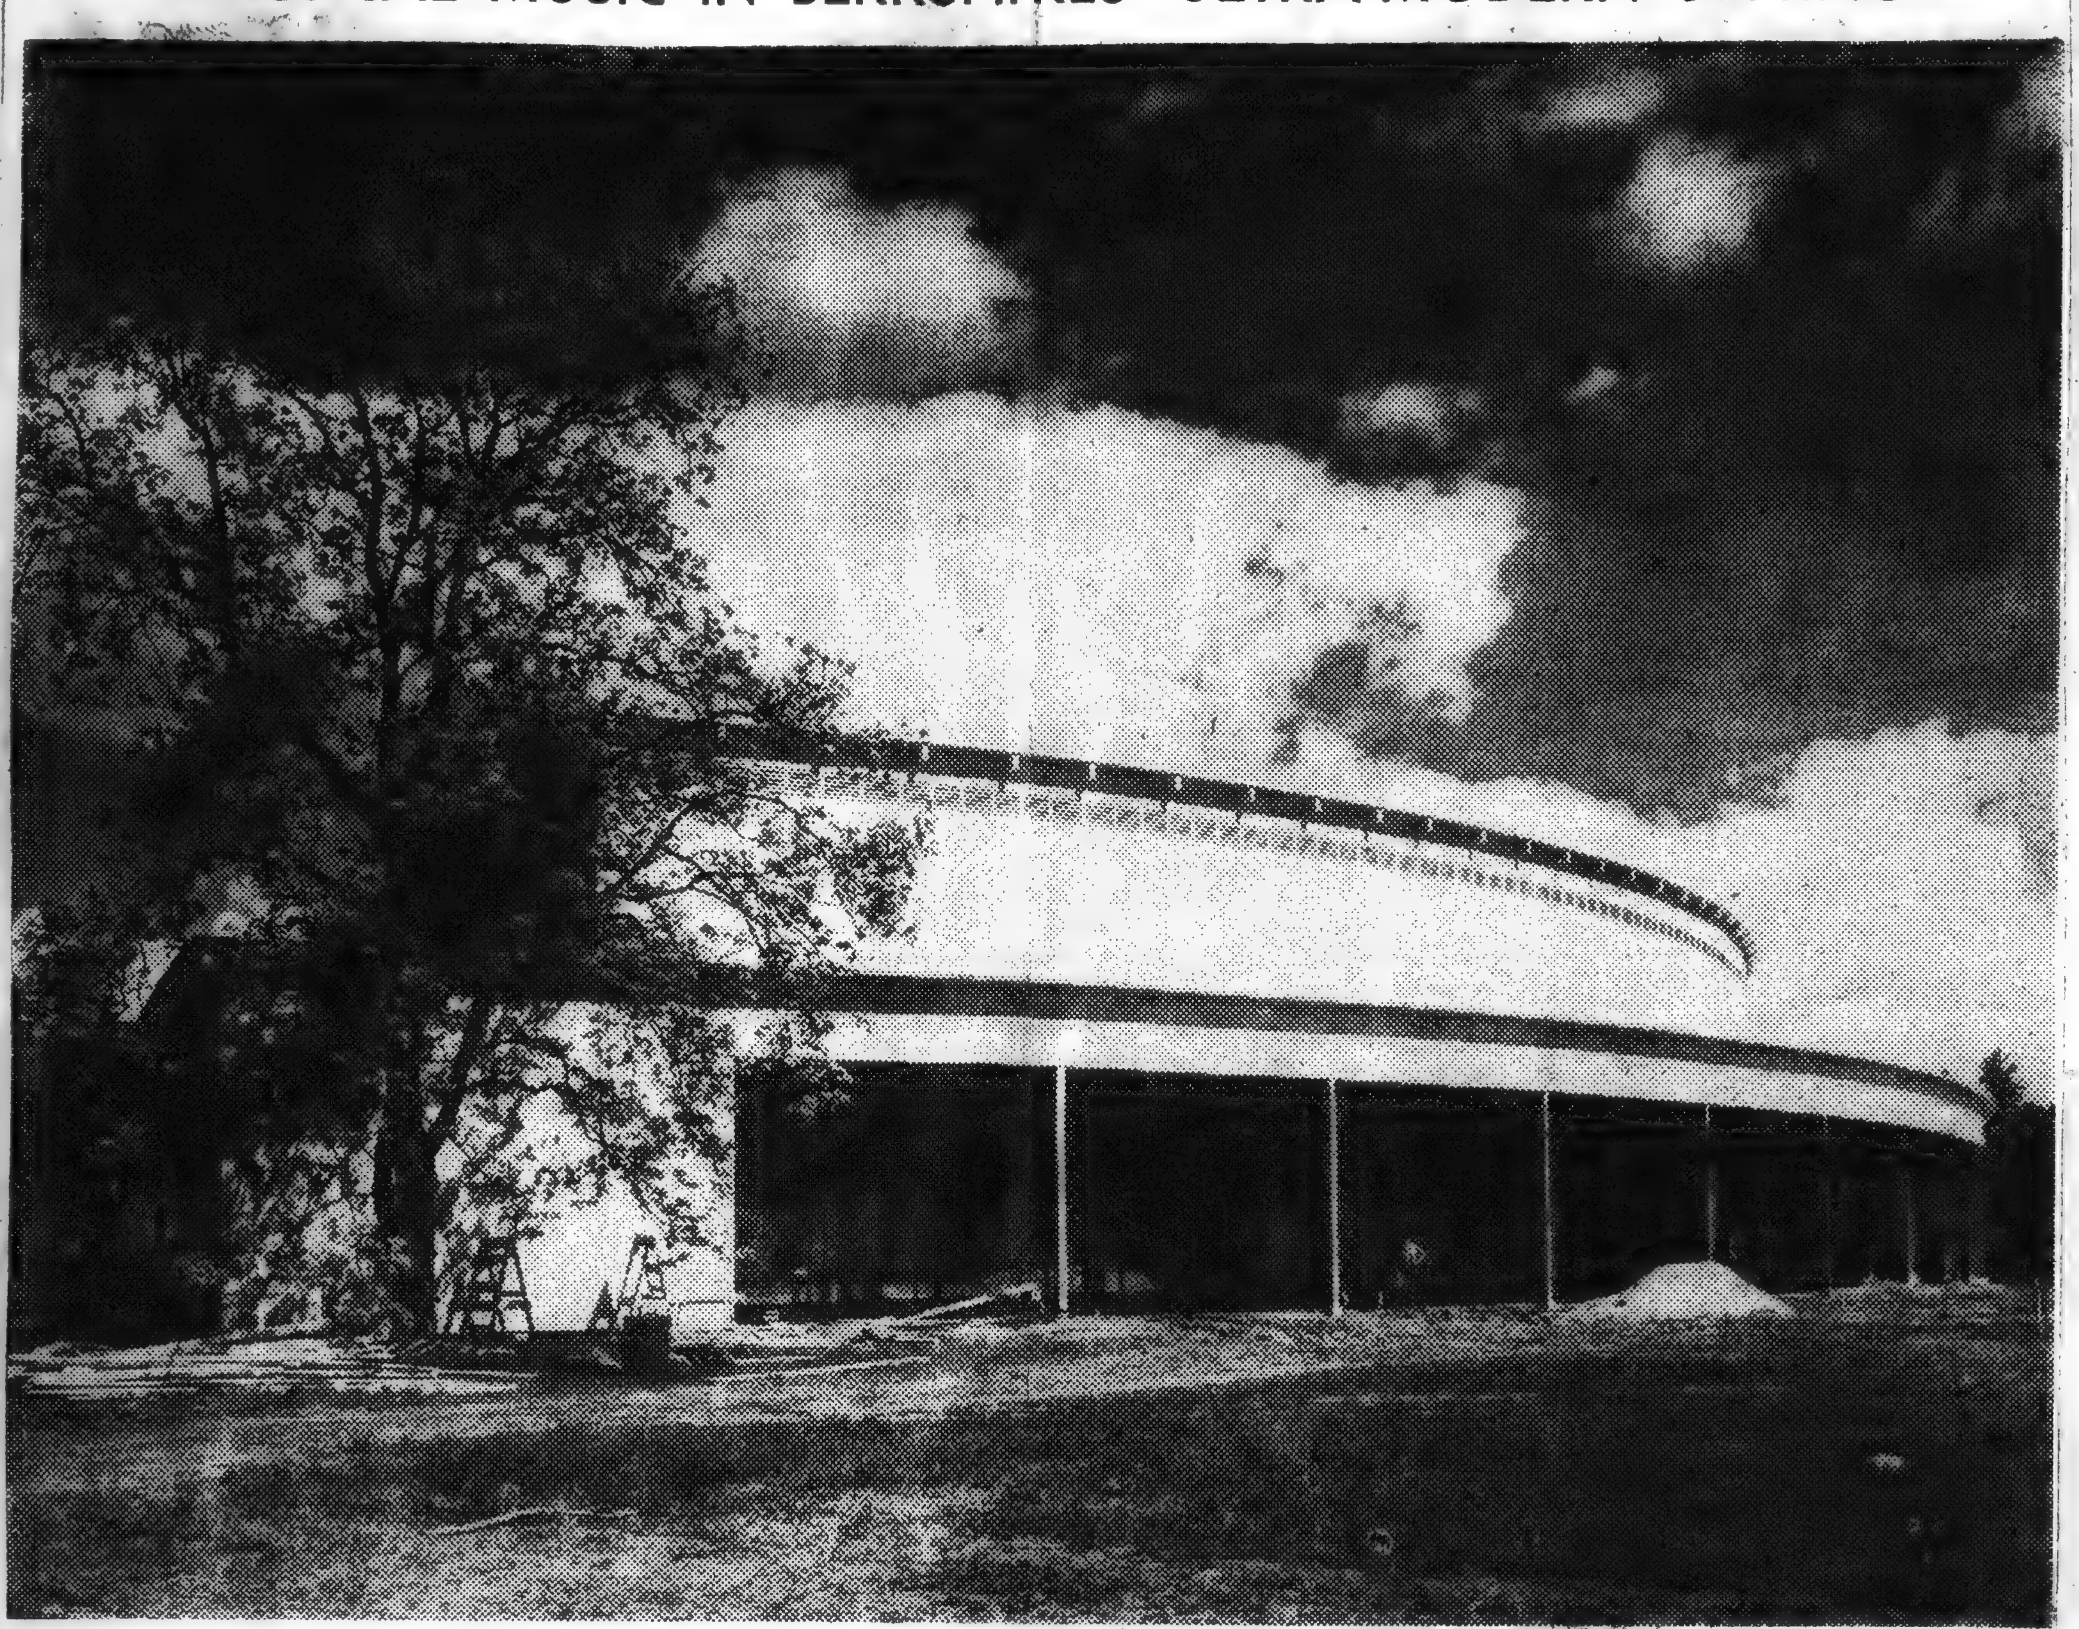
Schumann...Symphony in B flat, No. 1, Op. 38.
Prokofieff ... Lieutenant Kije," Orchestral Suite, Op. 60.
Brahms...Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 73.

150

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD

JUL 23 1938

CLASSICAL MUSIC IN BERKSHIRES' ULTRA-MODERN SETTING



The newly constructed music shed at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, built for the use of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in their series of summer concerts, is shown above. The building has the simplicity of modern functional design, frankly displaying rafters in the interior. Designed to seat more than 5,000, it is acoustically perfect, the slightest sound on the large stage being audible in any part of the huge fan-shaped shed which is open to the air on its periphery.

Music Lovers' Hopes Rise For Salzburg Of America

Construction of Music Shed on Berkshires Estate Heralds Festival.

Events in Europe, enforcing the sudden decline of musical values in Austria because Nazi policy boycotts Jewish musicians, conductors and scores, have brought to a quicker fruition than American music-lovers had dared hope a dream of several years—that there might be some day an American Salzburg, with an annual summer festival drawing great musicians from across the world.

Troy Area residents have for four years past been increasingly aware of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, a series of summer concerts presented in western Massachusetts first by members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society and later by the Boston Symphony under the baton of Dr. Koussevitsky. This summer, however, music lovers in this vicinity have been visiting at Tanglewood, near the town of Lenox, Mass., what may well become almost at once the Salzburg of America, inheriting from Austria's unfortunate city the musical tradition of a famous festival.

A great permanent auditorium, seating more than 5,000 with room for thousands more, has been erected by the Symphonic Festival committee on the Tanglewood estate as a focus for the summer musical development of the entire East. There for ten days from Aug. 4 the Boston Symphony will present six concerts.

Among Trojans who already have visited the shed are Mrs. Archie W. Bray, Troy member of the Festival committee and members of her family, Dr. Ray Palmer Baker and Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Samuel Resneck, Mrs. W. F. Spafford, Mrs. William C. Johnson, Miss Esther Sherry, Mrs. Robert Buffler, Mrs. Orlon Arnold and Frank Sherry.

Intensive study has made the great fan-shaped structure acoustically perfect. A tack dropped on the stage can be heard in the colonnaded wings which are open to the surrounding lawns. The steel beams of the roof and the stage have been constructed so that, if opera, for example, were to be attempted later on, relatively few changes will be necessary. A permanent floor probably will be laid at a later date.

The effort to replace the Austrian Salzburg Festival in America has provided an abundance of corollary musical fare during the Berkshire Festival period. Lectures by music critic Olin Downes, chamber music concerts, and complementary programs have been arranged.

Troy musicians see in the impetus given the enjoyment and understanding of music for the entire section by this recent development, a heightened appreciation of Troy's musical opportunities through next Winter's Chromatic Concert Series, Vocals, Musical Art Club and similar organizations.

COLUMBIA, PA.
NEWS

JUL 23 1938

DR. SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY has dedicated the concert of Aug. 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 23 1938

RECORDS

COLUMBIA'S new set of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony (three records, $5) offers a superb performance by Beecham with the London Philharmonic—one that is sensitively phrased without fussiness, powerful on occasion without overemphasis, and beautifully realized in orchestral terms. To say that one hears these things and almost none of the shrillness of some previous Beecham items is to characterize the quality of the recording sufficiently. Will English Columbia now give us a Beecham recording of the great C major Symphony of Schubert, of which we are in much greater need?

The same qualities of performance and recording are heard in Beecham's new version of the three excerpts from Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" (two records, $3.25), and make it astoundingly superior to Koussevitzky's of a year or so ago. Also in his single ($1.50) of Sibelius's "Finlandia"; though I must add that the first side sounds clear at the beginning but gets gritty at the end. This is true of many—but not of all—Columbia records (and increasingly of Victor records, but also not of all). Sometimes, as in the case of the Schubert Unfinished, the sound gets clearer as the loose residue is dug out of the grooves; but with no amount of playing could I get clear reproduction from the end of the first "Finlandia" side, or from the ends of certain sides in the recent Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto.

Other Columbia releases include Mozart's powerful Piano Sonata K. 457 (two records, $3.25), which loses some of its power in Gieseking's sensitive performance; Dvorak's melodious "American" Quartet (three records, $5), excellently done by the Roth String Quartet; and Beethoven's "Leonore" No. 2 Overture (two records, $3.25), which you can afford to do without, well played by the Vienna Philharmonic under Weingartner, and well recorded.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 23 1938

FREE CHAMBER MUSIC AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

For the benefit of the music lovers from great distances attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at "Tanglewood," the first two week ends in August when the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky will be heard in six concerts, Willem Willeke, director of the South Mountain Temple of Music in Pittsfield, Mass., has arranged two chamber music concerts. The concerts will be given Friday afternoons, Aug. 5 and Aug. 12 at 4 P. M., on days when there will be no concerts at "Tanglewood."

The South Mountain String Quartet founded by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, dubbed the "patron saint" of chamber music by Sir Henry Hudson Kitson, will play both Fridays. There will be no admission.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUL 23 1938

* * *

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," an orchestral suite, has been added to the last program of the Berkshire Festival, which gives six programs the first two weeks of next month at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass. According to Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this work replaces "Tapiola," by Sibelius.

Tribute to the memory of Henry Hadley, its first conductor, will be given Aug. 13 in a presentation of the "Angelus" from his Third Symphony.

The Yaddo Music Group is holding its annual session at Yaddo Mansion, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 26 to Sept. 2. Again this year works by contemporary American composers will receive the major part of attention. Composers and soloists will be in residence, and others are invited to attend. Like last year, a great deal of the music will be recorded.

WESTCHESTER, PA.
LOCAL NEWS

JUL 23 1938

Dr Sergei Koussevitsky has dedicated the concert of August 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation wil present a floral piece to Dr. Kousevitsky and the orchestra.

From August 18 to 21, the Silvermine Guild Music Festival Association will present its yearly festiva on the guild grounds and the adjacent estate of Laurence Bennet at Silvermine, Conn. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony, conducted by Jose Iturbi and Eugene Ormandy will provide the main features.

* * *

Rose Pauly will sing Richar Strauss' "Elektra" with the San Francisco Opera Company under Fritz Reiner in October, and in Los Angeles in November. She will appear in the same opera in Kansa City in December before joining the Metropolitan Opera in New York In January, Miss Pauly will be heard as soloist with the Cincinnat Symphony Orchestra under Eugene Goosseens.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 23 1938

Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of August 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

101

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 24 1938

MUSIC: C President of Berkshire Music Festival Applauds New Tanglewood Concert Shed

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

(Times-Union Music Critic)

Under the caption of Project in B Major, the Cleveland News of recent date publishes a delightful editorial, which we quote with comment:

"Just as a test of our economic planners, we await the results of some planning on a small scale which the President and his family are called on to do about the piano.

"The piano, that is in the East Room of the White House, the $15,000 gold-leafed job that has been there—since faraway 1903, when Roosevelt I. was president; the piano which is the closest our presidents have ever come to the sybaritic splendors of monarchy. It seems the old gilt box is about washed up and a new one has to be got. The matter is now in the conference stage.

"That's what's so strange. For, instead of calling Tommy Corcoran or Thurman Arnold or Robert H. Jackson, the White House has been consulting an interior decorator, a piano maker and a music bureau manager. What kind of way is that to reform a horse-and-buggy piano? Asking people who know the business! Has Mr. R. turned Tory?

"The natural New Deal way would be to begin a message to Congress, demanding an appropriation of $4,000,000, or else. If any balked, they could be reminded of the clear mandate for a new piano contained in the 1936 election returns. If the price seemed high, there might be a key-board chat on maintaining purchasing power?"

"That done, Harry Hopkins could set 10,000 Kentucky WPA workers to whittle keys, black if Happy Chandler wins in the primary, white if Senator Barkley wins. Harold Ickes could employ 100,000 PWA workers to run a special line for the piano's electrical attachment from Washington to the TVA, where Harcourt (The Other) Morgan would connect it up. The piano could be insured by James Roosevelt's former firm. And, just to add a touch of economy, they must use that bench that was made last winter. You know—that bench built to acommodate 15 judges.

"That would be about all except to have Congress pass one final law, known as the harmonizers death sentence. This law would forbid any performer to play any chord smaller than an augmented seventh. The New Deal doesn't do things in the small way.

* * *

'Gone Fishing'

Frederick Chapman, organist of St. Peter's church, and Frank Walsh, organist of the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception, have been whipping the streams of local piscatorial hideaways together during the past week. Doubtless, between strikes, the relative merits of the Gregorian chant as opposed to the music of the Anglican church was satisfactorially agreed upon.

* * *

Approves New Shed

Back from Europe after a several weeks' vacation, Miss Gertrue Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge, president of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, drove up to Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, today to inspect the shed built for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"I was delighted with the building and its location, as I am sure everyone else is who has visited Tanglewood," said Miss Smith. "It will be a thrilling experience to attend the opening concert on August 4, when Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra inaugurate the building with the chorale and chorus from Bach's cantata, 'A Mighty Fotress Is Our God.'"

Construction for 1938 has ended but that does not mean the building is finished, Miss Smith pointed out. "We have raised $80,000, in the short period of a few months without the aid of any outside agency. This money has come from all parts of the country but the bulk of it has come from the Berkshires and nearby. This money has been spent to provide the essentials this year—protection from sun and rain and good ascoustics.

Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," orchestral suite, Op. 60, will replace Sibeliu's "Tapiola" on the programs of the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, at the Berkshire Symphony Festival's cloisng concert August 14. Prokofieff composed his music for the film of the same name. On August 13, Mrs. Henry Hadley and officers of the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York will be guests of the festival trustees. The program will commence with "Angelus," from Hadley's third symphony in B minor.

* * *

Closing Aug. 15

Compositions may be submitted until August 15 for chamber music for the coming meeting of the Yaddo Music Group to be held at Yaddo, Saratoga Springs, August 26 through September 12. The orchestra will consist of two flutes, two oboes, or one oboe and one clarinet, one bassoon, two horns, one trumpet, one trombone, percussion and strings. The Walden Quartet of Cleveland will also be in residence, as well as two singers, Ethel Luening, soprano, and Benjamin de Loache, baritone. Ralph Kirkpatrick, harpsichordist, will be there and will make some interesting contributions of old music unearthed during his recent year abroad on a Guggenheim Fellowship.

There will be the possibility of performing chamber music for almost any combination of strings and winds, with or without piano. As last year, the empsasis will be on the performance of American compositions, of which already a large number have been submitted from all parts of the country. A group of 32 is expected to be present during the entire period, August 26 to September 12. There are to be at least 11 composers among the group, many of whom play orchestral instruments, but other composers are cordially invited to come to Saratoga and mingle with the group that is at Yaddo, attending rehearsals, informal concerts, etc., for any part of the time they desire.

There will be two concerts at Saratoga Spa. Sunday evenings, September 4 and 11, and three other concerts at the Yaddo Mansion, on Saturday afternoon and evening, September 10, and Sunday morning, September 11. Yaddo possesses a recording machine and will continue its policy of making recordings of much of the music which is performed, a thing which has proved of great value to many who were interested in the present state of American composition, as well as to the composers themselves, during this last year.

* * *

New Soloist

Miss Eleanor Foote, contralto, and pupil of Frank Hemstreet, has been engaged by Trinity Methodist church as soloist. Miss Foote's duties begin with the opening of the church in September.

IDEOLOGICAL MYSTERY IN MUSIC

B. Post

Some Question as to the Effect of Beethoven's 9th Symphony

July — 24/38

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

There's a catch in this somewhere. In a press release anent the coming Berkshire Festival, we read: "Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will be Dr. Koussevitzky's answer to the troubled conditions in Europe. In the final movement the chorus and quartet of vocalists sing words by Schiller which glorify the brotherhood of man." And in the current issue of the Musical Courier, under the caption "Japanese Love for Beethoven," we find this despatch from Tokyo: "According to statistics, over a million records of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony were sold in Japan during 1937."

Since first announced, the programmes of the Festival have undergone slight modifications. At the opening concert, which falls on Thursday evening of next week, besides the Ninth Symphony and a chorus and chorale by Bach, Dr. Koussevitzky will offer Handel's Concerto Grosso, Opus 6, No. 10, in D minor; and at the final concert, that of Sunday afternoon, Aug. 14, the Suite from Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" will replace Sibelius' "Tapiola."

* * * *

The following communication speaks for itself:

To the Editor of the Post:

Sir—The music of the Esplanade Orchestra is superb, and beyond my poor descriptive powers. But I do wish to express my appreciation of the good nature of the players, performing in a downpour of rain. Mr. Fiedler's unwillingness to disappoint his listeners, few as they might be on nights such as Tuesday, is one of the reasons why he holds such a high place in the hearts of the people. We sincerely thank him and his men.

XYZ.

Wheeler Beckett, already guest-conductor at the Pops this season, will direct this evening's concert at the Esplanade and Paul Cherkassky of the orchestra will officiate on Wednesday.

* * * *

There are items of interest in the news from Europe. Described as "one of the most important musical events of the present time," Paul Hindemith's opera, "Mathis der Maler," had its recent world premiere in Zurich, not in its composer's native Germany. The radical tendencies which have made Hindemith persona non grata with the Nazis are little evident in the excerpts from this "Matthias the Painter" which have been heard at Symphony Hall. Apparently Hindemith has created a stage work of lofty, even exalted character, distinctly religious in flavor.

Along with the non-Aryans and other "cultural Bolshevists," Hindemith finds himself in an exhibit of "degenerate music," held in connection with a recent festival at Dusseldorf. His companions in disgrace are Stravinsky, Kurt Weill, Franz Schreker, Hans Eisler, Alban Berg, Karol Rathaus, Josef Hauer, Ernst Toch and Hermann Reutter. There is also in this taboo department a jazz section and an impressive collection of music for the theatre, associated with the names of Max Reinhardt, Erich Korngold and others. Even the theorists and educators do not escape. Happily, we music lovers in a decadent democracy can still pollute ourselves at will. Only in war time have we encountered such a thing as musical censorship. Let us hope that we never shall.

Also in the news is the death, in Paris, of Mme. Jules Massenet, at the age of 98. She became the wife of the composer in 1866. . . . The house in Brook street, London, where Handel lived for nearly 35 years has now been turned into a museum in which Handeliana from various parts of England has been assembled.

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER

JUL 24 1938

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

PROKOFIEFF—Concerto No. 2 in G minor, opus 63; played by Jascha Heifetz, violin, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Victor set 450. $6.50.

The general public has been a long time in "discovering" Serge Prokofieff. He has gone along quietly writing music which ranks at the top of contemporary lists, while others have been shouting their prowess by means of paid publicity and drawing room influence. Every now and then we wake up to the realization that many of the lionized messiahs are quite shallow, and that some who have lived to create art for art's sake find their work growing steadily in favor. Such is Prokofieff, a man who has survived the "isms" and gives us music that is fundamentally sound and has a real message.

It was in 1917 that Prokofieff wrote his first concerto for violin. The one at hand is his second and was completed only in 1935, having its first American hearing at Boston last December. The success it received there compelled Victor to record it three days later. Heifetz ranks this as one of the six great. Reviewers wrote after its performance that the slow movement brought tears to the eyes of the listeners.

It is great music. There is positively no stunt writing for the solo instrument, there is abounding melody, pleasing harmony and exquisite craftsmanship. This music completely supplies that need to journey into new places and find hidden beauties, to experience new impulses and create fresh thoughts.

It may be said safely that never will we hear a finer performance than this. The impeccable technique and tone of Heifetz, the interpretative genius of both Heifetz and Koussevitzky and the perfection of ensemble of the Boston Orchestra are sufficient recommendation. The recording is absolutely faithful. A set of unusual importance, to be recommended unreservedly.

MOZART—Sonata No. 14 in C minor (K-457); played by Walter Gieseking, piano. Columbia set X-93. $3.25.

Few of Mozart's later piano works have been recorded with any degree of satisfaction, but when Walter Gieseking plays Mozart we necessarily prick up our ears. His is a remarkably clean technique, never hard and unfeeling, never mechanical; his readings are completely satisfying, no matter what he undertakes. This sonata is usually coupled with the great "C Minor Fantasy" and ranks with it in importance. Great piano music, splendidly played.

Brief Notes

Decca has issued the British recording of the "Symphonic Minuets" of Dohnanyi as played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood. Four sections, labeled "Capriccio," "Rhapsodia," "Scherzo" and "Rondo," give us a real treat in closing, however slightly, the gap in a recorded representation of one of the greatest contemporary composers. 29039-40.

Another recreation of Caruso is Franck's "La Procession" and Faure's "Les Rameaux" on Victor 14744. Luigi Fort sings "Il mio tesoro" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni" and "Quanto e bella" from Donizetti's "L'Elisir d'Amore." Columbia 4193M.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

JUL 24 1938

Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of August 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUL 24 1938

$82,000 Music Shed to House Berkshire Fete

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Elaborate preparations have been made for the fifth annual Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Aug. 4, 6, 7, 11, 13, and 14. Six concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting in a new music shed just completed at a cost of $82,000 raised by subscription. There are seats for 5,000 persons, with standing room for as many more. All of the 104 boxes have been sold at $150 each.

The "shed" is shaped like a fan and is built of steel and wood. Its acoustics, tested by Massachusetts Institute of Technology experts, were found to be exceptional. Joseph Franz of Stockbridge was the architect and engineer in charge.

The festival association, of which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York is president, has a budget of $51,000, compared with $41,000 last year, when the net proceeds were $3,000 compared with $1,800 in 1936. All first class Berkshire hotels have been sold out for weeks for the festival period. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky are to be at the Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox.

BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

JUL 24 1938

Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of August 13 by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 25 1938

Named Orchestra Trustee

Boston Symphony Honors Secretary to Harvard

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced yesterday that Jerome D. Greene, secretary to the Corporation of Harvard University, has been elected to the orchestra's board of trustees, which now numbers twelve members. The others are Bentley W. Warren, president; Henry B. Sawyer, vice-president; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer; Allston Burr, Henry B. Cabot, Alvan T. Fuller, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Roger I. Lee, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft. The board was organized in 1918 to take over the control of the orchestra's affairs after the retirement of the late Henry Lee Higginson, its founder, from the organization. As director of Harvard's tercentenary celebration, Mr. Greene invited the Boston Symphony to give a series of special concerts in Boston and Cambridge in connection with the celebration in September, 1936.

The orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will give six concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass., next month. Its fifty-seventh season, and its fifteenth under Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership, will begin at Symphony Hall in Boston on October 7.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

JUL 24 1938

Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of Aug. 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

From Aug. 18 to 21, the Silvermine Guild Music Festival Association will present its yearly festival on the guild grounds and the adjacent estate of Laurence Bennett at Silvermine, Conn. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony, conducted by Jose Iturbi and Eugene Ormandy, will provide the main features.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUL 24 1938

Symphonic Festival.

At the opening performance of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., on Aug. 4, the Cecilia society chorus of Boston will join with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra in Bach's cantata "Ein Feste Burg Ist Unser Gott" and in Beethoven's Ninth symphony. Two soloists have been announced, Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, and Anna Kaskas, Metropolitan opera contralto.

102

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 24 1938

Berkshires Make Ready For Festival Concerts Of the Boston Symphony

All Boxes Have Been Sold at $150 Each for the Six Concerts On August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14—Waiting List at Most Hotels and Boarding Houses for Accommodations — 30th Annual Stockbridge Exhibition Back at Playhouse — 12th Annual Pittsfield Horse Show at Holmesdale Opens Friday With 56 Classes Listed—Annual Horse Show Ball Is Friday Night at Pittsfield Country Club—Golf Tournament Starts at Wyantenuck Country Club Friday With Tournament Ball Saturday — Berkshire Playhouse to Present Comedy

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, JULY 23—With a budget this year of $51,000 the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, has an increase of $10,000 over 1937 when the balance sheet showed profits of $3000 compared with $1800 in 1936. Five thousand theater and settee seats are in place in the great fan-shaped music shed recently completed at a cost of $82,000, which was raised by subscription. All the boxes have been sold at $150 each for the six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra on August 4, 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14. There is a waiting list at practically all first-class hotels and boarding houses in Berkshire county for the two weeks of the festival. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and Mrs Koussevitzky are to be at Berkshire Hunt and Country club, Lenox.

Exhibition at Stockbridge

Approval was expressed in the Stockbridge and other Berkshire art colonies that the 30th annual Stockbridge exhibition is to return this year to the town where it was founded in 1908 by the late Frederic Crowninshield, Daniel Chester French and Walter Nettleton. Its digression last year to Berkshire museum at Pittsfield during music festival week in August was not successful. As announced in the Berkshire society column of The Republican this week, the 1938 exhibition will be back at the Stockbridge playhouse at the conclusion of the theatrical season, which ends Saturday, September 3. Miss Marie O. Kobbe of Hillfields is general chairman and Miss Olive Curtis Beaver again is secretary and general manager.

Col E. Parmalee Prentice will observe his 75th birthday anniversary next Friday, the 29th, at Mount Hope farm, Williamstown, where he and Mrs Prentice are spending the summer. For a number of years the colonel has been the honored guest at a birthday luncheon or dinner given by Mrs Prentice. A graduate of Amherst college with the class of 1885, an author of several books, a retired lawyer, Col Prentice's hobby is his 1000-acre, Mount Hope, experimental and stock farm. The colonel looks no older than 60.

Next week's important society and sporting event will be the 12th annual Pittsfield horse show at historic Holmesdale, the estate of Mr and Mrs Donald M. Weston, Friday and Saturday. As this will be the only horse show in Berkshire this season, many Lenox exhibitors of other years are listed in the 56 classes. Springfield will be well represented. Entries are received by Herbert Ingram of New York, who is arriving tomorrow at Holmesdale. Mrs Samuel Schiffer of Long Branch, N. J., has withdrawn her acceptance of an invitation to judge horsemanship events.

Colt Is Chairman

Samuel Gilbert Colt, Jr., chairman of the horse show committee, is secretary of the Pittsfield Riding and Polo club under whose auspices it is being held. The other officers are: President, Brenton Crane Pomeroy; vice-president, Zenas Crane Colt; treasurer, Gardner S. Morse, and manager, Leo E. Gilson.

When in October, 1928, Marshall R. Kernochan of New York city sold Holmesdale to Donald M. Weston he provided in the deed: "That the tree known as the Holmes pine standing by itself in the meadow to the south of the homestead should be allowed to stand as long as the course of nature permits and that it never shall be cut down or moved while it remains in a live or healthy condition." The great tree, a relic of the primeval forest, is still in a sound condition and is often admired by visitors passing that way. Mr Kernochan was executor of the will of his mother, Mrs Louise M. Pollock, who occupied Holmesdale for a number of years after the death of her husband, William Pollock, a noted horseman of his day.

On Friday night at Pittsfield Country club comes the annual horse show ball with Misses Mary and Louise Robbins and Mrs William Thompson Rice in charge. Another Pittsfield Country club event next week will be the eighth annual 18-hole women's invitation golf tournament with Mrs I. S. F. Dodd and Mrs W. Prince Smith, cochairmen. The committee will entertain players at dinner at the club Thursday evening.

Great Barrington Garden club, Rev Edward Russell Bourne of Sheffield, president, is to hold its July meeting at Berkshire Garden center, Stockbridge, Monday and Prof Bremer Pond of Harvard will tell "How your garden got that way."

Mrs C. W. Harold Dunbar of New York city and South Egremont was chairman of Wyantenuck Country club tea this afternoon. Assisting were Mrs J. Macy Willets, Mrs Donald Worthington, Mrs Erik Guide Haupt, wife of the painter; Mrs Albert Keep, Mrs Lucius A. Wing, Mrs Walter S. Crandell, Mrs E. K. Thurlow and Mrs Joseph C. Keber.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 24 1938

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has just issued its volume of programs of the concerts given by the organization during the past season, its fifty-seventh. All of the informative historical and descriptive notes are by John N. Burk. The twenty-four concert bulletins form a book of 1,180 pages. The volume is durably bound in half leather with marble-papered boards in a format uniform with the rest of the series.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 25 1938

IN BOSTON SYMPHONY POST

Jerome D. Greene Elected a Trustee of the Orchestra

Jerome D. Greene of Boston has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its board of trustees announced yesterday. Mr. Greene became secretary of the Harvard University Corporation in 1905. As director of the Harvard Tercentenary celebration he invited Dr. Serge Koussevitzky to conduct a special concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the academic assemblage. Dr. Koussevitzky responded by giving several concerts in Cambridge and Boston which were an outstanding feature of the celebration.

The orchestra's board of trustees now consists of Bentley W. Warren, president; Henry B. Sawyer, vice president; Ernest B. Dane, treasurer; Allston Burr, Henry B. Cabot, Alvan T. Fuller, Mr. Greene, N. Penrose Hallowell, M. A. DeWolfe Howe, Roger I. Lee, Richard C. Paine and Edward A. Taft.

D UNION, SPRINGFIELD, MASS., TUESDAY, JULY 26, 1938

FINAL TOUCHES BEING ADDED TO NEW MUSIC SHED

First Concert at Tanglewood by Boston Symphony Is Slated Aug. 4

STOCKBRIDGE, July 25—After a week of rain, Engineer Joseph Franz, in charge of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed at Tanglewood, was able to have his crew out of doors today to put some much needed last minute touches to the grounds. Construction at the building so far as this year is concerned has been completed.

Work Speedily

Mr. Franz's crew worked feverishly today to put in another water line and a sewer line to the room to be used by visiting artists, fences, entrances, ticket booths and paths through the Hawthorne pines to the parking areas.

The opening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Aug. 4 at 8.30, will inaugurate the new shed. Additional concerts will be given Aug. 6, 7, 11, 13 and 14 while in near-by Pittsfield, Olin Downes, New York music critic will give four lectures on the music to be played at the festival. His lectures are scheduled for Aug. 4, 6, 11 and 13 at 3 p. m., at the Berkshire Museum. Reservations for the lectures may be made with Mrs. W. Bradford West, chairman, 616 West Street, Pittsfield. Reservations for concert tickets may be made either through the Springfield chairmen, Mrs. Hollis Carlisle and Mrs. Reynolds Clark, at Steinert's and other local chairmen or through the office at Stockbridge.

There is no other building in the world like the Festival's shed. Lacking many details that will have to be completed another year, the shed will assure protection from the elements and provide perfect acoustics, according to Prof. Richard F. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who was the consultant on acoustics.

Half-Open Fan

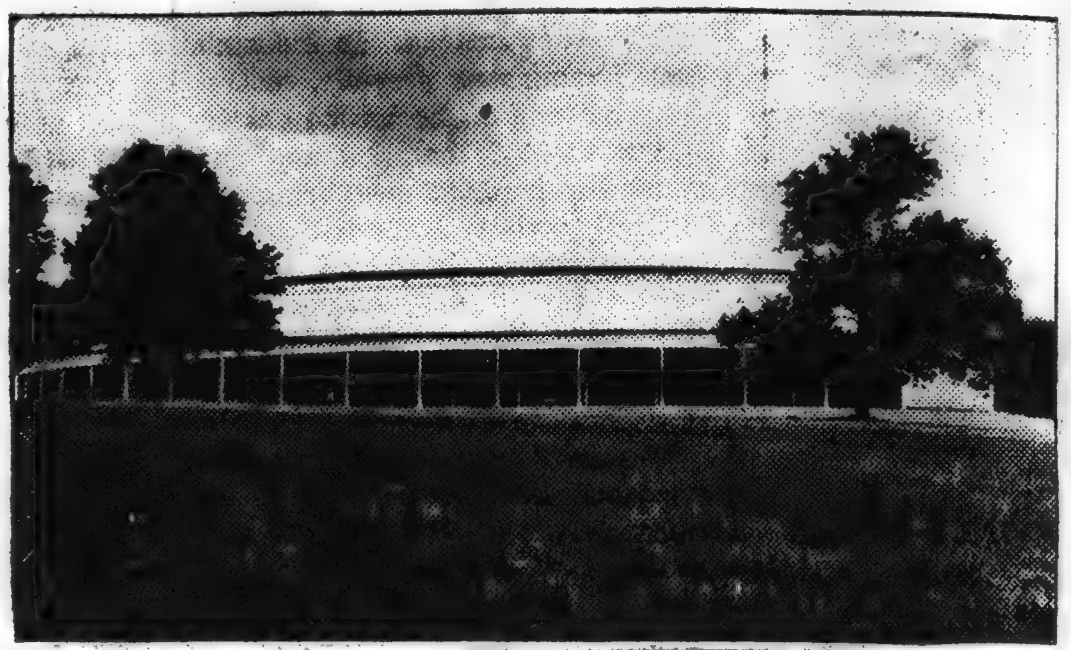
The shed, shaped like a half-open fan, covers an acre and a half. In it are 308 tons of steel. The roof is made of two-inch planks covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. There are 150,000 board feet of lumber in the structure. The foundations were built to withstand a load of 7500 pounds per square foot. This will take care of the maximum snowfall in the Berkshires with something to spare.

The stage, built of plywood, is 35 feet deep. It is 60 feet across the front and 45 across the back, slightly larger than the stage in Symphony Hall, Boston.

From the podium to the last row of seats in the colonnade it is 160 feet. It is about 265 feet from one end of the open fan to the other. Every seat in the house commands a clear view of the stage. The shed will seat 5700 persons.

Although hotel accommodations in Stockbridge and Lenox are nearly exhausted, there are plenty of accommodations in private homes and in hotels in near-by Pittsfield and Great Barrington.

New Music Shed at Tanglewood



NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 25 1938

In the Whitefield Colony

Special to the Herald Tribune

WHITEFIELD, N. H., July 24.—Mrs. John H. Raven, of New Brunswick, N. J., and Mrs. Waldo E. Buck, of Worcester, Mass., were hostesses at the community tea held yesterday at Mountain View House.

Mr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came today from Crawford Notch to attend the matinee at Chase Barn Playhouse, where Mrs. Edward A. Wilson, Mrs. Arthur S. Wolcott, Mrs. Gracy Voorhees and Mrs. Soreno Lund jr. gave theater parties last evening.

WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 24 1938

BOSTON SYMPHONY TRUSTEE IS NAMED

Boston, July 23.—(AP)—Jerome D. Greene, secretary to the corporation of Harvard university, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony orchestra, symphony officials announced tonight.

Greene also is a former secretary and trustee of the Rockefeller foundation and a one-time member of the board of overseers of Harvard.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 24 1938

Boston Symphony To Memorialize Hadley

BOSTON, Mass., July 23 (UP).—Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky has dedicated the concert of Aug. 13 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, part of the Berkshire annual symphonic festival, to the memory of Dr. Henry Hadley and will conduct Hadley's "Angelus." The Henry Hadley Foundation will present a floral piece to Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

BENNINGTON, VT.
BANNER

JUL 26 1938

Symphony Concerts Start in Berkshires Aug. 4th

The chorus of hammers has subsided at "Tanglewood." The Berkshire Symphonic Festival's new music shed, built under the direction of Joseph Franz, engineer and member of the Festival's board of trustees, is finished so far as construction this year is concerned and everything is in readiness for the inaugural of the shed by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky August 4 at 8:30 p. m. "Tanglewood" is on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Additional concerts will be given August 6, 1, 11, 13 and 14 while in nearby Pittsfield Olin Downes will give four lectures on the music to be played at the festival.

There is no other building in the world like the festival's shed. Lacking many details that will have to be completed another year, the shed will assure protection from the elements and provide perfect acoustics, according to Prof. Richard F. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology who was the consultant on acoustics.

The shed, shaped like a half-open fan, covers an acre and a half. In it are 308 tons of steel. The roof is made of two-inch planks covered with a heavy layer of felt to deaden the sound of rain. There are 150,000 board feet of lumber in the structure. The foundations were built to withstand a load of 7500 pounds per square foot. This will take care of the maximum snowfall in the Berkshires with something to spare.

The stage, built of plywood, is 35 feet deep. It is 60 feet across the front and 45 across the back, slightly larger than the stage in Symphony hall in Boston.

From the podium to the last row of seats within the colonnade it is 160 feet. It is about 265 feet from one end of the open fan to the other. Every seat in the house is so located that it commands a clear view of the stage. The shed will seat 5700 people.

Although hotel accommodations in Stockbridge and Lenox are nearly exhausted, there are plenty of accommodations in private homes and in hotels in nearby Pittsfield and Great Barrington. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival invites music lovers who have not yet made reservations for rooms to communicate with the office at Stockbridge.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 24 1938

BOSTON

HARVARD OFFICIAL IS NAMED SYMPHONY TRUSTEE

BOSTON, July 23 (AP)—Jerome D. Greene, secretary to the corporation of Harvard University, has been elected a trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony officials announced tonight.

Greene also is a former secretary and trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation and a one-time member of the board of overseers of Harvard.

NEVADA, MO.
MAIL POST

JUL 26 1938

TODAY'S BIRTHDAYS

JULY 26.

Ella A. Boole of Brooklyn, N. Y., world president of the W. C. T. U., born at Van Wert, Ohio, 80 years ago.

Ex-Senator Dixie Bibb Graves of Alabama, born 56 years ago.

Sergie Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, born in Russia, 64 years ago.

Walter S. Tower, secretary of the American Iron and Steel Institute, born at Bridgewater, Mass., 57 years ago.

WINSTED, CONN.
CITIZEN

JUL 13 1938

MUSICAL FESTIVAL HELD IN BERKSHIRES IMPORTANT EVENT

